message, to speak the •mystery of the •Messiah, for which I am in prison, 4 so that I may reveal it as I am required to speak. 5 Act wisely toward outsiders, making the most of the time. 6 Your speech should always be gracious, seasoned with salt, so that you may know how you should answer each person.

Christian Greetings

7 Tychicus, our dearly loved brother, faithful servant, and fellow slave in the Lord, will tell you all the news about me. 8 I have sent him to you for this very purpose, so that you may know how we are and so that he may encourage your hearts. 9 He is with Onesimus, a faithful and dearly loved brother, who is one of you. They will tell you about everything here.

10 Aristarchus, my fellow prisoner, greets you, as does Mark, Barnabas's cousin (concerning whom you have received instructions: if he comes to you, welcome him), 11 and so does Jesus who is called Justus. These alone of the circumcision are my coworkers for the kingdom of God, and they have been a comfort to me. 12 Epaphras, who is one of you, a slave of Christ Jesus, greets you. He is always contending for you in his prayers, so that you can stand mature and fully assured in everything God wills. 13 For I testify about him that he works hard for you, for those in Laodicea, and for those in Hierapolis. 14 Luke, the dearly loved physician, and Demas greet you. 15 Give my greetings to the brothers in Laodicea, and to Nympha and the church in her home. 16† When this letter has been read among you, have it read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and see that you also read the letter from Laodicea. 17 And tell Archippus, "Pay attention to the ministry you have received in the Lord, so that you can accomplish it."

18 This greeting is in my own hand — Paul. Remember my imprisonment. Grace be with you.

1 THESSALONIANS

Introduction to 1 Thessalonians

1 THESSALONIANS

Greeting

1 Paul, Silvanus, [A] and Timothy:

To the church of the Thessalonians in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Grace to you and peace.

Thanksgiving

2 We always thank God for all of you, remembering you constantly in our prayers. 3 We recall, in the presence of our God and Father, your work of faith, labor of love, and endurance of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, 4 knowing your election, brothers loved by God. 5 For our gospel did not come to you in word only, but also in power, in the Holy Spirit, and with much assurance. You know what kind of men we were among you for your benefit, 6 and you became imitators of us and of the Lord when, in spite of severe persecution, you welcomed the message with joy from the Holy Spirit. 7 As a result, you became an example to all the believers in Macedonia and Achaia. 8 For the Lord's message rang out from you, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place that your faith [B], in God has gone out. Therefore, we don't need to say anything, 9 for they themselves report [C] what kind of reception we had from you: how you turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God 10 and to wait for His Son from heaven, whom He raised from the dead — Jesus, who rescues us from the coming wrath.

Paul's Conduct

2 For you yourselves know, brothers, that our visit with you was not without result. 2 On the contrary, after we had previously suffered, and we were treated outrageously in Philippi, as you know, we were emboldened by our God to speak the gospel of God to you in spite of great opposition. 3 For our exhortation didn't come from error or impurity or an intent to deceive. 4 Instead, just as we have been approved by God to be entrusted with the gospel, so we speak, not to please men, but rather God, who examines our hearts. 5 For we never used flattering speech, as you know, or had greedy motives — God is our witness — 6 and we didn't seek glory from people, either from you or from others. 7 Although we could have been a burden as Christ's apostles, instead we were gentle among you, as a nursing mother nurtures her own children. 8 We cared so much for you that we were pleased to share with you not only the gospel of God but also our own lives, because you had become dear to us. 9 For you remember our labor and hardship, brothers. Working night and day so that we would not burden any of you, we preached God's gospel to you. 10 You are witnesses, and so is God, of how devoutly, righteously, and blamelessly we conducted ourselves with you believers. 11 As you know, like a father with his own children, 12 we encouraged, comforted, and implored each one of you to •walk worthy of God, who calls you into His own kingdom and glory.

Reception and Opposition to the Message

13 This is why we constantly thank God, because when you received the message about God that you heard from us, you welcomed it not as a human message, but as it truly is, the message of God, which also works effectively in you believers. 14† For you, brothers, became imitators of God's churches in Christ Jesus that are in Judea, since you have also suffered the same things from people of your own country, just as they did from the Jews 15 who killed both the Lord Jesus and the prophets and persecuted us; they displease God and are hostile to everyone, 16 hindering us from speaking to the Gentiles so that they may be saved. As a result, they are always completing the number of their sins, and wrath has overtaken them at last. [A]

Paul’s Desire to See Them

17† But as for us, brothers, after we were forced to leave you for a short time (in person, not in heart), we greatly desired and made every effort to return and see you face to face. 18 So we wanted to come to you — even I, Paul, time and again — but Satan hindered us. 19 For who is our hope or joy or crown of boasting in the presence of our Lord Jesus at His coming? Is it not you? 20 For you are our glory and joy!

Anxiety in Athens

3 Therefore, when we could no longer stand it, we thought it was better to be left alone in Athens. [2] And we sent Timothy, our brother and God's coworker in the gospel of Christ, to strengthen and encourage you concerning your faith, [3] so that no one will be shaken by these persecutions.
For you yourselves know that we are appointed to [A] this. [4] In fact, when we were with you, we told you previously that we were going to suffer persecution, and as you know, it happened. [5] For this reason, when I could no longer stand it, I also sent him to find out about your faith, fearing that the tempter had tempted you and that our labor might be for nothing.

Encouraged by Timothy

[6] But now Timothy has come to us from you and brought us good news about your faith and love and reported that you always have good memories of us, wanting to see us, as we also want to see you. [7] Therefore, brothers, in all our distress and persecution, we were encouraged about you through your faith. [8] For now we live, if you stand firm in the Lord. [9] How can we thank God for you in return for all the joy we experience before our God because of you, [10] as we pray very earnestly night and day to see you face to face and to complete what is lacking in your faith?

Prayer for the Church

[11] Now may our God and Father Himself, and our Lord Jesus, direct our way to you. [12] And may the Lord cause you to increase and overflow with love for one another and for everyone, just as we also do for you. [13] May He make your hearts blameless in holiness before our God and Father at the coming of our Lord Jesus with all His •saints. •Amen.

The Call to Sanctification

4 Finally then, brothers, we ask and encourage you in the Lord Jesus, that as you have received from us how you must •walk and please God — as you are doing [A] — do so even more. 2 For you know what commands we gave you through the Lord Jesus.

3 For this is God’s will, your •sanctification: that you abstain from sexual immorality, 4 so that each of you knows how to control his own body [B] in sanctification and honor, 5 not with lustful desires, like the Gentiles who don’t know God. 6 This means one must not transgress against and defraud his brother in this matter, because the Lord is an avenger of all these offenses, [C] as we also previously told and warned you. 7 For God has not called us to impurity but to sanctification. 8 Therefore, the person who rejects this does not reject man, but God, who also gives you His Holy Spirit.

Loving and Working

9 About brotherly love: You don’t need me to write you because you yourselves are taught by God to love one another. 10 In fact, you are doing this toward all the brothers in the entire region of Macedonia. But we encourage you, brothers, to do so even more, 11 to seek to lead a quiet life, to mind your own business, [D] and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you, 12 so that you may walk properly [E] in the presence of outsiders and not be dependent on anyone. [F]

The Comfort of Christ’s Coming

13 We do not want you to be uninformed, brothers, concerning those who are •asleep, so that you will not grieve like the rest, who have no hope. 14 Since we believe that Jesus died and rose again, in the same way God will bring with Him those who have fallen asleep through [G] Jesus. 15 For we say this to you by a revelation from the Lord: [H], We who are still alive at the Lord’s coming will certainly have no advantage over [I] those who have fallen asleep. 16 For the Lord Himself will descend from heaven with a shout, [J] with the archangel’s voice, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ will rise first. [17†] Then we who are still alive will be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air and so we will always be with the Lord. [18] Therefore encourage [K] one another with these words.

The Day of the Lord

5 About the times and the seasons: Brothers, you do not need anything to be written to you. 2 For you yourselves know very well that the Day of the Lord will come just like a thief in the night. 3 When they say, “Peace and security,” then sudden destruction comes on them, like labor pains come on a pregnant woman, and they will not escape. 4 But you, brothers, are not in the dark, for this day to overtake you like a thief. 5 For you are all sons of light and sons of the day. We do not belong to the night or the darkness. 6 So then, we must not sleep, like the rest, but we must stay awake and be serious. 7 For those who sleep, sleep at night, and those who get drunk are drunk at night. 8 But since we belong to the day, we must be serious and put the armor of faith and love on our chests, and put on a helmet of the hope of salvation. 9 For God did not appoint us to wrath, but to obtain salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, 10 who died for us, so that whether we are awake or •asleep, we will live together with Him.
11 Therefore encourage one another and build each other up as you are already doing.

Exhortations and Blessings

12 Now we ask you, brothers, to give recognition to those who labor among you and lead you in the Lord and admonish you, 13 and to regard them very highly in love because of their work. Be at peace among yourselves. 14 And we exhort you, brothers: warn those who are irresponsible, [A] comfort the discouraged, help the weak, be patient with everyone. 15 See to it that no one repays evil for evil to anyone, but always pursue what is good for one another and for all.

16 Rejoice always!
17 Pray constantly.
18 Give thanks in everything, for this is God’s will for you in Christ Jesus.
19 Don’t stifle the Spirit.
20 Don’t despise prophecies,
21 but test all things.

Hold on to what is good.
[22] Stay away from every kind of evil.

[23] Now may the God of peace Himself •sanctify you completely. And may your spirit, soul, and body be kept sound and blameless for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. [24] He who calls you is faithful, who also will do it. [25] Brothers, pray for us also. [26] Greet all the brothers with a holy kiss. [27] I charge you by the Lord that this letter be read to all the brothers. [28] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.

2 THESSALONIANS

2 Thessalonians 1 2 Thessalonians 2 2 Thessalonians 3

Introduction to 2 Thessalonians

2 THESSALONIANS

Greeting

1 Paul, Silvanus, [A] and Timothy:

To the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

God's Judgment and Glory

3 We must always thank God for you, brothers. This is right, since your faith is flourishing and the love each one of you has for one another is increasing. 4 Therefore, we ourselves boast about you among God's churches — about your endurance and faith in all the persecutions and afflictions you endure. 5 It is a clear evidence of God's righteous judgment that you will be counted worthy of God's kingdom, for which you also are suffering, 6 since it is righteous for God to repay with affliction those who afflict you 7[†] and to reward with rest you who are afflicted, along with us.
This will take place at the revelation of the Lord Jesus from heaven with His powerful angels, 8 taking vengeance with flaming fire on those who don't know God and on those who don't obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus. 9 These will pay the penalty of eternal destruction from the Lord's presence and from His glorious strength 10 in that day when He comes to be glorified by His •saints and to be admired by all those who have believed, because our testimony among you was believed. 11 And in view of this, we always pray for you that our God will consider you worthy of His calling, and will, by His power, fulfill every desire for goodness and the work of faith, 12 so that the name of our Lord Jesus will be glorified by you, and you by Him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Man of Lawlessness

2 Now concerning the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and our being gathered to Him: We ask you, brothers, 2 not to be easily upset in mind or troubled, either by a spirit or by a message or by a letter as if from us, alleging that the Day of the Lord has come. 3 Don't let anyone deceive you in any way. For that day will not come unless the apostasy [A] comes first and the man of lawlessness is revealed, the son of destruction. 4 He opposes and exalts himself above every so-called god or object of worship, so that he sits in God's sanctuary, [B] publicizing that he himself is God.

5 Don't you remember that when I was still with you I told you about this? 6 And you know what currently restrains him, so that he will be revealed in his time. 7 For the •mystery of lawlessness is already at work, but the one now restraining will do so until he is out of the way, 8 and then the lawless one will be revealed. The Lord Jesus will destroy him with the breath of His mouth and will bring him to nothing with the brightness of His coming. 9 The coming of the lawless one is based on Satan's working, with all kinds of false miracles, signs, and wonders, 10 and with every unrighteous deception among those who are perishing. They perish because they did not accept the love of the truth in order to be saved. 11† For this reason God sends them a strong delusion so that they will believe what is false, 12 so that all will be condemned — those who did not believe the truth but enjoyed unrighteousness.

Stand Firm

13† But we must always thank God for you, brothers loved by the Lord, because from the beginning God has chosen you for salvation through •sanctification by the Spirit and through belief in the truth. 14 He called you to this through our gospel, so that you might obtain the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. 15 Therefore, brothers, stand firm and hold to the traditions you were taught, either by our message or by our letter.

16 May our Lord Jesus Christ Himself and God our Father, who has loved us and given us eternal encouragement and good hope by grace, 17 encourage your hearts and strengthen you in every good work and word.

Pray for Us

3 Finally, brothers, pray for us that the Lord's message may spread rapidly and be honored, just as it was with you, [2] and that we may be delivered from wicked and evil men, for not all have faith. [A] [3] But the Lord is faithful; He will strengthen and guard you from the evil one. [4] We have confidence in the Lord about you, that you are doing and will do what we command. [5] May the Lord direct your hearts to God's love and Christ's endurance.

Warning against Irresponsible Behavior

[6†] Now we command you, brothers, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to keep away from every brother who •walks irresponsibly and not according to the tradition received from us. [7] For you yourselves know how you must imitate us: We were not irresponsible among you; [8] we did not eat anyone's food [B] free of charge; instead, we labored and struggled, working night and day, so that we would not be a burden to any of you. [9] It is not that we don't have the right to support, but we did it to make ourselves an example to you so that you would imitate us. [10] In fact, when we were with you, this is what we commanded you: "If anyone isn't willing to work, he should not eat." [11] For we hear that there are some among you who walk irresponsibly, not working at all, but interfering with the work of others. [12] Now we command and exhort such people by the Lord Jesus Christ that quietly working, they may eat their own food. [C] [13] Brothers, do not grow weary in doing good.

[14] And if anyone does not obey our instruction in this letter, take note of that person; don't associate with him, so that he may be ashamed. [15] Yet don't treat him as an enemy, but warn him as a brother.

ARTICLE
Notable Christian Apologist: Augustine ⇒

Final Greetings

[16] May the Lord of peace Himself give you peace always in every way.
The Lord be with all of you. [17] This greeting is in my own hand — Paul.
This is a sign in every letter; this is how I write. [18] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with all of you.

1 TIMOTHY

1 Timothy 1 1 Timothy 2 1 Timothy 3 1 Timothy 4
1 Timothy 5 1 Timothy 6

Introduction to 1 Timothy

1 TIMOTHY

Greeting

1 Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the command of God our Savior and of Christ Jesus our hope:

2 To Timothy, my true son in the faith.

Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

False Doctrine and Misuse of the Law

3 As I urged you when I went to Macedonia, remain in Ephesus so that you may instruct certain people not to teach different doctrine 4† or to pay attention to myths and endless genealogies. These promote empty speculations rather than God's plan, which operates by faith. 5 Now the goal of our instruction is love that comes from a pure heart, a good conscience, and a sincere faith. 6 Some have deviated from these and turned aside to fruitless discussion. 7 They want to be teachers of the law, although they don't understand what they are saying or what they are insisting on. 8 But we know that the law is good, provided one uses it legitimately. 9 We know that the law is not meant for a righteous person, but for the lawless and rebellious, for the ungodly and sinful, for the unholy and irreverent, for those who kill their fathers and mothers, for murderers, 10† for the sexually immoral and homosexuals, for kidnappers, [A] liars, perjurers, and for whatever else is contrary to the sound teaching 11 based on the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was entrusted to me.

Paul's Testimony

12 I give thanks to Christ Jesus our Lord who has strengthened me, because He considered me faithful, appointing me to the ministry — 13 one who was formerly a blasphemer, a persecutor, and an arrogant man. But I received mercy because I acted out of ignorance in unbelief. 14 And the grace of our Lord overflowed, along with the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus. 15 This saying is trustworthy and deserving of full acceptance:
"Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" — and I am the worst of them. 16 But I received mercy for this reason, so that in me, the worst of them, Christ Jesus might demonstrate His extraordinary patience as an example to those who would believe in Him for eternal life. 17† Now to the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever. •Amen.

Engage in Battle

18 Timothy, my son, I am giving you this instruction in keeping with the prophecies previously made about you, so that by them you may strongly engage in battle, 19 having faith and a good conscience. Some have rejected these and have suffered the shipwreck of their faith. 20 Hymenaeus and Alexander are among them, and I have delivered them to Satan, so that they may be taught not to blaspheme.

Instructions on Prayer

2 First of all, then, I urge that petitions, prayers, intercessions, and thanksgivings be made for everyone, 2 for kings and all those who are in authority, so that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and dignity. 3 This is good, and it pleases God our Savior, 4† who wants everyone to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth.

5† For there is one God and one mediator between God and humanity,
Christ Jesus, Himself human,
6 who gave Himself — a ransom for all,
a testimony at the proper time.

7 For this I was appointed a herald, an apostle (I am telling the truth; I am not lying), and a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth.

ARTICLE

How Should a Christian Understand the Role of Government? ⇒

Instructions to Men and Women

8 Therefore, I want the men in every place to pray, lifting up holy hands without anger or argument. 9† Also, the women are to dress themselves in modest clothing, with decency and good sense, not with elaborate hairstyles, gold, pearls, or expensive apparel, 10 but with good works, as is proper for women who affirm that they worship God. 11† A woman should learn in silence with full submission. 12 I do not allow a woman to teach or to have authority over a man; instead, she is to be silent. 13 For Adam was created first, then Eve. 14 And Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived and transgressed. 15 But she will be saved through childbearing, if she continues [A] in faith, love, and holiness, with good judgment.

Qualifications of Church Leaders

3 This saying is trustworthy: “If anyone aspires to be an •overseer, he desires a noble work.” 2[†] An overseer, therefore, must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, self-controlled, sensible, respectable, hospitable, an able teacher, [A] 3 not addicted to wine, not a bully but gentle, not quarrelsome, not greedy — 4 one who manages his own household competently, having his children under control with all dignity. 5 (If anyone does not know how to manage his own household, how will he take care of God’s church?) 6 He must not be a new convert, or he might become conceited and fall into the condemnation of the Devil. 7 Furthermore, he must have a good reputation among outsiders, so that he does not fall into disgrace and the Devil’s trap.

8 Deacons, likewise, should be worthy of respect, not hypocritical, not drinking a lot of wine, not greedy for money, 9 holding the •mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. 10 And they must also be tested first; if they prove blameless, then they can serve as deacons. 11 Wives, too, must be worthy of respect, not slanderers, self-controlled, faithful in everything.
12 Deacons must be husbands of one wife, managing their children and their own households competently. 13 For those who have served well as deacons acquire a good standing for themselves, and great boldness in the faith that is in Christ Jesus.

The Mystery of Godliness

14 I write these things to you, hoping to come to you soon. 15 But if I should be delayed, I have written so that you will know how people ought to act in God’s household, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and foundation of the truth. 16 And most certainly, the mystery of godliness is great:

He was manifested in the flesh, vindicated in the Spirit,
seen by angels,
preached among the nations,
believed on in the world,

taken up in glory.

Demonic Influence

4 Now the Spirit explicitly says that in later times some will depart from the faith, paying attention to deceitful spirits and the teachings of demons, [2] through the hypocrisy of liars whose consciences are seared.
[3] They forbid marriage and demand abstinence from foods that God created to be received with gratitude by those who believe and know the truth. [4] For everything created by God is good, and nothing should be rejected if it is received with thanksgiving, [5] since it is sanctified by the word of God and by prayer.

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

1 Timothy 4:1

One of the marks of the last days is an increase in false teachers, who for a while embrace the gospel but are later lured away into heresy. The Apostle Paul predicted that this would happen at the church of Ephesus, where Timothy served as leader (Ac 20:29-30). Later the ascended Lord commended this church with the words "You have tested those who call themselves apostles and are not, and you have found them to be liars" (Rv 2:2). Christians are responsible for testing new doctrines and revelations against the clear teaching of Scripture (Ac 17:17).

A Good Servant of Jesus Christ

[6] If you point these things out to the brothers, you will be a good servant of Christ Jesus, nourished by the words of the faith and the good teaching that you have followed. [7†] But have nothing to do with irreverent and silly myths. Rather, train yourself in godliness, [8†] for the training of the body has a limited benefit, but godliness is beneficial in every way, since it holds promise for the present life and also for the life to come.

[9] This saying is trustworthy and deserves full acceptance. [10†] In fact, we labor and strive for this, because we have put our hope in the living God, who is the Savior of everyone, especially of those who believe.

Instructions for Ministry

[11] Command and teach these things. [12] Let no one despise your youth; instead, you should be an example to the believers in speech, in conduct, in love, in faith, in purity. [13] Until I come, give your attention to public reading, exhortation, and teaching. [14] Do not neglect the gift that is in you; it was given to you through prophecy, with the laying on of hands by the council of elders. [15] Practice these things; be committed to them, so that your progress may be evident to all. [16] Pay close attention to your life and your teaching; persevere in these things, for by doing this you will save both yourself and your hearers.

5 Do not rebuke an older man, but exhort him as a father, younger men as brothers, 2 older women as mothers, and with all propriety, the younger women as sisters.

The Support of Widows

3 Support [A] widows who are genuinely widows. 4 But if any widow has children or grandchildren, they must learn to practice godliness toward their own family first and to repay their parents, for this pleases God. 5 The real widow, left all alone, has put her hope in God and continues night and day in her petitions and prayers; 6 however, she who is self-indulgent is dead even while she lives. 7 Command this also, so they won't be blamed. 8 But if anyone does not provide for his own, that is his own household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

9 No widow should be placed on the official support list [B] unless she is at least 60 years old, has been the wife of one husband, 10 and is well known for good works — that is, if she has brought up children, shown hospitality, washed the •saints' feet, helped the afflicted, and devoted herself to every good work. 11 But refuse to enroll younger widows, for when they are drawn away from Christ by desire, they want to marry 12† and will therefore receive condemnation because they have renounced their original pledge. 13 At the same time, they also learn to be idle, going from house to house; they are not only idle, but are also gossips and busybodies, saying things they shouldn't say. 14 Therefore, I want younger women to marry, have children, manage their households, and give the adversary no opportunity to accuse us. 15 For some have already turned away to follow Satan. 16 If any believing woman has widows in her family, she should help them, and the church should not be burdened, so that it can help those who are genuinely widows.

Honoring the Elders

17 The elders who are good leaders should be considered worthy of an ample honorarium, [C] especially those who work hard at preaching and teaching. [18] For the Scripture says:

Do not muzzle an ox while it is treading out the grain, and,
the worker is worthy of his wages.

ARTICLE
How Is Jihad Understood in Islam? ⇒

---

[19] Don’t accept an accusation against an elder unless it is supported by two or three witnesses. [20] Publicly rebuke those who sin, so that the rest will also be afraid. [21] I solemnly charge you before God and Christ Jesus and the elect angels to observe these things without prejudice, doing nothing out of favoritism. [22] Don’t be too quick to appoint [D], anyone as an elder, and don’t share in the sins of others. Keep yourself pure. [23†] Don’t continue drinking only water, but use a little wine because of your stomach and your frequent illnesses. [24] Some people’s sins are obvious, going before them to judgment, but the sins of others surface [E] later. [25] Likewise, good works are obvious, and those that are not obvious cannot remain hidden.

Honoring Masters

6 [†]All who are under the yoke as •slaves must regard their own masters [A] to be worthy of all respect, so that God's name and His teaching will not be blasphemed. 2 Those who have believing masters should not be disrespectful to them because they are brothers, but should serve them better, since those who benefit from their service are believers and dearly loved.

False Doctrine and Human Greed

Teach and encourage these things. 3 If anyone teaches other doctrine and does not agree with the sound teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ and with the teaching that promotes godliness, 4 he is conceited, understanding nothing, but has a sick interest in disputes and arguments over words. From these come envy, quarreling, slander, evil suspicions, 5 and constant disagreement among people whose minds are depraved and deprived of the truth, who imagine that godliness is a way to material gain. 6 But godliness with contentment is a great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into the world, and we can take nothing out.
8 But if we have food and clothing, [B]
we will be content with these.

9 But those who want to be rich fall into temptation, a trap, and many foolish and harmful desires, which plunge people into ruin and destruction.
10 For the love of money is a root [C] of all kinds of evil, and by craving it, some have wandered away from the faith and pierced themselves with many pains.

Fight the Good Fight

11 But you, man of God, run from these things, and pursue righteousness, godliness, faith,
love, endurance, and gentleness.
12 Fight the good fight for the faith;
take hold of eternal life that you were called to and have made a good confession about in the presence of many witnesses.

13 In the presence of God, who gives life to all, and of Christ Jesus, who gave a good confession before Pontius •Pilate, I charge you 14† to keep the command without fault or failure until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. 15 God will bring this about in His own time. He is the blessed and only Sovereign, the King of kings,

and the Lord of lords,
16† the only One who has immortality, dwelling in unapproachable light;
no one has seen or can see Him,
to Him be honor and eternal might.
•Amen.

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

1 Timothy 6:16

The basic premise of the soul sleep theory, also known as conditional immortality, is derived from this verse among others (see Gn 2:17; 3:4,19,22; Ps 146:4; Ec 9:5; Ezk 18:20; Rm 6:23). Groups such as the Jehovah's Witnesses, Seventh-day Adventists, The Way International, and a host of "sacred name" sects believe that when humans die, their bodies go into the grave and remain unconscious until resurrection day. The vast majority of Christians, however, believe that human consciousness survives death. Jesus exhorted, "Don't fear those who kill the body but are not able to kill the soul; rather, fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Mt 10:28). The Apostle Peter talked about laying aside his "tent," that is, dying (2 Pt 1:14), which seems to indicate that the personality survives death. Paul made a similar statement in 2 Co 5:1. Paul also wrote of death as "the desire to depart and to be with Christ" (Php 1:23). The author of Hebrews wrote of "the spirits of righteous people made perfect" (Heb 12:23). And the martyred tribulation saints cry out, "O Lord . . . how long until You judge and avenge our blood?" (Rv 6:10), showing that they are alive when making this plea. Most importantly, Jesus spoke on the subject when He assured the thief on the cross, "Today you will be with Me in paradise" (Lk 23:43). When referring to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Jesus concluded that "He is not the God of the dead, but of the living" (Mt 22:32).

Instructions to the Rich

17 Instruct those who are rich in the present age not to be arrogant or to set their hope on the uncertainty of wealth, but on God, who richly provides us with all things to enjoy. 18 Instruct them to do what is good, to be rich in good works, to be generous, willing to share, 19 storing up for themselves a good reserve [D] for the age to come, so that they may take hold of life that is real.

Guard the Heritage

20 Timothy, guard what has been entrusted to you, avoiding irreverent, empty speech and contradictions from the "knowledge" that falsely bears that name. 21 By professing it, some people have deviated from the faith.

Grace be with all of you.

2 TIMOTHY

2 Timothy 1 | 2 Timothy 2 | 2 Timothy 3 | 2 Timothy 4

Introduction to 2 Timothy

2 TIMOTHY

Greeting

1 Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by God's will, for the promise of life in Christ Jesus:

[2] To Timothy, my dearly loved son.

Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

Thanksgiving

[3] I thank God, whom I serve with a clear conscience as my ancestors did, when I constantly remember you in my prayers night and day.
[4] Remembering your tears, I long to see you so that I may be filled with joy,
[5] clearly recalling your sincere faith that first lived in your grandmother
Lois, then in your mother Eunice, and that I am convinced is in you also.

[6] Therefore, I remind you to keep ablaze [A] the gift of God that is in you through the laying on of my hands. [7†] For God has not given us a spirit [B] of fearfulness, but one of power, love, and sound judgment.

Not Ashamed of the Gospel

[8] So don't be ashamed of the testimony about our Lord, or of me His prisoner. Instead, share in suffering for the gospel, relying on the power of God.

[9] He has saved us and called us with a holy calling,
not according to our works,
but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given to us in Christ Jesus before time began.
[10] This has now been made evident through the appearing of our Savior Christ Jesus, who has abolished death
and has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

[11] For this gospel I was appointed a herald, apostle, and teacher, [12] and that is why I suffer these things. But I am not ashamed, because I know the One I have believed in and am persuaded that He is able to guard what has been entrusted to me [C] until that day.

Be Loyal to the Faith

[13] Hold on to the pattern of sound teaching that you have heard from me, in the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus. [14] Guard, through the Holy Spirit who lives in us, that good thing entrusted to you. [15] This you know: All those in •Asia have turned away from me, including Phygelus and Hermogenes. [16] May the Lord grant mercy to the household of Onesiphorus, because he often refreshed me and was not ashamed of my chains. [17] On the contrary, when he was in Rome, he diligently searched for me and found me. [18] May the Lord grant that he obtain mercy from Him on that day. And you know very well how much he ministered at Ephesus.

Be Strong in Grace

2 You, therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.
[2] And what you have heard from me in the presence of many witnesses, commit to faithful men who will be able to teach others also.

[3] Share in suffering as a good soldier of Christ Jesus. [4] No one serving as a soldier gets entangled in the concerns of civilian life; he seeks to please the recruiter. [5] Also, if anyone competes as an athlete, he is not crowned unless he competes according to the rules. [6] The hardworking farmer ought to be the first to get a share of the crops. [7] Consider what I say, for the Lord will give you understanding in everything.

[8†] Keep your attention on Jesus Christ as risen from the dead and descended from David. This is according to my gospel. [9] I suffer for it to the point of being bound like a criminal, but God's message is not bound.
[10] This is why I endure all things for the elect: so that they also may obtain salvation, which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. [11] This saying is trustworthy:

For if we have died with Him,
we will also live with Him;
[12] if we endure, we will also reign with Him;
if we deny Him, He will also deny us;
[13] if we are faithless, He remains faithful, for He cannot deny Himself.

An Approved Worker

[14] Remind them of these things, charging them before God not to fight about words; this is in no way profitable and leads to the ruin of the hearers. [15] Be diligent to present yourself approved to God, a worker who doesn't need to be ashamed, correctly teaching the word of truth. [16] But avoid irreverent, empty speech, for this will produce an even greater measure of godlessness. [17] And their word will spread like gangrene; Hymenaeus and Philetus are among them. [18†] They have deviated from the truth, saying that the resurrection has already taken place, and are overturning the faith of some. 19 Nevertheless, God’s solid foundation stands firm, having this inscription:

The Lord knows those who are His, and Everyone who names the name of the Lord must turn away from unrighteousness.

20 Now in a large house there are not only gold and silver bowls, but also those of wood and clay, some for honorable [A] use, some for dishonorable. [B], 21 So if anyone purifies himself from anything dishonorable, [C] he will be a special [D] instrument, set apart, useful to the Master, prepared for every good work.

22 Flee from youthful passions, and pursue righteousness, faith, love, and peace, along with those who call on the Lord from a pure heart. 23 But reject foolish and ignorant disputes, knowing that they breed quarrels.
24 The Lord’s •slave must not quarrel, but must be gentle to everyone, able to teach, [E] and patient, 25 instructing his opponents with gentleness.
Perhaps God will grant them repentance leading them to the knowledge of the truth. 26 Then they may come to their senses and escape the Devil’s trap, having been captured by him to do his will.

Difficult Times Ahead

3 But know this: Difficult times will come in the last days. [2] For people will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, [3] unloving, irreconcilable, slanderers, without self-control, brutal, without love for what is good, [4] traitors, reckless, conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, [5] holding to the form of godliness but denying its power. Avoid these people!

[6] For among them are those who worm their way into households and capture idle women burdened down with sins, led along by a variety of passions, [7] always learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. [8†] Just as Jannes and Jambres resisted Moses, so these also resist the truth, men who are corrupt in mind, worthless in regard to the faith. [9] But they will not make further progress, for their lack of understanding will be clear to all, as theirs was also.

Struggles in the Christian Life

[10] But you have followed my teaching, conduct, purpose, faith, patience, love, and endurance, [11] along with the persecutions and sufferings that came to me in Antioch, Iconium, and Lystra. What persecutions I endured! Yet the Lord rescued me from them all. [12†] In fact, all those who want to live a godly life in Christ Jesus will be persecuted. [13] Evil people and impostors will become worse, deceiving and being deceived. [14] But as for you, continue in what you have learned and firmly believed. You know those who taught you, [15] and you know that from childhood you have known the sacred Scriptures, which are able to give you wisdom for salvation through faith in Christ Jesus. [16†] All Scripture is inspired by God [A] and is profitable for teaching, for rebuking, for correcting, for training in righteousness, [17] so that the man of God may be complete, equipped for every good work.

ARTICLE

What Does It Mean That God Inspired the Bible? ⇒

Fulfill Your Ministry

4 I solemnly charge you before God and Christ Jesus, who is going to judge the living and the dead, and because of His appearing and His kingdom: 2 Proclaim the message; persist in it whether convenient or not; rebuke, correct, and encourage with great patience and teaching. 3 For the time will come when they will not tolerate sound doctrine, but according to their own desires, will multiply teachers for themselves because they have an itch to hear something new. [A] 4 They will turn away from hearing the truth and will turn aside to myths. 5 But as for you, be serious about everything, endure hardship, do the work of an evangelist, fulfill your ministry.

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

2 Timothy 4:4

False teachers replace the truth of the gospel with fables or myths. In his book, In My Soul I Am Free, Paul Twitchell, the man behind Eckankar, taught his students the so-called ability to separate soul and body, enabling them to engage in astral travel to all parts of the world and transcend the various spheres of the universe until they attain ultimate salvation. Scientologists believe that spirit beings called Thetans, living 74 trillion years ago, used the evolutionary process to create human beings, whose bodies they now inhabit. Whenever a human dies, the indwelling Thetan reincarnates into another body. Urantia, embracing a combination of Seventh-day Adventist and New Age doctrines, is another new religious movement that teaches a fanciful creation story. According to its scenario, planet earth, originally called Urantia, was created by Michael of Nebadon one trillion years ago. Michael eventually came to earth as the man Jesus. The Apostle Paul predicted a day when many will reject the truth and turn to fables.

6† For I am already being poured out as a •drink offering, and the time for my departure is close. 7 I have fought the good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept the faith. 8 There is reserved for me in the future the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me on that day, and not only to me, but to all those who have loved His appearing.

Final Instructions

[9] Make every effort to come to me soon, [10] for Demas has deserted me, because he loved this present world, and has gone to Thessalonica.
Crescens has gone to Galatia, Titus to Dalmatia. [11] Only Luke is with me.
Bring Mark with you, for he is useful to me in the ministry. [12] I have sent Tychicus to Ephesus. [13] When you come, bring the cloak I left in Troas with Carpus, as well as the scrolls, especially the parchments. [14] Alexander the coppersmith did great harm to me. The Lord will repay him according to his works. [15] Watch out for him yourself because he strongly opposed our words.

[16] At my first defense, no one stood by me, but everyone deserted me.
May it not be counted against them. [17] But the Lord stood with me and strengthened me, so that the proclamation might be fully made through me and all the Gentiles might hear. So I was rescued from the lion's mouth.
[18] The Lord will rescue me from every evil work and will bring me safely into His heavenly kingdom. To Him be the glory forever and ever! •Amen.

Benediction

[19] Greet Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus.
[20] Erastus has remained at Corinth; I left Trophimus sick at Miletus.
[21] Make every effort to come before winter. Eubulus greets you, as do Pudens, Linus, Claudia, and all the brothers.

[22] The Lord be with your spirit. Grace be with you.

TITUS

Titus 1 Titus 2 Titus 3

Introduction to Titus

TITUS

Greeting

1 Paul, a •slave of God and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to build up [A] the faith of God's elect and their knowledge of the truth that leads [B] to godliness, 2† in the hope of eternal life that God, who cannot lie, promised before time began. 3 In His own time He has revealed His message in the proclamation that I was entrusted with by the command of God our Savior:

4 To Titus, my true son in our common faith.

Grace and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Savior.

Titus's Ministry in Crete

5 The reason I left you in Crete was to set right what was left undone and, as I directed you, to appoint elders in every town: 6† one who is blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful [C] children not accused of wildness or rebellion. 7 For an •overseer, as God's administrator, must be blameless, not arrogant, not hot-tempered, not addicted to wine, not a bully, not greedy for money, 8 but hospitable, loving what is good, sensible, righteous, holy, self-controlled, 9 holding to the faithful message as taught, so that he will be able both to encourage with sound teaching and to refute those who contradict it.

10† For there are also many rebellious people, full of empty talk and deception, especially those from Judaism. [D] 11 It is necessary to silence them; they overthrow whole households by teaching what they shouldn't in order to get money dishonestly. 12† One of their very own prophets said, Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons.

13 This testimony is true. So, rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith 14† and may not pay attention to Jewish myths and the commands of men who reject the truth.

15 To the pure, everything is pure, but to those who are defiled and unbelieving nothing is pure; in fact, both their mind and conscience are defiled. [16] They profess to know God, but they deny Him by their works.

They are detestable, disobedient, and disqualified for any good work.

Sound Teaching and Christian Living

2 But you must say the things that are consistent with sound teaching.
[2] Older men are to be level headed, worthy of respect, sensible, and sound in faith, love, and endurance. [3†] In the same way, older women are to be reverent in behavior, not slanderers, not addicted to much wine. They are to teach what is good, [4] so they may encourage the young women to love their husbands and to love their children, [5] to be self-controlled, pure, homemakers, kind, and submissive to their husbands, so that God's message will not be slandered.

[6] In the same way, encourage the young men to be self-controlled [7] in everything. Make yourself an example of good works with integrity and dignity in your teaching. [8] Your message is to be sound beyond reproach, so that the opponent will be ashamed, having nothing bad to say about us.

[9†] •Slaves are to be submissive to their masters in everything, and to be well-pleasing, not talking back [10] or stealing, but demonstrating utter faithfulness, so that they may adorn the teaching of God our Savior in everything.

[11†] For the grace of God has appeared with salvation [A] for all people, [12] instructing us to deny godlessness and worldly lusts and to live in a sensible, righteous, and godly way in the present age, [13†] while we wait for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ. [14] He gave Himself for us to •redeem us from all lawlessness and to cleanse for Himself a people for His own possession, eager to do good works.

[15] Say these things, and encourage and rebuke with all authority. Let no one disregard [B] you.

Christian Living among Outsiders

3 Remind them to be submissive to rulers and authorities, to obey, to be ready for every good work, 2 to slander no one, to avoid fighting, and to be kind, always showing gentleness to all people. 3 For we too were once foolish, disobedient, deceived, enslaved by various passions and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, detesting one another.

4 But when the kindness of God our Savior and His love for mankind appeared,
5† He saved us —
not by works of righteousness that we had done, but according to His mercy,
through the washing of regeneration and renewal by the Holy Spirit.
6 He poured out this Spirit on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior,
7 so that having been •justified by His grace, we may become heirs with the hope of eternal life.

8 This saying is trustworthy. I want you to insist on these things, so that those who have believed God might be careful to devote themselves to good works. These are good and profitable for everyone. 9† But avoid foolish debates, genealogies, quarrels, and disputes about the law, for they are unprofitable and worthless. 10 Reject a divisive person after a first and second warning, 11 knowing that such a person is perverted and sins, being self-condemned.

Final Instructions and Closing

12 When I send Artemas or Tychicus to you, make every effort to come to me in Nicopolis, for I have decided to spend the winter there.
13 Diligently help Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey, so that they will lack nothing.

14 And our people must also learn to devote themselves to good works for cases of urgent need, so that they will not be unfruitful. 15 All those who are with me greet you. Greet those who love us in the faith. Grace be with all of you.

PHILEMON

Philemon 1

Introduction to Philemon

PHILEMON

Greeting

1 Paul, a prisoner of Christ Jesus, and Timothy our brother:

To Philemon our dear friend and coworker, 2 to Apphia our sister, to Archippus our fellow soldier, and to the church that meets in your home.

3 Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Philemon's Love and Faith

4 I always thank my God when I mention you in my prayers, 5 because I hear of your love and faith toward [A] the Lord Jesus and for all the •saints.
6 I pray that your participation in the faith may become effective through knowing every good thing that is in us for the glory of Christ. 7 For I have great joy and encouragement from your love, because the hearts of the saints have been refreshed through you, brother.

An Appeal for Onesimus

8 For this reason, although I have great boldness in Christ to command you to do what is right, 9 I appeal to you, instead, on the basis of love. I,
Paul, as an elderly man [B] and now also as a prisoner of Christ Jesus, 10† appeal to you for my son, Onesimus. [C], I fathered him while I was in chains. 11 Once he was useless to you, but now he is useful both to you and to me. 12 I am sending him back to you as a part of myself. 13 I wanted to keep him with me, so that in my imprisonment for the gospel he might serve me in your place. 14 But I didn't want to do anything without your consent, so that your good deed might not be out of obligation, but of your own free will. 15 For perhaps this is why he was separated from you for a brief time, so that you might get him back permanently, 16† no longer as a •slave, but more than a slave — as a dearly loved brother. He is especially so to me, but even more to you, both in the flesh and in the Lord.

17 So if you consider me a partner, accept him as you would me. 18 And if he has wronged you in any way, or owes you anything, charge that to my account. 19 I, Paul, write this with my own hand: I will repay it — not to mention to you that you owe me even your own self. [20] Yes, brother, may I have joy from you in the Lord; refresh my heart in Christ. [21] Since I am confident of your obedience, I am writing to you, knowing that you will do even more than I say. [22] But meanwhile, also prepare a guest room for me, for I hope that through your prayers I will be restored to you.

Final Greetings

[23] Epaphras, my fellow prisoner in Christ Jesus, greets you, and so do [24] Mark, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke, my coworkers.

[25] The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.

HEBREWS

Introduction to Hebrews

HEBREWS

The Nature of the Son

1 Long ago God spoke to the fathers by the prophets at different times and in different ways. 2† In these last days, He has spoken to us by His Son. God has appointed Him heir of all things and made the universe [A], through Him. 3 The Son is the radiance [B] of God’s glory and the exact expression [C] of His nature, sustaining all things by His powerful word.
After making purification for sins, He sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high. [D] 4 So He became higher in rank than the angels, just as the name He inherited is superior to theirs.

> ## TWISTED SCRIPTURE
>
> Hebrews 1:1-2
>
> Jesus is God's final and full revelation to the world. Therefore anyone who claims to be a prophet with a new revelation must be considered a false prophet (Mt 24:5,11, 23-26).

The Son Superior to Angels

5 For to which of the angels did He ever say, You are My Son; today I have become Your Father, [E], or again, I will be His Father, and He will be My Son? 6 When He again [F] brings His firstborn into the world, He says, And all God’s angels must worship Him. 7 And about the angels He says:

He makes His angels winds, [G]
and His servants [H] a fiery flame,

8† but to [I] the Son:

Your throne, God, is forever and ever,

and the scepter of Your kingdom is a scepter of justice.
9 You have loved righteousness and hated lawlessness;
this is why God, Your God, has anointed You with the oil of joy rather than Your companions. [J]

ARTICLE

What Is Divine Revelation? ⇒

10† And:

In the beginning, Lord,
You established the earth,
and the heavens are the works of Your hands;
11† they will perish, but You remain.
They will all wear out like clothing;
12 You will roll them up like a cloak,
and they will be changed like a robe.
But You are the same,
and Your years will never end.

13 Now to which of the angels has He ever said:

Sit at My right hand until I make Your enemies Your footstool? [K] ,

14 Are they not all ministering spirits sent out to serve those who are going to inherit salvation?

Warning against Neglect

2 We must, therefore, pay even more attention to what we have heard, so that we will not drift away. 2 For if the message spoken through angels was legally binding [A] and every transgression and disobedience received a just punishment, 3 how will we escape if we neglect such a great salvation?
It was first spoken by the Lord and was confirmed to us by those who heard Him. 4 At the same time, God also testified by signs and wonders, various miracles, and distributions of gifts from the Holy Spirit according to His will.

Jesus and Humanity

5 For He has not subjected to angels the world to come that we are talking about. 6 But one has somewhere testified:

What is man that You remember him,
or the son of man that You care for him?
7 You made him lower than the angels
for a short time;
You crowned him with glory and honor
8 and subjected everything under his feet.

For in subjecting everything to him, He left nothing that is not subject to him. As it is, we do not yet see everything subjected to him. 9 But we do see Jesus — made lower than the angels for a short time so that by God's grace He might taste death for everyone — crowned with glory and honor because of His suffering in death.

10 For in bringing many sons to glory, it was entirely appropriate that God — all things exist for Him and through Him — should make the source [B] of their salvation perfect through sufferings. 11 For the One who •sanctifies and those who are sanctified all have one Father. [C] That is why Jesus is not ashamed to call them brothers, 12 saying:

I will proclaim Your name to My brothers;
I will sing hymns to You in the congregation.

13 Again, I will trust in Him. And again, Here I am with the children God gave Me.

14 Now since the children have flesh and blood in common, Jesus also shared in these, so that through His death He might destroy the one holding the power of death — that is, the Devil — 15 and free those who were held in slavery all their lives by the fear of death. 16[†] For it is clear that He does not reach out to help angels, but to help Abraham's offspring. 17 Therefore,
He had to be like His brothers in every way, so that He could become a merciful and faithful high priest in service [D] to God, to make •propitiation for the sins of the people. 18 For since He Himself was tested and has suffered, He is able to help those who are tested.

Our Apostle and High Priest

3 Therefore, holy brothers and companions in a heavenly calling, consider Jesus, the apostle and high priest of our confession; 2 He was faithful to the One who appointed Him, just as Moses was in all God’s household.
3 For Jesus is considered worthy of more glory than Moses, just as the builder has more honor than the house. 4 Now every house is built by someone, but the One who built everything is God. 5 Moses was faithful as a servant in all God’s household, as a testimony to what would be said in the future. 6 But Christ was faithful as a Son over His household. And we are that household if we hold on to the courage and the confidence of our hope.

Warning against Unbelief

7 Therefore, as the Holy Spirit says:

Today, if you hear His voice,
8 do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion,
on the day of testing in the wilderness, 9 where your fathers tested Me, tried Me, and saw My works 10 for 40 years.
Therefore I was provoked with that generation and said, “They always go astray in their hearts, and they have not known My ways.”
11 So I swore in My anger,
“They will not enter My rest.”

12 Watch out, brothers, so that there won’t be in any of you an evil, unbelieving heart that departs from the living God. 13 But encourage each other daily, while it is still called today, so that none of you is hardened by sin’s deception. 14 For we have become companions of the •Messiah if we hold firmly until the end the reality [A] that we had at the start. 15 As it is said:

Today, if you hear His voice,
do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion.

[16] For who heard and rebelled? Wasn't it really all who came out of Egypt under Moses? [17] And who was He provoked with for 40 years? Was it not with those who sinned, whose bodies fell in the wilderness? [18] And who did He swear to that they would not enter His rest, if not those who disobeyed? [19] So we see that they were unable to enter because of unbelief.

The Promised Rest

4 Therefore, while the promise to enter His rest remains, let us fear that none of you should miss it. [A] 2 For we also have received the good news just as they did; but the message they heard did not benefit them, since they were not united with those who heard it in faith 3 (for we who have believed enter the rest), in keeping with what [B] He has said:

So I swore in My anger,
they will not enter My rest.

And yet His works have been finished since the foundation of the world,
4 for somewhere He has spoken about the seventh day in this way:

And on the seventh day
God rested from all His works.

5 Again, in that passage He says, They will never enter My rest. 6 Since it remains for some to enter it, and those who formerly received the good news did not enter because of disobedience, 7 again, He specifies a certain day — today — speaking through David after such a long time, as previously stated:

Today, if you hear His voice,
do not harden your hearts.

8 For if Joshua had given them rest, God would not have spoken later about another day. 9 Therefore, a Sabbath rest remains for God's people. 10 For the person who has entered His rest has rested from his own works, just as God did from His. 11 Let us then make every effort to enter that rest, so that no one will fall into the same pattern of disobedience.

12 For the word of God is living and effective and sharper than any double-edged sword, penetrating as far as the separation of soul and spirit, joints and marrow. It is able to judge the ideas and thoughts of the heart.
13 No creature is hidden from Him, but all things are naked and exposed to the eyes of Him to whom we must give an account.

Our Great High Priest

[14] Therefore, since we have a great high priest who has passed through the heavens — Jesus the Son of God — let us hold fast to the confession.
[15]† For we do not have a high priest who is unable to sympathize with our weaknesses, but One who has been tested in every way as we are, yet without sin. [16] Therefore let us approach the throne of grace with boldness, so that we may receive mercy and find grace to help us at the proper time.

The Messiah, a High Priest

5 For every high priest taken from men is appointed in service [A] to God for the people, to offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. [2] He is able to deal gently with those who are ignorant and are going astray, since he is also subject to weakness. [3] Because of this, he must make a sin offering for himself as well as for the people. [4] No one takes this honor on himself; instead, a person is called by God, just as Aaron was. [5] In the same way, the •Messiah did not exalt Himself to become a high priest, but the One who said to Him, You are My Son; today I have become Your Father, [6] also said in another passage, You are a priest forever in the order of Melchizedek.

[7] During His earthly life, [B] He offered prayers and appeals with loud cries and tears to the One who was able to save Him from death, and He was heard because of His reverence. [8] Though He was God's Son, He learned obedience through what He suffered. [9] After He was perfected, He became the source of eternal salvation for all who obey Him, [10] and He was declared by God a high priest in the order of Melchizedek.

The Problem of Immaturity

[11] We have a great deal to say about this, and it's difficult to explain, since you have become too lazy to understand. [12] Although by this time you ought to be teachers, you need someone to teach you the basic principles of God's revelation again. You need milk, not solid food. [13] Now everyone who lives on milk is inexperienced with the message about righteousness, because he is an infant. [14] But solid food is for the mature — for those whose senses have been trained to distinguish between good and evil.

Warning against Regression

6 Therefore, leaving the elementary message about the •Messiah, let us go on to maturity, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, faith in God, 2 teaching about ritual washings, [A] laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. 3 And we will do this if God permits.

4[†] For it is impossible to renew to repentance those who were once enlightened, who tasted the heavenly gift, became companions with the Holy Spirit, 5 tasted God's good word and the powers of the coming age, 6 and who have fallen away, because, [B] to their own harm, they are recrucifying the Son of God and holding Him up to contempt. 7 For ground that has drunk the rain that has often fallen on it and that produces vegetation useful to those it is cultivated for receives a blessing from God.
8 But if it produces thorns and thistles, it is worthless and about to be cursed, and will be burned at the end.

ARTICLE

Notable Christian Apologist: C.S. Lewis ⇒

---

9 Even though we are speaking this way, dear friends, in your case we are confident of the better things connected with salvation. 10 For God is not unjust; He will not forget your work and the love you showed for His name when you served the •saints — and you continue to serve them. 11 Now we want each of you to demonstrate the same diligence for the final realization of your hope, 12 so that you won't become lazy but will be imitators of those who inherit the promises through faith and perseverance.

Inheriting the Promise

13 For when God made a promise to Abraham, since He had no one greater to swear by, He swore by Himself:

[14] I will indeed bless you, and I will greatly multiply you.

[15] And so, after waiting patiently, Abraham [C] obtained the promise. [16] For men swear by something greater than themselves, and for them a confirming oath ends every dispute. [17] Because God wanted to show His unchangeable purpose even more clearly to the heirs of the promise, He guaranteed it with an oath, [18†] so that through two unchangeable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie, we who have fled for refuge might have strong encouragement to seize the hope set before us. [19] We have this hope as an anchor for our lives, safe and secure. It enters the inner sanctuary behind the curtain. [20] Jesus has entered there on our behalf as a forerunner, because He has become a high priest forever in the order of Melchizedek.

The Greatness of Melchizedek

7 For this Melchizedek —

King of Salem, priest of the Most High God, who met Abraham and blessed him as he returned from defeating the kings, [2] and Abraham gave him a tenth of everything;
first, his name means king of righteousness,
then also, king of Salem,
meaning king of peace;
[3†] without father, mother, or genealogy, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but resembling the Son of God — remains a priest forever.

[4] Now consider how great this man was — even Abraham the patriarch gave a tenth of the plunder to him! [5] The sons of Levi who receive the priestly office have a command according to the law to collect a tenth from the people — that is, from their brothers — though they have also descended from Abraham. [A] [6] But one without this [B] lineage collected tenths from Abraham and blessed the one who had the promises. [7] Without a doubt, [C] the inferior is blessed by the superior. [8] In the one case, men who will die receive tenths, but in the other case, Scripture testifies that he lives.
[9] And in a sense Levi himself, who receives tenths, has paid tenths through Abraham, [10] for he was still within his ancestor [D] when Melchizedek met him.

A Superior Priesthood

[11†] If then, perfection came through the Levitical priesthood (for under it the people received the law), what further need was there for another priest to appear, said to be in the order of Melchizedek and not in the order of Aaron? [12] For when there is a change of the priesthood, there must be a change of law as well. [13] For the One these things are spoken about belonged to a different tribe. No one from it has served at the altar. [14] Now it is evident that our Lord came from Judah, and Moses said nothing about that tribe concerning priests.

[15] And this becomes clearer if another priest like Melchizedek appears, [16] who did not become a priest based on a legal command concerning physical [E] descent but based on the power of an indestructible life. [17] For it has been testified:

You are a priest forever
in the order of Melchizedek.

[18] So the previous command is annulled because it was weak and unprofitable [19] (for the law perfected nothing), but a better hope is introduced, through which we draw near to God.

[20] None of this happened without an oath. For others became priests without an oath, [21] but He became a priest with an oath made by the One who said to Him:

The Lord has sworn,
and He will not change His mind,
You are a priest forever.

[22] So Jesus has also become the guarantee of a better covenant.

[23] Now many have become Levitical priests, since they are prevented by death from remaining in office. [24][†] But because He remains forever, He holds His priesthood permanently. [25] Therefore, He is always able to save [F] those who come to God through Him, since He always lives to intercede for them.

[26] For this is the kind of high priest we need: holy, innocent, undefiled, separated from sinners, and exalted above the heavens. [27] He doesn't need to offer sacrifices every day, as high priests do — first for their own sins, then for those of the people. He did this once for all when He offered Himself. [28] For the law appoints as high priests men who are weak, but the promise of the oath, which came after the law, appoints a Son, who has been perfected forever.

A Heavenly Priesthood

8 Now the main point of what is being said is this: We have this kind of high priest, who sat down at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, 2 a minister of the sanctuary and the true tabernacle that was set up by the Lord and not man. 3 For every high priest is appointed to offer gifts and sacrifices; therefore it was necessary for this priest also to have something to offer. 4 Now if He were on earth, He wouldn't be a priest, since there are those offering the gifts prescribed by the law. 5 These serve as a copy and shadow of the heavenly things, as Moses was warned when he was about to complete the tabernacle. For God said, Be careful that you make everything according to the pattern that was shown to you on the mountain. 6 But Jesus has now obtained a superior ministry, and to that degree He is the mediator of a better covenant, which has been legally enacted on better promises.

A Superior Covenant

7 For if that first covenant had been faultless, there would have been no occasion for a second one. 8 But finding fault with His people, [A] He says:

Look, the days are coming, says the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah — 9[†] not like the covenant that I made with their ancestors on the day I took them by their hands to lead them out of the land of Egypt.
I disregarded them, says the Lord,
because they did not continue in My covenant.
10 But this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel
after those days, says the Lord:
I will put My laws into their minds and write them on their hearts.
I will be their God,
and they will be My people.

[11] And each person will not teach his fellow citizen, and each his brother, saying, “Know the Lord,”
because they will all know Me,
from the least to the greatest of them.
[12] For I will be merciful to their wrongdoing, and I will never again remember their sins. ,

[13] By saying, a new covenant, He has declared that the first is old. And what is old and aging is about to disappear.

Old Covenant Ministry

9 Now the first covenant also had regulations for ministry and an earthly sanctuary. 2 For a tabernacle was set up, and in the first room, which is called the holy place, were the lampstand, the table, and the presentation loaves. 3 Behind the second curtain, the tabernacle was called the most holy place. 4† It contained the gold altar of incense and the ark of the covenant, covered with gold on all sides, in which there was a gold jar containing the manna, Aaron's staff that budded, and the tablets of the covenant. 5 The •cherubim of glory were above it overshadowing the •mercy seat. It is not possible to speak about these things in detail right now.

6 With these things set up this way, the priests enter the first room repeatedly, performing their ministry. 7 But the high priest alone enters the second room, and he does that only once a year, and never without blood, which he offers for himself and for the sins of the people committed in ignorance. 8 The Holy Spirit was making it clear that the way into the most holy place had not yet been disclosed while the first tabernacle was still standing. 9 This is a symbol for the present time, during which gifts and sacrifices are offered that cannot perfect the worshiper's conscience.
10 They are physical regulations and only deal with food, drink, and various washings imposed until the time of restoration.

New Covenant Ministry

11 But the •Messiah has appeared, high priest of the good things that have come. In the greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands (that is, not of this creation), 12 He entered the most holy place once for all, not by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood, having obtained eternal •redemption. 13 For if the blood of goats and bulls and the ashes of a young cow, sprinkling those who are defiled, sanctify for the purification of the flesh, 14 how much more will the blood of the Messiah, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish to God, cleanse our consciences from dead works to serve the living God?

[15] Therefore, He is the mediator of a new covenant, so that those who are called might receive the promise of the eternal inheritance, because a death has taken place for redemption from the transgressions committed under the first covenant. [16] Where a will exists, the death of the one who made it must be established. [17] For a will is valid only when people die, since it is never in force while the one who made it is living. [18] That is why even the first covenant was inaugurated with blood. [19] For when every command had been proclaimed by Moses to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and goats, along with water, scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled the scroll itself and all the people, [20] saying,
This is the blood of the covenant that God has commanded for you.
[21] In the same way, he sprinkled the tabernacle and all the articles of worship with blood. [22] According to the law almost everything is purified with blood, and without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness.

[23] Therefore it was necessary for the copies of the things in the heavens to be purified with these sacrifices, but the heavenly things themselves to be purified with better sacrifices than these. [24] For the Messiah did not enter a sanctuary made with hands (only a model [A] of the true one) but into heaven itself, so that He might now appear in the presence of God for us. [25] He did not do this to offer Himself many times, as the high priest enters the sanctuary yearly with the blood of another. [26] Otherwise, He would have had to suffer many times since the foundation of the world. But now He has appeared one time, at the end of the ages, for the removal of sin by the sacrifice of Himself. [27†] And just as it is appointed for people to die once — and after this, judgment — [28] so also the Messiah, having been offered once to bear the sins of many, will appear a second time, not to bear sin, but [B] to bring salvation to those who are waiting for Him.

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

Hebrews 9:27

This verse clearly shows that belief in reincarnation is not an option for a Christian. Each individual is granted a single lifetime on earth and "after this, judgment." Jesus told of a rich man who died and in hell lifted up his eyes in torment (Lk 16:23). There is no opportunity to return to earth.

ARTICLE

Does the Bible Teach Reincarnation? ⇒

The Perfect Sacrifice

10 Since the law has only a shadow of the good things to come, and not the actual form of those realities, it can never perfect the worshipers by the same sacrifices they continually offer year after year. [2] Otherwise, wouldn't they have stopped being offered, since the worshipers, once purified, would no longer have any consciousness of sins? [3] But in the sacrifices there is a reminder of sins every year. [4†] For it is impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins.

[5†] Therefore, as He was coming into the world, He said:

You did not want sacrifice and offering,
but You prepared a body for Me.
[6] You did not delight in whole burnt offerings and sin offerings.
[7] Then I said, "See — it is written about Me in the volume of the scroll —
I have come to do Your will, God! "

[8] After He says above, You did not want or delight in sacrifices and offerings, whole burnt offerings and sin offerings (which are offered according to the law), [9] He then says, See, I have come to do Your will. He takes away the first to establish the second. [10] By this will of God, we have been •sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once and for all.

[11] Every priest stands day after day ministering and offering the same sacrifices time after time, which can never take away sins. [12] But this man, after offering one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down at the right hand of God. [13] He is now waiting until His enemies are made His footstool. [14] For by one offering He has perfected forever those who are sanctified. [15] The Holy Spirit also testifies to us about this. For after He says:

[16] This is the covenant I will make with them
after those days, says the Lord:
I will put My laws on their hearts and write them on their minds,

[17] He adds:

I will never again remember their sins and their lawless acts.

[18] Now where there is forgiveness of these, there is no longer an offering for sin.

Exhortations to Godliness

[19] Therefore, brothers, since we have boldness to enter the sanctuary through the blood of Jesus, [20] by a new and living way He has opened for us through the curtain (that is, His flesh), [21] and since we have a great high priest over the house of God, [22] let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, our hearts sprinkled •clean from an evil conscience and our bodies washed in pure water. [23] Let us hold on to the confession of our hope without wavering, for He who promised is faithful. [24] And let us be concerned about one another in order to promote love and good works, [25] not staying away from our worship meetings, as some habitually do, but encouraging each other, and all the more as you see the day drawing near.

Warning against Deliberate Sin

[26] For if we deliberately sin after receiving the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins, [27] but a terrifying expectation of judgment and the fury of a fire about to consume the adversaries. [28†] If anyone disregards Moses' law, he dies without mercy, based on the testimony of two or three witnesses. [29] How much worse punishment do you think one will deserve who has trampled on the Son of God, regarded as profane [A] the blood of the covenant by which he was sanctified, and insulted the Spirit of grace? [30] For we know the One who has said, Vengeance belongs to Me, I will repay, and again, The Lord will judge
His people. [31] It is a terrifying thing to fall into the hands of the living God!

32 Remember the earlier days when, after you had been enlightened, you endured a hard struggle with sufferings. 33 Sometimes you were publicly exposed to taunts and afflictions, and at other times you were companions of those who were treated that way. 34 For you sympathized with the prisoners and accepted with joy the confiscation of your possessions, knowing that you yourselves have a better and enduring possession. 35 So don’t throw away your confidence, which has a great reward. 36 For you need endurance, so that after you have done God’s will, you may receive what was promised.

37† For yet in a very little while,
the Coming One will come and not delay.
38 But My righteous one will live by faith;
and if he draws back,
I have no pleasure in him.

39 But we are not those who draw back and are destroyed, but those who have faith and obtain life.

Heroes of Faith

11 [†]Now faith is the reality [A] of what is hoped for, the proof [B] of what is not seen. 2 For our ancestors won God's approval by it.

3 By faith we understand that the universe was [C] created by God's command, [D] so that what is seen has been made from things that are not visible.

4 By faith Abel offered to God a better sacrifice than Cain did. By faith he was approved as a righteous man, because God approved his gifts, and even though he is dead, he still speaks through his faith.

5[†] By faith Enoch was taken away so he did not experience death, and he was not to be found because God took him away. For prior to his removal he was approved, since he had pleased God.
6 Now without faith it is impossible to please God, for the one who draws near to Him must believe that He exists and rewards those who seek Him.

7 By faith Noah, after he was warned about what was not yet seen and motivated by godly fear, built an ark to deliver his family. By faith he condemned the world and became an heir of the righteousness that comes by faith.

8 By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed and went out to a place he was going to receive as an inheritance. He went out, not knowing where he was going.
9 By faith he stayed as a foreigner in the land of promise, living in tents with Isaac and Jacob, co-heirs of the same promise.
10 For he was looking forward to the city that has foundations, whose architect and builder is God.

11 By faith even Sarah herself, when she was unable to have children, received power to conceive offspring, even though she was past the age, since she [E] considered that the One who had promised was faithful.
12 Therefore from one man — in fact, from one as good as dead — came offspring as numerous as the stars of heaven and as innumerable as the grains of sand by the seashore.

13† These all died in faith without having received the promises, but they saw them from a distance, greeted them, and confessed that they were foreigners and temporary residents on the earth. 14 Now those who say such things make it clear that they are seeking a homeland. 15 If they were thinking about where they came from, they would have had an opportunity to return. 16 But they now desire a better place — a heavenly one. Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for He has prepared a city for them.

17† By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac. He received the promises and he was offering his unique son, 18 the one it had been said about, Your •seed will be traced [F] through Isaac. 19 He considered God to be able even to raise someone from the dead, and as an illustration, [G] he received him back.

20 By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come.
21 By faith Jacob, when he was dying, blessed each of the sons of Joseph, and he worshiped, leaning on the top of his staff. 22 By faith Joseph, as he was nearing the end of his life, mentioned the exodus of the Israelites and gave instructions concerning his bones.

23 By faith, after Moses was born, he was hidden by his parents for three months, because they saw that the child was beautiful, and they didn't fear the king's edict. 24 By faith Moses, when he had grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter 25 and chose to suffer with the people of God rather than to enjoy the short-lived pleasure of sin. 26† For he considered the reproach because of the •Messiah to be greater wealth than the treasures of Egypt, since his attention was on the reward.

27 By faith he left Egypt behind, not being afraid of the king's anger, for Moses persevered as one who sees Him who is invisible. 28 By faith he instituted the •Passover and the sprinkling of the blood, so that the destroyer of the firstborn might not touch the Israelites. 29 By faith they crossed the Red Sea as though they were on dry land. When the Egyptians attempted to do this, they were drowned.

[30] By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after being encircled by the Israelites for seven days. [31]† By faith Rahab the prostitute received the spies in peace and didn't perish with those who disobeyed.

[32] And what more can I say? Time is too short for me to tell about Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, David, Samuel, and the prophets, [33] who by faith conquered kingdoms, administered justice, obtained promises, shut the mouths of lions, [34] quenched the raging of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, gained strength after being weak, became mighty in battle, and put foreign armies to flight. [35] Women received their dead — they were raised to life again. Some men were tortured, not accepting release, so that they might gain a better resurrection, [36] and others experienced mockings and scourgings, as well as bonds and imprisonment.
[37] They were stoned, they were sawed in two, they died by the sword, they wandered about in sheepskins, in goatskins, destitute, afflicted, and mistreated. [38] The •world was not worthy of them. They wandered in deserts and on mountains, hiding in caves and holes in the ground.

[39] All these were approved through their faith, but they did not receive what was promised, [40] since God had provided something better for us, so that they would not be made perfect without us.

The Call to Endurance

12 Therefore, since we also have such a large cloud of witnesses surrounding us, let us lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily ensnares us. Let us run with endurance the race that lies before us, 2 keeping our eyes on Jesus, [A] the source and perfecter [B] of our faith, who for the joy that lay before Him [C] endured a cross and despised the shame and has sat down at the right hand of God's throne.

Fatherly Discipline

3 For consider Him who endured such hostility from sinners against Himself, so that you won't grow weary and lose heart. 4 In struggling against sin, you have not yet resisted to the point of shedding your blood.
5 And you have forgotten the exhortation that addresses you as sons:

My son, do not take the Lord's discipline lightly or faint when you are reproved by Him, 6[†] for the Lord disciplines the one He loves and punishes every son He receives.

7 Endure suffering as discipline: God is dealing with you as sons. For what son is there that a father does not discipline? 8 But if you are without discipline — which all receive [D] — then you are illegitimate children and not sons. 9 Furthermore, we had natural fathers discipline us, and we respected them. Shouldn't we submit even more to the Father of spirits and live? 10 For they disciplined us for a short time based on what seemed good to them, but He does it for our benefit, so that we can share His holiness.
11 No discipline seems enjoyable at the time, but painful. Later on, however, it yields the fruit of peace and righteousness to those who have been trained by it.

12 Therefore strengthen your tired hands and weakened knees, 13 and make straight paths for your feet, so that what is lame may not be dislocated [E] but healed instead.

Warning against Rejecting God's Grace

14 Pursue peace with everyone, and holiness — without it no one will see the Lord. 15 Make sure that no one falls short of the grace of God and that no root of bitterness springs up, causing trouble and by it, defiling many. 16 And make sure that there isn't any immoral or irreverent person like Esau, who sold his birthright in exchange for one meal. 17 For you know that later, when he wanted to inherit the blessing, he was rejected because he didn't find any opportunity for repentance, though he sought it with tears.

18 For you have not come to what could be touched, to a blazing fire, to darkness, gloom, and storm, 19 to the blast of a trumpet, and the sound of words. (Those who heard it begged that not another word be spoken to them, 20 for they could not bear what was commanded: And if even an animal touches the mountain, it must be stoned! 21 The appearance was so terrifying that Moses said, I am terrified and trembling.) 22 Instead, you have come to Mount •Zion, to the city of the living God (the heavenly Jerusalem), to myriads of angels in festive gathering, 23 to the assembly of the firstborn whose names have been written [F] in heaven, to God who is the Judge of all, to the spirits of righteous people made perfect, 24 to Jesus (mediator of a new covenant), and to the sprinkled blood, which says better things than the blood of Abel.

25 Make sure that you do not reject the One who speaks. For if they did not escape when they rejected Him who warned them on earth, even less will we if we turn away from Him who warns us from heaven. 26 His voice shook the earth at that time, but now He has promised, Yet once more I will shake not only the earth but also heaven. 27 This expression, "Yet once more," indicates the removal of what can be shaken — that is, created things — so that what is not shaken might remain. 28 Therefore, since we are receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us hold on to grace. [G] By it, we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and awe, 29 for our God is a consuming fire.

Final Exhortations

13 Let brotherly love continue. [2†] Don't neglect to show hospitality, for by doing this some have welcomed angels as guests without knowing it. [3] Remember the prisoners, as though you were in prison with them, and the mistreated, as though you yourselves were suffering bodily. [A] [4†] Marriage must be respected by all, and the marriage bed kept undefiled, because God will judge immoral people and adulterers. [5] Your life should be free from the love of money. Be satisfied with what you have, for He Himself has said, I will never leave you or forsake you. [6] Therefore, we may boldly say:

The Lord is my helper;
I will not be afraid.
What can man do to me?

[7] Remember your leaders who have spoken God's word to you. As you carefully observe the outcome of their lives, imitate their faith. [8] Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever. [9] Don't be led astray by various kinds of strange teachings; for it is good for the heart to be established by grace and not by foods, since those involved in them have not benefited. [10] We have an altar from which those who serve the tabernacle do not have a right to eat. [11] For the bodies of those animals whose blood is brought into the most holy place by the high priest as a sin offering are burned outside the camp. [12] Therefore Jesus also suffered outside the gate, so that He might •sanctify [B] the people by His own blood.
[13] Let us then go to Him outside the camp, bearing His disgrace. [14] For we do not have an enduring city here; instead, we seek the one to come.
[15] Therefore, through Him let us continually offer up to God a sacrifice of praise, that is, the fruit of our lips that confess His name. [16] Don't neglect to do what is good and to share, for God is pleased with such sacrifices.
[17] Obey your leaders [C] and submit to them, for they keep watch over your souls as those who will give an account, so that they can do this with joy and not with grief, for that would be unprofitable for you. [18] Pray for us; for we are convinced that we have a clear conscience, wanting to conduct ourselves honorably in everything. [19] And I especially urge you to pray [D] that I may be restored to you very soon.

Benediction and Farewell

[20†] Now may the God of peace, who brought up from the dead our Lord Jesus — the great Shepherd of the sheep — with the blood of the everlasting covenant, [21] equip [E] you with all that is good to do His will, working in us what is pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ. Glory belongs to Him forever and ever. •Amen.

[22] Brothers, I urge you to receive this message of exhortation, for I have written to you briefly. [23] Be aware that our brother Timothy has been released. If he comes soon enough, he will be with me when I see you.
[24] Greet all your leaders and all the •saints. Those who are from Italy greet you. [25] Grace be with all of you.

JAMES

James 1 James 2 James 3 James 4
James 5

Introduction to James

JAMES

Greeting

1 James, a •slave of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ:

To the 12 tribes in the Dispersion.

Greetings.

Trials and Maturity

2 Consider it a great joy, my brothers, whenever you experience various trials, 3 knowing that the testing of your faith produces endurance. 4 But endurance must do its complete work, so that you may be mature and complete, lacking nothing.

5 Now if any of you lacks wisdom, he should ask God, who gives to all generously and without criticizing, and it will be given to him. 6 But let him ask in faith without doubting. For the doubter is like the surging sea, driven and tossed by the wind. 7 That person should not expect to receive anything from the Lord. 8 An indecisive [A] man is unstable in all his ways.

9 The brother of humble circumstances should boast in his exaltation, 10 but the one who is rich should boast in his humiliation because he will pass away like a flower of the field. 11 For the sun rises with its scorching heat and dries up the grass; its flower falls off, and its beautiful appearance is destroyed. In the same way, the rich man will wither away while pursuing his activities.

12 A man who endures trials [B] is blessed, because when he passes the test he will receive the crown of life that God has promised to those who love Him.

13† No one undergoing a trial should say, “I am being tempted by God.”
For God is not tempted by evil, [C] and He Himself doesn’t tempt anyone.
14 But each person is tempted when he is drawn away and enticed by his own evil desires. 15 Then after desire has conceived, it gives birth to sin, and when sin is fully grown, it gives birth to death.

16 Don’t be deceived, my dearly loved brothers. 17 Every generous act and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights; with Him there is no variation or shadow cast by turning. 18 By His own choice, He gave us a new birth by the message of truth so that we would be the •firstfruits of His creatures.

Hearing and Doing the Word

19 My dearly loved brothers, understand this: Everyone must be quick to hear, slow to speak, and slow to anger, 20 for man’s anger does not accomplish God’s righteousness. 21 Therefore, ridding yourselves of all moral filth and evil, [D] humbly receive the implanted word, which is able to save you. [E]

22 But be doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves.
23 Because if anyone is a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like a man looking at his own face [F] in a mirror. 24 For he looks at himself, goes away, and immediately forgets what kind of man he was. 25 But the one who looks intently into the perfect law of freedom and perseveres in it, and is not a forgetful hearer but one who does good works — this person will be blessed in what he does.

26 If anyone thinks he is religious without controlling his tongue, then his religion is useless and he deceives himself. 27 Pure and undefiled religion before our [G] God and Father is this: to look after orphans and widows in their distress and to keep oneself unstained by the •world.

The Sin of Favoritism

2 My brothers, do not show favoritism as you hold on to the faith in our glorious Lord Jesus Christ. 2 For example, a man comes into your meeting wearing a gold ring and dressed in fine clothes, and a poor man dressed in dirty clothes also comes in. 3 If you look with favor on the man wearing the fine clothes and say, “Sit here in a good place,” and yet you say to the poor man, “Stand over there,” or, “Sit here on the floor by my footstool,” 4 haven’t you discriminated among yourselves and become judges with evil thoughts?

5 Listen, my dear brothers: Didn’t God choose the poor in this world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom that He has promised to those who love Him? 6 Yet you dishonored that poor man. Don’t the rich oppress you and drag you into the courts? 7 Don’t they blaspheme the noble name that was pronounced over you at your baptism?

8 Indeed, if you keep the royal law prescribed in the Scripture, Love your neighbor as yourself, you are doing well. 9 But if you show favoritism, you commit sin and are convicted by the law as transgressors. 10 For whoever keeps the entire law, yet fails in one point, is •guilty of breaking it all. 11 For He who said, Do not commit adultery, also said, Do not murder. So if you do not commit adultery, but you do murder, you are a lawbreaker.

12 Speak and act as those who will be judged by the law of freedom.
13 For judgment is without mercy to the one who hasn’t shown mercy.
Mercy triumphs over judgment.

Faith and Works

14[†] What good is it, my brothers, if someone says he has faith but does not have works? Can his faith [A] save him?

15 If a brother or sister is without clothes and lacks daily food 16 and one of you says to them, “Go in peace, keep warm, and eat well,” but you don’t give them what the body needs, what good is it? [17] In the same way faith, if it doesn't have works, is dead by itself.

[18] But someone will say, "You have faith, and I have works." Show me your faith without works, and I will show you faith from my works. [19] You believe that God is one; you do well. The demons also believe — and they shudder.

[20] Foolish man! Are you willing to learn that faith without works is useless? [21] Wasn't Abraham our father justified by works when he offered Isaac his son on the altar? [22] You see that faith was active together with his works, and by works, faith was perfected. [23] So the Scripture was fulfilled that says, Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him for righteousness, and he was called God's friend. [24] You see that a man is •justified by works and not by faith alone. [25] And in the same way, wasn't Rahab the prostitute also justified by works when she received the messengers and sent them out by a different route? [26] For just as the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead.

Controlling the Tongue

3 Not many should become teachers, my brothers, knowing that we will receive a stricter judgment, [2] for we all stumble in many ways. If anyone does not stumble in what he says, [A] he is a mature man who is also able to control his whole body. [B]

[3] Now when we put bits into the mouths of horses to make them obey us, we also guide the whole animal. [C] [4] And consider ships: Though very large and driven by fierce winds, they are guided by a very small rudder wherever the will of the pilot directs. [5] So too, though the tongue is a small part of the body, it boasts great things. Consider how large a forest a small fire ignites. [6] And the tongue is a fire. The tongue, a world of unrighteousness, is placed among the parts of our bodies. It pollutes the whole body, sets the course of life on fire, and is set on fire by •hell.

[7] Every sea creature, reptile, bird, or animal is tamed and has been tamed by man, [8] but no man can tame the tongue. It is a restless evil, full of deadly poison. [9] We praise our [D] Lord and Father with it, and we curse men who are made in God’s likeness with it. [10] Praising and cursing come out of the same mouth. My brothers, these things should not be this way. [11] Does a spring pour out sweet and bitter water from the same opening? [12] Can a fig tree produce olives, my brothers, or a grapevine produce figs? Neither can a saltwater spring yield fresh water.

The Wisdom from Above

[13] Who is wise and has understanding among you? He should show his works by good conduct with wisdom’s gentleness. [14] But if you have bitter envy and selfish ambition in your heart, don’t brag and deny the truth. [15] Such wisdom does not come from above but is earthly, unspiritual, demonic. [16] For where envy and selfish ambition exist, there is disorder and every kind of evil. [17] But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peace-loving, gentle, compliant, full of mercy and good fruits, without favoritism and hypocrisy. [18] And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace by those who cultivate peace.

Proud or Humble

4 What is the source of wars and fights among you? Don’t they come from the cravings that are at war within you? [A] 2 You desire and do not have. You murder and covet and cannot obtain. You fight and war. You do not have because you do not ask. 3 You ask and don’t receive because you ask with wrong motives, so that you may spend it on your evil desires.

4 Adulteresses! Don’t you know that friendship with the •world is hostility toward God? So whoever wants to be the world’s friend becomes God’s enemy. 5[†] Or do you think it’s without reason the Scripture says that the Spirit who lives in us yearns jealously? [C]

6 But He gives greater grace. Therefore He says:

God resists the proud,
but gives grace to the humble.

7 Therefore, submit to God. But resist the Devil, and he will flee from you. 8 Draw near to God, and He will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, sinners, and purify your hearts, double-minded people! 9 Be miserable and mourn and weep. Your laughter must change to mourning and your joy to sorrow. 10 Humble yourselves before the Lord, and He will exalt you.

11 Don’t criticize one another, brothers. He who criticizes a brother or judges his brother criticizes the law and judges the law. But if you judge the law, you are not a doer of the law but a judge. 12 There is one lawgiver and judge who is able to save and to destroy. But who are you to judge your neighbor?

Our Will and His Will

13 Come now, you who say, “Today or tomorrow we will travel to such and such a city and spend a year there and do business and make a profit.”
14 You don’t even know what tomorrow will bring — what your life will be!
For you are like smoke that appears for a little while, then vanishes.

[15] Instead, you should say, “If the Lord wills, we will live and do this or that.” [16] But as it is, you boast in your arrogance. All such boasting is evil.
[17] So it is a sin for the person who knows to do what is good and doesn’t do it.

Warning to the Rich

5 Come now, you rich people! Weep and wail over the miseries that are coming on you. 2 Your wealth is ruined and your clothes are moth-eaten. 3 Your silver and gold are corroded, and their corrosion will be a witness against you and will eat your flesh like fire. You stored up treasure in the last days! 4 Look! The pay that you withheld from the workers who reaped your fields cries out, and the outcry of the harvesters has reached the ears of the Lord of •Hosts. [A], 5 You have lived luxuriously on the land and have indulged yourselves. You have fattened your hearts for [B] the day of slaughter. 6 You have condemned — you have murdered — the righteous man; he does not resist you.

Waiting for the Lord

7 Therefore, brothers, be patient until the Lord’s coming. See how the farmer waits for the precious fruit of the earth and is patient with it until it receives the early and the late rains. 8 You also must be patient. Strengthen your hearts, because the Lord’s coming is near.

9 Brothers, do not complain about one another, so that you will not be judged. Look, the judge stands at the door!

10 Brothers, take the prophets who spoke in the Lord’s name as an example of suffering and patience. 11 See, we count as blessed those who have endured. [C] You have heard of Job’s endurance and have seen the outcome from the Lord. The Lord is very compassionate and merciful.

Truthful Speech

12† Now above all, my brothers, do not swear, either by heaven or by earth or with any other oath. Your “yes” must be “yes,” and your “no” must be “no,” so that you won’t fall under judgment.

Effective Prayer

13 Is anyone among you suffering? He should pray. Is anyone cheerful? He should sing praises. 14 Is anyone among you sick? He should call for the elders of the church, and they should pray over him after anointing him with olive oil in the name of the Lord. [15] The prayer of faith will save the sick person, and the Lord will restore him to health; if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven. [16] Therefore, confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, so that you may be healed. The urgent request of a righteous person is very powerful in its effect. [17] Elijah was a man with a nature like ours; yet he prayed earnestly that it would not rain, and for three years and six months it did not rain on the land. [18] Then he prayed again, and the sky gave rain and the land produced its fruit.

[19] My brothers, if any among you strays from the truth, and someone turns him back, [20] let him know that whoever turns a sinner from the error of his way will save his •life from death and cover a multitude of sins.

1 PETER

Introduction to 1 Peter

1 PETER

Greeting

1 Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ:

To the temporary residents dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, •Asia, and Bithynia, chosen 2 according to the foreknowledge of God the Father and set apart by the Spirit for obedience and for sprinkling with the blood of Jesus Christ.

May grace and peace be multiplied to you.

A Living Hope

3[†] Praise the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. According to His great mercy, He has given us a new birth into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead 4 and into an inheritance that is imperishable, uncorrupted, and unfading, kept in heaven for you. 5 You are being protected by God's power through faith for a salvation that is ready to be revealed in the last time. 6 You rejoice in this, [A] though now for a short time you have had to struggle in various trials 7 so that the genuineness of your faith — more valuable than gold, which perishes though refined by fire — may result in [B] praise, glory, and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ. 8 You love Him, though you have not seen Him. And though not seeing Him now, you believe in Him and rejoice with inexpressible and glorious joy, 9 because you are receiving the goal of your faith, the salvation of your souls. [C]

10 Concerning this salvation, the prophets who prophesied about the grace that would come to you searched and carefully investigated. 11 They inquired into what time or what circumstances [D] the Spirit of Christ within them was indicating when He testified in advance to the messianic sufferings [E], and the glories that would follow. [F] 12 It was revealed to them that they were not serving themselves but you. These things have now been announced to you through those who preached the gospel to you by the Holy Spirit sent from heaven. Angels desire to look into these things.

A Call to Holy Living

13 Therefore, with your minds ready for action, [G] be serious and set your hope completely on the grace to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. 14 As obedient children, do not be conformed to the desires of your former ignorance. 15 But as the One who called you is holy, you also are to be holy in all your conduct; 16 for it is written, Be holy, because I am holy.

17 And if you address as Father the One who judges impartially based on each one's work, you are to conduct yourselves in fear during the time of your temporary residence. 18 For you know that you were •redeemed from your empty way of life inherited from the fathers, not with perishable things like silver or gold, 19 but with the precious blood of Christ, like that of a lamb without defect or blemish. 20 He was chosen [H] before the foundation of the world but was revealed at the end of the times for you 21 who through Him are believers in God, who raised Him from the dead and gave Him glory, so that your faith and hope are in God.

ARTICLE

How Can the Bible Affirm Both Divine Sovereignty and Human Freedom? ⇒

---

22 By obedience to the truth, having purified yourselves [I] for sincere love of the brothers, love one another earnestly [J] from a pure heart, 23 since you have been born again — not of perishable seed but of imperishable — through the living and enduring word of God. 24 For

All flesh is like grass, and all its glory like a flower of the grass.
The grass withers, and the flower falls,
25 but the word of the Lord endures forever.

And this is the word that was preached as the gospel to you.

The Living Stone and a Holy People

2 So rid yourselves of all malice, all deceit, hypocrisy, envy, and all slander. 2 Like newborn infants, desire the pure spiritual milk, so that you may grow by it for your salvation, 3 since you have tasted that the Lord is good. 4 Coming to Him, a living stone — rejected by men but chosen and valuable to God — 5 you yourselves, as living stones, are being built into a spiritual house for a holy priesthood to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. 6 For it is contained in Scripture:

Look! I lay a stone in •Zion, a chosen and honored [A] cornerstone, [B] and the one who believes in Him will never be put to shame! [C] ,

7 So honor will come to you who believe, but for the unbelieving,

The stone that the builders rejected — this One has become the cornerstone,

8 and

A stone to stumble over, [D] and a rock to trip over. [E] ,

They stumble because they disobey the message; they were destined for this.

9 But you are a chosen race, [F] , a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for His possession,
so that you may proclaim the praises [G] ,
of the One who called you out of darkness into His marvelous light.
10 Once you were not a people, but now you are God's people;
you had not received mercy,
but now you have received mercy.

A Call to Good Works

[11] Dear friends, I urge you as strangers and temporary residents to abstain from fleshly desires that war against you. [H], [12] Conduct yourselves honorably among the Gentiles, [I] so that in a case where they speak against you as those who do what is evil, they will, by observing your good works, glorify God on the day of visitation.

[13†] Submit to every human authority [J] because of the Lord, whether to the Emperor [K] as the supreme authority [14] or to governors as those sent out by him to punish those who do what is evil and to praise those who do what is good. [15] For it is God's will that you silence the ignorance of foolish people by doing good. [16] As God's •slaves, live as free people, but don't use your freedom as a way to conceal evil. [17] Honor everyone. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the Emperor. [L]

Submission of Slaves to Masters

[18†] Household slaves, submit with all fear to your masters, not only to the good and gentle but also to the cruel. [M] [19] For it brings favor if, mindful of God's will, someone endures grief from suffering unjustly.
[20] For what credit is there if you sin and are punished, and you endure it?
But when you do what is good and suffer, if you endure it, this brings favor with God.

[21] For you were called to this, because Christ also suffered for you,
leaving you an example,
so that you should follow in His steps.
[22] He did not commit sin,
and no deceit was found in His mouth;
[23] when He was reviled,
He did not revile in return;
when He was suffering,
He did not threaten

but entrusted Himself to the One who judges justly.
24 He Himself bore our sins in His body on the tree,
so that, having died to sins,
we might live for righteousness;
you have been healed by His wounds.
25 For you were like sheep going astray,
but you have now returned to the Shepherd and Guardian [O] of your souls.

Wives and Husbands

3 [†]In the same way, wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands so that, even if some disobey the Christian message, they may be won over [A], without a message by the way their wives live 2 when they observe your pure, reverent lives. 3 Your beauty should not consist of outward things like elaborate hairstyles and the wearing of gold ornaments [B] or fine clothes. 4 Instead, it should consist of what is inside [C] the heart with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is very valuable in God's eyes. 5 For in the past, the holy women who put their hope in God also beautified themselves in this way, submitting to their own husbands, 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord. You have become her children when you do what is good and are not frightened by anything alarming.

7 Husbands, in the same way, live with your wives with an understanding of their weaker nature [D] yet showing them honor as co-heirs of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

Do No Evil

8 Now finally, all of you should be like-minded and sympathetic, should love believers, [E] and be compassionate and humble, 9 not paying back evil for evil or insult for insult but, on the contrary, giving a blessing, since you were called for this, so that you can inherit a blessing.

ARTICLE
What Are the Three Laws of Logic? ⇒

---

10 For the one who wants to love life and to see good days must keep his tongue from evil and his lips from speaking deceit, 11 and he must turn away from evil

and do what is good.
He must seek peace and pursue it,
[12] because the eyes of the Lord are on the righteous and His ears are open to their request.
But the face of the Lord is against those who do what is evil.

Undeserved Suffering

[13] And who will harm [F] you if you are deeply committed to what is good? [G] [14] But even if you should suffer for righteousness, you are blessed.
Do not fear what they fear or be disturbed, [15] but honor [H] the •Messiah as Lord in your hearts. Always be ready to give a defense to anyone who asks you for a reason [I] for the hope that is in you. [16] However, do this with gentleness and respect, keeping your conscience clear, [J], [K], so that when you are accused, those who denounce your Christian life [L] will be put to shame. [17] For it is better to suffer for doing good, if that should be God's will, [M] than for doing evil.

[18] For Christ also suffered for sins once for all, the righteous for the unrighteous, [N]
that He might bring you to God, after being put to death in the fleshly realm [O],
but made alive in the spiritual realm. [P]

[19] In that state [Q] He also went and made a proclamation to the spirits in prison [20] who in the past were disobedient, when God patiently waited in the days of Noah while an ark was being prepared. In it a few — that is, eight people [R], — were saved through water. [21] Baptism, which corresponds to this, now saves you (not the removal of the filth of the flesh, but the pledge [S] of a good conscience toward God) through the resurrection of Jesus Christ. [22] Now that He has gone into heaven, He is at God's right hand with angels, authorities, and powers subject to Him.

Following Christ

4 Therefore, since Christ suffered in the flesh, equip [A] yourselves also with the same resolve [B] — because the one who suffered in the flesh has finished with sin [C] — 2 in order to live the remaining time in the flesh, no longer for human desires, [D] but for God's will. 3 For there has already been enough time spent in doing what the pagans choose to do: [E] carrying on in unrestrained behavior, evil desires, drunkenness, orgies, carousing, and lawless idolatry. 4 So they are surprised that you don't plunge with them into the same flood [F] of wild living — and they slander you. 5 They will give an account to the One who stands ready to judge the living and the dead. 6 For this reason the gospel was also preached to those who are now dead, so that, although they might be judged by men in the fleshly realm, [G] they might live by God in the spiritual realm. [H]

End-Time Ethics

7 Now the end of all things is near; therefore, be serious and disciplined for prayer. 8 Above all, maintain an intense love for each other, since love covers a multitude of sins. 9 Be hospitable to one another without complaining. 10 Based on the gift each one has received, use it to serve others, as good managers of the varied grace of God. 11 If anyone speaks, it should be as one who speaks God's words; if anyone serves, it should be from the strength God provides, so that God may be glorified through Jesus Christ in everything. To Him belong the glory and the power forever and ever. •Amen.

Christian Suffering

12 Dear friends, don't be surprised when the fiery ordeal [I] comes among you to test you as if something unusual were happening to you. 13 Instead, rejoice as you share in the sufferings of the •Messiah, so that you may also rejoice with great joy at the revelation of His glory. 14 If you are ridiculed for the name of Christ, you are blessed, because the Spirit of glory and of God rests on you. 15 None of you, however, should suffer as a murderer, a thief, an evildoer, or a meddler. [J] 16 But if anyone suffers as a "Christian," he should not be ashamed but should glorify God in having that name.

17 For the time has come for judgment to begin with God’s household, and if it begins with us, what will the outcome be for those who disobey the gospel of God?

18 And if a righteous person is saved with difficulty, what will become of the ungodly and the sinner?

19 So those who suffer according to God’s will should, while doing what is good, entrust themselves to a faithful Creator.

About the Elders

5 Therefore, as a fellow elder and witness to the sufferings of the •Messiah and also a participant in the glory about to be revealed, I exhort the elders among you: [2] Shepherd God's flock among you, not overseeing out of compulsion but freely, according to God's will; not for the money but eagerly; [3] not lording it over those entrusted to you, but being examples to the flock. [4] And when the chief Shepherd appears, you will receive the unfading crown of glory.

[5] In the same way, you younger men, be subject to the elders. And all of you clothe yourselves with [A] humility toward one another, because

God resists the proud
but gives grace to the humble.

[6] Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, so that He may exalt you at the proper time, [B] [7] casting all your care on Him, because He cares about you.

Conclusion

[8] Be serious! Be alert! Your adversary the Devil is prowling around like a roaring lion, looking for anyone he can devour. [9] Resist him and be firm in the faith, knowing that the same sufferings are being experienced by your fellow believers throughout the world.

[10] Now the God of all grace, who called you to His eternal glory in Christ Jesus, will personally [C] restore, establish, strengthen, and support you after you have suffered a little. [D] [11] The dominion belongs to Him forever. •Amen.

[12] I have written you this brief letter through Silvanus [E] (I know him to be a faithful brother) to encourage you and to testify that this is the true grace of God. Take your stand in it! [13] The church in Babylon, also chosen, sends you greetings, as does Mark, my son. [14] Greet one another with a kiss of love. Peace to all of you who are in Christ.

2 PETER

2 Peter 1 2 Peter 2 2 Peter 3

Introduction to 2 Peter

2 PETER

Greeting

1 Simeon Peter, a •slave and an apostle of Jesus Christ:

To those who have obtained a faith of equal privilege with ours [A] through the righteousness of our God and Savior Jesus Christ.

[2] May grace and peace be multiplied to you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord.

Growth in the Faith

[3] His [B] divine power has given us everything required for life and godliness through the knowledge of Him who called us by [C] His own glory and goodness. [4] By these He has given us very great and precious promises, so that through them you may share in the divine nature, escaping the corruption that is in the world because of evil desires. [5] For this very reason, make every effort to supplement your faith with goodness, goodness with knowledge, [6] knowledge with self-control, self-control with endurance, endurance with godliness, [7] godliness with brotherly affection, and brotherly affection with love. [8] For if these qualities are yours and are increasing, they will keep you from being useless or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. [9] The person who lacks these things is blind and shortsighted and has forgotten the cleansing from his past sins.
[10] Therefore, brothers, make every effort to confirm your calling and election, because if you do these things you will never stumble. [11] For in this way, entry into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will be richly supplied to you.

[12] Therefore I will always remind you about these things, even though you know them and are established in the truth you have. [13] I consider it right, as long as I am in this bodily tent, to wake you up with a reminder, [14] knowing that I will soon lay aside my tent, as our Lord Jesus Christ has also shown me. [15] And I will also make every effort that you may be able to recall these things at any time after my departure. [D]

The Trustworthy Prophetic Word

[16] For we did not follow cleverly contrived myths when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; instead, we were eyewitnesses of His majesty. [17] For when He received honor and glory from God the Father, a voice came to Him from the Majestic Glory:

ARTICLE

Isn't That Just Your Interpretation? ⇒

This is My beloved Son.
I take delight in Him!

[18] And we heard this voice when it came from heaven while we were with Him on the holy mountain. [19] So we have the prophetic word strongly confirmed. You will do well to pay attention to it, as to a lamp shining in a dismal place, until the day dawns and the morning star rises in your hearts. [20] First of all, you should know this: No prophecy of Scripture comes from one’s own interpretation, [21†] because no prophecy ever came by the will of man; instead, men spoke from God as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.

The Judgment of False Teachers

2 But there were also false prophets among the people, just as there will be false teachers among you. They will secretly bring in destructive heresies, even denying the Master who bought them, and will bring swift destruction on themselves. [2] Many will follow their unrestrained ways, and the way of truth will be blasphemed because of them. [3] They will exploit you in their greed with deceptive words. Their condemnation, pronounced long ago, is not idle, and their destruction does not sleep.

[4] For if God didn't spare the angels who sinned but threw them down into Tartarus and delivered them to be kept in chains of darkness until judgment; [5] and if He didn't spare the ancient world, but protected Noah, a preacher of righteousness, and seven others, [A] when He brought a flood on the world of the ungodly; [6] and if He reduced the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah to ashes and condemned them to ruin, making them an example to those who were going to be ungodly; [7] and if He rescued righteous Lot, distressed by the unrestrained behavior of the immoral [8] (for as he lived among them, that righteous man tormented himself day by day with the lawless deeds he saw and heard) — [9] then the Lord knows how to rescue the godly from trials and to keep the unrighteous under punishment until the day of judgment, [10] especially those who follow the polluting desires of the flesh and despise authority.

Bold, arrogant people! They do not tremble when they blaspheme the glorious ones; [11] however, angels, who are greater in might and power, do not bring a slanderous charge against them before the Lord. [12] But these people, like irrational animals — creatures of instinct born to be caught and destroyed — speak blasphemies about things they don't understand, and in their destruction they too will be destroyed, [13] suffering harm as the payment for unrighteousness. They consider it a pleasure to carouse in the daytime. They are spots and blemishes, delighting in their deceptions as they feast with you. [14] They have eyes full of adultery and are always looking for sin. They seduce unstable people and have hearts trained in greed. Children under a curse! [15] They have gone astray by abandoning the straight path and have followed the path of Balaam, the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness [16] but received a rebuke for his transgression: A donkey that could not talk spoke with a human voice and restrained the prophet's irrationality.

[17] These people are springs without water, mists driven by a whirlwind. The gloom of darkness has been reserved for them. [18] For by uttering boastful, empty words, they seduce, with fleshly desires and debauchery, people who have barely escaped [B] from those who live in error. [19] They promise them freedom, but they themselves are •slaves of corruption, since people are enslaved to whatever defeats them. [20] For if, having escaped the world's impurity through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled in these things and defeated, the last state is worse for them than the first. [21] For it would have been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness than, after knowing it, to turn back from the holy command delivered to them. [22] It has happened to them according to the true proverb: A dog returns to its own vomit, and, "a sow, after washing itself, wallows in the mud."

The Day of the Lord

3 Dear friends, this is now the second letter I have written to you; in both letters, I want to develop a genuine understanding with a reminder, 2 so that you can remember the words previously spoken by the holy prophets and the command of our Lord and Savior given through your apostles.
3† First, be aware of this: Scoffers will come in the last days to scoff, living according to their own desires, 4 saying, "Where is the promise of His coming? Ever since the fathers fell •asleep, all things continue as they have been since the beginning of creation." 5 They willfully ignore this:
Long ago the heavens and the earth were brought about from water and through water by the word of God. 6 Through these waters the world of that time perished when it was flooded. 7 But by the same word, the present heavens and earth are stored up for fire, being kept until the day of judgment and destruction of ungodly men.

8 Dear friends, don't let this one thing escape you: With the Lord one day is like a thousand years, and a thousand years like one day. 9 The Lord does not delay His promise, as some understand delay, but is patient with you, not wanting any to perish but all to come to repentance.

10 But the Day of the Lord will come like a thief; on that day the heavens will pass away with a loud noise, the elements will burn and be dissolved, and the earth and the works on it will be disclosed. 11 Since all these things are to be destroyed in this way, it is clear what sort of people you should be in holy conduct and godliness 12 as you wait for and earnestly desire the coming [A] of the day of God. The heavens will be on fire and be dissolved because of it, and the elements will melt with the heat.
13 But based on His promise, we wait for the new heavens and a new earth, where righteousness will dwell.

Conclusion

14 Therefore, dear friends, while you wait for these things, make every effort to be found at peace with Him without spot or blemish. 15 Also, regard the patience of our Lord as an opportunity for salvation, just as our dear brother Paul has written to you according to the wisdom given to him.

[16] He speaks about these things in all his letters in which there are some matters that are hard to understand. The untaught and unstable twist them to their own destruction, as they also do with the rest of the Scriptures.

[17] Therefore, dear friends, since you know this in advance, be on your guard, so that you are not led away by the error of lawless people and fall from your own stability. [18] But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To Him be the glory both now and to the day of eternity. [B], •Amen.

1 JOHN

Introduction to 1 John

1 JOHN

Prologue: Our Declaration

1 [†]What was from the beginning, what we have heard,
what we have seen with our eyes,
what we have observed and have touched with our hands, concerning the Word of life —
2 that life was revealed, and we have seen it and we testify and declare to you the eternal life that was with the Father and was revealed to us —
3 what we have seen and heard we also declare to you,
so that you may have fellowship along with us;
and indeed our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ.
4 We are writing these things so that our joy may be complete.

Fellowship with God

5[†] Now this is the message we have heard from Him and declare to you:
God is light, and there is absolutely no darkness in Him. 6[†] If we say, “We have fellowship with Him,” yet we •walk in darkness, we are lying and are not practicing [A] the truth. 7 But if we walk in the light as He Himself is in the light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus His Son cleanses us from all sin. 8 If we say, “We have no sin,” we are deceiving ourselves, and the truth is not in us. 9 If we confess our sins, He is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 10 If we say, “We don’t have any sin,” we make Him a liar, and His word is not in us.

2 [†]My little children, I am writing you these things so that you may not sin. But if anyone does sin, we have an •advocate with the Father — Jesus Christ the Righteous One. 2 He Himself is the •propitiation for our sins, and not only for ours, but also for those of the whole world.

God's Commands

3 This is how we are sure that we have come to know Him: by keeping His commands. 4 The one who says, "I have come to know Him," yet doesn't keep His commands, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. 5 But whoever keeps His word, truly in him the love of God is perfected. [A] This is how we know we are in Him: 6 The one who says he remains in Him should •walk just as He walked.

7 Dear friends, I am not writing you a new command but an old command that you have had from the beginning. The old command is the message you have heard. 8 [†] Yet I am writing you a new command, which is true in Him and in you, because the darkness is passing away and the true light is already shining.

9 The one who says he is in the light but hates his brother is in the darkness until now. 10 The one who loves his brother remains in the light, and there is no cause for stumbling in him. [B] 11 But the one who hates his brother is in the darkness, walks in the darkness, and doesn't know where he's going, because the darkness has blinded his eyes.

Reasons for Writing

12 I am writing to you, little children, because your sins have been forgiven because of Jesus' name.
13 I am writing to you, fathers, because you have come to know
the One who is from the beginning.
I am writing to you, young men,

because you have had victory over the evil one.
14 I have written to you, children, because you have come to know the Father.
I have written to you, fathers,
because you have come to know
the One who is from the beginning.
I have written to you, young men,
because you are strong,
God's word remains in you,
and you have had victory over the evil one.

ARTICLE
Notable Christian Apologist: Irenaeus ⇒

A Warning about the World

15 Do not love the •world or the things that belong to [C] the world. If anyone loves the world, love for the Father is not in him. 16 For everything that belongs to [D] the world — the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride in one's lifestyle — is not from the Father, but is from the world.
17 And the world with its lust is passing away, but the one who does God's will remains forever.

The Last Hour

18† Children, it is the last hour. And as you have heard, "Antichrist is coming," even now many antichrists have come. We know from this that it is the last hour. 19 They went out from us, but they did not belong to us; for if they had belonged to us, they would have remained with us. However, they went out so that it might be made clear that none of them belongs to us.

[20]† But you have an anointing from the Holy One, and all of you have knowledge. [21] I have not written to you because you don't know the truth, but because you do know it, and because no lie comes from the truth.
[22]† Who is the liar, if not the one who denies that Jesus is the •Messiah?
This one is the antichrist: the one who denies the Father and the Son. [23] No one who denies the Son can have the Father; he who confesses the Son has the Father as well.

Remaining with God

[24] What you have heard from the beginning must remain in you. If what you have heard from the beginning remains in you, then you will remain in the Son and in the Father. [25] And this is the promise that He Himself made to us: eternal life. [26] I have written these things to you about those who are trying to deceive you.

[27] The anointing you received from Him remains in you, and you don't need anyone to teach you. Instead, His anointing teaches you about all things and is true and is not a lie; just as He has taught you, remain in Him.

God's Children

[28] So now, little children, remain in Him, so that when He appears we may have boldness and not be ashamed before Him at His coming. [29] If you know that He is righteous, you know this as well: Everyone who does what is right has been born of Him.

3 [†] Look at how great a love [A] the Father has given us that we should be called God's children. And we are! The reason the •world does not know us is that it didn't know Him. 2 Dear friends, we are God's children now, and what we will be has not yet been revealed. We know that when He appears, we will be like Him because we will see Him as He is. 3 And everyone who has this hope in Him purifies himself just as He is pure.

ARTICLE

Can a Chrisitan Have Assurance of Salvation? ⇒

---

4 Everyone who commits sin also breaks the law; [B] sin is the breaking of law. 5 You know that He was revealed so that He might take away sins, and there is no sin in Him. 6 Everyone who remains in Him does not sin; [C], everyone who [D] sins has not seen Him or known Him.

7 Little children, let no one deceive you! The one who does what is right is righteous, just as He is righteous. 8[†] The one who commits [E] sin is of the Devil, for the Devil has sinned from the beginning. The Son of God was revealed for this purpose: to destroy the Devil's works. 9 Everyone who has been born of God does not sin, [F] because His seed remains in him; he is not able to sin, [G] because he has been born of God. 10 This is how God's children — and the Devil's children — are made evident.

The Command to Love

Whoever does not do what is right is not of God, especially the one who does not love his brother. 11 For this is the message you have heard from the beginning: We should love one another, 12 unlike Cain, who was of the evil one and murdered [H] his brother. And why did he murder him? Because his works were evil, and his brother's were righteous. 13 Do not be surprised, brothers, if the world hates you. 14 We know that we have passed from death to life because we love our brothers. The one who does not love remains in death. [15] Everyone who hates his brother is a murderer, and you know that no murderer has eternal life residing in him.

Love in Action

[16] This is how we have come to know love: He laid down His life for us. We should also lay down our lives for our brothers. [17] If anyone has this world's goods and sees his brother in need but closes his eyes to his need — how can God's love reside in him?

[18] Little children, we must not love with word or speech, but with truth and action. [19] This is how we will know we belong to the truth and will convince our conscience in His presence, [20] even if our conscience condemns us, that God is greater than our conscience, and He knows all things.

[21] Dear friends, if our conscience doesn't condemn us, we have confidence before God [22] and can receive whatever we ask from Him because we keep His commands and do what is pleasing in His sight.
[23] Now this is His command: that we believe in the name of His Son Jesus Christ, and love one another as He commanded us. [24] The one who keeps His commands remains in Him, and He in him. And the way we know that He remains in us is from the Spirit He has given us.

The Spirit of Truth and the Spirit of Error

4 [†]Dear friends, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits to determine if they are from God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world.

2 This is how you know the Spirit of God: Every spirit who confesses that Jesus Christ has [A] come in the flesh is from God. 3 But every spirit who does not confess Jesus is not from God. This is the spirit of the antichrist; you have heard that he is coming, and he is already in the world now.

4 You are from God, little children, and you have conquered them, because the One who is in you is greater than the one who is in the world.
5 They are from the •world. Therefore what they say is from the world, and the world listens to them. 6 We are from God. Anyone who knows God listens to us; anyone who is not from God does not listen to us. From this we know the Spirit of truth and the spirit of deception.

Knowing God through Love

7 Dear friends, let us love one another, because love is from God, and everyone who loves has been born of God and knows God. 8 The one who does not love does not know God, because God is love. 9 God's love was revealed among us in this way: [B] God sent His •One and Only Son into the world so that we might live through Him. 10 Love consists in this: not that we loved God, but that He loved us and sent His Son to be the [C] •propitiation for our sins. 11 Dear friends, if God loved us in this way, we also must love one another. 12 No one has ever seen God. If we love one another, God remains in [D] us and His love is perfected in us.

13 This is how we know that we remain in Him and He in us: He has given assurance to us from His Spirit. 14 And we have seen and we testify that the Father has sent His Son as the world's Savior. 15 Whoever confesses [E] that Jesus is the Son of God — God remains in him and he in God. 16 And we have come to know and to believe the love that God has for us. God is love, and the one who remains in love remains in God, and God remains in him.

[17] In this, love is perfected with us so that we may have confidence in the day of judgment, for we are as He is in this world. [18] There is no fear in love; instead, perfect love drives out fear, because fear involves punishment. [F] So the one who fears has not reached perfection in love.
[19] We love because He first loved us.

Keeping God's Commands

[20] If anyone says, "I love God," yet hates his brother, he is a liar. For the person who does not love his brother he has seen cannot love the God he has not seen. [21] And we have this command from Him: The one who loves God must also love his brother.

5 †Everyone who believes that Jesus is the •Messiah has been born of God, and everyone who loves the Father also loves the one born of Him. 2 This is how we know that we love God's children when we love God and obey His commands. 3 For this is what love for God is: to keep His commands. Now His commands are not a burden, 4 because whatever has been born of God conquers the •world. This is the victory that has conquered the world: our faith. 5 And who is the one who conquers the world but the one who believes that Jesus is the Son of God?

The Certainty of God's Testimony

6 Jesus Christ — He is the One who came by water and blood, not by water only, but by water and by blood. And the Spirit is the One who testifies, because the Spirit is the truth. 7 For there are three that testify:
8 the Spirit, the water, and the blood — and these three are in agreement.
9 If we accept the testimony of men, God's testimony is greater, because it is God's testimony that He has given about His Son. 10 (The one who believes in the Son of God has this testimony within him. The one who does not believe God has made Him a liar, because he has not believed in the testimony God has given about His Son.) 11 And this is the testimony: God has given us eternal life, and this life is in His Son.

12 The one who has the Son has life. The one who doesn't have the Son of God does not have life. 13† I have written these things to you who believe in the name of the Son of God, so that you may know that you have eternal life.

Effective Prayer

14 Now this is the confidence we have before Him: Whenever we ask anything according to His will, He hears us. 15 And if we know that He hears whatever we ask, we know that we have what we have asked Him for.

[16] If anyone sees his brother committing a sin that does not bring death, he should ask, and God [A] will give life to him — to those who commit sin that doesn't bring death. There is sin [B] that brings death. I am not saying he should pray about that. [17] All unrighteousness is sin, and there is sin that does not bring death.

Conclusion

[18] We know that everyone who has been born of God does not sin, but the One who is born of God keeps him, , and the evil one does not touch him.

[19] We know that we are of God, and the whole world is under the sway of the evil one.

ARTICLE
Is Christian Science Compatible with the Bible? ⇒

---

[20] And we know that the Son of God has come and has given us understanding so that we may know the true One. We are in the true One — that is, in His Son Jesus Christ. He is the true God and eternal life.

[21†] Little children, guard yourselves from idols.

2 JOHN

2 John 1

Introduction to 2 John

Greeting (2 John 1:1-3)
Truth and Deception (2 John 1:4-11)
Farewell (2 John 1:12-13)

2 JOHN

Greeting

1 †The Elder: A

To the elect lady B and her children: I love all of you in the truth — and not only I, but also all who have come to know the truth — 2 because of the truth that remains in us and will be with us forever.

3 Grace, mercy, and peace will be with us from God the Father and from Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

Truth and Deception

4† I was very glad to find some of your children •walking in the truth, in keeping with a command we have received from the Father. 5 So now I urge you, dear lady — not as if I were writing you a new command, but one we have had from the beginning — that we love one another. 6 And this is love: that we walk according to His commands. This is the command as you have heard it from the beginning: you must walk in love. C

ARTICLE

What Are Common Characteristics of the New Religious Movements? ⇒

7† Many deceivers have gone out into the world; they do not confess the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh. D, This is the deceiver and the antichrist. 8† Watch yourselves so you don't lose what we have worked for, but that you may receive a full reward. 9 Anyone who does not remain in Christ's teaching but goes beyond it, does not have God. The one who remains in that teaching, this one has both the Father and the Son. 10† If anyone comes to you and does not bring this teaching, do not receive him into your home, and don't say, "Welcome," to him; 11 for the one who says,
"Welcome," to him shares in his evil works.

Farewell

[12] Though I have many things to write to you, I don’t want to do so with paper and ink. Instead, I hope to be with you and talk face to face [E] so that our joy may be complete.

[13] The children of your elect sister send you greetings.

3 JOHN

3 John 1

Introduction to 3 John

Greeting (3 John 1:1-4)
Gaius Commended (3 John 1:5-8)
Diotrephes and Demetrius (3 John 1:9-12)
Farewell (3 John 1:13-14)

3 JOHN

Greeting

1 [†]The Elder:

To my dear friend [A] Gaius: I love you in the truth.

[2] Dear friend, [B] I pray that you may prosper in every way and be in good health physically just as you are spiritually. [C] [3] For I was very glad when some brothers came and testified to your faithfulness to the truth — how you are •walking in the truth. [4†] I have no greater joy than this: to hear that my children are walking in the truth.

Gaius Commended

[5] Dear friend, [D] you are showing faithfulness [E] by whatever you do for the brothers, especially when they are strangers. [6†] They have testified to your love in front of the church. You will do well to send them on their journey in a manner worthy of God, [7] since they set out for the sake of the Name, accepting nothing from pagans. [8] Therefore, we ought to support such men so that we can be coworkers with [F] the truth.

Diotrephes and Demetrius

[9†] I wrote something to the church, but Diotrephes, who loves to have first place among them, does not receive us. [10] This is why, if I come, I will remind him of the works he is doing, slandering us with malicious words. And he is not satisfied with that! He not only refuses to welcome the brothers himself, but he even stops those who want to do so and expels them from the church.

[11] Dear friend, [G] do not imitate what is evil, but what is good. The one who does good is of God; the one who does evil has not seen God.
[12] Demetrius has a good testimony from everyone, and from the truth itself.
And we also testify for him, and you know that our testimony is true.

Farewell

[13] I have many things to write you, but I don't want to write to you with pen and ink. [14] I hope to see you soon, and we will talk face to face. [H]

Peace be with you. The friends send you greetings. Greet the friends by name.

JUDE

Jude 1

Introduction to Jude

Greeting (Jude 1:1-2)
Jude's Purpose in Writing (Jude 1:3-4)
Apostates: Past and Present (Jude 1:5-11)
The Apostates' Doom (Jude 1:12-19)
Exhortation and Benediction (Jude 1:20-25)

JUDE

Greeting

1 Jude, a •slave of Jesus Christ and a brother of James:

To those who are the called, loved by God the Father and kept by Jesus Christ.

2 May mercy, peace, and love be multiplied to you.

Jude's Purpose in Writing

3 Dear friends, although I was eager to write you about the salvation we share, I found it necessary to write and exhort you to contend for the faith that was delivered to the •saints once for all. 4 For some men, who were designated for this judgment long ago, have come in by stealth; they are ungodly, turning the grace of our God into promiscuity and denying Jesus Christ, our only Master and Lord.

Apostates: Past and Present

5 Now I want to remind you, though you know all these things: The Lord first saved a people out of Egypt and later destroyed those who did not believe; 6 and He has kept, with eternal chains in darkness for the judgment of the great day, the angels who did not keep their own position but deserted their proper dwelling. 7 In the same way, Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities around them committed sexual immorality and practiced perversions, [A] just as angels did, and serve as an example by undergoing the punishment of eternal fire.

8 Nevertheless, these dreamers likewise defile their flesh, reject authority, and blaspheme glorious ones. 9[†] Yet Michael the archangel, when he was disputing with the Devil in a debate about Moses' body, did not dare bring an abusive condemnation against him but said, "The Lord rebuke you! " 10 But these people blaspheme anything they don't understand. What they know by instinct like unreasoning animals — they destroy themselves with these things. 11 Woe to them! For they have traveled in the way of Cain, have abandoned themselves to the error of Balaam for profit, and have perished in Korah's rebellion.

ARTICLE
Isn't Christianity Intolerant? ⇒

The Apostates' Doom

12 These are the ones who are like dangerous reefs [B] at your love feasts.
They feast with you, nurturing only themselves without fear. They are waterless clouds carried along by winds; trees in late autumn — fruitless, twice dead, pulled out by the roots; 13 wild waves of the sea, foaming up their shameful deeds; wandering stars for whom the blackness of darkness is reserved forever!

14 And Enoch, in the seventh generation from Adam, prophesied about them:

Look! The Lord comes [C] with thousands of His holy ones 15 to execute judgment on all and to convict them [D]
of all their ungodly acts that they have done in an ungodly way, and of all the harsh things ungodly sinners have said against Him.

16 These people are discontented grumblers, •walking according to their desires; their mouths utter arrogant words, flattering people for their own advantage.

17 But you, dear friends, remember what was predicted by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; 18 they told you, "In the end time there will be scoffers walking according to their own ungodly desires." 19 These people create divisions and are unbelievers, [E] not having the Spirit.

Exhortation and Benediction

[20] But you, dear friends, as you build yourselves up in your most holy faith and pray in the Holy Spirit, [21] keep yourselves in the love of God, expecting the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ for eternal life. [22] Have mercy on those who doubt; [23] save others by snatching them from the fire; have mercy on others but with fear, hating even the garment defiled by the flesh.

[24] Now to Him who is able to protect you from stumbling and to make you stand in the presence of His glory, blameless and with great joy, [25] to the only God our Savior, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory, majesty, power, and authority before all time, now and forever. •Amen.

REVELATION

Introduction to Revelation

REVELATION

Prologue

1 [†]The revelation of [A] Jesus Christ that God gave Him to show His •slaves what must quickly [B] take place. He sent it and signified it through His angel to His slave John, 2 who testified to God's word and to the testimony [C] about Jesus Christ, in all he saw. [D] 3[†] The one who reads this is blessed, and those who hear the words of this prophecy and keep [E] what is written in it are blessed, because the time is near!

4[†] John:

To the seven churches in •Asia.

Grace and peace to you from the One who is, who was, and who is coming; from the seven spirits [F], before His throne; 5[†] and from Jesus Christ, the faithful witness, the firstborn from the dead and the ruler of the kings of the earth.

To Him who loves us and has set us free from our sins by His blood, 6[†] and made us a kingdom, priests [G], to His God and Father — the glory and dominion are His forever and ever. •Amen.

7[†] Look! He is coming with the clouds, and every eye will see Him,
including those who pierced [H] Him.
And all the families of the earth [I] ,
will mourn over Him. [J] ,
This is certain. Amen.

8 "I am the •Alpha and the Omega," says the Lord God, "the One who is, who was, and who is coming, the Almighty."

John's Vision of the Risen Lord

9[†] I, John, your brother and partner in the tribulation, kingdom, and endurance that are in Jesus, was on the island called Patmos because of God's word and the testimony about Jesus. [K], 10 I was in the Spirit [L] , on the Lord's day, and I heard a loud voice behind me like a trumpet

11† saying, “Write on a scroll what you see and send it to the seven churches: Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea.”

12† I turned to see whose voice it was that spoke to me. When I turned I saw seven gold lampstands, 13 and among the lampstands was One like the •Son of Man, [M], dressed in a long robe and with a gold sash wrapped around His chest. 14 His head and hair were white like wool — white as snow — and His eyes like a fiery flame. 15 His feet were like fine bronze as it is fired in a furnace, and His voice like the sound of cascading [N] waters.
16 He had seven stars in His right hand; a sharp double-edged sword came from His mouth, and His face was shining like the sun at midday. [O]

17 When I saw Him, I fell at His feet like a dead man. He laid His right hand on me and said, “Don’t be afraid! I am the First and the Last, 18 and the Living One. I was dead, but look — I am alive forever and ever, and I hold the keys of death and •Hades. 19† Therefore write what you have seen, what is, and what will take place after this. 20† The •secret of the seven stars you saw in My right hand and of the seven gold lampstands is this: The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven lampstands are the seven churches.

THE LETTERS TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES

The Letter to Ephesus

2 † “Write to the angel of the church in Ephesus:

“The One who holds the seven stars in His right hand and who walks among the seven gold lampstands says: 2 I know your works, your labor, and your endurance, and that you cannot tolerate evil. You have tested those who call themselves apostles and are not, and you have found them to be liars. 3 You also possess endurance and have tolerated many things because of My name and have not grown weary. 4 But I have this against you: You have abandoned the love you had at first. 5 Remember then how far you have fallen; repent, and do the works you did at first. Otherwise, I will come to you and remove your lampstand from its place — unless you repent. 6 Yet you do have this: You hate the practices of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.

7 “Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches. I will give the victor the right to eat from the tree of life, which is in God’s paradise.

The Letter to Smyrna

8† “Write to the angel of the church in Smyrna:

“The First and the Last, the One who was dead and came to life, says: 9 I know your affliction and poverty, yet you are rich. I know the slander of those who say they are Jews and are not, but are a •synagogue of Satan.
10 Don’t be afraid of what you are about to suffer. Look, the Devil is about to throw some of you into prison to test you, and you will have affliction for 10 days. Be faithful until death, and I will give you the crown of life.

11 “Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches. The victor will never be harmed by the second death.

The Letter to Pergamum

12† “Write to the angel of the church in Pergamum:

"The One who has the sharp, double-edged sword says: [13] I know where you live — where Satan's throne is! And you are holding on to My name and did not deny your faith in Me, even in the days of Antipas, My faithful witness who was killed among you, where Satan lives. [14] But I have a few things against you. You have some there who hold to the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to place a stumbling block in front of the Israelites: to eat meat sacrificed to idols and to commit sexual immorality.
[15] In the same way, you also have those who hold to the teaching of the Nicolaitans. [16] Therefore repent! Otherwise, I will come to you quickly and fight against them with the sword of My mouth.

[17] "Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches. I will give the victor some of the hidden manna. I will also give him a white stone, and on the stone a new name is inscribed that no one knows except the one who receives it.

The Letter to Thyatira

[18]† "Write to the angel of the church in Thyatira:

"The Son of God, the One whose eyes are like a fiery flame and whose feet are like fine bronze, says: [19] I know your works — your love, faithfulness, service, and endurance. Your last works are greater than the first. [20] But I have this against you: You tolerate the woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess and teaches and deceives My •slaves to commit sexual immorality and to eat meat sacrificed to idols. [21] I gave her time to repent, but she does not want to repent of her sexual immorality. [22] Look! I will throw her into a sickbed and those who commit adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they repent of her practices. [23] I will kill her children with the plague. Then all the churches will know that I am the One who examines minds and hearts, and I will give to each of you according to your works. [24] I say to the rest of you in Thyatira, who do not hold this teaching, who haven't known the deep things of Satan — as they say — I do not put any other burden on you. [25] But hold on to what you have until I come. [26] The one who is victorious and keeps My works to the end: I will give him authority over the nations —

[27] and he will shepherd them with an iron scepter;
he will shatter them like pottery —

just as I have received this from My Father. [28] I will also give him the morning star.

[29] “Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches.

The Letter to Sardis

3 †“Write to the angel of the church in Sardis:

“The One who has the seven spirits of God and the seven stars says: I know your works; you have a reputation for being alive, but you are dead.
2 Be alert and strengthen what remains, which is about to die, for I have not found your works complete before My God. 3 Remember, therefore, what you have received and heard; keep it, and repent. But if you are not alert, I will come like a thief, and you have no idea at what hour I will come against you. 4 But you have a few people in Sardis who have not defiled their clothes, and they will walk with Me in white, because they are worthy.
5 In the same way, the victor will be dressed in white clothes, and I will never erase his name from the book of life but will acknowledge his name before My Father and before His angels.

6 “Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches.

The Letter to Philadelphia

7† “Write to the angel of the church in Philadelphia:

“The Holy One, the True One, the One who has the key of David, who opens and no one will close, and closes and no one opens says: 8 I know your works. Because you have limited strength, have kept My word, and have not denied My name, look, I have placed before you an open door that no one is able to close. 9 Take note! I will make those from the •synagogue of Satan, who claim to be Jews and are not, but are lying — note this — I will make them come and bow down at your feet, and they will know that I have loved you. 10 Because you have kept My command to endure, I will also keep you from the hour of testing that is going to come over the whole world to test those who live on the earth. 11 I am coming quickly. Hold on to what you have, so that no one takes your crown. 12 The victor: I will make him a pillar in the sanctuary of My God, and he will never go out again. I will write on him the name of My God and the name of the city of My God — the new Jerusalem, which comes down out of heaven from My God — and My new name.

[13] “Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches.

The Letter to Laodicea

[14†] “Write to the angel of the church in Laodicea:

“The •Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the Originator of God’s creation says: [15] I know your works, that you are neither cold nor hot. I wish that you were cold or hot. [16] So, because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I am going to vomit you out of My mouth. [17] Because you say, ‘I’m rich; I have become wealthy and need nothing,’ and you don’t know that you are wretched, pitiful, poor, blind, and naked, [18] I advise you to buy from Me gold refined in the fire so that you may be rich, white clothes so that you may be dressed and your shameful nakedness not be exposed, and ointment to spread on your eyes so that you may see. [19] As many as I love, I rebuke and discipline. So be committed and repent.
[20] Listen! I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and have dinner with him, and he with Me. [21] The victor: I will give him the right to sit with Me on My throne, just as I also won the victory and sat down with My Father on His throne.

[22] “Anyone who has an ear should listen to what the Spirit says to the churches.”

The Throne Room of Heaven

4 [†]After this I looked, and there in heaven was an open door. The first voice that I had heard speaking to me like a trumpet said, “Come up here, and I will show you what must take place after this.”

2 Immediately I was in the Spirit, [A], and a throne was set there in heaven. One was seated on the throne, 3[†] and the One seated looked like jasper and carnelian stone. A rainbow that looked like an emerald surrounded the throne. 4 Around that throne were 24 thrones, and on the thrones sat 24 elders dressed in white clothes, with gold crowns on their heads. 5[†] Flashes of lightning and rumblings of thunder came from the throne. Seven fiery torches were burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. 6[†] Something like a sea of glass, similar to crystal, was also before the throne. Four living creatures covered with eyes in front and in back were in the middle [B] and around the throne. 7 The first living creature was like a lion; the second living creature was like a calf; the third living creature had a face like a man; and the fourth living creature was like a flying eagle. 8[†] Each of the four living creatures had six wings; they were covered with eyes around and inside. Day and night they never stop, [C] saying:

Holy, holy, holy,
Lord God, the Almighty,
who was, who is, and who is coming.

9 Whenever the living creatures give glory, honor, and thanks to the One seated on the throne, the One who lives forever and ever, 10 the 24 elders fall down before the One seated on the throne, worship the One who lives forever and ever, cast their crowns before the throne, and say:

11 Our Lord and God,
You are worthy to receive glory and honor and power, because You have created all things, and because of Your will they exist and were created.

The Lamb Takes the Scroll

5 [†]Then I saw in the right hand of the One seated on the throne a scroll with writing on the inside and on the back, sealed with seven seals. 2 I also saw a mighty angel proclaiming in a loud voice, “Who is worthy to open the scroll and break its seals? ” 3 But no one in heaven or on earth or under the earth was able to open the scroll or even to look in it. 4 And I cried and cried because no one was found worthy to open the scroll or even to look in it.

5 Then one of the elders said to me, “Stop crying. Look! The Lion from the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, has been victorious so that He may open the scroll and its seven seals.” 6 Then I saw One like a slaughtered lamb standing between [A] the throne and the four living creatures and among the elders. He had seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent into all the earth. 7 He came and took the scroll out of the right hand of the One seated on the throne.

The Lamb Is Worthy

8[†] When He took the scroll, the four living creatures and the 24 elders fell down before the Lamb. Each one had a harp and gold bowls filled with incense, which are the prayers of the •saints. 9[†] And they sang a new song:

You are worthy to take the scroll and to open its seals, because You were slaughtered, and You •redeemed [B] people for God by Your blood from every tribe and language and people and nation.
10 You made them a kingdom and priests to our God,
and they will reign on the earth.

11[†] Then I looked and heard the voice of many angels around the throne, and also of the living creatures and of the elders. Their number was countless thousands, plus thousands of thousands. [12] They said with a loud voice:

The Lamb who was slaughtered is worthy to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing!

[13] I heard every creature in heaven, on earth, under the earth, on the sea, and everything in them say:

Blessing and honor and glory and dominion to the One seated on the throne, and to the Lamb, forever and ever!

[14] The four living creatures said, "•Amen," and the elders fell down and worshiped.

The First Seal on the Scroll

6 [†] Then I saw [A] the Lamb open one of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four living creatures say with a voice like thunder, “Come! ” 2 I looked, and there was a white horse. The horseman on it had a bow; a crown was given to him, and he went out as a victor to conquer. [C]

ARTICLE

Does the Bible Teach That Humans Are More Than Their Bodies?

The Second Seal

3 When He opened the second seal, I heard the second living creature say, “Come! ” 4 Then another horse went out, a fiery red one, and its horseman was empowered [E] to take peace from the earth, so that people would slaughter one another. And a large sword was given to him.

The Third Seal

5 When He opened the third seal, I heard the third living creature say, “Come! ” And I looked, and there was a black horse. The horseman on it had a set of scales in his hand. 6 Then I heard something like a voice among the four living creatures say, “A quart of wheat for a •denarius, and three quarts of barley for a denarius — but do not harm the olive oil and the wine.”

The Fourth Seal

7 When He opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living creature say, “Come! ” 8 And I looked, and there was a pale green [H] horse.
The horseman on it was named Death, and •Hades was following after him.
Authority was given to them over a fourth of the earth, to kill by the sword, by famine, by plague, and by the wild animals of the earth.

The Fifth Seal

[9†] When He opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the people [I] slaughtered because of God's word and the testimony they had. [10] They cried out with a loud voice: "Lord, [J] the One who is holy and true, how long until You judge and avenge our blood from those who live on the earth? " [11] So a white robe was given to each of them, and they were told to rest a little while longer until the number would be completed of their fellow slaves and their brothers, who were going to be killed just as they had been.

The Sixth Seal

[12†] Then I saw Him open [K] the sixth seal. A violent earthquake occurred; the sun turned black like •sackcloth made of goat hair; the entire moon [L] became like blood; [13] the stars of heaven fell to the earth as a fig tree drops its unripe figs when shaken by a high wind; [14] the sky separated like a scroll being rolled up; and every mountain and island was moved from its place.

[15] Then the kings of the earth, the nobles, the military commanders, the rich, the powerful, and every •slave and free person hid in the caves and among the rocks of the mountains. [16] And they said to the mountains and to the rocks, "Fall on us and hide us from the face of the One seated on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb, [17] because the great day of Their wrath has come! And who is able to stand? "

The Sealed of Israel

7 [†]After this I saw four angels standing at the four corners of the earth, restraining the four winds of the earth so that no wind could blow on the earth or on the sea or on any tree. 2 Then I saw another angel, who had the seal of the living God rise up from the east. He cried out in a loud voice to the four angels who were empowered [A] to harm the earth and the sea: 3 "Don't harm the earth or the sea or the trees until we seal the •slaves of our God on their foreheads." 4[†] And I heard the number of those who were sealed:

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

Revelation 7:4

The Jehovah's Witnesses (JWs) claim that only 144,000, whom they identify as JWs born prior to 1914, will reign with Christ in heaven. The author of Rv, however, identified the 144,000 as Jews from the 12 tribes of Israel.

144,000 sealed from every tribe of the Israelites:
5 12,000 sealed from the tribe of Judah,
12,000 from the tribe of Reuben,
12,000 from the tribe of Gad,
6 12,000 from the tribe of Asher,
12,000 from the tribe of Naphtali,
12,000 from the tribe of Manasseh,
7 12,000 from the tribe of Simeon,
12,000 from the tribe of Levi,
12,000 from the tribe of Issachar,
8 12,000 from the tribe of Zebulun,
12,000 from the tribe of Joseph,
12,000 sealed from the tribe of Benjamin.

A Multitude from the Great Tribulation

9† After this I looked, and there was a vast multitude from every nation, tribe, people, and language, which no one could number, standing before the throne and before the Lamb. They were robed in white with palm branches in their hands. 10 And they cried out in a loud voice:

Salvation belongs to our God, who is seated on the throne,
and to the Lamb!

11 All the angels stood around the throne, the elders, and the four living creatures, and they fell facedown before the throne and worshiped God, 12 saying:

•Amen! Blessing and glory and wisdom and thanksgiving and honor and power and strength be to our God forever and ever. Amen.

13† Then one of the elders asked me, “Who are these people robed in white, and where did they come from? ”

14 I said to him, “Sir, [B] you know.”

Then he told me:

These are the ones coming out of the great tribulation.
They washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.
15† For this reason they are before the throne of God, and they serve Him day and night in His sanctuary.
The One seated on the throne will shelter [C] them:
16 They will no longer hunger;
they will no longer thirst;
the sun will no longer strike them,
nor will any heat.

[17] For the Lamb who is at the center of the throne will shepherd them;
He will guide them to springs of living waters,
and God will wipe away every tear from their eyes.

The Seventh Seal

8 †When He opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven for about half an hour. 2† Then I saw the seven angels who stand in the presence of God; seven trumpets were given to them. 3 Another angel, with a gold incense burner, came and stood at the altar. He was given a large amount of incense to offer with the prayers of all the •saints on the gold altar in front of the throne. 4 The smoke of the incense, with the prayers of the saints, went up in the presence of God from the angel's hand. 5 The angel took the incense burner, filled it with fire from the altar, and hurled it to the earth; there were rumblings of thunder, flashes of lightning, and an earthquake. 6 And the seven angels who had the seven trumpets prepared to blow them.

The First Trumpet

7 The first angel blew his trumpet, and hail and fire, mixed with blood, were hurled to the earth. So a third of the earth was burned up, a third of the trees were burned up, and all the green grass was burned up.

The Second Trumpet

8† The second angel blew his trumpet, and something like a great mountain ablaze with fire was hurled into the sea. So a third of the sea became blood, 9 a third of the living creatures in the sea died, and a third of the ships were destroyed.

The Third Trumpet

10 The third angel blew his trumpet, and a great star, blazing like a torch, fell from heaven. It fell on a third of the rivers and springs of water. 11 The name of the star is Wormwood, and a third of the waters became •wormwood. So, many of the people died from the waters, because they had been made bitter.

The Fourth Trumpet

[12] The fourth angel blew his trumpet, and a third of the sun was struck, a third of the moon, and a third of the stars, so that a third of them were darkened. A third of the day was without light, and the night as well.

[13†] I looked again and heard an eagle flying high overhead, crying out in a loud voice, “Woe! Woe! Woe to those who live on the earth, because of the remaining trumpet blasts that the three angels are about to sound! ”

The Fifth Trumpet

9 [†]The fifth angel blew his trumpet, and I saw a star that had fallen from heaven to earth. The key to the shaft of the •abyss was given to him.
2 He opened the shaft of the abyss, and smoke came up out of the shaft like smoke from a great furnace so that the sun and the air were darkened by the smoke from the shaft. 3 Then locusts came out of the smoke on to the earth, and power [A] was given to them like the power that scorpions have on the earth. 4 They were told not to harm the grass of the earth, or any green plant, or any tree, but only people who do not have God's seal on their foreheads. 5 They were not permitted to kill them but were to torment them for five months; their torment is like the torment caused by a scorpion when it strikes a man. 6 In those days people will seek death and will not find it;
they will long to die, but death will flee from them.

7 The appearance of the locusts was like horses equipped for battle.
Something like gold crowns was on their heads; their faces were like men's faces; 8 they had hair like women's hair; their teeth were like lions' teeth; 9 they had chests like iron breastplates; the sound of their wings was like the sound of chariots with many horses rushing into battle; 10 and they had tails with stingers like scorpions, so that with their tails they had the power [B] to harm people for five months. 11 They had as their king [C] the angel of the abyss; his name in Hebrew is •Abaddon, [D] and in Greek he has the name Apollyon. [E] 12 The first woe has passed. There are still two more woes to come after this.

The Sixth Trumpet

13[†] The sixth angel blew his trumpet. From the four horns of the gold altar that is before God, I heard a voice 14 say to the sixth angel who had the trumpet, "Release the four angels bound at the great river Euphrates." 15 So the four angels who were prepared for the hour, day, month, and year were released to kill a third of the human race. 16 The number of mounted troops was 200 million; I heard their number. 17 This is how I saw the horses in my vision: The horsemen had breastplates that were fiery red, hyacinth blue, and sulfur yellow. The heads of the horses were like lions' heads, and from their mouths came fire, smoke, and sulfur. [18] A third of the human race was killed by these three plagues — by the fire, the smoke, and the sulfur that came from their mouths. [19] For the power of the horses is in their mouths and in their tails, for their tails, which resemble snakes, have heads, and they inflict injury with them.

ARTICLE

Notable Christian Apologist: Justin Martyr ⇒

[20†] The rest of the people, who were not killed by these plagues, did not repent of the works of their hands to stop worshiping demons and idols of gold, silver, bronze, stone, and wood, which are not able to see, hear, or walk. [21] And they did not repent of their murders, their sorceries, [F] their sexual immorality, or their thefts.

The Mighty Angel and the Small Scroll

10 [†]Then I saw another mighty angel coming down from heaven, surrounded by a cloud, with a rainbow over his head. [A] His face was like the sun, his legs [B] were like fiery pillars, 2 and he had a little scroll opened in his hand. He put his right foot on the sea, his left on the land, 3 and he cried out with a loud voice like a roaring lion. When he cried out, the seven thunders spoke with their voices. 4 And when the seven thunders spoke, I was about to write. Then I heard a voice from heaven, saying,
"Seal up what the seven thunders said, and do not write it down! "

5[†] Then the angel that I had seen standing on the sea and on the land raised his right hand to heaven. 6 He swore an oath by the One who lives forever and ever, who created heaven and what is in it, the earth and what is in it, and the sea and what is in it: "There will no longer be an interval of time, [C] 7 but in the days of the sound of the seventh angel, when he will blow his trumpet, then God's •hidden plan will be completed, as He announced to His servants [D] the prophets."

8[†] Now the voice that I heard from heaven spoke to me again and said,
"Go, take the scroll that lies open in the hand of the angel who is standing on the sea and on the land."

9 So I went to the angel and asked him to give me the little scroll. He said to me, "Take and eat it; it will be bitter in your stomach, but it will be as sweet as honey in your mouth."

10 Then I took the little scroll from the angel's hand and ate it. It was as sweet as honey in my mouth, but when I ate it, my stomach became bitter.
11 And I was told, [E] "You must prophesy again about [F] many peoples, nations, languages, and kings."

The Two Witnesses

11 [†]Then I was given a measuring reed like a rod, with these words:
"Go [A] and measure God's sanctuary and the altar, and count those who worship there. 2 But exclude the courtyard outside the sanctuary. Don't measure it, because it is given to the nations, [B] and they will trample the holy city for 42 months. 3 I will empower [C] my two witnesses, and they will prophesy for 1,260 days, dressed in •sackcloth." 4 These are the two olive trees and the two lampstands that stand before the Lord of the earth. 5 If anyone wants to harm them, fire comes from their mouths and consumes their enemies; if anyone wants to harm them, he must be killed in this way.
6 These men have the power to close up the sky so that it does not rain during the days of their prophecy. They also have power over the waters to turn them into blood and to strike the earth with every plague whenever they want.

The Witnesses Martyred

7[†] When they finish their testimony, the beast [D], that comes up out of the •abyss will make war with them, conquer them, and kill them. 8[†] Their dead bodies [E], will lie in the public square [F] of the great city, which prophetically [G] is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified. 9 And representatives from [H] the peoples, tribes, languages, and nations will view their bodies for three and a half days and not permit their bodies to be put into a tomb. 10 Those who live on the earth will gloat over them and celebrate and send gifts to one another because these two prophets brought judgment to those who live on the earth.

The Witnesses Resurrected

11[†] But after 3 1/2 days, the breath [I] of life from God entered them, and they stood on their feet. So great fear fell on those who saw them. 12 Then they heard a loud voice from heaven saying to them, "Come up here."
They went up to heaven in a cloud, while their enemies watched them.
13[†] At that moment a violent earthquake took place, a tenth of the city fell, and 7,000 people were killed in the earthquake. The survivors were terrified and gave glory to the God of heaven. [14] The second woe has passed. Take note: The third woe is coming quickly!

The Seventh Trumpet

[15]† The seventh angel blew his trumpet, and there were loud voices in heaven saying:

The kingdom of the •world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of His •Messiah, and He will reign forever and ever!

[16] The 24 elders, who were seated before God on their thrones, fell facedown and worshiped God, [17] saying:

We thank You, Lord God, the Almighty, who is and who was,
because You have taken Your great power and have begun to reign.
[18] The nations were angry, but Your wrath has come.
The time has come for the dead to be judged and to give the reward to Your servants the prophets, to the •saints, and to those who fear Your name,
both small and great,
and the time has come to destroy those who destroy the earth.

[19] God's sanctuary in heaven was opened, and the ark of His covenant appeared in His sanctuary. There were flashes of lightning, rumblings of thunder, an earthquake, and severe hail.

The Woman, the Child, and the Dragon

12 [†] A great sign [A] appeared in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet and a crown of 12 stars on her head.
2 She was pregnant and cried out in labor and agony as she was about to give birth. 3 Then another sign [B] appeared in heaven: There was a great fiery red dragon having seven heads and 10 horns, and on his heads were seven diadems. [C] 4 His tail swept away a third of the stars in heaven and hurled them to the earth. And the dragon stood in front of the woman who was about to give birth, so that when she did give birth he might devour her child. 5 But she gave birth to a Son — a male who is going to shepherd [D] all nations with an iron scepter — and her child was caught up to God and to His throne. 6 The woman fled into the wilderness, where she had a place prepared by God, to be fed there [E] for 1,260 days.

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

Revelation 12:5

Some charismatic sects have adopted a belief that in the last days God will raise up a "male child" company of believers, often referred to as "manifested sons." This faithful remnant of overcomers will reach such a state of perfection that their bodies will become immortal. The male child in this verse, however, is none other than Jesus.

The Dragon Thrown Out of Heaven

7[†] Then war broke out in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon. The dragon and his angels also fought, 8 but he could not prevail, and there was no place for them in heaven any longer. 9 So the great dragon was thrown out — the ancient serpent, who is called the Devil and Satan, the one who deceives the whole world. He was thrown to earth, and his angels with him.

10 Then I heard a loud voice in heaven say:

The salvation and the power and the kingdom of our God and the authority of His •Messiah have now come,
because the accuser of our brothers has been thrown out:
the one who accuses them before our God day and night.
11† They conquered him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony, for they did not love their lives in the face of death.
12† Therefore rejoice, you heavens,
and you who dwell in them!
Woe to the earth and the sea,
for the Devil has come down to you with great fury,
because he knows he has a short time.

The Woman Persecuted

13† When the dragon saw that he had been thrown to earth, he persecuted the woman who gave birth to the male child. 14 The woman was given two wings of a great eagle, so that she could fly from the serpent's presence to her place in the wilderness, where she was fed for a time, times, and half a time. 15 From his mouth the serpent spewed water like a river flowing after the woman, to sweep her away in a torrent. 16 But the earth helped the woman. The earth opened its mouth and swallowed up the river that the dragon had spewed from his mouth. 17† So the dragon was furious with the woman and left to wage war against the rest of her offspring [F] — those who keep God's commands and have the testimony about Jesus. 18 He stood on the sand of the sea.

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

Revelation 12:17

The Seventh-day Adventist Church holds that "the testimony about Jesus," also identified as "the spirit of prophecy" (19:10), is the mark of the remnant or true church and finds its fulfillment in its founder Ellen G. White. She is God's final end-time prophet who spoke by the "spirit of prophecy." Research has revealed, however, that nearly 50 percent of E. G. White's writings were borrowed from other writers.

The Beast from the Sea

13 [†]And I saw a beast coming up out of the sea. He [A] had 10 horns and seven heads. On his horns were 10 diadems, and on his heads were blasphemous names. 2 The beast I saw was like a leopard, his feet were like a bear's, and his mouth was like a lion's mouth. The dragon gave him his power, his throne, and great authority. 3 One of his heads appeared to be fatally wounded, [B] but his fatal wound was healed. The whole earth was amazed and followed the beast. [C] 4 They worshiped the dragon because he gave authority to the beast. And they worshiped the beast, saying, "Who is like the beast? Who is able to wage war against him? "

5[†] A mouth was given to him to speak boasts and blasphemies. He was also given authority to act for 42 months. 6 He began to speak [E] blasphemies against God: to blaspheme His name and His dwelling — those who dwell in heaven. 7 And he was permitted to wage war against the •saints and to conquer them. He was also given authority over every tribe, people, language, and nation. 8[†] All those who live on the earth will worship him, everyone whose name was not written from the foundation of the world in the book [F] of life of the Lamb who was slaughtered. [G]

9[†] If anyone has an ear, he should listen:

10 If anyone is destined for captivity, into captivity he goes.
If anyone is to be killed with a sword,
with a sword he will be killed.

This demands the perseverance [H] and faith of the saints.

The Beast from the Earth

11[†] Then I saw another beast coming up out of the earth; he had two horns like a lamb, [I], but he sounded like a dragon. 12 He exercises all the authority of the first beast on his behalf and compels the earth and those who live on it to worship the first beast, whose fatal wound was healed.

[13] He also performs great signs, even causing fire to come down from heaven to earth in front of people. [14] He deceives those who live on the earth because of the signs that he is permitted to perform on behalf of the beast, telling those who live on the earth to make an image [J] of the beast who had the sword wound and yet lived. [15] He was permitted to give a spirit [K] to the image of the beast, so that the image of the beast could both speak and cause whoever would not worship the image of the beast to be killed. [16†] And he requires everyone — small and great, rich and poor, free and •slave — to be given a mark [L] on his right hand or on his forehead, [17] so that no one can buy or sell unless he has the mark: the beast's name or the number of his name.

[18] Here is wisdom: [M], The one who has understanding must calculate [N] the number of the beast, because it is the number of a man. [O] His number is 666.

The Lamb and the 144,000

14 †Then I looked, and there on Mount •Zion stood the Lamb, and with Him were 144,000 who had His name and His Father’s name written on their foreheads. 2 I heard a sound [A] from heaven like the sound of cascading waters and like the rumbling of loud thunder. The sound I heard was also like harpists playing on their harps. 3 They sang a new song before the throne and before the four living creatures and the elders, but no one could learn the song except the 144,000 who had been •redeemed [B] from the earth. 4 These are the ones not defiled with women, for they have kept their virginity. These are the ones who follow the Lamb wherever He goes. They were redeemed from the human race as the •firstfruits for God and the Lamb. 5 No lie was found in their mouths; they are blameless.

The Proclamation of Three Angels

6† Then I saw another angel flying high overhead, having the eternal gospel to announce to the inhabitants of the earth — to every nation, tribe, language, and people. 7 He spoke with a loud voice: “Fear God and give Him glory, because the hour of His judgment has come. Worship the Maker of heaven and earth, the sea and springs of water.”

TWISTED SCRIPTURE

Revelation 14:6-12

Called by the Seventh-day Adventist Church (SDA) the "three angels' messages," this passage forms the core of the SDA belief system. According to a convoluted and erroneous SDA interpretation, the following points are true. (1) "The hour of His judgment has come" (v. 7) refers to the "investigative judgment" of 1844. (2) "Worship the Maker of heaven and earth" (v. 7) is a call to observe Saturday as the Sabbath. (3) "Babylon the Great has fallen" (v. 8) refers to the 'apostate' or non-SDA Church as the notorious prostitute who seduces the nations. (4) "If anyone worships the beast . . . and receives a mark on his forehead or on his hand" (v. 9) is a warning against following the Antichrist and worshiping on Sunday. Those refusing to heed the warning will be "tormented with fire and sulfur" (vv. 9-10). Only the remnant church, those who embrace SDA beliefs, will be saved.

8† A second angel [D] followed, saying: "It has fallen, Babylon the Great has fallen, who made all nations drink the wine of her sexual immorality, [E] which brings wrath."

9 And a third angel [F] followed them and spoke with a loud voice: "If anyone worships the beast and his image and receives a mark on his forehead or on his hand, 10 he will also drink the wine of God's wrath, which is mixed full strength in the cup of His anger. He will be tormented with fire and sulfur in the sight of the holy angels and in the sight of the Lamb,
11 and the smoke of their torment will go up forever and ever. There is no rest [G] day or night for those who worship the beast and his image, or anyone who receives the mark of his name.
12† This demands the perseverance [H] of the •saints, who keep God's commands and their faith in Jesus." [I]

13 Then I heard a voice from heaven saying, "Write: The dead who die in the Lord from now on are blessed."

"Yes," says the Spirit, "let them rest from their labors, for their works follow them! "

Reaping the Earth's Harvest

14† Then I looked, and there was a white cloud, and One like the Son of Man [J] was seated on the cloud, with a gold crown on His head and a sharp sickle in His hand.
15 Another angel came out of the sanctuary, crying out in a loud voice to the One who was seated on the cloud, "Use your sickle and reap, for the time to reap has come, since the harvest of the earth is ripe."
16 So the One seated on the cloud swung His sickle over the earth, and the earth was harvested.

[17] Then another angel who also had a sharp sickle came out of the sanctuary in heaven. [18] Yet another angel, who had authority over fire, came from the altar, and he called with a loud voice to the one who had the sharp sickle, “Use your sharp sickle and gather the clusters of grapes from earth’s vineyard, because its grapes have ripened.” [19] So the angel swung his sickle toward earth and gathered the grapes from earth’s vineyard, and he threw them into the great winepress of God’s wrath. [20] Then the press was trampled outside the city, and blood flowed out of the press up to the horses’ bridles for about 180 miles. [K]

Preparation for the Bowl Judgments

15 †Then I saw another great and awe-inspiring sign [A] in heaven: seven angels with the seven last plagues, for with them, God's wrath will be completed. 2† I also saw something like a sea of glass mixed with fire, and those who had won the victory over the beast, his image, and the number of his name, were standing on the sea of glass with harps from God. [B] 3 They sang the song of God's servant Moses and the song of the Lamb:

Great and awe-inspiring are Your works,
Lord God, the Almighty;
righteous and true are Your ways,
King of the Nations.
4 Lord, who will not fear and glorify Your name?
Because You alone are holy,
for all the nations will come and worship before You because Your righteous acts have been revealed.

5† After this I looked, and the heavenly sanctuary — the tabernacle of testimony — was opened. 6 Out of the sanctuary came the seven angels with the seven plagues, dressed in •clean, bright linen, with gold sashes wrapped around their chests. 7 One of the four living creatures gave the seven angels seven gold bowls filled with the wrath of God who lives forever and ever. 8 Then the sanctuary was filled with smoke from God's glory and from His power, and no one could enter the sanctuary until the seven plagues of the seven angels were completed.

The First Bowl

16 †Then I heard a loud voice from the sanctuary saying to the seven angels, “Go and pour out the seven bowls of God’s wrath on the earth.” 2 The first went and poured out his bowl on the earth, and severely painful sores [A] broke out on the people who had the mark of the beast and who worshiped his image.

The Second Bowl

3 The second poured out his bowl into the sea. It turned to blood like a dead man’s, and all life [B] in the sea died.

The Third Bowl

4 The third poured out his bowl into the rivers and the springs of water, and they became blood. 5 I heard the angel of the waters say:

You are righteous,
who is and who was, the Holy One,
for You have decided these things.
6 Because they poured out the blood of the •saints and the prophets,
You also gave them blood to drink;
they deserve it!

7 Then I heard someone from the altar say:

Yes, Lord God, the Almighty, true and righteous are Your judgments.

The Fourth Bowl

8† The fourth poured out his bowl on the sun. He [C] was given the power [D] to burn people with fire, 9 and people were burned by the intense heat. So they blasphemed the name of God, who had the power [E] over these plagues, and they did not repent and give Him glory.

The Fifth Bowl

10 The fifth poured out his bowl on the throne of the beast, and his kingdom was plunged into darkness. People [F] gnawed their tongues because of their pain 11 and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, yet they did not repent of their actions.

The Sixth Bowl

12† The sixth poured out his bowl on the great river Euphrates, and its water was dried up to prepare the way for the kings from the east. 13 Then I saw three unclean spirits like frogs coming from the dragon's mouth, from the beast's mouth, and from the mouth of the false prophet. 14 For they are spirits of demons performing signs, who travel to the kings of the whole world to assemble them for the battle of the great day of God, the Almighty.

15 "Look, I am coming like a thief. The one who is alert and remains clothed so that he may not go around naked and people see his shame is blessed."

16 So they assembled them at the place called in Hebrew, Armagedon. ,

The Seventh Bowl

17† Then the seventh poured out his bowl into the air, [G] and a loud voice came out of the sanctuary from the throne, saying, "It is done! " 18 There were flashes of lightning and rumblings of thunder. And a severe earthquake occurred like no other since man has been on the earth — so great was the quake. 19 The great city split into three parts, and the cities of the nations [H] fell. Babylon the Great was remembered in God's presence;
He gave her the cup filled with the wine of His fierce anger. 20 Every island fled, and the mountains disappeared. [I], 21 Enormous hailstones, each weighing about 100 pounds, [J] fell from the sky on people, and they blasphemed God for the plague of hail because that plague was extremely severe.

The Woman and the Scarlet Beast

17 †Then one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls came and spoke with me: "Come, I will show you the judgment of the notorious prostitute who sits on many [A] waters. 2 The kings of the earth committed sexual immorality with her, and those who live on the earth became drunk on the wine of her sexual immorality." 3 So he carried me away in the Spirit [B], to a desert. I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast that was covered [C] with blasphemous names and had seven heads and 10 horns.
4 The woman was dressed in purple and scarlet, adorned with gold, precious stones, and pearls. She had a gold cup in her hand filled with everything vile and with the impurities of her prostitution. 5 On her forehead a cryptic name was written:

BABYLON THE GREAT
THE MOTHER OF PROSTITUTES
AND OF THE VILE THINGS OF THE EARTH.

6 Then I saw that the woman was drunk on the blood of the •saints and on the blood of the witnesses to Jesus. When I saw her, I was greatly astonished.

The Meaning of the Woman and of the Beast

7† Then the angel said to me, "Why are you astonished? I will tell you the •secret meaning of the woman and of the beast, with the seven heads and the 10 horns, that carries her. 8 The beast that you saw was, and is not, and is about to come up from the •abyss and go to destruction. Those who live on the earth whose names have not been written in the book of life from the foundation of the world will be astonished when they see the beast that was, and is not, and will be present again.

9† "Here is the mind with wisdom: [D], The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman is seated. 10 They are also seven kings: Five have fallen, one is, the other has not yet come, and when he comes, he must remain for a little while. 11 The beast that was and is not, is himself an eighth king, yet he belongs to the seven and is going to destruction. 12 The 10 horns you saw are 10 kings who have not yet received a kingdom, but they will receive authority as kings with the beast for one hour. [13] These have one purpose, and they give their power and authority to the beast.

[14†] These will make war against the Lamb, but the Lamb will conquer them because He is Lord of lords and King of kings. Those with Him are called, chosen, and faithful."

[15†] He also said to me, "The waters you saw, where the prostitute was seated, are peoples, multitudes, nations, and languages. [16] The 10 horns you saw, and the beast, will hate the prostitute. They will make her desolate and naked, devour her flesh, and burn her up with fire. [17] For God has put it into their hearts to carry out His plan by having one purpose and to give their kingdom [E] to the beast until God's words are accomplished. [18†] And the woman you saw is the great city that has an empire [F] over the kings of the earth."

The Fall of Babylon the Great

18 After this I saw another angel with great authority coming down from heaven, and the earth was illuminated by his splendor. 2 He cried in a mighty voice:

It has fallen,
Babylon the Great has fallen!
She has become a dwelling for demons,
a haunt for every •unclean spirit,
a haunt for every unclean bird,
and a haunt [A] for every unclean and despicable beast.
3 For all the nations have drunk the wine of her sexual immorality, which brings wrath.
The kings of the earth
have committed sexual immorality with her,
and the merchants of the earth
have grown wealthy from her excessive luxury.

4† Then I heard another voice from heaven:

Come out of her, My people, so that you will not share in her sins or receive any of her plagues.
5† For her sins are piled up [B] to heaven,
and God has remembered her crimes.
6 Pay her back the way she also paid,
and double it according to her works.
In the cup in which she mixed, mix a double portion for her.
7 As much as she glorified herself and lived luxuriously, give her that much torment and grief,
for she says in her heart,
"I sit as a queen;
I am not a widow,
and I will never see grief."
8 For this reason her plagues will come in one day —

death and grief and famine.
She will be burned up with fire,
because the Lord God who judges her is mighty.

The World Mourns Babylon's Fall

9† The kings of the earth who have committed sexual immorality and lived luxuriously with her will weep and mourn over her when they see the smoke of her burning. 10 They will stand far off in fear of her torment, saying:

Woe, woe, the great city,
Babylon, the mighty city!
For in a single hour
your judgment has come.

11 The merchants of the earth will also weep and mourn over her, because no one buys their merchandise any longer — 12 merchandise of gold, silver, precious stones, and pearls; fine fabrics of linen, purple, silk, and scarlet; all kinds of fragrant wood products; objects of ivory; objects of expensive wood, brass, [C] iron, and marble; 13 cinnamon, spice, incense, myrrh, [E] and frankincense; wine, olive oil, fine wheat flour, and grain; cattle and sheep;
horses and carriages; and slaves [F] and human lives.

14 The fruit you craved has left you.
All your splendid and glamorous things are gone;
they will never find them again.

15 The merchants of these things, who became rich from her, will stand far off in fear of her torment, weeping and mourning, 16 saying:

Woe, woe, the great city,
dressed in fine linen, purple, and scarlet, adorned with gold, precious stones, and pearls,
17 for in a single hour
such fabulous wealth was destroyed!

And every shipmaster, seafarer, the sailors, and all who do business by sea, stood far off [18] as they watched the smoke from her burning and kept crying out: “Who is like the great city? ” [19] They threw dust on their heads and kept crying out, weeping, and mourning:

Woe, woe, the great city,
where all those who have ships on the sea became rich from her wealth, for in a single hour she was destroyed.
[20†] Rejoice over her, heaven, and you •saints, apostles, and prophets, because God has executed your judgment on her! [G]

The Finality of Babylon’s Fall

[21] Then a mighty angel picked up a stone like a large millstone and threw it into the sea, saying:

In this way, Babylon the great city will be thrown down violently and never be found again.
[22] The sound of harpists, musicians, flutists, and trumpeters
will never be heard in you again;
no craftsman of any trade will ever be found in you again;
the sound of a mill
will never be heard in you again;
[23] the light of a lamp will never shine in you again;
and the voice of a groom and bride
will never be heard in you again.
All this will happen because your merchants were the nobility of the earth, because all the nations were deceived
by your sorcery,

24 and the blood of prophets and saints, and of all those slaughtered on earth,
was found in you. [H]

Celebration in Heaven

19 †After this I heard something like the loud voice of a vast multitude in heaven, saying:

•Hallelujah!
Salvation, glory, and power belong to our God,
2 because His judgments are true and righteous, because He has judged the notorious prostitute who corrupted the earth with her sexual immorality;
and He has avenged the blood of His •slaves that was on her hands.

3 A second time they said:

Hallelujah!
Her smoke ascends forever and ever!

4 Then the 24 elders and the four living creatures fell down and worshiped God, who is seated on the throne, saying:

•Amen! Hallelujah!

5 A voice came from the throne, saying:

Praise our God,
all His slaves, who fear Him,
both small and great!

Marriage of the Lamb Announced

6 Then I heard something like the voice of a vast multitude, like the sound of cascading waters, and like the rumbling of loud thunder, saying:

Hallelujah, because our Lord God, the Almighty, has begun to reign!
7† Let us be glad, rejoice, and give Him glory, because the marriage of the Lamb has come,
and His wife has prepared herself.

8 She was given fine linen to wear, bright and pure.

For the fine linen represents the righteous acts of the •saints.

9 Then he said to me, “Write: Those invited to the marriage feast of the Lamb are fortunate!” He also said to me, “These words of God are true.” 10† Then I fell at his feet to worship him, but he said to me, “Don’t do that! I am a fellow slave with you and your brothers who have the testimony about [A] Jesus. Worship God, because the testimony about Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.” [B]

The Rider on a White Horse

11† Then I saw heaven opened, and there was a white horse. Its rider is called Faithful and True, and He judges and makes war in righteousness.
12 His eyes were like a fiery flame, and many crowns [C] were on His head.
He had a name written that no one knows except Himself. 13 He wore a robe stained with blood, [D], and His name is the Word of God. 14 The armies that were in heaven followed Him on white horses, wearing pure white linen. 15 A sharp sword came from His mouth, so that He might strike the nations with it. He will shepherd [E] them with an iron scepter. He will also trample the winepress of the fierce anger of God, the Almighty.
16 And He has a name written on His robe and on His thigh:

KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS.

The Beast and His Armies Defeated

17† Then I saw an angel standing on [F] the sun, and he cried out in a loud voice, saying to all the birds flying high overhead, “Come, gather together for the great supper of God, 18 so that you may eat the flesh of kings, the flesh of commanders, the flesh of mighty men, the flesh of horses and of their riders, and the flesh of everyone, both free and slave, small and great.”

[19] Then I saw the beast, the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together to wage war against the rider on the horse and against His army.
[20]† But the beast was taken prisoner, and along with him the false prophet, who had performed the signs in his presence. He deceived those who accepted the mark of the beast and those who worshiped his image with these signs. Both of them were thrown alive into the lake of fire that burns with sulfur. [21] The rest were killed with the sword that came from the mouth of the rider on the horse, and all the birds were filled with their flesh.

Satan Bound

20 †Then I saw an angel coming down from heaven with the key to the •abyss and a great chain in his hand. 2 He seized the dragon, that ancient serpent who is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for 1,000 years. 3 He threw him into the abyss, closed it, and put a seal on it so that he would no longer deceive the nations until the 1,000 years were completed. After that, he must be released for a short time.

The Saints Reign with the Messiah

4† Then I saw thrones, and people seated on them who were given authority to judge. I also saw the people [A], who had been beheaded because of their testimony about Jesus and because of God's word, who had not worshiped the beast or his image, and who had not accepted the mark on their foreheads or their hands. They came to life and reigned with the •Messiah for 1,000 years. 5 The rest of the dead did not come to life until the 1,000 years were completed. This is the first resurrection.
6 Blessed and holy is the one who shares in the first resurrection! The second death has no power [B] over them, but they will be priests of God and of the Messiah, and they will reign with Him for 1,000 years.

Satanic Rebellion Crushed

7† When the 1,000 years are completed, Satan will be released from his prison 8 and will go out to deceive the nations at the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them for battle. Their number is like the sand of the sea. 9 They came up over the surface of the earth and surrounded the encampment of the •saints, the beloved city. Then fire came down from heaven and consumed them. 10 The Devil who deceived them was thrown into the lake of fire and sulfur where the beast and the false prophet are, and they will be tormented day and night forever and ever.

The Great White Throne Judgment

11† Then I saw a great white throne and One seated on it. Earth and heaven fled from His presence, and no place was found for them. 12 I also saw the dead, the great and the small, standing before the throne, and books were opened. Another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged according to their works by what was written in the books.

[13] Then the sea gave up its dead, and Death and •Hades gave up their dead; all [C] were judged according to their works. [14] Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire.
[15] And anyone not found written in the book of life was thrown into the lake of fire.

The New Creation

21 †Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away, and the sea no longer existed. 2 I also saw the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, prepared like a bride adorned for her husband.

3 Then I heard a loud voice from the throne:

Look! God's dwelling [A] is with humanity, and He will live with them.
They will be His people, and God Himself will be with them and be their God.
4 He will wipe away every tear from their eyes.
Death will no longer exist;
grief, crying, and pain will exist no longer,
because the previous things [B] have passed away.

5 Then the One seated on the throne said, "Look! I am making everything new." He also said, "Write, because these words are faithful and true."
6 And He said to me, "It is done! I am the •Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End. I will give water as a gift to the thirsty from the spring of life. 7† The victor will inherit these things, and I will be his God, and he will be My son. 8 But the cowards, unbelievers, vile, murderers, sexually immoral, sorcerers, idolaters, and all liars — their share will be in the lake that burns with fire and sulfur, which is the second death."

ARTICLE

How Does a Chrisitian Converse with a Buddhist? ⇒

The New Jerusalem

9† Then one of the seven angels, who had held the seven bowls filled with the seven last plagues, came and spoke with me: "Come, I will show you the bride, the wife of the Lamb.” [10] He then carried me away in the Spirit [C], to a great and high mountain and showed me the holy city, Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, [11] arrayed with God’s glory. Her radiance was like a very precious stone, like a jasper stone, bright as crystal. [12†] The city had a massive high wall, with 12 gates.

Twelve angels were at the gates; the names of the 12 tribes of Israel’s sons were inscribed on the gates. [13] There were three gates on the east, three gates on the north, three gates on the south, and three gates on the west.
[14] The city wall had 12 foundations, and the 12 names of the Lamb’s 12 apostles were on the foundations.

[15] The one who spoke with me had a gold measuring rod to measure the city, its gates, and its wall. [16] The city is laid out in a square; its length and width are the same. He measured the city with the rod at 12,000 stadia. [D]
Its length, width, and height are equal. [17] Then he measured its wall, 144 •cubits according to human measurement, which the angel used. [18] The building material of its wall was jasper, and the city was pure gold like clear glass.

[19] The foundations of the city wall were adorned with every kind of precious stone:

the first foundation jasper,
the second sapphire,
the third chalcedony,
the fourth emerald,
[20] the fifth sardonyx,
the sixth carnelian,
the seventh chrysolite,
the eighth beryl,
the ninth topaz,
the tenth chrysoprase,
the eleventh jacinth,
the twelfth amethyst.

21 The 12 gates are 12 pearls; each individual gate was made of a single pearl. The broad street [E] of the city was pure gold, like transparent glass.

22[†] I did not see a sanctuary in it, because the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb are its sanctuary. 23 The city does not need the sun or the moon to shine on it, because God's glory illuminates it, and its lamp is the Lamb.
24 The nations will walk in its light, and the kings of the earth will bring their glory into it. 25 Each day its gates will never close because it will never be night there. 26 They will bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. 27 Nothing profane will ever enter it: no one who does what is vile or false, but only those written in the Lamb's book of life.

The Source of Life

22 [†]Then he showed me the river of living water, sparkling like crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb 2 down the middle of the broad street of the city. The tree of life [A] was on both sides of the river, bearing 12 kinds of fruit, producing its fruit every month. The leaves of the tree are for healing the nations, 3 and there will no longer be any curse. The throne of God and of the Lamb will be in the city, [B] and His •slaves will serve Him. 4 They will see His face, and His name will be on their foreheads. 5 Night will no longer exist, and people will not need lamplight or sunlight, because the Lord God will give them light. And they will reign forever and ever.

The Time Is Near

6[†] Then he said to me, “These words are faithful and true. And the Lord, the God of the spirits of the prophets, has sent His angel to show His slaves what must quickly take place.” [C]

7 “Look, I am coming quickly! The one who keeps the prophetic words of this book is blessed.”

8[†] I, John, am the one who heard and saw these things. When I heard and saw them, I fell down to worship at the feet of the angel who had shown them to me. 9 But he said to me, “Don’t do that! I am a fellow slave with you, your brothers the prophets, and those who keep the words of this book.
Worship God.” 10[†] He also said to me, “Don’t seal the prophetic words of this book, because the time is near. 11 Let the unrighteous go on in unrighteousness; let the filthy go on being made filthy; let the righteous go on in righteousness; and let the holy go on being made holy.”

12 “Look! I am coming quickly, and My reward is with Me to repay each person according to what he has done. 13 I am the •Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End.

14[†] “Blessed are those who wash their robes, so that they may have the right to the tree of life and may enter the city by the gates. 15 Outside are the dogs, the sorcerers, the sexually immoral, the murderers, the idolaters, and everyone who loves and practices lying.

[16] "I, Jesus, have sent My angel to attest these things to you for the churches. I am the Root and the Offspring of David, the Bright Morning Star."

[17] Both the Spirit and the bride say, "Come! " Anyone who hears should say, "Come! " And the one who is thirsty should come. Whoever desires should take the living water as a gift.

[18†] I testify to everyone who hears the prophetic words of this book: If anyone adds to them, God will add to him the plagues that are written in this book. [19] And if anyone takes away from the words of this prophetic book, God will take away his share of the tree of life and the holy city, written in this book.

[20†] He who testifies about these things says, "Yes, I am coming quickly."

•Amen! Come, Lord Jesus!

[21†] The grace of the Lord Jesus be with all the •saints. Amen.

Genesis 1 Notes

1:1A Or created the universe

1:1-2B Or When God began to create the sky and the earth, [2] the earth was

1:8C Or "heavens"

1:14D Or for the appointed times

1:20E Lit with swarms of

1:21F Or created sea monsters

1:26G Lit scurry

1:28H Lit and all scurrying animals that scurry

Genesis 2 Notes

2:1A Lit and all their host

2:2B Or ceased

2:3C Lit work that God created to make

2:4D Lit creation on the day

2:5E Or earth

2:10F Or goes

2:10G Lit became four heads

2:11H Or of the Havilah

2:12I Lit good

2:17J Lit eat from it

2:20K Or for Adam

Genesis 3 Notes

3:5A Lit on the day

3:5B Or gods, or divine beings

3:8C Lit at the wind of the day

3:10D Lit the sound of You

3:17E Lit it through pain

3:19F Or food

3:20G Lit Living, or Life

Genesis 4 Notes

4:1A Lit the LORD

4:5B Lit and his face fell

4:6C Lit why has your face fallen

4:11D Lit blood from your hand

4:13E Or sin

4:15F Or suffer severely

4:20G Lit the dweller of tent and livestock

Genesis 5 Notes

5:1A Lit written family

5:1B Or Adam

5:2C Or Adam

Genesis 6 Notes

6:2A Or women

6:3B Or strive

6:3C Or in

6:3D Lit flesh

6:11E Or injustice

6:13F Or injustice

6:15G Or 300 cubits long, 50 cubits wide, and 30 cubits high

6:16H Or window, or hatch ; Hb uncertain

6:16I Lit to a cubit

Genesis 7 Notes

7:20A Lit surged 15 cubits

7:21B Lit all the swarming swarms

Genesis 8 Notes

8:1A Or spirit ; Gn 1:2

8:17B Lit creatures of all flesh

Genesis 9 Notes

9:2A Lit are given in your hand

9:15B Lit and creatures of all flesh

9:16C Lit creatures of all flesh

9:20D Or Noah began to be a farmer and planted

Genesis 10 Notes

10:10A Or Uruk

10:10B Or Akkad

10:10C Or and all of them

10:10D Or in Babylonia

10:22E Or Assyria

Genesis 11 Notes

11:1A Lit one lip and the same words

11:2B Lit they

11:2C Or migrated eastward

11:7D Or confound

11:7E Lit lip

11:7F Lit understand each man the lip of his companion

Genesis 12 Notes

12:2A Or great. Be a blessing!

12:3B Lit clans

12:3C Or will find blessing

12:3D Or will bless themselves by you

Genesis 13 Notes

13:2A Lit heavy

13:8B Lit brothers

13:10C Lit Valley as you go to 13:13D Lit evil and sinful

Genesis 14 Notes

14:1A Or nations

14:13B Lit were possessors of a covenant of

14:19C Or Possessor

14:20D Or and blessed be

14:24E Lit Nothing to me

Genesis 15 Notes

15:2A Hb obscure

15:3B Lit a son of

15:4C Lit loins

15:13D Lit will serve them and they will oppress them

15:16E Lit Amorites is not yet complete

15:18F Lit the great river, the river Euphrates

Genesis 16 Notes

16:2A Lit Abram listened to the voice of Sarai

16:4B Lit He came to

16:5C Or May my suffering be on you

16:5D Lit bosom

16:9E Lit to mistreatment under her hand

16:12F Or live away from

16:13G Lit her: You God Who Sees

16:13H Hb obscure

16:14I Or Beer-lahai-roi

Genesis 17 Notes

17:18A Lit Ishmael would live in Your sight

17:22B Lit went up, or ascended

Genesis 18 Notes

18:3A Or My Lord, or The Lord

18:5B Lit may sustain your heart

18:6C Lit three seahs ; about 21 quarts

18:8D Or butter

18:8E Lit was standing by

18:11F Lit days

18:11G Lit The way of women had ceased for Sarah

18:19H Lit known

Genesis 19 Notes

19:8A Lit do what is good in your eyes

19:10B Lit men

19:12C Lit men

19:14D Lit take

19:15E Or iniquity, or guilt

19:18F Or My Lord, or My lords

19:21G Or Look!

19:21H Lit I will lift up your face

Genesis 20 Notes

20:3A Lit is possessed by a husband

20:5B Lit with integrity of my heart

20:5C Lit cleanness of my

20:6D Lit with integrity of your heart

20:8E Lit in their ears

20:15F Lit Settle in the good in your eyes

20:16G Lit a covering of the eyes

Genesis 21 Notes

21:11A Lit was very bad in the eyes of 21:12B Lit Let it not be bad in your eyes

21:17C Or an

21:30D Lit that it

Genesis 22 Notes

22:8A Lit see

22:9B Or Isaac hand and foot

22:14C Or Yahweh-yireh

22:14D Or He will be seen

22:18E Or will bless themselves, or will find blessing

Genesis 23 Notes

23:3A Or sons of Heth ; also in vv. 5,7,10,16,18,20

23:4B Lit dead from before me

23:5C Lit Abraham, saying to him

23:6D Lit my lord

23:6E Or prince of God, or mighty prince

23:6F Or finest graves

23:10G Lit ears

23:11H Lit in the eyes of the sons

23:13I Lit ears

23:16J Lit ears

Genesis 24 Notes

24:1A Lit days

24:19B Lit they are finished drinking

24:49C Lit go to the right or to the left

24:50D Lit we cannot say to you anything bad or good

24:55E Lit us a few days or 10

24:55F Or you

24:57G Lit mouth

24:59H Lit with her wet nurse ; Gn 35:8

24:60I Lit his

24:63J Or pray, or meditate ; Hb obscure

Genesis 25 Notes

25:7A Lit And these are the days of the years of the lives of Abraham that he lived

25:16B Or chieftains

25:16C Or peoples

25:17D Lit And these are the years

25:18E Or He settled down alongside of

25:22F Lit If thus, why this I

25:27G Lit a man of the field

25:27H Lit man living in tents

Genesis 26 Notes

26:4A Or will bless themselves

26:8B Or and he looked and behold —

26:12C Lit found

26:16D Or are more numerous than we are

26:19E Lit living

26:20F Or Esek

26:21G Or Sitnah

26:22H Or Rehoboth

26:31I Lit swore, each man to his brother

26:33J Or Shibah

26:35K Lit And they became bitterness of spirit

Genesis 27 Notes

27:27A Lit smelled the smell of

27:38B Lit Esau lifted up his voice and wept

27:40C Hb obscure

27:46D Lit of these daughters of the land

Genesis 28 Notes

28:13A Or there above it

Genesis 29 Notes

29:1A Lit Jacob picked up his feet

29:1B Lit the land of the children of the east

29:10C Lit with the sheep of Laban his mother's brother

29:11D Lit and he lifted his voice and wept

29:14E Lit my bone and my flesh

29:17F Lit tender

29:21G Lit to go to

Genesis 30 Notes

30:2A Lit the fruit of the womb

30:3B Lit bear on my knees

30:8C Or With mighty wrestlings

30:43D Lit The man spread out very much, very much

Genesis 31 Notes

31:6A Lit worked with all my strength

31:20B Lit And he stole the heart of

31:21C Lit and set his face to

31:42D Lit and the work of my hands

Genesis 32 Notes

32:31A Variant of Peniel

32:32B Or tendon

Genesis 33 Notes

33:8A Lit camp

33:15B Lit May I find favor in your eyes

33:20C Or El-Elohe-Israel

Genesis 34 Notes

34:3A Lit spoke to her heart

34:11B Lit May I find favor in your eyes

34:12C Or bride-price, or betrothal present

34:24D Lit All who went out of the city gate

34:24E Lit all the males who went out of the city gate

Genesis 35 Notes

35:7A Or El-bethel

35:8B Lit Deborah, Rebekah's wet nurse ; Gn 24:59

35:8C Or Allon-bacuth

35:11D Lit will come from your loins

35:13E Lit went up

35:21F Or beyond Migdal-eder

Genesis 36 Notes

36:43A Lit He Esau

Genesis 37 Notes

37:3A Or robe with long sleeves

37:19B Lit comes the lord of the dreams

37:21C Lit their hands

37:30D Lit And I, where am I going

Genesis 38 Notes

38:5A Or He was at Chezib when

38:12B Lit And there were many days

38:14C Or sat by the mouth of the springs

38:26D Or more righteous

Genesis 39 Notes

39:2A Lit and he was

39:4B Lit owned in his hand

39:6C Lit owned in Joseph's hand

39:7D Lit And after these things

39:8E Lit owns in my hand

39:10F Lit did not listen to her

39:10G Lit refused to lie beside her, to be with her

39:11H Lit there in the house

39:15I Lit me raise my voice and scream

39:18J Lit I raised my voice and screamed

39:22K Lit prison in the hand of Joseph

39:23L Lit anything in his hand

Genesis 40 Notes

40:4A Lit custody days

40:19B Or and impale you on a pole

40:19C Lit eat your flesh from upon you

40:22D Or impaled

Genesis 41 Notes

41:16A Or "God will answer Pharaoh with peace [of mind]."

41:29B Lit Look! Seven

41:38C Or the spirit of the gods, or a god's spirit

41:40D Lit will kiss your mouth

41:45E Or Heliopolis

41:45F Or Joseph gained authority over

41:50G Or Heliopolis

Genesis 42 Notes

42:9A Lit nakedness

42:13B Or today

42:14C Lit "That which I spoke to you saying

42:19D Lit your brothers

42:22E Lit Even his blood is being sought

42:32F Lit of our

42:32G Or today

42:37H Lit hand

Genesis 43 Notes

43:9A Lit can seek him from my hand

43:16B Lit to the one who was over his house

43:19C Lit approached the one who was over the house

Genesis 44 Notes

44:9A Lit If your servants are

44:18B Lit speak a word in my lord's ears

Genesis 45 Notes

45:1A Lit all those standing about him

45:7B Or keep alive for you many survivors

45:12C Lit that my mouth is

45:15D Lit brothers, and he wept over them

45:26E Lit Jacob's heart was numb

Genesis 46 Notes

46:15A Lit All persons his sons and his daughters

46:20B Or Heliopolis

46:26C Lit Jacob who came out from his loins

46:28D Lit to give directions before him

46:34E Lit fathers, are men of livestock

Genesis 47 Notes

47:8A Lit many are the days of the years

47:22B Lit They ate

47:31C Or Israel worshiped while leaning on the top of his staff

Genesis 48 Notes

48:10A Lit he was not able to

48:17B Or he was displeased ; lit head, it was bad in his eyes

48:19C Lit people

48:19D Or a multitude of nations; lit a fullness of nations

48:22E Or Shechem, Joseph's burial place; lit one shoulder

Genesis 49 Notes

49:1A Or in the last days

49:10B Or until tribute comes to him, or until Shiloh comes, or until He comes to Shiloh

49:14C Or sheepfolds

49:22D Lit daughters

49:22E Hb obscure

49:24F Lit and the hands of his

49:26G Or of the mountains

49:26H Lit to

49:26I Hb obscure

Genesis 50 Notes

50:4A Lit please speak in the ears of

50:21B Lit spoke to their hearts

50:23C Lit were born on the knees of

Exodus 1 Notes

1:5A Lit of people issuing from Jacob's loins

1:12B Or Egyptians loathed

1:16C Lit birth, look at the stones

Exodus 2 Notes

2:2A Or healthy

2:11B Lit And it was in those days

2:11C Lit his brothers

2:13D Or fellow Hebrew

Exodus 3 Notes

3:12A Or serve

3:14B Or I AM BECAUSE I AM, or I WILL BE WHO I WILL BE

Exodus 4 Notes

4:7A Lit out of his cloak

4:10B Lit heavy of mouth and heavy of tongue

4:12C Lit will be with you

4:13D Lit send by the hand of whom You will send

4:15E Lit be with

4:21F Or will make him stubborn

Exodus 6 Notes

6:8A Lit raised My hand

6:12B Lit I have uncircumcised lips

6:30C Lit I have uncircumcised lips

Exodus 7 Notes

7:16A Or serve ; Ex 4:23

8:12B Or frogs, as he had agreed with

8:20C Or serve

8:21D Or insects

8:21E Lit are

8:26F Or allowable

Exodus 9 Notes

9:14A Lit your heart

9:17B Or still obstructing

9:31C Lit was ears of grain

9:32D Lit are late

Exodus 10 Notes

10:1A Lit Mine in his midst

10:2B Lit tell in the ears of

10:19C Lit sea

10:25D Lit also give in our hand

Exodus 11 Notes

11:1A Or had said

11:1B Or go, it will be finished —

11:3C Or had given

11:3D Lit was very great

11:3E Or in the eyes of

11:7F Lit point its tongue

11:8G Lit people at your feet

Exodus 12 Notes

12:4A Or household

12:9B Or or boiled at all in 12:11C Lit it: with your loins girded

12:20D Or settlements

12:47E Lit do

12:48F Lit may come near to do it

Exodus 13 Notes

13:9A Lit reminder between your eyes

13:16B Or phylactery

Exodus 14 Notes

14:6A Lit people

14:8B Lit with a raised hand

14:9C Or chariot drivers

14:25D Or fall off

14:25E Or and they drove them

Exodus 15 Notes

15:2A Or might

15:9B Or conquer

15:16C Or silent

15:16D Or created

Exodus 16 Notes

16:5A Lit as gathering day to day

16:16B Lit an omer

16:18C Lit by an omer

16:22D Lit two omers

16:32E Lit A full omer

16:33F Lit a full omer

16:36G Lit The omer is

Exodus 17 Notes

17:13A Or people

17:15B Or Yahweh-nissi

17:16C Or hand was on, or hand was against ; Hb obscure

Exodus 18 Notes

18:7A Lit other about well-being

18:11B Hb obscure

18:22C Lit lighten from on you

18:23D Lit go to their place in peace

Exodus 20 Notes

20:18A Lit saw

20:20B Lit that the fear of Him may be in you, and you do not

20:23C Hb obscure

Exodus 21 Notes

21:2A Lit to go forth

21:3B Lit he is the husband of 21:6C Or to God ; that is, to His sanctuary or court

21:7D Or concubine

21:13E Lit he was not lying in wait

21:14F Or maliciously

21:19G Lit his inactivity

21:20H Lit hand

21:20I Or must suffer vengeance

21:21J Or not suffer vengeance

21:21K Lit money

21:28L Or a bull, or a steer

22:3M Lit if the sun has risen over him

22:8N Or to God

22:9O Lit That is it

22:9P Or before God

22:9Q Or one whom God condemns

22:15R Lit rented, it comes with

22:27S Lit skin

22:28T Or judges

Exodus 23 Notes

23:1A Lit join hands with

23:5B Or load, you must refrain from leaving it to him; you must set it free with him

23:8C Or and subverts the cause

23:13D Lit mouth

23:16E Lit labors

23:21F Or embitter

23:27G Lit will send terror of Me ahead of you

23:28H Or send panic

23:30I Lit fruitful

23:31J Lit the Sea of the Philistines

23:31K Lit the River

Exodus 24 Notes

24:10A Or lapis lazuli

24:11B Lit not stretch out His hand against

Exodus 25 Notes

25:5A Or and dolphin skins, or and fine leather ; Hb obscure

25:7B Or carnelian

25:7C Traditionally, breastplate

25:10D Lit two and a half cubits its length, one and a half cubits its width, and one and a half cubits its height

25:17E Lit two and a half cubits its length, one and a half cubits its width

25:23F Lit two cubits its length, one cubit its width, and one and a half cubits its height

25:25G Lit Make it a handbreadth

25:36H Lit piece with it

25:39I Lit It

25:39J Lit a talent

Exodus 26 Notes

26:2A Lit 28 cubits

26:2B Lit four cubits

26:4C Lit the one curtain on the end

26:8D Lit 30 cubits

26:8E Lit four cubits

26:13F Lit The cubit

26:13G Lit the cubit

26:14H Or of dolphin skins, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

26:15I Or frames, or beams

26:16J Lit 10 cubits

26:16K Lit a cubit and a half

26:24L Lit and together they are to be complete

Exodus 27 Notes

27:1A Lit five cubits in length and five cubits in width

27:1B Lit wide; and its height three cubits

27:2C Lit piece with it

27:5D Or altar's rim, so that the grid comes halfway down

27:9E Lit 100 cubits

27:10F Or connecting rods

27:11G Lit 100 [cubits]

27:11H Or connecting rods

27:12I Lit 50 cubits

27:13J Lit 50 cubits

27:14K Lit 15 cubits

27:15L Lit 15 [cubits]

27:16M Lit twenty-cubit

27:18N Lit be 100 by the cubit, and the width 50 by 50, and the height five cubits

Exodus 28 Notes

28:3A Lit all wise of heart

28:4B Hb obscure

28:5C Lit receive

28:8D Lit waistband of its ephod, which is on it

28:8E Lit piece with the ephod

28:16F Lit a span its length and a span its width

28:17G Or beryl

28:18H Or malachite, or garnet

28:18I Or lapis lazuli

28:18J Hb obscure; LXX, Vg read jasper

28:19K Hb obscure

28:32L Hb obscure

28:41M Lit anoint them, fill their hand

28:42N Lit loins

Exodus 29 Notes

29:9A Lit you will fill the hand of Aaron and the hand of ; Ex 29:23-24

29:24B Lit in the hands of his

29:29C Lit him for anointing in them and for filling their hand

29:33D Lit made to fill their hand

29:36E Or Make a sin offering on

29:40F Lit offer a tenth

29:40G Lit a fourth of a hin

29:40H Lit a fourth of a hin

Exodus 30 Notes

30:2A Lit one cubit its length and one cubit its width

30:2B Lit wide; and two cubits its height

30:2C Lit piece with it

30:10D Or to make atonement

30:10E Or to make atonement

30:10F Or on

30:15G Or to ransom

30:16H Lit the silver of the atonement

30:16I Or to ransom

30:23J Lit 500 (shekels)

30:23K Lit 250 (shekels)

30:23L Lit 250 (shekels)

30:24M Lit 500 (shekels)

30:24N Lit a hin

Exodus 31 Notes

31:6A Lit every person skilled of heart

31:10B Hb obscure

Exodus 32 Notes

32:1A Or us gods

32:4B Or Israel, this is your god, or Israel, these are your gods

32:8C Or Israel, this is your god, or Israel, these are your gods

32:23D Or us gods

32:25E Hb obscure; Or resulting in derision

Exodus 34 Notes

34:10A Lit in all nations

34:10B Lit created

34:14C Lit Yahweh — His name is Jealous, or Yahweh is jealous for His name, He

34:19D Hb obscure

34:25E Lit slaughter

34:29F Lit with Him

34:35G Lit see Moses' face, that the skin of his face

Exodus 35 Notes

35:7A Or and dolphin skins, or and fine leather ; Hb obscure

35:10B Lit the skilled of heart

35:19C Hb obscure

35:23D Or or dolphin skins, or or fine leather ; Hb obscure

35:25E Lit wise of heart

35:35F Lit with wisdom of heart

Exodus 36 Notes

36:1A Lit wise of heart

36:2B Lit wise of heart

36:8C Lit the wise of heart

36:9D Lit 28 cubits

36:9E Lit four cubits

36:15F Lit 30 cubits

36:15G Lit four cubits

36:19H Or of dolphin skins, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

36:20I Or made frames

36:21J Lit 10 cubits

36:21K Lit a cubit and a half

36:29L Lit and together they are to be complete

36:29M Lit its

Exodus 37 Notes

37:1A Lit two and a half cubits its length, one and a half cubits its width, and one and a half cubits its height

37:6B Lit two and a half cubits its length and one and a half cubits its width

37:10C Lit two cubits its length, one cubit its width, and one and a half cubits its height

37:12D Lit a handbreadth

37:22E Lit piece with it

37:24F Lit a talent

37:25G Lit a cubit its length, a cubit its width, and two cubits its height

37:25H Lit piece with it

Exodus 38 Notes

38:1A Lit five cubits its length and five cubits its width

38:1B Lit three cubits

38:2C Lit piece with it

38:4D Or rim

38:9E Lit 100 cubits

38:10F Or connecting rods

38:11G Lit 100 cubits

38:11H Or connecting rods

38:12I Lit 50 cubits

38:13J Lit 50 cubits

38:14K Lit 15 cubits

38:15L Lit 15 cubits

38:17M Or connecting rods

38:18N Lit 20 cubits

38:18O Lit five cubits

38:18P Lit high in width

38:19Q Or connecting rods

38:21R Lit Levites by the hand of

38:24S Lit 29 talents and 730 shekels

38:25T Lit 100 talents and 1,775 shekels

38:26U Lit a beka

38:27V Lit 100 talents

38:27W Lit 100 talents

38:27X Lit one talent

38:28Y Lit 1,775 (shekels)

38:28Z Or connecting rods

38:29A Lit 70 talents and 2,400 shekels

Exodus 39 Notes

39:1A Hb obscure

39:9B Lit a span its length and a span its width

39:10C Or beryl

39:11D Or malachite, or garnet

39:11E Or lapis lazuli

39:11F Hb uncertain; LXX, Vg read jasper

39:12G Hb obscure

39:23H Hb obscure

39:26I Lit bell and pomegranate, bell and pomegranate, on the hem of the robe around

39:28J Lit and the headdresses of headbands

39:34K Or of dolphin skins, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

39:41L Hb obscure

Exodus 40 Notes

40:2A Lit on the day of the first month, on the first of the month

Leviticus 1 Notes

1:2A Or LORD, from the livestock you

1:3B Or it

1:6C Lit its pieces

1:12D Lit its pieces

1:14E Or or pigeons

1:16F Or its crop, or its crissum

Leviticus 2 Notes

2:9A Lit portion of it

Leviticus 3 Notes

3:13A Or dash

Leviticus 4 Notes

4:3A Or purification

4:22B Or ruler

4:27C Lit the people of the land

Leviticus 5 Notes

5:4A Lit in one of such things

5:11B Lit if his hand is not sufficient for

5:11C Lit one-tenth of an ephah

5:11D Or wheat ; Ex 29:2

5:11E Lit flour as a sin offering

6:2F Or an investment

6:10G Lit undergarments on his flesh

6:18H Or statute

6:20I Lit a tenth of an ephah

6:21J Hb obscure

6:27K Lit wash what it spattered on

Leviticus 7 Notes

7:10A Lit oil, will be a man like his brother

7:18B Or will bear his guilt

7:20C Lit while his uncleanness is upon him

7:24D Lit fat of a carcass or the fat of a mauled beast

7:34E Or statute

7:36F Or statute

7:38G Or he

Leviticus 8 Notes

8:2A Or purification

8:14-15B Or offering, and he slaughtered [it]. [15] Then Moses

8:15C Or it by making •atonement for it

8:18-19D Or ram, [19] and he slaughtered it. Moses

8:22-23E Or ram, [23] and he slaughtered [it]. Moses

8:33F Lit because he will fill your hands for seven days

Leviticus 9 Notes

9:2A Or purification

Leviticus 10 Notes

10:3A Or will be treated as holy

10:3B Or will be glorified

10:13C Or statute

10:20D Lit acceptable in his sight

Leviticus 11 Notes

11:13A Or griffon-vulture

11:13B Or black

11:13C Or the osprey, or the bearded vulture

11:14D Or hawk

11:14E Or buzzards, or hawks

11:16F Or eagle owl

11:16G Or the night hawk, or the screech owl

11:16H Or long-eared owl

11:17I Or tawny

11:17J Or fisher owl, or pelican

11:17K Or the ibis

11:18L Or little

11:18M Or the pelican, or the horned owl

11:18N Or Egyptian vulture

11:19O Or heron

11:19P Or cormorant, or hawk

11:29Q Or mole rat, or rat

11:29R Or of thorn-tailed or dabb lizard, or of crocodile

11:30S Or the spotted lizard, or the chameleon

11:30T Or the gecko, or the newt, or the salamander

11:30U Or sand lizard, or newt, or snail

11:30V Or salamander, or mole

11:42W Lit fours, to anything multiplying pairs of feet

Leviticus 12 Notes

12:6A Or purification

12:8B Lit if her hand cannot obtain what is sufficient

12:8C Or purification

Leviticus 13 Notes

13:2A Or discoloration

13:2B Or rash, or eruption

13:16C Or recedes

13:16D Or flesh again

13:30E Or is scall ; Hb obscure

13:39F Hb obscure

13:55G Hb obscure

Leviticus 14 Notes

14:3A Lit the person afflicted with skin disease

14:10B Lit three-tenths ; probably $^{3}/_{10}$ of an ephah

14:10C Lit one log

14:12D Lit one log

14:15E Lit one log

14:21F Lit and his hand is not

14:21G Lit him, and one-tenth ; probably $^{1}/_{10}$ of an ephah

14:21H Lit one log

14:22I Lit pigeons, for which his hand is sufficient

14:24J Lit one log

14:30K Lit of that for which his hand is sufficient

14:31L Lit [sacrificing] that for which his hand is sufficient

14:32M Lit someone on whom there is

14:32N Lit disease whose hand is not sufficient for 14:34O Lit land of your possession

14:35P Lit appeared to me

14:37Q Or eruptions ; Hb obscure

14:41R Lit dust

14:42S Lit dust

14:48T Lit healed

14:54U Or for a scall

Leviticus 16 Notes

16:21A Lit wilderness in the hand of a ready man

16:32B Lit and will fill his hand

Leviticus 17 Notes

17:4A Lit tabernacle — blood will be charged against that person

17:10B Lit will set My face

17:11C Or to ransom

Leviticus 18 Notes

18:6A Lit any flesh of his flesh

18:10B Lit because they are your nakedness

18:11C Lit daughter, a relative of 18:20D Lit to give your emission of semen to 18:23E Lit to give your emission to

Leviticus 19 Notes

19:16A Lit not stand against

19:17B Or your fellow Israelite

19:20C Or compensation

19:23D Lit uncircumcised

19:26E Or [anything] over its blood

19:29F Lit profane

19:31G Or spirits of the dead

19:31H Or familiar spirits

19:36I Lit honest ephah ; an ephah is a dry measure of grain equivalent to about 23 quarts.

19:36J Lit honest hin ; a hin is a liquid measure of about 1 gallon.

Leviticus 20 Notes

20:3A Lit will set My face

20:4B Lit country ever close their eyes from that man when he

20:5C Lit will set My face

20:5D Lit prostitute themselves with

20:6E Or spirits of the dead

20:6F Or familiar spirits

20:6G Lit will set My face

20:9H Lit on him

20:11I Lit on them

20:12J Lit on them

20:13K Lit on them

20:15L Lit man gives his emission to 20:17M Lit and he sees her nakedness and she sees his nakedness

20:27N Lit is in them

20:27O Lit on them

Leviticus 21 Notes

21:4A Lit unclean a husband among his people

21:7B Or a prostitute or a defiled woman

21:9C Or prostitution

21:10D Lit and one has filled his hand

21:10E Or not uncover his head

21:15F Lit not profane his seed

21:20G Or or emaciated

Leviticus 22 Notes

22:4A Or has leprosy or scale disease

22:8B Lit eat a carcass or a mauled beast

22:10C Lit No stranger

22:12D Lit man, a stranger

22:12E Lit the contribution of holy offerings

22:25F Lit nor from the hand of

22:27G Lit under

Leviticus 23 Notes

23:12A Or a male lamb in its first year

23:13B Lit two-tenths [of an ephah]

23:13C Lit one-fourth of a hin

23:15D Lit count; they will be seven

23:15E Or Sabbaths

23:17F Lit two-tenths [of an ephah]

23:24G Or blast ; traditionally trumpet blasts

23:34H Or Feast of Tabernacles

Leviticus 24 Notes

24:5A Lit two-tenths [of an ephah]

24:10B Lit went out

Leviticus 25 Notes

25:23A Lit residents with Me

25:26B Lit but his hand reaches

25:33C Hb obscure

25:35D Lit and his hand falters with

25:42E Lit sold with a sale of a slave

Leviticus 26 Notes

26:11A Or tabernacle

26:13B Lit to walk uprightly

26:17C Lit will set My face

26:39D Lit Those of you

Leviticus 27 Notes

27:13A Lit your

27:15B Lit your

27:16C Lit for a homer

27:16D Or grain

27:19E Lit your

27:23F Lit your

Numbers 1 Notes

1:3A Lit everyone going out to war in Israel

Numbers 2 Notes

2:17A Lit each on his hand

Numbers 3 Notes

3:7A Or to guard

3:8B Or to guard

3:8C Or and guard

3:28D Or for guarding

3:32E Or for guarding

3:38F Or who guarded

Numbers 4 Notes

4:3A Lit everyone entering the service

4:6B Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

4:8C Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

4:10D Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

4:11E Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

4:12F Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

4:14G Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

4:16H Or the sanctuary and its furnishings

4:20I Or at the covering of the holy objects

4:25J Or of dolphin skin, or of fine leather ; Hb obscure

Numbers 5 Notes

5:13A Lit and man lies with her [and has] an emission of semen

5:15B Lit a tenth of an ephah

5:18C Or to uncover her head

5:21D Or flood

Numbers 6 Notes

6:2A Or vow, to live as a Nazirite for

6:4B Or from unripe grapes to hulls

6:5C Lit A razor is not to pass over his head

6:11D Lit set apart

6:26E Lit LORD lift His face to you

6:26F Or prosperity

6:27G Or put My name on

Numbers 7 Notes

7:13A Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:13B Lit 70 shekels

7:14C Lit 10 (shekels)

7:19D Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:19E Lit 70 shekels

7:20F Lit 10 (shekels)

7:25G Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:25H Lit 70 shekels

7:26I Lit 10 (shekels)

7:31J Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:31K Lit 70 shekels

7:32L Lit 10 (shekels)

7:37M Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:37N Lit 70 shekels

7:38O Lit 10 (shekels)

7:43P Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:43Q Lit 70 shekels

7:44R Lit 10 (shekels)

7:49S Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:49T Lit 70 shekels

7:50U Lit 10 (shekels)

7:55V Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:55W Lit 70 shekels

7:56X Lit 10 (shekels)

7:61Y Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:61Z Lit 70 shekels

7:62A Lit 10 (shekels)

7:67B Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:67C Lit 70 shekels

7:68D Lit 10 (shekels)

7:73E Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:73F Lit 70 shekels

7:74G Lit 10 (shekels)

7:79H Lit dish, 130 its shekel-weight

7:79I Lit 70 shekels

7:80J Lit 10 (shekels)

7:85K Lit 130 (shekels)

7:85L Lit 70 (shekels)

7:85M Lit 2,400 (shekels)

7:86N Lit 10 (shekels)

7:86O Lit 120 (shekels)

Numbers 8 Notes

8:21A Lit waved

8:26B Or to keep guard

Numbers 9 Notes

9:22A Or a year

Numbers 10 Notes

10:29A Or said to Hobab's brother-in-law

Numbers 11 Notes

11:1A Lit in the ears of

11:4B Or The mixed multitude ; Hb obscure

11:6C Or our lives are wasting away, or our throat is dry

11:10D Lit and it was evil in the eyes of Moses

11:23E Lit LORD's arm too short

11:31F Lit two cubits

11:31G Or on, or above

11:32H Lit 10 homers

Numbers 12 Notes

12:7A Or is entrusted with

12:8B Lit mouth to mouth

Numbers 13 Notes

13:21A Or near Lebo-hamath

Numbers 14 Notes

14:15A Lit people as one man

14:25B Lit valley

14:30C Lit I raised My hand

14:34D Lit a day for the year, a day for the year

14:34E Or My opposition

Numbers 15 Notes

15:4A Lit a tenth (of an ephah)

15:4B Lit a fourth hin

15:5C Lit a fourth hin

15:6D Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

15:6E Lit a third hin

15:7F Lit a third hin

15:9G Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

15:9H Lit a half hin

15:10I Lit a half hin

15:30J Lit with a high hand

Numbers 16 Notes

16:3A Lit Enough of you

16:7B Lit Enough of you, sons of Levi

16:11C Or Aaron, what has he done

16:22D Or breath ; Nm 27:16

Numbers 18 Notes

18:7A Or veil. So you are to perform the service; a gift of your priesthood I grant

18:10B Or it in a most holy place

Numbers 19 Notes

19:12A Or ashes ; lit with it

Numbers 20 Notes

20:1A Lit the people

20:16B Or a messenger

20:20C Lit with numerous people and a strong hand

Numbers 21 Notes

21:4A Lit soul of the people

21:6B Lit burning

21:20C Or overlook Jeshimon

21:24D Or was at Az

21:27E Lit ones who speak proverbs

21:27F Or firmly founded

21:35G Lit left to him

Numbers 22 Notes

22:5A Or of the Amawites

22:36B Or at Ir-moab, or at Ar of Moab

Numbers 23 Notes

23:10A Or numbered a fourth

23:14B Or to the field of Zophim

23:21C Or not observe sin in Jacob; not see wrongdoing

23:22D Or Egypt; they have the horns of a wild ox

23:28E Or overlooks Jeshimon

Numbers 24 Notes

24:1A Lit set his face

24:6B Or like date palms

24:8C Or He has

24:17D Or Him

24:17E Or Him

24:17F Or frontiers

24:17G Or Sethites

Numbers 25 Notes

25:1A Or in Shittim

25:4B Or impale, or hang, or expose ; Hb obscure

25:11C Or jealousy

Numbers 27 Notes

Numbers 28 Notes

28:5A Lit one-tenth of an ephah

28:5B Lit a fourth of a hin

28:7C Lit a fourth of a hin

28:9D Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

28:12E Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

28:12F Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

28:13G Lit one-tenth (of an ephah)

28:14H Lit a half hin

28:14I Lit bull, a third hin

28:14J Lit a fourth hin

28:20K Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

28:20L Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

28:21M Lit one-tenth (of an ephah)

28:28N Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

28:28O Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

28:29P Lit one-tenth (of an ephah)

Numbers 29 Notes

29:1A Or blast ; traditionally, trumpet blasts

29:3B Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

29:3C Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

29:4D Lit one-tenth (of an ephah)

29:9E Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

29:9F Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

29:10G Lit one-tenth (of an ephah)

29:14H Lit three-tenths (of an ephah)

29:14I Lit two-tenths (of an ephah)

29:15J Lit one-tenth (of an ephah)

Numbers 30 Notes

30:15A Or will bear her guilt

Numbers 31 Notes

31:5A Or clans

31:30B Or who protect

31:52C Lit 16,750 shekels

Numbers 32 Notes

32:7A Lit discouraging the hearts of

32:41B Or renamed Havvoth-jair

Numbers 33 Notes

33:3A Lit with a raised hand ; Ex 14:8

33:49B Or Abel-shittim

Numbers 34 Notes

34:2A Lit inheritance — the land of Canaan

34:4B Lit of Scorpions ; Jos 15:3; Jdg 1:36

34:8C Or to Lebo-hamath

Numbers 35 Notes

35:4A Lit 1,000 cubits

35:5B Lit 2,000 cubits

35:5C Lit 2,000 cubits

35:5D Lit 2,000 cubits

35:5E Lit 2,000 cubits

Deuteronomy 1 Notes

1:7A Or the Shephelah

1:7B Lit the great river, the river Euphrates

1:34C Lit the sound of your

1:39D Lit who today

1:46E Lit Kadesh for many days, according to the days you stayed

Deuteronomy 2 Notes

2:5A Lit land as far as the width of a sole of a foot

2:12B Lit them before them

2:36C Or was too high for

Deuteronomy 3 Notes

3:11A Or His sarcophagus was made of basalt

3:11B Lit Nine cubits its length and four cubits its width, by a man's cubit

3:14C Or Havvoth-jair

Deuteronomy 4 Notes

4:4A Lit have held on

4:27B Lit be left few in number

Deuteronomy 5 Notes

5:28A Lit the sound of your

Deuteronomy 6 Notes

6:4A Or Yahweh is our God; Yahweh is One, or The LORD is our God, the LORD alone, or The LORD our God is one LORD

6:8B Or phylactery ; Mt 23:5

6:8C Lit symbol between your eyes

Deuteronomy 7 Notes

7:10A Lit He pays back to their faces

7:10B Lit to pay back to their faces

7:13C Lit bless the fruit of your womb

Deuteronomy 8 Notes

8:15A Lit burning

Deuteronomy 10 Notes

10:6A Or from the wells of Bene-jaakan, or from the wells of the Jaakanites

10:20B Lit Hold on

Deuteronomy 11 Notes

11:4A Lit to this day

11:10B Lit foot

11:18C Or phylactery ; Mt 23:5

11:18D Lit symbol between your eyes ; Ex 13:16; Dt 6:8

11:22E Lit and hold on

Deuteronomy 12 Notes

12:3A Lit that

12:6B Lit and the contributions from your hands

12:7C Lit you put your hand to

12:11D Lit tenth, the contributions from your hands

12:17E Lit or the contributions from your hands

12:18F Lit you put your hand to

Deuteronomy 13 Notes

13:4A Lit and hold on

13:8B Lit Your eye must not pity him

Deuteronomy 14 Notes

14:1A Or forehead

Deuteronomy 15 Notes

15:2A Lit owner of a loan of his hand

15:10B Lit and let not your heart be grudging

15:10C Lit you put your hand to

15:18D Lit Let it not be hard in your sight

Deuteronomy 17 Notes

17:20A Lit will lengthen days on his kingdom

Deuteronomy 18 Notes

18:1A Or His

18:5B Lit name all the days

18:8C Hb obscure

Deuteronomy 19 Notes

19:3A Or to prepare the roads

19:3B Lit flee there

19:6C Lit heart

19:6D Lit did not have a judgment of death

Deuteronomy 20 Notes

20:6A Lit not put it to use

20:6B Lit man put it to use

Deuteronomy 21 Notes

21:5A Lit and according to their mouth will be

21:14B Hb obscure

21:17C Lit mouth of two, or two mouthfuls

Deuteronomy 22 Notes

22:30A Lit not uncover the edge of his father's garment ; Ru 3:9; Ezk 16:8

Deuteronomy 23 Notes

23:1A Lit man bruised by crushing

23:18B Lit a dog's

23:20C Lit you put your hand to

23:23D Lit promised with your mouth

Deuteronomy 24 Notes

24:3A Lit if the second man who has taken her as his wife

24:13B Lit return what he has given as security

24:14C Lit within the gates

Deuteronomy 25 Notes

25:5A Lit live together

25:13B Lit have a stone and a stone

Deuteronomy 27 Notes

27:20A Lit has uncovered the edge of his father's garment ; Ru 3:9; Ezk 16:8

Deuteronomy 28 Notes

28:4A Lit The fruit of your womb

28:8B Lit you put your hand to

28:11C Lit abundantly in the fruit of your womb

28:18D Lit The fruit of your womb

28:20E Lit you put your hand to

28:22F Or sword

28:24G Lit powder and

28:32H Lit day, and not for power your hand

28:50I Lit a nation strong of face

28:53J Lit eat the fruit of your womb

28:54K Lit you his eye will be evil

28:54L Lit wife of his bosom

Deuteronomy 29 Notes

29:19A Lit may bless himself in his heart

Deuteronomy 30 Notes

30:2A Lit soul according to

30:3B Or will end your captivity

30:4C Lit skies

30:9D Lit hands in the fruit of your womb

30:20E Lit and hold on

Deuteronomy 31 Notes

31:2A Lit no longer go out or come in

31:11B Lit comes to appear

31:17C Lit will be for devouring

31:19D Lit Israelites; put it in their mouths

31:20E Lit be fat

31:21F Lit because the mouths of

31:21G Or know the plans they are devising

31:24H Lit scroll the words to their completion

31:30I Lit recited the words to their completion

Deuteronomy 32 Notes

32:5A Or Him; through their fault ; Hb obscure

32:8B Or Most High divided the nations

32:11C Or He stirs up

32:12D Lit him, and no foreign god with Him

32:14E Lit the blood of grapes

32:21F Lit with no gods

32:21G Lit with no people

32:28H Lit understanding in them

32:42I Or the long-haired heads of the enemy

Deuteronomy 33 Notes

33:2A Or fiery law ; Hb obscure

33:2B Or ones, from His southland to the mountain slopes

33:3C Or peoples

33:3D Lit His, or its

33:3E Hb obscure

33:7F Or He contends for them

33:11G Or abilities

33:12H Or Let the LORD's beloved rest

33:12I Or and He dwells among his mountain slopes

33:16J Lit dwelt

33:17K Lit and his horns are

33:29L Or high places

Deuteronomy 34 Notes

34:2A Lit Western

34:6B Or He was buried

Joshua 1 Notes

1:4A Lit and to the Great Sea, the going down of the sun

1:8B Or meditate on

1:14C Or over armed

Joshua 2 Notes

2:1A Or from Shittim

2:9B Or land panics at your approach

2:11C Lit and spirit no longer remained in anyone

2:12D Lit to your father's house

2:12E Or a sign of truth

2:19F Lit if a hand should be on him

2:24G Or also panics at our approach

Joshua 3 Notes

3:1A Or left Shittim

3:4B Lit 2,000 cubits

3:4C Lit yesterday and the day before

3:8D Lit waters of the Jordan

3:13E Lit soles of the feet

Joshua 4 Notes

4:3A Lit feet of the priests

4:5B Lit shoulder according to the number

4:8C Lit Jordan according to the number

4:9D Or Now Joshua set up the 12 stones [that had been] in the middle

4:9E Lit feet of the priests

4:18F Lit and the soles of the feet of the priests

Joshua 5 Notes

5:1A Lit and they did not have spirit in them any more

5:3B Or The Hill of Foreskins

Joshua 6 Notes

6:11A Lit at the camp

6:17B Lit messengers

Joshua 7 Notes

7:3A Or send two or three military units of

7:4B Lit men from the people

7:5C Or to Shebarim

7:10D Lit Why have you fallen on your face?

7:15E Lit burned with fire

7:17F Lit forward man by man

7:19G Or and praise Him

7:21H Lit Shinar

7:25I Lit him

7:25J Lit burned them with fire

7:26K Or of Trouble

Joshua 8 Notes

8:11A Lit the people of war

8:13B Lit way: all the

8:29C Or impaled

8:29D Or wooden stake

Joshua 9 Notes

9:1A Or the Shephelah

9:25B Lit us as is good and as is right in your eyes do

Joshua 10 Notes

10:6A Lit Don't let your hand go from

10:13B Or of the Upright

10:21C Lit No one sharpened his tongue against

10:26D Or impaled

10:26E Or wooden stakes

10:27F Or wooden stakes

10:40G Or the Shephelah

10:42H Lit land at one time

Joshua 11 Notes

11:2A Or the Shephelah

11:2B Or and in Naphoth-dor

11:16C Or the Shephelah

11:16D Or its Shephelah

Joshua 12 Notes

12:3A Or and from Teman

12:8B Or the Shephelah

12:23C Or in the Slopes of Dor

Joshua 13 Notes

13:5A Or to Lebo-hamath

13:26B Or Lidbir, or Lo-debar

13:27C Lit Chinnereth beyond the Jordan to the east

13:30D Or all of Havvoth-jair

Joshua 14 Notes

14:11A Lit for going out and coming in

Joshua 15 Notes

15:2A Lit Sea at the tongue that turns southward

15:3B Lit of scorpions

15:33C Or the Shephelah

15:34D Or En-gannim-tappuah

15:35E Or Adullam-socoh

15:62F Or Ir-hamelach

Joshua 17 Notes

17:4A Lit our brothers

17:14-17B Lit one lot and one territory

Joshua 18 Notes

18:8A Lit the ones going around

18:18B Or the Arabah

18:18C Or the Arabah

18:28D Lit Jebusite

Joshua 19 Notes

19:8A Or the Negev

19:29B Or sea, in the region of Achzib

19:47C Lit territory of the sons of Dan went out from them

19:47D Lit and called Leshem, Dan, after the name of

Joshua 20 Notes

20:4A Lit in the ears of

Joshua 21 Notes

21:25A Or Ibleam

21:36B Or Jahaz

Joshua 22 Notes

22:5A Lit commands, hold on

22:7B Lit to his half

22:10C Or to Geliloth by

22:11D Or at Geliloth by

22:22E Or The Mighty One, God, the LORD! The Mighty One, God, the LORD!, or God, the LORD God! God, the LORD God!

Joshua 23 Notes

23:10A Lit promised you

Joshua 24 Notes

24:12A Or sent terror

Judges 1 Notes

1:7A Lit toes are gathering

1:9B Or the Shephelah

1:35C Or Amorites determined to live in

1:35D Lit When the hand of the house of Joseph was heavy

Judges 2 Notes

2:3A Lit traps

2:5B Or Weeping

2:7C Lit extended their days after

2:14D Lit into the hand of

2:15E Lit the hand of the LORD

2:18F Lit enemies all the days of the judge

Judges 3 Notes

3:1A Lit had known

3:2B Lit not known it

3:3C Or as Lebo-hamath

3:4D Lit by the hand of

3:8E Lit into the hand of

3:8F Lit Doubly-Evil

3:16G Lit sword a gomed in length

3:24H Lit was covering his feet

Judges 4 Notes

4:2A Or Harosheth-ha-goiim

4:13B Or Harosheth-ha-goiim

4:16C Or Harosheth-ha-goiim

Judges 5 Notes

5:2A Or the locks of hair are loose

5:5B Or LORD, this [One of] Sinai

5:7C Hb obscure

5:7D Or you

5:10E Hb obscure

5:11F Hb obscure

5:27G Lit between

5:28H Lit Why have the hoofbeats of his chariots delayed

5:29I Lit answers her words

5:30J Hb obscure

5:31K Lit perish in this way

Judges 6 Notes

6:11A Or angel

6:11B Or he

6:13C Lit Please, my Lord, or Please, my lord

6:13D Lit this found us out

6:19E Lit an ephah

6:34F Lit LORD clothed Himself with; 1Ch 12:18; 2Ch 24:20

Judges 7 Notes

7:2A Lit them

7:2B Lit brag against Me

7:8C Lit took in their hands

7:11D Lit of those who were arranged in companies of 50

7:17E Lit said to them

7:20F Lit trumpets to blow

Judges 8 Notes

8:5A Lit are at my feet

8:6B Lit Are the hands of

8:7C Or tear

8:10D Lit men who drew the sword

8:11E Lit on the route of those who live in tents

8:15F Lit Are the hands of

8:26G Lit 1,700 shekels

8:28H Lit they no longer raised their head

8:33I Lit Baal of the Covenant, or Lord of the Covenant

Judges 9 Notes

9:2A Lit your bone and your flesh

9:4B Lit Baal of the Covenant, or Lord of the Covenant

9:9C Lit and go to sway

9:11D Lit and go to sway

9:13E Lit and go to sway

9:31F Hb obscure

9:33G Lit him as your hand will find

9:38H Lit replied to him

9:46I Or the crypt, or the vault

Judges 10 Notes

10:4A Or called Havvoth-jair

10:7B Lit into the hand of

10:15C Lit Do to us what is good in Your eyes

10:18D Lit The people, rulers

Judges 11 Notes

11:35A Lit have been among those who trouble me

Judges 12 Notes

12:3A Lit come to me

Judges 13 Notes

13:5A Lit And a razor is not to go up on his head

13:9B Lit to the voice of

13:12C Lit work

13:25D Or in Mahaneh-dan

Judges 14 Notes

14:3A Lit Is there not

14:3B Lit because she is right in my eyes

14:6C Lit LORD rushed on

14:7D Lit because she was right in the eyes of Samson

14:13E Lit replied to him

14:16F Lit said to her

Judges 15 Notes

15:8A Lit He struck them hip on thigh

15:11B Lit answered them

15:13C Lit said to him

15:14D Lit LORD rushed on 15:18E Lit through the hand of

Judges 16 Notes

16:2A Lit quietly all night

16:5B Lit him and see

16:9C Lit are on you

16:12D Lit are on you

16:14E Lit are on you

16:16F Lit him and he became short to death

16:17G Lit A razor has not gone up on my head

16:20H Lit are on you

16:25I Or When they were feeling good

Judges 17 Notes

17:3A Or image and a cast image

17:4B Or image and a cast image

17:6C Lit did what was right in his eyes

17:10D Lit replied to him

Judges 18 Notes

18:7A Hb obscure

18:12B Or called Mahaneh-dan

18:14C Or image, the cast image

18:17D Or image, the cast image

18:18E Or image, the cast image

18:19F Lit Put your hand on your mouth

Judges 19 Notes

19:3A Lit speak to her heart

19:11B Lit Come, please

19:13C Lit said to his servant

19:15D Lit stopped there

19:24E Lit do what is good in your eyes

19:25F Lit knew

Judges 20 Notes

20:40A Lit up to the sky

Judges 21 Notes

21:3A Lit has this occurred in Israel

21:10B Lit 12,000 of their sons of valor

21:22C Lit at this time

21:25D Lit did what was right in his eyes

Ruth 1 Notes

1:1A Lit In the days of the judging

1:11B Lit More to me sons in my womb

1:13C Lit marrying a man

1:13D Lit daughters, for more bitter to me than you

1:15E Or gods

1:19F Lit excited because of them

1:20G Lit answered them

Ruth 2 Notes

2:8A Lit Haven't you heard, my daughter?

2:13B Lit and spoken to the heart of

2:17C Lit about an ephah

2:20D Or His

2:22E Lit go out

Ruth 3 Notes

3:7A Lit and his heart was glad

3:9B Or Spread the edge of your garment ; lit Spread the wing of your garment ; Ru 2:12

3:10C Lit kindness at the last than at the first

3:11D Lit all the gate of my people

3:14E Lit up before a man could recognize his companion

3:16F Lit Who are you

Ruth 4 Notes

4:1A Lit Boaz said so-and-so come

4:4B Lit should uncover your ear, saying

1 Samuel 1 Notes

1:1A Or from Ramathaim, a Zuphite from

1:5B Or gave only one ; Hb obscure

1:11C Lit a seed of men

1:11D Lit and no razor will go up on his head

1:13E Lit praying to her heart

1:18F Lit and her face was not to her again

1:20G Lit In the turning of the days

1:23H Lit what is good in your eyes

1:24I Lit bull and an ephah

1:24J Lit And the youth was a youth

1 Samuel 2 Notes

2:9A Lit feet

2:28B Lit selected him

2:33C Lit grief to your eyes

2:33D Lit die men

1 Samuel 3 Notes

3:18A Lit what is good in His eyes

3:19B Lit He let no words fall to the ground

1 Samuel 4 Notes

4:3A Or He

4:7B Lit yesterday or the day before

4:15C Lit his eyes stood ; 1Kg 14:4

1 Samuel 5 Notes

5:2A Lit to Dagon

1 Samuel 6 Notes

6:5A Lit will lighten the heaviness of His hand from you

6:21B Lit and bring it up to you

1 Samuel 7 Notes

7:3A Lit you and set your hearts on

1 Samuel 8 Notes

8:21A Lit them in the LORD's ears

1 Samuel 9 Notes

9:2A Lit From his shoulder and up higher than any of the people

9:8B Lit a quarter of a shekel

9:15C Lit had uncovered Samuel's ear, saying

9:19D Lit answered Saul

1 Samuel 10 Notes

10:5A Or to Gibeath-elohim

10:5B Or governors

10:7C Lit do for yourself whatever your hand finds

10:9D Lit turned his shoulder

10:9E Lit God turned to him another heart

10:23F Lit people, and he was higher than any of the people from his shoulder and up

10:27G Lit gift, and he was like a mute person

1 Samuel 11 Notes

11:4A Lit in the ears of

11:10B Lit do what is good in your eyes

1 Samuel 12 Notes

12:3A Lit bribe and will hide my eyes with it?

1 Samuel 13 Notes

13:3A Or governor

13:4B Or governor

13:14C Lit man according to His heart

13:21D Lit of a pim ; about $^{1}/_{4}$ ounce of silver

1 Samuel 14 Notes

14:4A Lit There was a tooth

14:15B Or and a great terror spread

14:19C Lit Withdraw your hand

14:25D Lit All the land

14:26E Lit but there was none who raised his hand to his mouth

14:27F Lit he returned his hand to his mouth

14:36G Lit Do what is good in your eyes

14:40H Lit Do what is good in your eyes

1 Samuel 15 Notes

15:9A Lit and the second

15:14B Lit sheep in my ears

15:20C Lit answered Samuel

15:32D Hb obscure

15:32E Lit turned

1 Samuel 16 Notes

16:4A LXX reads were astonished

16:7B Lit what is of the eyes

16:12C Or ruddy

1 Samuel 17 Notes

17:4A Lit was six cubits and a span

17:5B Lit helmet on his head

17:5C Lit 5,000 shekels

17:7D Lit 600 shekels

17:17E Lit this ephah

17:18F Lit the leader of 1,000

17:32G Lit let a man's heart fall over

17:42H Or ruddy

17:54I Lit the Philistine's

1 Samuel 18 Notes

18:8A Lit furious; this saying was evil in his eyes

18:10B Or prophesy

18:20C Lit Saul, the thing was right in his eyes

18:23D Lit words in David's ears

18:26E Lit David, it was right in David's eyes

18:26F Lit And the days were not full

1 Samuel 20 Notes

20:2A Lit without uncovering my ear

20:12B Lit and uncover your ear

20:13C Lit will uncover your ears

20:16D Lit LORD require it from the hand of David's enemies

20:30E Lit your mother's genitals

1 Samuel 21 Notes

21:5A Lit vessels

21:12B Lit David placed these words in his heart

21:13C Lit madman in their hand

1 Samuel 22 Notes

22:8A Lit No one uncovers my ear

22:8B Lit or uncovers my ear

22:15C Lit didn't know a thing, small or large

22:17D Lit didn't uncover my ear

1 Samuel 23 Notes

23:19A Lit Is David not . . . Jeshimon?

23:22B Lit watch his place where his foot will be

23:23C Or thousands

1 Samuel 24 Notes

24:3A Lit to cover his feet

24:5B Lit David's heart struck

24:7C Or restrained

24:10D Or my eye

24:15E Lit render a verdict for 24:19F Lit go on a good way

24:20G Or will flourish

1 Samuel 25 Notes

25:5A Or Nabal, and ask him for peace

25:6B Lit To life

25:7C Lit you have shearers

25:8D Lit good

25:9E Lit name

25:18F Lit sheep, five seahs

25:22G Lit of those of his who are urinating against the wall

25:25H Lit for as is his name is, so he is

25:25I Lit and foolishness is with him

25:28J Or trouble

25:29K Lit bundle

25:34L Lit had anyone urinating against a wall

25:36M Lit Nabal's heart was good on him

25:36N Lit anything small or great

25:37O Lit when the wine had gone out of Nabal

25:37P Lit Then his heart died within him

25:37Q Lit became a stone

1 Samuel 27 Notes

1 Samuel 28 Notes

28:13A Or a god, or a divine being

1 Samuel 29 Notes

29:3A Hb obscure

29:6B Lit It was good in my eyes

29:6C Lit you going out and coming in

2 Samuel 1 Notes

1:18A Or of the Upright

1:22B Lit empty

2 Samuel 2 Notes

2:16A Or Helkath-hazzurim

2:29B Or marched through the Bithron

2 Samuel 3 Notes

3:26A Or cistern

3:27B Lit And he died for the blood of Asahel

3:31C Or the bier ; lit the bed

2 Samuel 4 Notes

4:4A Lit His nurse

2 Samuel 5 Notes

5:1A Lit your bone and flesh

5:8B Or temple, or palace

5:20C Or Baal-perazim ; 2Sm 6:8; 1Ch 13:11

2 Samuel 6 Notes

6:3A Or and his brothers

6:8B Or Perez-uzzah ; 2Sm 5:20

6:14C Or whirling

6:22D Lit more and I will be humble in my own eyes

2 Samuel 7 Notes

7:19A Lit Yet this

7:19B Or custom, or instruction

2 Samuel 8 Notes

8:1A Or took control of the mother city ; Hb obscure

8:4B Or chariot horses

2 Samuel 10 Notes

10:12A Lit the LORD do what is good in His eyes

2 Samuel 11 Notes

11:11A Lit servants

11:26B Lit her husband

2 Samuel 12 Notes

12:4A Lit for the man who had come to him

12:8B Lit bosom

12:11C Or to your neighbor

12:11D Lit in the eyes of this sun

12:12E Lit and before the sun

12:25F Or prophet to name

12:30G Lit a talent

2 Samuel 13 Notes

13:11A Lit said to her

13:16B Lit she said to him

13:18C Or an ornamented ; Gn 37:3

13:32D Lit In fact, it was established on the mouth of Absalom

2 Samuel 14 Notes

14:19A Lit Is the hand of Joab in

14:20B Lit to go around the face of the matter

14:24C Lit king's face

14:26D Lit 200 shekels

2 Samuel 15 Notes

15:24A Or Abiathar went up

15:26B Lit me what is good in His eyes

2 Samuel 16 Notes

16:6A Lit all King David's

16:11B Lit son who came from my belly

2 Samuel 17 Notes

17:9A Or pits, or ravines

17:9B Lit And it will be when a falling on them at

17:15C Lit Like this and like this

17:15D Lit and like this and like this

17:20E Or brook ; Hb obscure

17:23F Lit He commanded his house

17:25G Or Jether

17:29H Hb obscure

2 Samuel 18 Notes

18:9A Lit was between heaven and earth

18:11B Lit Joab said to the man who told him

2 Samuel 19 Notes

19:6A Lit be right in your eyes

19:7B Lit speak to the heart of 19:14C Lit he turned the heart of

19:18D Lit do what is good in his eyes

19:27E Lit do what is good in your eyes

19:37F Lit what is good in your eyes

19:38G Lit what is good in your eyes

2 Samuel 20 Notes

20:6A Lit and snatch away our eyes

20:7B Lit out following him

2 Samuel 21 Notes

21:3A Lit will bless

21:4B Lit “Not for us silver and gold with

21:6C Or impale, or expose

21:9D Or impaled, or exposed

21:13E Or impaled, or exposed

21:16F Or Raphah

21:16G Lit 300 (shekels)

21:18H Or Raphah

21:20I Or Raphah

21:22J Or Raphah

2 Samuel 22 Notes

22:9A Or ablaze from Him

22:12B Or sieve, or mass ; Hb obscure

22:23C Lit Indeed, all His ordinances have been in front of me

22:30D Or ridge

22:34E Or on my high places

22:41F Lit You gave me the neck of my enemies

2 Samuel 23 Notes

23:1A Or raised up by the high [God]

23:15B Lit And David craved

23:20C Or two warriors

23:30D Or from Nahale-gaash

2 Samuel 24 Notes

24:22A Lit take what is good in his eyes

24:24B Lit 50 shekels

1 Kings 1 Notes

1:2A Lit them

1:4B Lit he did not know

1:6C Or grieved

1:7D Lit His words were

1:48E Lit and my eyes are seeing

1 Kings 2 Notes

2:14A Lit then said, "I have a word for you."

2:16B Lit don't make me turn my face

1 Kings 3 Notes

3:1A Lit Solomon made himself a son-in-law

3:6B Lit and with You

3:7C Lit am a little youth and do not know to go out or come in

3:8D Lit chosen many

3:11E Lit for many days

3:11F Lit life

3:18G Lit No stranger

3:26H Lit because her compassion grew hot

1 Kings 4 Notes

4:21A 1Kg 5:1 in Hb

4:22B Lit 30 cors

4:22C Lit 60 cors

4:23D Hb obscure

4:28E Lit judgment

1 Kings 5 Notes

5:11A Lit 20,000 cors

1 Kings 6 Notes

6:2A Lit 60 cubits

6:2B Lit 20 cubits

6:2C Lit 30 cubits

6:3D Lit 20 cubits

6:3E Lit 10 cubits wide

6:4F Hb obscure

6:5G Lit built the house of chamber

6:5H Lit made ribs or sides

6:6I Lit five cubits

6:6J Lit six cubits

6:6K Lit seven cubits

6:8L Hb obscure

6:10M Lit five cubits

6:16N Lit 20 cubits

6:17O Lit front of me; Hb obscure

6:17P Lit 40 cubits

6:20Q Lit 20 cubits

6:20R Lit 20 cubits

6:20S Lit 20 cubits

6:21T Lit he caused to pass across

6:23U Lit 10 cubits

6:24V Lit five cubits

6:24W Lit 10 cubits

6:25X Lit 10 cubits

6:26Y Lit 10 cubits

6:27Z Lit the second

6:31A Hb obscure

6:33B Hb obscure

1 Kings 7 Notes

7:2A Lit 100 cubits

7:2B Lit 50 cubits

7:2C Lit 30 cubits

7:4D Lit frames, window to window

7:4E Lit three times; = at 3 different places

7:5F Lit frames, opposing window to window

7:5G Lit three times; = at 3 different places

7:6H Lit 50 cubits

7:6I Lit 30 cubits

7:6J Hb obscure

7:8K Lit daughter he had taken

7:10L Lit ten cubits and eight cubits

7:15M Lit 18 cubits

7:15N Lit 12 cubits

7:16O Lit five cubits

7:16P Lit five cubits

7:17Q Lit tassels

7:19R Lit four cubits

7:20S Lit encircling the second

7:23T Lit sea

7:23U Lit 10 cubits

7:23V Lit five cubits

7:23W Lit 30 cubits

7:24X Lit 10 per cubit

7:26Y Lit a handbreadth

7:26Z Lit 2,000 baths

7:27A Lit bronze stands

7:27B Lit four cubits

7:27C Lit four cubits

7:27D Lit three cubits

7:29E Or hammered-down

7:31F Lit a cubit

7:31G Lit one and a half cubits

7:32H Lit was one and a half cubits

7:35I Lit half a cubit

7:38J Lit 40 baths

7:38K Lit four cubits

7:50L Or dishes, or spoons ; lit palms

1 Kings 8 Notes

8:28A Lit Turn

8:31B Lit and he lifts a curse against him to curse him

8:37C Lit besieges him in the land of his gates

8:38D Lit knowing in his heart of a plague

8:47E Lit they return to their heart

8:50F Lit rebellions that they have rebelled

8:58G Lit causes our hearts to be inclined

8:65H Or from Lebo-hamath

8:66I Lit the eighth day

1 Kings 9 Notes

9:7A Lit send from My presence

9:8B Lit hiss

9:14C Lit 120 talents

9:28D Lit 420 talents

1 Kings 10 Notes

10:10A Lit 120 talents

10:14B Lit 666 talents

10:16C Lit 600 (shekels)

10:17D Lit three minas

10:22E Or baboons

10:25F Or vessels, or weapons

10:25G Or fragrant balsam

10:29H Lit 600 shekels

10:29I Lit 150 shekels

1 Kings 11 Notes

11:7A Lit Molech

11:11B Lit Since this was with you

1 Kings 12 Notes

12:11A Lit with scorpions

12:14B Lit with scorpions

12:28C Or here are your gods

12:33D Or He went up to

1 Kings 13 Notes

13:24A Lit met

1 Kings 14 Notes

14:4A Lit see, for his eyes stood ; 1Sm 4:15

14:10B Lit eliminate Jeroboam's one who urinates against the wall

14:10C Hb obscure

14:14D Hb obscure

14:27E Lit the runners

1 Kings 15 Notes

15:10A Lit mother's

15:13B Lit mother

15:29C Lit Jeroboam anyone breathing until

15:30D Lit provoked in the provocation of

1 Kings 16 Notes

16:11A Lit leave him one who urinates against the wall

16:24B Lit for two talents

1 Kings 17 Notes

17:16A Lit by the hand of

1 Kings 18 Notes

18:27A Or has turned aside; possibly to relieve himself

18:32B Lit altar corresponding to a house of two seahs of seed

1 Kings 20 Notes

20:39A Lit a talent

1 Kings 21 Notes

21:21A Lit eliminate Ahab's one who urinates against the wall

1 Kings 22 Notes

22:24A Lit Which way did

22:27B Lit him on bread of oppression and water of oppression

2 Kings 1 Notes

1:11A Lit He answered

1:12B Lit a fire of God

1:17C Lit Jehoram ; 2Kg 8:16

2 Kings 3 Notes

2 Kings 4 Notes

4:38A Lit sitting before him

2 Kings 5 Notes

5:1A Lit man before his master

5:3B Lit master was before

5:5C Lit 10 talents

5:5D Lit 6,000 [shekels]

5:7E Lit only seeking an occasion against

5:18F Lit worship, and he leans on my hand, and I

5:22G Lit a talent

5:23H Lit two talents

5:23I Lit two talents

5:24J Or citadel

5:26K Lit "Did not my heart go

2 Kings 6 Notes

6:1A Lit we are living before you

6:10B Lit not once and not twice

6:25C Lit a fourth of a kab

6:25D Or seedpods, or wild onions

2 Kings 7 Notes

7:1A Lit a seah

7:1B Lit two seahs

7:16C Lit a seah

7:16D Lit two seahs

7:18E Lit two seahs

7:18F Lit a seah

2 Kings 8 Notes

8:16A Lit Judah; Jehoshaphat had been king of Judah

8:29B Lit Ramah

2 Kings 9 Notes

9:8A Lit eliminate Ahab's one who urinates against a wall

9:13B Lit on the bones of the steps

9:18C Lit What to you and to peace

9:19D Lit What to you and to peace

2 Kings 10 Notes

10:3A Lit the good and the upright

10:5B Lit Do what is good in your eyes

10:15C Lit heart upright like my heart is with your heart

10:33D Lit Arnon Valley and Gilead and Bashan

2 Kings 11 Notes

11:6A Hb obscure

11:8B Lit king when he goes out and when he comes in

11:12C Or him the copy of the covenant, or him a diadem, or him jewels

2 Kings 12 Notes

12:5A Hb obscure

12:5B Lit repair the breach of the house wherever there is found a breach

12:6C Lit breach in 2Kg 12:5-12

2 Kings 13 Notes

13:9A Lit Joash

2 Kings 14 Notes

14:1A Lit Joash

14:1B Lit Joahaz

14:13C Lit Jehoash

14:13D Lit 400 cubits

14:23E Lit Joash

14:27F Lit Joash

14:28G Lit recovered Damascus and for Judah in Israel ; Hb obscure

2 Kings 15 Notes

15:5A Lit house of freedom, or house of exemption

15:19B Lit 1,000 talents

15:20C Lit 50 shekels

15:25D Hb obscure

2 Kings 16 Notes

16:15A Hb obscure

16:17B Lit the stands

16:17C Lit sea

2 Kings 17 Notes

17:4A Lit as year by year

17:7B Lit feared

17:9C Or Israelites spoke untrue words

17:14D Lit they stiffened their neck like the neck of

2 Kings 18 Notes

18:14A Lit 300 talents

18:14B Lit 30 talents

18:19C Lit What is this trust which you trust

18:26D Lit Judahite

18:28E Lit Judahite

18:31F Lit a blessing

2 Kings 19 Notes

19:21A Lit behind you

19:23B Lit by the hand of

2 Kings 20 Notes

20:1A Lit Command your house

20:3B Lit what is good in Your eyes

20:11C Lit shadow on the steps

20:18D Or court officials

2 Kings 21 Notes

21:24A Lit the people of the land

2 Kings 22 Notes

22:9A Lit and returned a word to the king and said

22:20B Lit returned a word

2 Kings 23 Notes

23:3A 2Ch 34:31 reads platform

23:3B Lit people took a stand in

23:6C Lit the sons of the people

23:7D Or clothing

23:30E Lit the people of the land

23:33F Lit 100 talents

23:33G Lit one talent

23:35H Lit the people of the land

2 Kings 24 Notes

24:17A Lit his

2 Kings 25 Notes

25:17A Lit 18 cubits

25:17B Lit three cubits

25:19C Lit five men who look on the king’s face

25:19D Lit the people of the land

1 Chronicles 2 Notes

2:23A Lit took from them

2:23B Or captured Havvoth-jair

2:42C Lit and the sons of Mareshah

2:52D Lit Manuhoth

1 Chronicles 3 Notes

3:6A Lit Elishama ; 2Sm 5:15; 1Ch 14:5

3:11B Lit Joram

1 Chronicles 4 Notes

4:8A Or Hazzobebah

4:10B Or so that I will not experience pain

4:14C Or the Ge-harashim

4:21D Lit house

4:22E Or who ruled over Moab

1 Chronicles 5 Notes

5:25A Lit the peoples of the land

1 Chronicles 7 Notes

7:22A Or his brothers

1 Chronicles 8 Notes

8:40A Lit valiant ones who string the bow

1 Chronicles 9 Notes

9:4A Lit Bani, from the sons

9:31B Lit with things prepared in pans

1 Chronicles 10 Notes

10:12A Or terebinth, or large tree

1 Chronicles 11 Notes

11:1A Lit your bone and flesh

11:14B Lit But they

11:17C Lit And David craved

11:22D Or was a valiant man

11:22E Or He killed two Moabite warriors

11:23F Lit who measured five cubits

1 Chronicles 12 Notes

12:18A Lit Spirit clothed Himself with ; Jdg 6:34; 2Ch 24:20

12:22B Or like the ultimate army

1 Chronicles 13 Notes

13:5A Or to Lebo-hamath

13:7B Or and his brothers

13:11C Or Perez-uzzah

13:13D Lit to himself

1 Chronicles 14 Notes

14:11A Or Baal-perazim

1 Chronicles 15 Notes

15:29A Or whirling

1 Chronicles 16 Notes

16:12A Lit judgments of His mouth

16:16B Lit and His oath

1 Chronicles 17 Notes

17:17A Lit thing in Your eyes

17:17B Hb obscure

17:25C Lit have uncovered the ear of

1 Chronicles 18 Notes

18:4A Or chariot horses

1 Chronicles 19 Notes

19:6A Lit 1,000 talents

19:10B Lit the choice ones ; 2Sm 6:1

19:13C Lit the LORD do what is good in His eyes

1 Chronicles 20 Notes

20:1A Lit At the time of the return of the year

20:2B Lit a talent

20:4C Or the Rephaites

20:6D Or Raphah

20:8E Or Raphah

1 Chronicles 21 Notes

21:1A Or An adversary ; Jb 1:6; Zch 3:1-2

21:15B Lit but as he was destroying

21:23C Lit do what is good in his eyes

21:25D Lit 600 shekels of gold by weight

1 Chronicles 22 Notes

22:14A Lit 100,000 talents of gold and 1,000,000 talents of silver

1 Chronicles 23 Notes

23:6A Lit Gershon

23:29B Lit the griddle

1 Chronicles 24 Notes

24:26A Or Mushi; Jaaziah's sons: Beno.

24:27B Or sons, Jaaziah: Beno,

1 Chronicles 25 Notes

25:5A Or Him ; lit by the words of God to lift a horn

25:11B Variant of Zeri

1 Chronicles 26 Notes

26:25A Or Shelomoth

26:26B Or Shelomoth

26:28C Or Shelomoth

1 Chronicles 27 Notes

27:1A Lit that came in and went out month by month for all months of

27:15B Lit belonging to Othniel

27:28C Or the Shephelah

27:32D Lit was with

1 Chronicles 28 Notes

28:12A Or he received from the Spirit

28:18B Or chariot, that is ; Ps 18:10; Ezk 1:5,15

28:19C Hb obscure

1 Chronicles 29 Notes

29:2A Or mosaic

29:4B Lit 3,000 talents

29:4C Lit 7,000 talents

29:7D Lit 5,000 talents

29:7E Or drachmas, or darics

29:7F Lit 10,000 talents

29:7G Lit 18,000 talents

29:7H Lit 100,000 talents

29:14I Lit and from Your hand we have given to You

29:17J Lit found

29:17K Or now with joy I’ve seen Your people who are present here giving

2 Chronicles 1 Notes

1:5A Or it

1:17B Lit 600 shekels

1:17C Lit 150 shekels

2 Chronicles 2 Notes

2:10A Lit 20,000 cors

2:10B Lit 20,000 cors

2:10C Lit 20,000 baths

2:10D Lit 20,000 baths

2:11E Lit Tyre said in writing

2:13F Lit Huram my father

2 Chronicles 3 Notes

3:3A Lit length — cubits in the former measure —

3:3B Lit 60 cubits

3:3C Lit 20 cubits

3:4D Lit 20 cubits

3:4E Lit 20 cubits

3:5F Lit The house

3:8G Lit 20 cubits

3:8H Lit 20 cubits

3:8I Lit 600 talents

3:9J Lit 50 shekels

3:11K Lit 20 cubits

3:11L Lit five cubits

3:11M Lit five cubits

3:12N Lit five cubits

3:12O Lit five cubits

3:13P Lit 20 cubits

3:13Q Lit the house

3:15R Lit 35 cubits

3:15S Lit five cubits

2 Chronicles 4 Notes

4:1A Lit 20 cubits

4:1B Lit 20 cubits

4:1C Lit 10 cubits

4:2D Lit 10 cubits

4:2E Lit five cubits

4:2F Lit 30 cubits

4:3G Lit 10 per cubit

4:5H Lit a handbreadth

4:14I Lit the stands

4:16J Lit Huram my father

4:22K Or dishes, or spoons ; lit palms

2 Chronicles 6 Notes

6:13A Lit five cubits

6:13B Lit five cubits

6:13C Lit three cubits

6:19D Lit Turn

6:22E Lit and he lifts a curse against him to curse him

6:28F Lit if his (Israel's) enemies besiege him in the land of his gates ; Jos 2:7; Jdg 16:2-3

6:29G Lit plague

6:39H Lit and do their judgment or justice

2 Chronicles 7 Notes

7:8A Or from Lebo-hamath

2 Chronicles 8 Notes

8:18A Lit Huram

8:18B Lit 450 talents

2 Chronicles 9 Notes

9:9A Lit 120 talents

9:13B Lit 666 talents

9:15C Lit 600 (shekels)

9:16D Lit 300 (shekels)

9:21E Or baboons

9:24F Or vessels, or weapons

9:24G Or fragrant balsam

2 Chronicles 10 Notes

10:10A Or waist

10:11B Lit with scorpions

10:14C Lit with scorpions

2 Chronicles 11 Notes

11:5A Lit he built cities for a fortress

11:20B Possibly granddaughter ; 2Ch 13:2

11:21C Possibly granddaughter ; 2Ch 13:2

2 Chronicles 12 Notes

12:10A Lit the runners

2 Chronicles 13 Notes

13:8A Or God ; 1Kg 12:28

13:20B Lit He did not restrain the power of Jeroboam

2 Chronicles 15 Notes

15:7A Lit don't let your hands fail

15:13B Or insignificant or great

15:16C Lit mother ; 1Kg 15:2; 2Ch 11:22

15:17D Lit wholehearted all his days

2 Chronicles 16 Notes

16:4A Abel-beth-maacah in 1Kg 15:20

16:10B Lit the house of stocks

2 Chronicles 18 Notes

18:1A Lit made himself a son-in-law to Ahab ; 1Kg 3:1; Ezr 9:14

18:26B Lit him on bread of oppression and water of oppression

2 Chronicles 19 Notes

19:2A Lit to his face

2 Chronicles 20 Notes

20:12A Lit but on You our eyes

20:21B Lit saying

2 Chronicles 21 Notes

21:19A Lit evil

21:20B Lit He walked in no desirability

2 Chronicles 22 Notes

22:1A Lit the former ones

22:2B Lit daughter

22:5C Lit Rammites

22:6D Lit in Ramah

22:10E Lit seed

2 Chronicles 23 Notes

23:7A Lit king when he comes in and when he goes out

23:9B Or spears and large and small shields

23:18C Lit song on the hands of

2 Chronicles 24 Notes

24:14A Or dishes, or spoons ; lit palms

24:20B Lit God clothed Himself with ; Jdg 6:34; 1Ch 12:18

2 Chronicles 25 Notes

25:6A Lit 100 talents

25:9B Lit 100 talents

25:17C Lit Joash

25:23D Lit 400 cubits

2 Chronicles 26 Notes

26:10A Or the Shephelah

26:10B Or in Carmel

26:21C Lit a house of freedom

2 Chronicles 27 Notes

27:5A Lit 100 talents

27:5B Lit 10,000 cors

27:5C Lit 10,000 cors

27:6D Lit he established his ways before

2 Chronicles 28 Notes

28:18A Or the Shephelah

2 Chronicles 29 Notes

29:6A Lit and they gave the back of the neck

29:8B Lit hissing

29:31C Lit Now you have filled your hands

29:34D Lit upright of heart ; Ps 32:11; 64:10

2 Chronicles 30 Notes

30:5A Or in great numbers

30:5B Lit often, according to what is written

30:8C Lit Don't stiffen your neck

30:8D Lit hand

30:10E Lit but they

30:12F Lit to give them one heart

30:22G Lit spoke to the heart of

2 Chronicles 31 Notes

31:1A Lit Manasseh, until finishing

31:3B Lit The king's portion

31:16C Or 30 ; 1Ch 23:3

2 Chronicles 32 Notes

32:1A Lit said to himself

32:2B Lit that his face was for

32:6C Lit he spoke to their hearts

32:8D Lit With him an arm of flesh

32:9E Lit with his dominion was against

32:18F Lit Judahite

32:22G Lit He led them ; Ps 23:2

2 Chronicles 33 Notes

33:25A Lit the people of the land

2 Chronicles 34 Notes

34:32A Lit take a stand.

2 Chronicles 35 Notes

35:5A Lit the sons of the people

35:7B Lit the sons of the people

35:11C Lit sprinkled from their hand

35:12D Lit the sons of the people

35:13E Lit the sons of the people

35:21F Lit house

2 Chronicles 36 Notes

36:1A Lit the people of the land

36:3B Lit 100 talents

36:3C Lit one talent

36:10D Lit At the return of the year

36:13E Lit He stiffened his neck

36:22F Lit Lord by the mouth of

Ezra 1 Notes

1:5A Lit everyone whose spirit God had stirred

1:6B Lit supported their hands

1:10C Or similar

Ezra 2 Notes

2:2A Lit the men of the people of Israel

2:69B Or drachmas, or darics

2:69C Lit 5,000 minas

Ezra 3 Notes

3:5A Lit for the new moons

3:5B Lit well as those of everyone making a freewill offering to

3:9C Or Hodaviah ; Neh 7:43; 1 Esdras 5:58

3:13D Lit the people

Ezra 4 Notes

4:1A Lit the sons of the exile

4:4B Lit people of the land

4:4C Lit relaxed the hands of

4:6D Lit people of the land

4:7E Lit translated. Aramaic:

4:9F Lit Then Rehum

4:9G Or ambassadors

4:9H Aram obscure

4:10I Lit Osnappar

4:13J Aram obscure

4:14K Lit have eaten the salt of the palace

4:18L Or been read clearly

4:22M Lit the kings

Ezra 5 Notes

5:3A Or finish its furnishings

5:5B Lit But the eye of their God was

5:8C Or huge

5:9D Or finish its furnishings

5:17E Lit treasure house

Ezra 6 Notes

6:1A Lit Babylon where the treasures were stored

6:3B Lit be brought forth

6:3C Lit 60 cubits

6:3D Lit 60 cubits

6:4E Or huge

6:5F Lit Jerusalem, to its place,

6:6G Lit their

6:12H Lit who stretches out its hand

6:21I Lit land to them

6:22J Lit their hands

Ezra 7 Notes

7:22A Lit 100 talents

7:22B Lit 100 cors

7:22C Lit 100 baths

7:22D Lit 100 baths

7:22E Lit without instruction

7:25F Lit to your

7:28G Lit because the hand of the LORD my God was on me

Ezra 8 Notes

8:3A Or males ; also in vv. 4-14

8:15B Or canal

8:17C Lit Casiphia, and I put in their mouth the words to speak to

8:21D Or Canal

8:26E Lit 650 talents

8:26F Lit 100 talents

8:26G Lit 100 talents

8:27H Or 1,000 drachmas, or 1,000 darics

8:31I Or Canal

8:31J Lit The hand of our God was on us

Ezra 9 Notes

9:2A Lit they

9:2B Lit hand of the leaders

9:10C Lit say after

9:13D Lit and gave us a remnant like this

Ezra 10 Notes

10:8A Lit would •set apart all his possessions for destruction

10:16B Lit name, for

10:19C Lit gave their hand

Nehemiah 1 Notes

1:6A Lit sins of the Israelites

1:9B Lit skies

Nehemiah 2 Notes

2:2A Lit Why is your face

2:2B Lit sadness of heart

2:3C Lit my face

2:5D Lit city, the house of the graves of my fathers,

2:8E Lit enter

2:8F Lit for the gracious hand of my God was on me

2:12G Lit animal with me

2:13H Or Dragon's

2:18I Lit they put their hands

Nehemiah 3 Notes

3:5A Lit not bring their neck to the work of

3:6B Or Jeshanah

3:7C Or Mizpah, the seat

3:13D Lit 1,000 cubits

3:25E Or and the upper tower that juts out from the palace

3:31F Or Muster

Nehemiah 4 Notes

4:2A Or the army

4:5B Or provoked [You] in front of

4:10C Lit Judah said

4:12D Lit us 10 times

4:12E Or again from every place, "You must return to

4:23F Lit Each his weapon the water

Nehemiah 5 Notes

5:5A Lit but there is not the power in our hand

5:10B Or us forgive these debts

5:11C Lit hundredth

5:15D Lit 40 shekels

5:18E Lit And that which was prepared each

Nehemiah 6 Notes

6:2A Or together at Kephirim in

6:6B Lit Gashmu

6:9C Lit saying, "Their hands will fail

6:9D Lit my hands

6:10E Or by night

6:16F Lit and fell greatly in their eyes

Nehemiah 7 Notes

7:70A Or drachmas, or darics ; also in vv. 71-72

Nehemiah 8 Notes

8:3A Lit The ears of all the people listened

Nehemiah 9 Notes

9:15A Lit lifted Your hand

9:29B Lit They gave a stubborn shoulder

Nehemiah 10 Notes

10:29A Lit and enter in a curse and in an oath

10:32B Lit give one-third of a shekel

10:33C Lit rows of bread

Nehemiah 11 Notes

11:23A Lit for

11:24B Lit was at the king's hand

11:31C Or descendants from Geba [lived in]

Nehemiah 13 Notes

13:1A Lit read in the ears of

13:4B Or an associate

13:21C Lit again, I will send a hand

13:24D Lit Judahite

Esther 1 Notes

1:6A Or alabaster

1:6B Or of porphyry

1:6C Or alabaster

1:13D Or understood propitious times

1:14E Lit Those near him

Esther 2 Notes

2:2A Lit The young men of the king who served him

2:7B Lit uncle's daughter

2:9C Lit and carried faithful love before him

2:21D Lit and they sought to stretch out a hand against

Esther 3 Notes

3:6A Lit to stretch out a hand against

3:9B Lit will weigh 10,000 silver talents on the hands of

Esther 4 Notes

4:5A Lit what is this and why is this

4:11B Lit king these

Esther 5 Notes

5:2A Lit she obtained favor in his eyes ; Est 2:15,17

5:6B Lit During the banquet of

5:8C Lit If I have found favor in the eyes of the king

5:9D Lit left rejoicing and good of heart

5:14E Lit 50 cubits

Esther 6 Notes

6:12A Lit mourning

Esther 7 Notes

7:1A Lit drink

7:3B Lit If I have found favor in your eyes

7:5C Lit who would fill his heart to do this

7:9D Lit 50 cubits

7:9E Lit who spoke good for

Esther 8 Notes

8:7A Lit stretched out his hand against

8:16B Lit had light

8:17C Lit good day

Esther 9 Notes

9:2A Lit cities to send out a hand against the seekers of their evil

9:3B Lit and those who do the king's work ; Est 3:9

9:10C Lit not put their hands on

9:15D Lit not put their hands on

9:16E Lit and gained relief from

9:16F Lit not put their hands on

9:22G Lit Jews gained relief from

Esther 10 Notes

10:1A Or imposed forced labor on the land and the coasts of the sea

Job 1 Notes

1:5A Lit for the number of

1:6B Or the adversary

1:16C Lit The fire of God

1:21D Lit will return there ; Ps 139:13,15

1:22E Lit or ascribe blame to God

Job 2 Notes

2:10A Lit sin with his lips

Job 3 Notes

3:5A Lit May a darkening of daylight

3:6B Lit or enter the number of months

3:9C Lit the eyelids

3:24D Or My sighing serves as my food

Job 4 Notes

4:6A Lit ways

4:15B Or A spirit

4:15C Or and the hair on my body stood up

4:18D Or error ; Hb obscure

Job 5 Notes

5:5A Hb obscure

5:12B Lit their hands

5:15C Lit from the sword of their mouth ; Ps 55:21; 59:7

5:21D Lit be hidden from the whip of the tongue

Job 6 Notes

6:4A Lit Almighty are in

6:6B Hb obscure

6:10C Lit hidden

6:14D Lit To the despairing his friend loyalty

6:16E Or turbid

Job 7 Notes

7:5A Or and dirty scabs

7:5B Lit skin hardens

7:10C Lit know

7:12D Or the sea god

7:15E Or suffocation

7:15F Lit than my bones

7:16G Or are futile

7:19H Lit swallow my saliva?

Job 8 Notes

8:13A Lit Such are the ways

8:14B Or cut off ; Hb obscure

8:18C Lit swallowed

Job 9 Notes

9:3A Or court, God would not answer him

9:8B Or and walks on the back of the sea god

9:9C Or Aldebaran

9:9D Or chambers

9:12E Or dissuade

9:24F Or land

9:24G Lit covers the faces of

Job 10 Notes

10:3A Lit shine on

10:13B Lit was with You

10:14C Lit notice me

10:16D Lit If he lifts up

10:17E Or You bring fresh troops

10:17F Lit Changes and a host are with me

10:19G Lit As if

10:22H Lit chaotic, and shines as

Job 11 Notes

11:2A Lit a man of lips

11:5B Lit and open His lips

Job 12 Notes

12:3A Lit With whom are not such things as these

12:4B Lit his

12:4C Lit him

12:6D Or secure; to those who bring their god in their hands

12:21E Lit and loosens the belt of

Job 13 Notes

13:6A Lit to the claims of my lips

13:13B Lit quiet before me

13:14C Lit I take my flesh in my teeth

13:23D Lit sins are to me

13:27E Lit paths. You mark a line around the roots

Job 14 Notes

14:5A Lit set his

Job 15 Notes

15:2A Lit windy ; Jb 16:3

15:2B Lit his belly

15:13C Or spirit

15:20D Lit the number of

15:27E Lit with his fat

Job 16 Notes

16:3A Lit windy ; Jb 15:2

16:7B Or it

16:8C Or have seized me ; Hb obscure

16:13D Or arrows

16:14E Lit through me, breach on breach

16:15F Lit horn

Job 17 Notes

17:2A Lit are with

17:3B Lit me with You

17:3C Lit Who is there that will strike himself into my hand

17:6D Lit become a spitting to the faces

Job 18 Notes

18:4A Lit He who tears himself in his anger

18:12B Or disaster hungers for him

18:17C Or name in the streets

Job 19 Notes

19:3A Hb obscure

19:4B Lit mistake lives with

19:10C Lit gone

19:12D Lit they raise up their way

19:15E Or The resident aliens in my household

19:17F Lit and the sons of my belly

19:19G Lit of the men of my council

19:25H Or know that my Redeemer is living

19:25I Or earth

19:25J Or dust at the last, or dust as the Last One

19:26K Lit skin which they destroyed, or skin they destroyed in this way

19:26L Or apart from

19:27M Or not a stranger

19:27N Lit My kidneys grow faint

Job 20 Notes

20:2A Lit because of my feeling within me

20:3B Lit and a spirit from my understanding

20:7C Lit have seen

20:10D Or children must compensate

20:16E Lit tongue

20:20F Lit Because he does not know ease in his stomach

20:22G Lit In the fullness of his excess

20:25H Or gallbladder

Job 21 Notes

21:8A Lit established before them with them

21:17B Lit their disaster

21:23C Lit in bone of his perfection

21:24D Or His sides are ; Hb obscure

21:24E Lit is full of milk

21:24F Lit and the marrow of his bones is watered

21:29G Lit signs

21:33H Lit The clods of the wadi are

Job 22 Notes

22:21A Lit peace; by them

22:28B Lit out for you

22:29C Lit bowed of eyes

Job 23 Notes

23:5A Lit the words

23:10B Lit way with me

23:14C Lit these with Him

23:17D Or silenced

Job 24 Notes

24:8A Lit they embrace

24:11B Lit olives between their rows

24:16C Lit dig

24:16D Lit they seal for themselves

24:18E Lit are insignificant

24:22F Or God prolongs [the life of]

Job 25 Notes

25:2A Lit in His heights

Job 27 Notes

27:5A Lit will not remove my integrity from me

27:11B Lit what is with the Almighty

Job 28 Notes

28:3A Lit probes all

28:4B Lit far from with inhabitant, things forgotten by foot

28:6C Or lapis lazuli

28:16D Or lapis lazuli

28:26E Or decree

Job 29 Notes

29:11A Lit When an ear heard, it called me blessed, and when an eye saw, it testified for me

29:18B Or as the phoenix

29:24C Lit they did not cast down

Job 30 Notes

30:4A Or saltwort

30:12B Hb obscure

30:12C Lit stretch out

30:12D Lit and raise up their destructive paths

30:18E Hb obscure

30:24F Lit a heap of ruins

30:27G Lit My bowels boil

30:28H Or walk in sunless gloom

30:30I Lit blackens away from me

Job 31 Notes

31:1A Or a virgin

31:10B Lit men kneel down over

31:11C Lit crime judges

31:18D Lit and from my mother's womb

31:20E Lit his loins

31:21F Lit I raise my hand

31:27G Lit and my hand kissed my mouth

31:33H Or as Adam

31:39I Lit or caused the breath of its tenants to breathe out

Job 32 Notes

32:8A Or is the Spirit in a person

32:17B Lit answer my part

32:18C Lit and the spirit of my belly

32:19D Lit belly

Job 33 Notes

33:7A Lit you; my pressure

33:8B Lit heard a sound of

33:13C Lit court, for He does not answer all his words

33:17D Lit and cover pride within a man

33:18E Or from perishing by the sword

33:21F Lit away from sight

33:23G Or to vouch for a person's uprightness

33:25H Hb obscure

33:27I Lit and the same was not to me

33:32J Lit If there are words

Job 34 Notes

34:1A Lit answered

34:6B Lit arrow

34:26C Lit In a place of spectators

Job 35 Notes

35:14A Or How then can

35:14B Lit say

Job 36 Notes

36:4A Lit my words are not false

36:5B Lit He is mighty in strength of heart

36:12C Or will perish by the sword

36:16D Lit from a mouth of narrowness

36:18E Or you into mockery

36:18F Or bribe

36:19G Or cry for help

36:21H Or for you have preferred this to

36:27I Lit He draws in waterdrops

36:27J Or His

36:33K Lit His, or Its

36:33L Lit thunder announces concerning Him or it

Job 37 Notes

37:1A Lit from its place

Job 38 Notes

38:4A Lit know

38:9B Lit swaddling clothes

38:10C Lit I broke My statute on it

38:15D Lit Their light

38:21E Lit born; the number of your days is great

38:24F Or where lightning is distributed

38:26G Lit life in it

38:30H Lit water hides itself as the stone

38:32I Or Mazzaroth ; Hb obscure

38:32J Or lead Aldebaran

38:33K Or God's

38:34L Lit lift up your voice to

38:36M Or the inner self ; Ps 51:6

Job 39 Notes

39:2A Lit months they fulfill

39:3B Or they send away their labor pains

39:4C Lit return to them

39:13D Hb obscure

39:18E Hb obscure

39:19F Hb obscure

39:21G Lit He goes out to meet the weapon

39:23H Or scimitar

39:24I Lit He swallows the ground

39:25J Lit he says, "Aha!"

Job 40 Notes

40:2A Lit God respond to it

40:12B Lit wicked in their place

40:13C Lit together; bind their faces in the hidden place

40:21D Lit plants, in the hiding place

40:24E Lit capture it in its eyes

Job 41 Notes

41:2A Lit reed

41:5B Lit or bind him

41:8C Lit your

41:14D Lit open the doors of his face

41:16E Lit One by one they approach

41:17F Lit another; they cling together and

41:18G Or sneezing

41:18H Lit eyelids

41:23I Lit together, hard on him

41:25J Or the divine beings

41:32K Lit a path

41:34L Lit the children of pride

Job 42 Notes

42:3A Lit me, and I did not

42:7B Lit speaking these words

Psalm 1 Notes

1:1A Lit not walk in

1:1B Lit stand in

1:1C Or or sit in the seat

1:3D Or beside irrigation canals

1:3E Lit in its season

1:5F Lit stand in

Psalm 2 Notes

2:1A Or conspire, or rage

2:2B Or anointed one

2:3C Lit and throw their ropes from us

2:4D Lit who sits

2:6E Or king

2:7F Or me, "You are My son

2:7G Or your

2:8H Or your

2:8I Or your

2:9J Or you

2:9K Lit a potter's vessel

2:12L Lit Kiss

2:12M Or son, otherwise he

2:12N Lit perish way

2:12O Or his

2:12P Or him

Psalm 4 Notes

4:1A Or God of my righteousness

4:4B Or Tremble

4:5C Or Offer right sacrifices ; lit Sacrifice sacrifices of righteousness

Psalm 5 Notes

5:8A Or of those who lie in wait for me

5:9B Lit in his mouth

Psalm 6 Notes

6:2A Or sick

6:6B Lit bed

Psalm 7 Notes

7:2A Lit he

7:2B Lit ripping, and without a rescuer

7:4C Or me and have spared

7:6D Or me; ordain

7:8E Lit integrity on me

7:9F Lit examines hearts and kidneys

7:10G Lit on

7:12H Lit He

7:12I Lit bent ; that is, bent the bow to string it

Psalm 8 Notes

8:1A Lit earth, which has set Your splendor upon the heavens

8:5B Or gods, or a god, or heavenly beings ; lit Elohim

8:6C Or authority

Psalm 9 Notes

9:4A Lit my justice and my cause

9:16B Or justice, snaring

Psalm 10 Notes

10:3A Or he blesses the greedy

10:4B Lit wicked according to the height of his nose

10:5C Or prosperous

10:15D Lit account You do not find

Psalm 11 Notes

11:1A Lit to your mountain, bird

11:2B Lit their

11:4C Lit His eyelids examine

11:6D Lit be the portion of their cup

Psalm 12 Notes

12:4A Lit That say, "By our tongues we are strengthened

12:8B Lit walk about

Psalm 13 Notes

13:2A Or up counsels

Psalm 14 Notes

14:5A Or There

14:5B Lit with the generation of the 14:7C Or restores His captive people

14:7D Or let Jacob rejoice; let Israel be glad.

Psalm 15 Notes

15:4A Lit in his eyes the rejected is despised

Psalm 16 Notes

16:2A Or "Lord, my good; there is none besides You."

16:5B Or allotted portion

16:8C Lit front of me

Psalm 17 Notes

17:3A Or [evil]; my mouth will not sin

17:7B Or love, You who save with Your right hand those seeking refuge from adversaries

17:9C Lit from the presence of

17:9D Or who plunder me

17:10E Lit have closed up their fat

17:11F Lit They set their eyes

17:12G Lit He is

17:15H Lit form

Psalm 18 Notes

18:8A Or ablaze from Him

18:14B Or multiplied

18:22C Lit Indeed, all His ordinances have been in front of me

18:29D Or ridge

18:33E Or on my high places

18:40F Or You gave me the necks of my enemies

18:44G Lit At the hearing of the ear

Psalm 19 Notes

19:1A Or expanse

19:2B Or Day to day pours out speech, and night to night communicates knowledge

19:4C Lit In them

19:5D Lit his

19:6E Lit its circuit is

Psalm 20 Notes

20:9A Or LORD, save. May the king

Psalm 21 Notes

21:11A Lit they stretch out evil against

21:12B Lit aim with your bowstrings

Psalm 22 Notes

22:1A Or My words of groaning are so far from delivering me

22:7B Lit separate with the lip

22:8C Or Rely on

22:8D Lit let Him

22:10E Lit was cast on You from the womb

22:17F Lit they

22:20G Lit my only one

22:21H Lit answered

22:25I Lit my praise

22:25J Lit Him

22:26K Or poor, or afflicted

Psalm 23 Notes

23:3A Or me in paths of righteousness

23:4B Or the valley of the shadow of death

23:6C Lit Lord for length of days ; traditionally Lord forever

Psalm 24 Notes

24:4A Or not lifted up his soul

Psalm 25 Notes

25:1A Or To You, Lord, I lift up my soul

25:6B Or everlasting

25:13C Or earth

25:17D Or Relieve the distresses of my heart

Psalm 27 Notes

27:14A Lit Lord; let your heart be strong

Psalm 29 Notes

29:1A Or you angels, or you sons of the mighty ; lit LORD sons of [the] gods

29:2B Or in holy attire, or in holy appearance

29:9C Or the oaks shake

Psalm 31 Notes

31:5A Or You have redeemed, or You will redeem, or spirit. Redeem

31:9B Lit my soul and my belly

31:17C Or them perish, or them wail

31:20D Lit canopy

31:21E Or a fortified city

31:24F Lit Let your heart be strong

Psalm 32 Notes

32:4A Hb obscure

32:6B Lit time of finding

Psalm 34 Notes

34:16A Or cut off

34:17B Lit They

Psalm 35 Notes

35:13A Lit prayer returned to my chest

35:16B Hb obscure

35:20C Lit but devise deceitful words

35:21D Lit Our eyes saw!

Psalm 37 Notes

37:3A Or and cultivate faithfulness

37:9B Or earth

37:11C Or earth

37:14D Lit their

37:17E Or power

37:22F Or earth

37:24G Or LORD supports with His hand

37:29H Or earth

37:35I Hb obscure

37:37J Or posterity

37:38K Or posterity

Psalm 38 Notes

38:3A Hb shalom

38:9B Lit is in front of

38:10C Or and the light of my eyes — even that is not with me

38:19D Or numerous

Psalm 40 Notes

40:2A Or watery

40:6B Lit You hollow out ears for me

40:8C Lit instruction within my inner being

40:9D Lit not restrain my lips

Psalm 41 Notes

41:9A Lit Even a man of my peace

Psalm 44 Notes

44:14A Lit shaking of the head

Psalm 45 Notes

45:6A Or Your divine throne is, or Your throne is God's

45:6B Or your

Psalm 46 Notes

46:9A Lit chariots with fire

Psalm 47 Notes

47:9A Lit shields

Psalm 48 Notes

48:11A Lit daughters

Psalm 49 Notes

49:2A Lit both sons of Adam and sons of man

49:7B Or Certainly he cannot redeem himself, or Yet he cannot redeem a brother

49:8C Or costly, it will cease forever

49:12D Or honor

49:13E Lit and after them with their mouth they were pleased

49:14F Hb obscure

49:16G Or glory

49:17H Or glory

49:20I Or with honor

Psalm 50 Notes

50:1A Or The Mighty One, God, the L*ORD*, or The God of gods, the L*ORD*

50:1B Lit from the rising of the sun to its setting

50:2C Or God shines forth

50:17D Or and cast My words behind you

50:21E Lit out before your eyes

Psalm 51 Notes

51:9A Lit Hide Your face

51:10B Or right

51:12C Or and sustain me with a noble spirit

51:17D Lit The sacrifices of God are

51:18E Or rebuild

Psalm 52 Notes

52:7A Or riches, and grew strong in his evil desire ; lit his destruction

Psalm 53 Notes

53:6A Or restores His captive people

Psalm 54 Notes

54:3A Lit They do not set God before them

54:4B Or is with those who sustain my life

Psalm 55 Notes

55:1A Lit hide Yourself from

55:3B Or threat, or oppression

55:6C Lit "Who will give to me . . . dove?

55:9D Or destroy

55:9E Lit and divide their tongue

Psalm 56 Notes

56:2A Or many fight against me, O exalted One, or many fight against me from the heights

56:6B Or They attack

56:8C Or misery

56:12D Lit On me the vows

Psalm 57 Notes

57:2A Or who avenges me

57:8B Lit glory

Psalm 58 Notes

58:1A Or Can you really speak righteousness in silence?

58:7B Or their arrows as if they were circumcised ; Hb obscure

58:7C Or they wither like trampled grass

58:9D Or thorns, He will sweep it away, whether raw or cooking, or thorns, He will sweep him away alive in fury

Psalm 59 Notes

59:7A Lit swords are on

59:13B Lit know to the ends of

Psalm 60 Notes

60:1A Lit have burst through

60:1B Or Turn back to us

60:4C Or can rally before the archers, or can rally because of the truth

60:6D Or has promised by His holy nature

Psalm 62 Notes

62:10A Lit increases, do not set heart

Psalm 63 Notes

63:5A Lit with fat and fatness

63:11B Or him

Psalm 64 Notes

64:5A Or thing; lit word

64:5B Or They hold fast to an evil purpose, or They establish for themselves an evil purpose

64:5C Or us, or it

Psalm 65 Notes

65:1A Or Praise is silence to You, or Praise awaits You

65:3B Or can forgive, or can wipe out

65:4C Or house, Your holy temple

65:9D Lit prepare it

65:11E Lit ways drip with fat

Psalm 66 Notes

66:9A Lit He sets our soul in life

66:12B Or a place of satisfaction

Psalm 68 Notes

68:4A Or rides through the desert

68:4B Lit Yah

68:6C Or prisoners with joyous music ; Hb uncertain

68:8D Lit God, this Sinai

68:13E Or If

68:13F Or campfires, or saddlebags ; Hb obscure

68:14G Or Black Mountain

68:17H Or in holiness

68:18I Lit among

68:18J Or even those rebelling against the LORD God's living there, or even rebels are living with the LORD God ; Hb obscure

68:24K Or in holiness

68:27L Hb obscure

68:30M Or peoples, trampling on those who take pleasure in silver, or peoples, trampling on the bars of silver, or peoples, who trample each other for bars of silver

68:31N Or They bring red cloth, or They bring bronze

Psalm 69 Notes

69:35A Or and rebuild

Psalm 71 Notes

71:18A Lit me until I

Psalm 72 Notes

72:3A Or peace

72:7B Or peace

72:14C Lit their blood is

72:14D Or valuable

Psalm 73 Notes

73:4A Lit For there are no pangs to their death

73:4B Lit fat

73:10C Lit turn here

73:10D Lit and waters of fullness are drained by them

73:15E Lit betrayed the generation of Your sons

73:16F Lit it was trouble in my eyes

73:21G Lit my kidneys

73:24H Or will receive me with honor

73:26I Lit rock

Psalm 74 Notes

74:3A Lit Lift up Your steps

74:4B Lit in Your meeting place

74:7C Lit they to the ground

74:8D Lit every meeting place of God in the land

74:11E Lit From Your bosom

Psalm 76 Notes

76:7A Or are awe-inspiring

76:10B Hb obscure

76:11C Or tribute with awe

Psalm 77 Notes

77:10A Lit "My piercing

Psalm 78 Notes

78:18A Lit in their heart

78:25B Lit Man

78:25C Lit mighty ones

78:28D Or in its camp, all around its tents

78:38E Or He wiped out, or He forgave

78:38F Or stir up

78:49G Or angels

78:60H Hb adam

78:63I Lit virgins were not praised

78:64J Lit His

Psalm 79 Notes

79:8A Or hold the sins of past generations

79:9B Or and wipe out, or and forgive

Psalm 80 Notes

80:5A Lit a one-third measure

80:10B Lit the cedars of God

80:15C Hb obscure

80:15D Or son

80:16E Lit burned with fire

80:16F Or may they

Psalm 81 Notes

81:3A Lit feast

81:16B Lit him

Psalm 82 Notes

82:1A Or the heavenly beings, or the earthly rulers ; lit elohim

Psalm 83 Notes

83:2A Lit have lifted their head

83:5B Lit they cut a covenant

83:8C Lit they are an arm

Psalm 84 Notes

84:2A Or flesh shout for joy to

84:6B Or Valley of Tears

84:6C Or pools

Psalm 85 Notes

85:1A Or restored Jacob from captivity

Psalm 87 Notes

87:7A Lit "All my springs, are

Psalm 88 Notes

88:5A Or set free

88:5B Or hand

88:18C Or from me, my friends. Oh darkness!

Psalm 89 Notes

89:6A Or the angels, or the sons of the mighty

89:7B Or ones, revered by

89:19C Or exalted a young man

89:22D Or not exact tribute from

89:29E Lit as days of heaven

89:39F Lit have dishonored his crown to the ground

89:44G Hb obscure

Psalm 90 Notes

90:5A Or You overwhelm them ; Hb obscure

90:10B Lit The days of our years in them

90:12C Or develop a heart of wisdom

Psalm 93 Notes

93:2A Lit from then

93:5B Or holiness characterizes

Psalm 94 Notes

94:15A Or heart will support ; lit heart after

Psalm 95 Notes

95:7A Lit sheep of His hand

Psalm 97 Notes

97:8A Lit daughters

97:11B Lit Light is sown

97:12C Or memory, of His holiness ; lit praise the mention

Psalm 101

101:4A Lit not know

101:7B Lit in front of my eyes

Psalm 102

102:6A Or a pelican of the desert

102:20B Lit free sons of death

102:24C Lit my days

Psalm 103

103:5A Lit satisfies your ornament ; Hb obscure

103:16B Lit place no longer knows it

Psalm 104 Notes

104:4A Or angels

104:7-8B Or away. They flowed over the mountains and went down valleys

104:16C Lit are satisfied

104:19D Lit moon for

104:19E Or the appointed times

104:24F Lit possessions

104:30G Or Spirit

Psalm 105 Notes

105:5A Lit judgments of His mouth

105:9B Lit and His oath

105:24C Lit He

105:38D Lit them

Psalm 106 Notes

106:28A Lit sacrifices for dead ones

106:32B Lit and it was evil for Moses

Psalm 107 Notes

107:4A Lit They

107:5B Lit their soul fainted

107:10C Lit They

107:10D Or the shadow of death

107:12E Lit hearts

107:14F Or the shadow of death

107:23G Lit They

107:25H Lit of it

107:26I Lit souls

107:29J Lit of them

107:30K Lit when they

107:43L Lit and let them consider

Psalm 108 Notes

108:1A Lit praises, even my glory

108:7B Or has promised by His holy nature

Psalm 109 Notes

109:4A Lit but I, prayer

109:6B Or adversary

109:15C Lit Let them

109:15D Or cut off

109:24E Lit denied from fat

109:25F Lit to them

Psalm 110 Notes

110:2A Lit Rule in the midst of Your

110:3B Lit power

110:3C Hb obscure

Psalm 111 Notes

111:10A Lit follow them

Psalm 115 Notes

115:8A Or May those who make them become

115:16B Lit LORD's heavens

Psalm 118 Notes

118:5A Or answered me with freedom

Psalm 119 Notes

119:9A Or keeping it according to Your

119:28B Or I weep

119:32C Lit You enlarge my heart

119:33D Lit way

119:33E Or will keep it as my reward

119:54F Lit song in the house of my sojourning

119:57G Lit You are my portion, LORD

119:109H Lit in my hand

119:112I Or statutes; the reward is eternal

119:120J Lit My flesh shudders

119:128K Lit I therefore follow carefully

Psalm 120 Notes

120:4A Lit with coals of the broom bush

Psalm 121 Notes

121:5A Lit is your shelter at your right hand

Psalm 126 Notes

126:1A Or Lord returned those of Zion who had been captives

126:4B Or Return our captives

Psalm 127 Notes

127:2A Or yes, He gives such things to His loved ones while [they] sleep

Psalm 129 Notes

129:6A Or it can be pulled out

Psalm 132 Notes

132:3A Lit enter the tent of my house

132:3B Lit into the couch of my bed

132:11C Lit set the fruit of your womb

132:18D Lit but on him his crown

Psalm 138 Notes

138:1A Or before the gods, or before judges, or before kings ; Hb elohim

138:3B Hb obscure

138:4C Lit hear the words of Your mouth

Psalm 139 Notes

139:9A Lit I take up the wings of the dawn; I dwell at the end of the sea

139:13B Lit my kidneys

139:14C Hb obscure

139:17D Or precious

139:24E Or idolatrous

Psalm 140 Notes

140:4A Lit to trip up my steps

140:9B Lit Head of those who surround me

140:11C Hb obscure

Psalm 141 Notes

141:5A Lit my head

141:5B Lit of them

141:6C Or judges

141:6D Lit cliff, and they

141:8E Or not pour out my life

141:9F Lit from the hands of

Psalm 144 Notes

144:6A Lit scatter them

144:7B Lit down Your hands

144:14C Or will bear heavy loads, or will be pregnant

144:14D Or be no plague, no miscarriage

Psalm 145 Notes

145:10A Lit Your

145:14B Lit bowed down

Psalm 146 Notes

146:4A Or spirit

146:8B Lit bowed down

Psalm 147 Notes

147:5A Lit understanding has no number

147:10B Lit legs

147:14C Or peace

147:18D Or breath

Psalm 148 Notes

148:8A Or fire

Psalm 149 Notes

149:6A Lit throat

Proverbs 1 Notes

1:4A Or simple, or gullible

1:6B Or an enigma

1:11C Lit Let's ambush for blood

1:11D Lit person for no reason

1:14E Lit us; one bag will be for all of us

1:16F Lit to shed blood

1:18G Lit they ambush for their blood

1:19H Lit takes the life of its masters

1:21I Lit at the head of

1:23J Lit back to my reprimand

Proverbs 2 Notes

2:2A Lit you, stretching out your ear

2:7B Or resourcefulness

2:16C Or foreign woman

Proverbs 3 Notes

3:2A Lit days, years of life

3:6B Lit will make your paths straight

3:8C Lit navel

3:16D Lit Length of days

3:22E Or be your throat

3:22F Or grace

3:26G Or be at your side

3:27H Lit in the power of your hands

3:32I Or confidential counsel

3:35J Or but haughty fools dishonor, or but fools exalt dishonor

Proverbs 4 Notes

4:23A Or heart with all diligence

4:25B Lit eyelids

4:26C Or Clear a path

Proverbs 5 Notes

5:1A Lit wisdom; stretch out your ear

5:3B Lit her palate is

5:13C Lit or turn my ear

Proverbs 6 Notes

6:1A Or friend

6:1B Lit or shaken hands for or with

6:2C Lit mouth

6:5D Lit hand

6:5E Lit hand

6:24F Lit smooth

6:26G Or On account of a prostitute, [one is left with] only a loaf of bread

6:26H Lit but a wife of a man

6:27I Lit man take fire to his bosom

6:32J Lit commits adultery with a woman

6:33K Or plague

Proverbs 7 Notes

7:7A Or simple, or gullible, or naive

7:10B Or prostitute with a guarded heart

7:13C Lit she makes her face strong and says

7:21D Lit smooth

7:23E Or his

7:26F Or and powerful men are all her victims

Proverbs 8 Notes

8:3A Lit the mouth of

8:14B Or resourcefulness

8:22C Or possessed, or begot

8:22D Lit way

8:30E Or a confidant, or a child, or was constantly

8:36F Or who sins against me

Proverbs 9 Notes

9:7A Lit man his blemish

Proverbs 10 Notes

10:22A Or and He adds no trouble to it

10:27B Lit LORD adds to days

Proverbs 11 Notes

11:7A Or strength

11:16B Or ruthless

11:21C Lit Hand to hand

Proverbs 12 Notes

12:4A Or A wife of quality, or A wife of good character

12:12B Or desire a stronghold of evil

12:26C Or man guides his neighbor

12:28D Or righteousness, and in its path there is no death

Proverbs 13 Notes

13:6A Lit guards integrity of way

13:11B Lit whoever gathers upon [his] hand

13:22C Or inheritance: his

Proverbs 14 Notes

14:4A Or clean

14:9B Or at guilt offerings

14:11C Lit flourish

14:15D Lit the prudent understand

14:16E Or and falls

14:23F Lit but word of lips

Proverbs 15 Notes

15:4A Lit but crookedness in it

15:23B Lit in an answer of his mouth

15:30C Lit makes fat

15:31D Lit An ear that

15:32E Lit acquires a heart

Proverbs 16 Notes

16:2A Lit weighs spirits

16:5B Lit hand to hand

16:7C Or he

16:10D Or A divination is on the lips of a king

16:21E Lit and sweetness of lips

16:23F Lit learning upon his lips

16:24G Lit throat

16:24H Lit bones

16:26I Lit mouth

16:32J Lit and ruling over one's spirit

Proverbs 17 Notes

17:4A Lit to lips of iniquity

17:11B Or a merciless angel

17:18C Lit sense shakes hands

17:26D Or noble unfairly

17:27E Lit spirit

Proverbs 18 Notes

18:2A Lit to uncover his heart

18:4B Or waters; a fountain of wisdom is a flowing river.

18:8C Lit to the chambers of the belly

18:9D Lit master of destruction

18:10E Lit raised high

18:16F Lit gift makes room

Proverbs 19 Notes

19:2A Lit who is hasty with feet

19:7B Hb uncertain

19:8C Lit acquires a heart

19:16D Or despises, or treats lightly

19:17E Lit to him

19:18F Lit don't lift up your soul to his death

19:20G Lit in your end

19:23H Lit will spend the night satisfied

Proverbs 20 Notes

20:4A Lit plow in winter

20:4B Lit inquires

20:7C Lit sons

20:10D Lit Stone and stone, measure and measure

20:23E Lit A stone and a stone

20:27F Lit breath

20:27G Lit the chambers of the belly

20:30H Lit beatings the chambers of the belly

Proverbs 21 Notes

21:2A Lit LORD weighs the hearts

21:6B Or a breath blown away

21:6C Lit is vanity, ones seeking death

21:10D Or favor

21:14E Lit a bribe in the bosom

21:18F Or in place of

21:20G Lit it

21:26H Lit He craves a craving

Proverbs 22 Notes

22:2A Lit poor meet

22:2B Lit all

22:9C Lit Good of eye

22:17D Lit Stretch out your ear

22:18E Or you; let them be, or you, so that

22:21F Lit give dependable words

22:24G Lit with a master of anger

22:26H Lit who shakes hands

Proverbs 23 Notes

23:1A Or who

23:2B Lit you are the master of an

23:6C Lit eat bread of an evil eye

23:9D Lit in the ears of

23:22E Or because

23:33F Or will speak perversities or inverted things

Proverbs 24 Notes

24:7A Lit is too high for 24:21B Or those given to change

Proverbs 25 Notes

25:4A Lit will come out ; Ex 32:24

25:7B Lit you before a noble whom your eyes see

25:8C Or neighbor

25:9D Or neighbor

25:10E Lit and your evil report will not turn back

25:11F Or like apples of gold in settings of silver

25:20G Lit natron, or sodium carbonate

25:25H Or a weary person

25:27I Lit seek their glory, glory

Proverbs 26 Notes

26:9A Lit thorn that goes up into

26:22B Lit to the chambers of the belly

Proverbs 27 Notes

27:13A Lit a foreign woman

27:17B Lit and a man sharpens his friend's face

27:21C Or gold, but a man [is tested] by his praise

Proverbs 28 Notes

28:6A Lit who twists two ways

28:12B Lit glory

28:17C Lit the blood of a person

28:18D Lit who is twisted regarding two ways

28:22E Lit A man with an evil eye

28:23F Lit is smooth

28:26G Lit his heart

28:27H Lit who shuts his eyes

Proverbs 29 Notes

29:5A Lit is smooth on

29:7B Lit justice

29:9C Lit rest

29:10D Or person, and seek the life of the upright

29:11E Lit spirit

29:13F Lit oppressor meet

29:15G Lit youth sent away

29:18H Lit vision

29:21I Hb obscure

29:22J Lit a master of rage

29:25K Lit raised high

Proverbs 30 Notes

30:1A Or son of Jakeh from Massa ; Pr 31:1

30:2B Lit I am more stupid than a man

30:5C Lit refined

30:9D Lit grabbing

30:13E Lit and its eyelids lifted up

30:28F Or spider

30:31G Or a greyhound

Proverbs 31 Notes

31:1A Or of Lemuel, king of Massa, or of King Lemuel, a burden

31:5B Lit he

31:5C Lit sons of affliction

31:8D Lit Open your mouth

31:8E Lit who are mute

31:8F Lit all the sons of passing away

31:9G Lit Open your mouth

31:9H Lit and justice for

31:10I Or a wife of quality, or a wife of noble character

31:15J Or tasks

31:16K Or vineyard by her own labors

31:17L Lit She wraps strength around her like a belt

31:20M Lit Her hand reaches

31:24N Or sashes

31:26O Or and the teaching of kindness

31:27P Lit and does not eat the bread of idleness

31:29Q Lit daughters

31:31R Lit the fruit of her hands

Ecclesiastes 1 Notes

1:1A Or of Qoheleth, or of the Leader of the Assembly

1:8B Or words

1:11C Or of the things that

1:11D Or of the things that

1:12E Or Teacher, was

1:14F Or a feeding on wind, or an affliction of spirit

1:16G Lit said with my heart

1:16H Or discerned

1:17I Or a feeding on wind, or an affliction of spirit

Ecclesiastes 2 Notes

2:3A Lit to pull my body

2:8B Or many treasures that people delight in

2:11C Lit all my works that my hands had done

2:20D Lit And I turned to cause my heart

2:24E Lit and his soul sees good

Ecclesiastes 3 Notes

3:2A Lit uproot what is planted

3:11B Or beautiful

3:11C Or has put a sense of past and future into their minds, or has placed ignorance in their hearts

3:12D Lit his

3:15E Or God calls the past to account, or God seeks what is past, or God seeks the persecuted ; lit God seeks [the] pursued

3:22F Lit after him

Ecclesiastes 4 Notes

4:8A Lit person, but there is not a second,

4:15B Lit with

Ecclesiastes 5 Notes

5:9A Or An advantage for the land in every respect is a king for a cultivated field ; Hb obscure

Ecclesiastes 6 Notes

6:1A Or it is common among men

6:3B Lit how many years

6:7C Lit mouth

6:10D Lit name already

Ecclesiastes 7 Notes

7:15A Lit days

7:21B Lit Don't give your heart

Ecclesiastes 8 Notes

8:8A Or life-breath

Ecclesiastes 9 Notes

9:9A Or futile

Ecclesiastes 10 Notes

10:2A Lit his

10:2B Lit his

10:11C Lit master of the tongue

Ecclesiastes 11 Notes

11:5A Or know how the life-breath comes to the bones in

Ecclesiastes 12 Notes

12:2A Or with

12:5B Or grasshopper is weighed down, or grasshopper drags itself along

12:11C Or by a shepherd

Song of Songs 1 Notes

1:1A Or The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's

1:2B Unexpected change of grammatical persons, here from he and his to your, is a Hb poetic device.

1:2C Or your caresses are, or your lovemaking is

1:3D Or wonder virgins

1:4E Or The king has brought

1:6F Lit my vineyard, which is mine

1:7G Or who wanders

1:8H Lit go out for yourself into

1:9I Lit my

1:12J Or is at his table

1:12K Lit nard

1:17L Or firs, or pines

Song of Songs 2 Notes

2:1A Or meadow saffron

2:1B Or lotus

2:3C Or apple

2:4D Lit the house of wine

2:4E Or and his banner over me is love

2:5F Or apples

2:6G Or Let his left hand be under . . . and his right arm embrace me

2:7H Lit until it pleases

2:12I Or pruning

2:14J Or form

2:17K Lit breathes

2:17L Or the Bether mountains, or the mountains of spices ; Hb obscure

Song of Songs 3 Notes

3:1A Or bed night after night

3:5B Lit until it pleases

3:10C Or base, or canopy

3:10D Or leather

Song of Songs 4 Notes

4:2A Lit and no one bereaved among them

4:3B Or speech

4:3C Or temple, or cheek, or lips

4:6D Lit breathes

4:13E Or park, or orchard

Song of Songs 5 Notes

5:1A Lit pluck

5:1B Or Drink your fill, lovers

5:6C Lit My soul went out

5:6D Or spoken

5:7E Or veil, or shawl

5:10F Or is radiant and ruddy

5:11G Or is [like] palm leaves ; Hb obscure

5:12H Lit milk sitting in fullness

5:14I Lit hands

5:14J Lit filled ; Sg 5:2,12

5:14K Lit abdomen

Song of Songs 6 Notes

6:1A Lit your love

6:6B Lit and no one bereaved among them

6:7C Or temple, or cheek, or lips

6:8D Or and virgins ; Sg 1:3

6:12E Or of Amminadib, or of my people of a prince ; Hb obscure

6:13F Or the peaceable one

6:13G Or dance of Mahanaim

Song of Songs 7 Notes

7:1A Lit daughter of a nobleman or prince

7:2B Or belly

7:5C Lit head upon you is

7:9D Lit palate

7:11E Or the villages

Song of Songs 8 Notes

8:1A Lit Would that you were like a brother to me

8:6B Or the blaze of the LORD

8:7C Lit all the wealth of his house

8:10D Or was

8:12E Lit My vineyard, which is mine, is before me ; Sg 1:6

Isaiah 1 Notes

1:1A Lit saw in the days

1:2B Or sons

1:4C Or sons

1:17D Or Aid the oppressed

1:21E Or prostitute

1:22F Or burnished lead

1:22G Or wine

1:25H Or burnished lead

1:25I Lit dross as with lye

1:26J Lit judges as at the first

1:26K Lit advisers as at the beginning

Isaiah 2 Notes

2:6A Or They teem, or They partner ; Hb obscure

2:7B Lit Its

2:11C Lit Mankind's proud eyes

Isaiah 3 Notes

3:3A Or skilled craftsman

3:3B Or medium

3:4C Or mischief-makers

Isaiah 4 Notes

4:2A Or plant

4:5B Or For glory will be a canopy over all

Isaiah 5 Notes

5:7A Lit man

5:10B Lit ten-yoke

5:10C Lit one bath

5:10D Lit one homer

5:10E Lit [one] ephah

5:13F Lit its

5:13G Lit its

5:21H Lit clever before their face

5:30I Lit its clouds

Isaiah 6 Notes

6:1A Lit seam

6:5B Or I must be silent

6:10C Lit heart

Isaiah 7 Notes

7:2A Lit Aram has rested upon Ephraim, his heart

7:8B Lit For the

7:14C Or virgin is pregnant, will

7:15D Or sour milk

Isaiah 8 Notes

8:1A Hb obscure

8:1B Lit with the pen of a man

8:6C Or and rejoiced over

8:8D Or wings

8:10E Or For Immanuel

8:19F Or gods

Isaiah 9 Notes

9:16A Or are confused

Isaiah 10 Notes

10:13A Or I brought down their kings

10:27B Hb obscure

Isaiah 11 Notes

11:4A Lit the rod

11:4B Lit with the breath

11:15C Or dry up

11:15D Lit the Sea of Egypt

Isaiah 13 Notes

13:5A Or earth

13:10B Or Orions

13:17C Lit who have no regard for

Isaiah 14 Notes

14:9A Lit rams

14:12B Or Day Star, son of the dawn

14:13C Or of Zaphon

14:23D Or hedgehogs

14:29E Or stock

Isaiah 15 Notes

15:2A Or wails over Nebo and over

15:4B Lit out, he trembles within himself

Isaiah 16 Notes

16:4A Or you; Moab — be a refuge for him

16:9B Or Battle cries have fallen

16:10C Lit wine

Isaiah 17 Notes

17:4A Lit and the fat of his flesh

Isaiah 18 Notes

18:1A Or of sailing ships

18:2B Hb obscure

Isaiah 19 Notes

19:6A Or wilt, or become black

19:10B Or foundations

19:11C Lit a son

19:11D Lit a son of ancient

Isaiah 20 Notes

20:2A Lit off the sackcloth from your loins

Isaiah 21 Notes

21:3A Lit Therefore my loins are

21:4B Lit my twilight

Isaiah 22 Notes

22:4A Lit of the daughter of my

22:5B Or Vision — a tearing down of a wall, or Vision — Kir raged ; Hb obscure

22:6C Lit chariots of man

22:14D Lit will not until you die

22:17-18E Hb obscure

Isaiah 23 Notes

23:1A Hb Kittim

23:10B Or longer any harbor

Isaiah 24 Notes

24:11A Lit streets she cries

24:16B Hb obscure

Isaiah 25 Notes

25:5A Lit In

25:6B Lit wine, fat full of marrow

25:10C Or trampled under Him

Isaiah 26 Notes

26:16A Hb obscure

26:19B Lit live; my body they

26:19C Lit For your dew is a dew of lights

Isaiah 27 Notes

27:8A Hb obscure

Isaiah 28 Notes

28:9A Or He

28:9B Or He

28:9C Lit Those

28:9D Lit Those

28:10E Hb obscure

28:13F Hb obscure

28:16G Lit will not hurry

28:19H Or The understanding of the message will cause sheer terror

Isaiah 29 Notes

29:1A Or Altar Hearth, or Lion of God ; Hb obscure

29:2B Or Altar Hearth, or Lion of God ; Hb obscure

29:5C Lit foreigners

29:10D Lit you a spirit of

29:11E Lit If one gives it to one who knows the document, saying, "Read this, please"

29:12F Lit who does not know the document, saying, "Read this, please"

29:13G Lit their mouth and honor Me with its lips

Isaiah 30 Notes

30:4A Or Judah's

30:6B Or Southland

30:20C Or teachers

30:20D Or themselves

30:20E Or teachers

30:27F Lit the name Yahweh

30:27G Hb obscure

Isaiah 32 Notes

32:19A Hb obscure

Isaiah 33 Notes

33:15A Lit to bloods

33:15B Lit eyes from seeing evil

33:18C Lit counter

33:18D Lit weigher

33:18E Lit who counts towers

Isaiah 34 Notes

34:3A Or melt, or dissolve

34:7B Or will go

34:7C Or will drink its fill of

34:11D Or The pelican

34:11E Or the hedgehog

34:15F Or The arrow snake, or The owl

Isaiah 35 Notes

35:1A Or meadow saffron

Isaiah 36 Notes

36:4A Lit What is this trust that you trust

36:11B Lit Judahite

36:13C Lit Judahite

36:16D Lit a blessing

Isaiah 37 Notes

37:22A Lit behind you

37:24B Lit by the hand of

Isaiah 38 Notes

38:1A Lit Command your house

38:1B Lit live

38:3C Lit what is good in Your eyes

38:5D Lit days

38:7E Lit this thing

38:7F Lit said

38:8G Lit And the sun

38:10H Lit quiet

38:10I Lit days

38:12J Lit thrum

38:20K Lit to

Isaiah 40 Notes

40:2A Lit Speak to the heart of

40:5B Lit flesh

40:7C Or wind, or Spirit

40:7D Lit it

40:13E Or measured, or comprehended

40:20F Or who is too poor for such an offering, or who chooses mulberry wood as a votive gift ; Hb obscure

40:26G Lit Lift up your eyes on high

Isaiah 41 Notes

41:2A Hb obscure

41:9B Or seized

41:27C Lit First to Zion

Isaiah 42 Notes

42:5A Lit spirit

42:6B Or you by [My] righteousness ; lit you in righteousness

42:10C Lit their

42:19D Hb obscure

42:24E Lit to loot

42:25F Lit he did not put on heart

Isaiah 43 Notes

43:12A Lit not a foreigner

43:12B Or that

43:14C Or will break down all their bars

43:14D Hb obscure

Isaiah 44 Notes

44:2A Lit from the womb, and He

44:7B Lit declare them —

44:14C Lit To cut down for himself

44:18D Lit They

44:18E Or for their eyes are shut

44:20F Or He shepherds

Isaiah 45 Notes

45:1A Lit unloosen the loins

45:5B Lit gird

45:9C Lit a clay pot with clay pots of the ground

45:9D Or making? Your work has no hands.

45:11E Or Me the coming things about

45:14F Lit pray

45:21G Lit and approach

Isaiah 46 Notes

46:8A Hb obscure

Isaiah 47 Notes

47:3A Hb obscure

47:11B Or to atone for it

47:13C Lit dividers of the heavens

47:14D Lit hand

Isaiah 48 Notes

48:1A Lit have come from the waters of

48:4B Lit is an iron sinew

48:10C Or chosen

48:14D Lit among them

Isaiah 49 Notes

49:1A Or Islands

49:7B Or by the nation

49:7C Lit princes and they

49:12D Lit sea

49:18E Lit all of them

49:21F Lit where are they

49:23G Lit princesses

Isaiah 50 Notes

50:8A Lit us stand

50:8B Lit Who is lord of My judgment

Isaiah 51 Notes

51:5A Or islands

51:5B Lit arm

51:6C Or die in like manner

51:14D Hb obscure

Isaiah 52 Notes

52:4A Or them at last, or them for nothing

52:13B Or will be successful

52:15C Or startle

Isaiah 53 Notes

53:1A Or believed our report

53:3B Lit And like a hiding of faces from Him

53:6C Or has placed on Him ; lit with 53:8D Or and as for His generation, who considered [Him]?

53:10E Or Him; He made Him sick.

53:10F Or If

53:12G Or Him with

53:12H Or receive with

Isaiah 54 Notes

54:11A Lit in antimony

54:11B Or lapis lazuli

54:12C Lit suns ; perhaps shields ; Ps 84:11

54:17D Lit refute every tongue

Isaiah 55 Notes

55:2A Lit enjoy fatness

Isaiah 56 Notes

56:10A Or His, or Its

Isaiah 57 Notes

57:1A Or away because

57:3B Lit and she acted as a prostitute

57:8C Lit you cut

57:8D Lit hand

57:10E Lit found life of your hand

57:17F Lit him; hiding and I am angry

57:19G Lit creating fruit of the lips

Isaiah 58 Notes

58:1A Lit with throat

58:7B Lit not hide yourself from

58:9C Lit yoke from your midst

58:12D Lit foundations generation and generation

58:13E Lit keep your foot from

58:13F Lit or speak a word

Isaiah 60 Notes

60:5A Lit expand

60:6B Lit cover you

60:13C Lit glorify the place of My feet

Isaiah 61 Notes

61:1A Lit bind up

61:3B Lit a dim spirit

Isaiah 62 Notes

62:4A Or Hephzibah

62:4B Or Beulah

62:5C Lit and the rejoicing of the groom

62:12D Lit will call them

Isaiah 63 Notes

63:1A Or righteousness

63:4B Lit For day of vengeance in My heart

63:4C Or blood revenge

63:11D Or he, or they

63:14E Lit him

63:15F Lit The agitation of Your inward parts

63:17G Lit our heart from fearing

63:18H Or Your people possessed Your holy place

Isaiah 64 Notes

64:5A Lit angry; in them continually and we will be saved ; Hb obscure

64:6B Lit menstrual

64:7C Lit melt by the hand

64:11D Or glorious ; Is 60:7

Isaiah 65 Notes

65:6A Lit repay into their lap

65:7B Lit reward into their lap

65:8C Or there's a blessing

65:20D Lit her, no longer infant of days

65:25E Lit as one

Isaiah 66 Notes

66:2A Lit broken

66:12B Or glory

66:14C Lit your bones

66:17D Hb obscure

Jeremiah 2 Notes

2:6A Or shadow of death

2:10B Lit to the islands of Kittim

2:14C Lit born of a house

2:18D Lit of Shihor

2:24E Lit donkey taught

2:24F Lit her month

2:31G Or We have taken control, or We can roam

2:37H Lit with them

Jeremiah 3 Notes

3:3A Lit have a prostitute's forehead

3:9B Lit From the lightness of

3:12C Lit not cause My face to fall on you

3:15D Lit shepherds according to My heart

3:20E Lit friend

Jeremiah 4 Notes

4:1A Or Repent

4:2B Or will bless themselves

4:10C Lit sword touches

4:11D Lit to the daughter of My

4:12E Lit comes for Me

4:19F Lit My inner parts, my inner parts

4:19G Lit the walls of

Jeremiah 5 Notes

5:7A Or adultery and trooped to the, or adultery and lodged at the ; Hb obscure

5:8B Lit well-equipped ; Hb obscure

5:8C Lit early-rising ; Hb obscure

5:12D Lit He does not exist

5:21E Lit without heart

5:26F Hb obscure

Jeremiah 6 Notes

6:2A Or silence

6:7B Or well keeps its water fresh, so she keeps her evil fresh

6:10C Or and bear witness

6:11D Lit with fullness of days

6:24E Lit and our hands fail

6:26F Lit Daughter of My

Jeremiah 7 Notes

7:5A Lit justly between a man and his neighbor

7:13B Lit you rising early and speaking

7:25C Lit you, each day rising early and sending

7:26D Lit but stiffened their neck

7:28E Or Faithfulness

7:29F Lit off your consecration

7:31G Lit of the fireplace

7:31H Lit command, and it did not arise on My heart

7:32I Lit They will bury in Topheth

Jeremiah 8 Notes

8:7A Hb obscure

8:11B Lit of the daughter of My

8:13C Lit Gathering I will end them

8:14D Or there be silenced

8:14E Or silenced

8:19F Lit of the daughter of my

8:21G Lit of the daughter of my

8:22H Lit of the daughter of my

Jeremiah 9 Notes

9:1A Lit slain among the daughter of my

9:7B Lit of the daughter of My

9:20C Lit Your ears must receive

9:26D Or who live in distant places

Jeremiah 10 Notes

10:1A Or against

10:9B Or Ophir

10:13C Lit At His giving of the voice

10:17D Lit bundle

Jeremiah 11 Notes

11:7A Lit today, rising early and warning

11:19B Or pet

11:19C Lit bread

11:20D Lit kidneys

Jeremiah 12 Notes

12:2A Lit are near in their mouth

12:2B Lit kidneys

12:5C Or you are secure

12:9D Hb obscure

Jeremiah 13 Notes

13:1A Lit around your waist

13:4B Lit wearing around your waist

13:16C Or brings a shadow of death

13:22D Lit your heels have suffered violence

13:24E Lit them

Jeremiah 14 Notes

14:3A Lit little ones

Jeremiah 15 Notes

15:3A Lit families

15:11B Lit free for good

15:15C Lit In the slowness of Your anger

Jeremiah 16 Notes

16:5A Lit house of mourning

16:13B Or compassion

Jeremiah 17 Notes

17:3A Lit plunder, your high places because of sin

17:10B Lit kidneys

17:18C Lit double

Jeremiah 18 Notes

18:3A Lit pair of stones

18:16B Lit hissing

18:18C Lit let's strike him with the tongue

18:21D Lit by death

Jeremiah 19 Notes

19:3A Lit shudder their ears ; 1Sm 3:11; 2Kg 21:12

19:5B Lit mentioned, and it did not arise on My heart

Jeremiah 20 Notes

20:10A Hb Magor-missabib ; Jr 20:3

20:10B Lit Every man of my peace

20:12C Lit kidneys

Jeremiah 21 Notes

21:2A Lit Nebuchadrezzar

21:10B Lit set My face

Jeremiah 22 Notes

22:14A Lit My windows

22:20B Or friends, or allies

22:22C Lit will shepherd

22:22D Or friends, or allies

Jeremiah 23 Notes

23:10A Lit Their manner of running

23:15B Or pollution

23:36C Or longer remember

Jeremiah 25 Notes

25:3A Lit you; rising early and speaking

25:4B Lit prophets, rising early and sending

25:4C Lit even inclined your ears

25:5D Lit his

25:16E Or vomit

25:23F Or who live in distant places

25:28G Or When

Jeremiah 26 Notes

26:5A Lit you, rising early and sending

26:19B Or and appease the LORD

26:23C Lit the sons of the people

Jeremiah 27 Notes

27:5A Lit to whomever is upright in My eyes

27:11B Lit work

Jeremiah 29 Notes

29:14A Or will end your captivity

29:19B Lit prophets, rising up early and sending

29:25C Lit Because you

Jeremiah 30 Notes

30:3A Or will end the captivity

30:18B Or certainly end the captivity

Jeremiah 31 Notes

31:14A Lit fatness

31:22B Or new on earth

31:22C Or woman

31:22D Or female surrounds, or female courts ; Hb obscure

31:23E Or I end their captivity

Jeremiah 32 Notes

32:4A Lit His mouth will speak with his mouth

32:33B Lit them, rising up early and teaching

32:35C Lit them, and it did not arise on My heart

32:44D Or will end their captivity

Jeremiah 33 Notes

33:6A Or fragrance ; Hb obscure

33:7B Or will end the captivity

33:11C Or will end the captivity

33:26D Or Instead, I will end their captivity

Jeremiah 34 Notes

34:3A Lit and his mouth will speak to your mouth

34:5B Lit Alas, lord

34:14C Or who was sold

Jeremiah 35 Notes

35:14A Lit you, rising up early and speaking

35:15B Lit Rising up early and sending

Jeremiah 36 Notes

36:4A Lit From Jeremiah's mouth

36:6B Lit wrote from my mouth

36:17C Lit From his mouth

36:18D Lit From his mouth

36:23E Lit columns, he would tear it

36:27F Lit written from Jeremiah's mouth

36:32G Lit it from Jeremiah's mouth

Jeremiah 37 Notes

37:4A Lit was coming in and going out

37:10B Lit the pierced

Jeremiah 38 Notes

38:11A Or treasury

38:21B Or promise ; lit word

38:22C Or wives

38:22D Lit The men of your peace

38:22E Or incited

38:28F Or captured. This is what happened when Jerusalem was captured:

Jeremiah 39 Notes

39:5A Lit Arabah

Jeremiah 40 Notes

40:4A Lit Babylon, stop

40:10B Lit to stand

Jeremiah 42 Notes

42:16A Lit will cling after you

Jeremiah 43 Notes

43:12A Or will wrap himself in the land of Egypt as a shepherd wraps himself in

43:13B Or Beth-shemesh

Jeremiah 44 Notes

44:4A Lit prophets, rising up early and sending

44:14B Lit lifting up their soul

Jeremiah 45 Notes

45:1A Lit scroll from Jeremiah's mouth

45:3B Lit I labored in my

Jeremiah 46 Notes

46:4A Or mount up, riders

46:22B Lit Her sound, she will go like a snake

Jeremiah 47 Notes

47:3A Lit because of laziness of hands

Jeremiah 48 Notes

48:5A Lit Luhith, weeping goes up with weeping

48:6B Or like Aroer ; Is 17:2; Jr 48:19

48:9C Hb obscure

48:10D Or negligently

48:15E Or Moab is destroyed; he has come up against its city

48:41F Or Kerioth has

48:47G Or will end the captivity

Jeremiah 49 Notes

49:3A Or sheep pens

49:4B Or about your strength, your ebbing strength

49:6C Or will end the captivity

49:16D Lit Your horror

49:19E Lit pride

49:35F Lit first

49:39G Or will end the captivity

Jeremiah 50 Notes

50:3A Lit escape; they will walk

50:12B Lit Look! The last of

50:26C Lit from the end

50:38D Or of dreaded gods

50:39E Or desert demons

50:44F Lit pride

50:44G Lit them

Jeremiah 51 Notes

51:1A Or stir up the spirit of a destroyer

51:1B Lit heart of my adversaries

51:3C Hb obscure

51:16D Lit At His giving of the voice

51:23E Lit yoke

51:27F Hb obscure

51:34G Lit has rinsed me off

Jeremiah 52 Notes

52:11A Lit in a house of guards

52:12B Lit Jerusalem; he stood before

52:21C Lit 18 cubits

52:21D Lit 12 cubits

52:22E Lit five cubits

52:25F Lit seven men who look on the king's face

Lamentations 1 Notes

1:3A Or because of

1:8B Or become impure

1:14C Or The yoke of my transgressions is bound ; Hb obscure

1:15D Or has announced an appointed time

1:16E Lit my eye, my eye flows

1:20F Lit is turned within me

Lamentations 2 Notes

2:4A Lit killed all the delights of the eye ; Ezk 24:16

2:6B Lit booth

2:9C Or the law

2:11D Lit My liver is poured out on the ground

2:15E Lit hiss

2:18F Lit and the daughter of your

2:20G Or infants in a healthy condition ; Hb obscure

2:22H Or terrors

2:22I Or I bore healthy ; Hb obscure

Lamentations 3 Notes

3:10A Lit is to me

3:16B Or and trampled me

3:18C Or splendor

3:19D Or I remember

3:34E Or earth

3:52F Or Those who were my enemies for no reason

3:53G Or They ended my life in ; Hb obscure

3:62H Lit lips

3:65I Or them an obstinate heart ; Hb obscure

3:66J Lit under the LORD's heavens

Lamentations 4 Notes

4:1A Or The sacred gems

4:7B Lit bones

4:7C Or lapis lazuli

4:20D Lit nostrils

4:22E Or not deport you again

Lamentations 5 Notes

5:6A Lit We gave the hand to

5:10B Or black ; Hb obscure

Ezekiel 1 Notes

1:12A Or spirit

1:20B Or spirit

1:26C Or lapis lazuli

1:26D Lit expanse that was over their head

Ezekiel 2 Notes

2:3A Or Israelites [and] to

2:4B Lit hard of face

Ezekiel 3 Notes

3:3A Lit feed your belly

Ezekiel 4 Notes

4:4A Or punishment

4:10B Lit 20 shekels

4:10C Or it at set times

4:11D Lit hin

Ezekiel 5 Notes

5:10A Lit you

Ezekiel 6 Notes

6:6A Hb obscure

6:12B Or besieged

Ezekiel 7 Notes

7:7A Hb obscure

7:13B Lit sold, while still in life is their life

7:20C Or They turned their beautiful ornaments into objects of pride, and

Ezekiel 9 Notes

Ezekiel 10 Notes

10:1A Or lapis lazuli

10:11B Lit go after it

Ezekiel 11 Notes

11:3A Or The time is not near to build houses.

11:15B Or own brothers, your relatives

11:19C Lit flesh

Ezekiel 12 Notes

12:10A Lit are among them

12:19B Lit its

Ezekiel 13 Notes

13:17A Lit set your face

Ezekiel 14 Notes

14:7A Lit Me for himself

Ezekiel 16 Notes

16:4A Hb obscure

16:7B Or matured and developed the loveliest of ornaments

16:15C Hb obscure

16:16D Hb obscure

16:47E Lit they in all your ways

16:50F Or them as you have seen

Ezekiel 17 Notes

17:5A Hb obscure

Ezekiel 19 Notes

19:9A Or put him in a cage

19:11B Or thick foliage

19:14C Lit from the branch of its parts

Ezekiel 20 Notes

20:5A Lit I lifted My hand

20:6B Lit lifted My hand

20:15C Lit lifted My hand

20:23D Lit lifted My hand

20:28E Lit lifted My hand

20:42F Lit lifted My hand

Ezekiel 21 Notes

21:4A Lit off from you

21:6B Lit with broken loins

21:10C Hb obscure

21:13D Hb obscure

21:14E Or penetrates

21:15F Hb obscure

21:15G Hb obscure

21:22H Lit The divination for 21:22I Lit rams, open the mouth in

21:23J Lit them

21:25K Lit come in the time of the punishment of the end

21:26L Lit This not this

21:27M Or comes to whom it rightfully belongs, and I will give it to Him

21:29N Lit come in the time of the punishment of the end

Ezekiel 22 Notes

22:26A Lit close their eyes from

Ezekiel 23 Notes

23:16A Lit of her eyes

23:32B Or It will bring

23:42C Or Sabeans

23:46D Or I will summon

Ezekiel 24 Notes

24:5A Lit bones

24:7B Lit For her blood

24:10C Or and stir the broth

24:12D Hb obscure

24:17E Lit men

24:22F Lit men

Ezekiel 25 Notes

25:9A Lit with the cities, with its

25:16B Lit the seacoast

Ezekiel 26 Notes

26:8A Lit ramp against you

26:17B Lit and all her inhabitants who put their terror on all her inhabitants ; Hb obscure

26:20C Lit the lower parts of the earth

Ezekiel 27 Notes

27:9A Lit sailors were with

27:11B Or quivers ; Hb obscure

27:13C Lit souls of men

27:16D Hb obscure

27:16E Hb obscure

27:16F Hb obscure

27:17G Or resin ; Hb obscure

27:18H Or and wool from Zahar

27:19I Or Dan

27:19J Hb obscure

27:21K Lit trading

27:24L Hb obscure

27:25M Or and very glorious

27:27N Lit with all your assembly among you

27:32O Hb obscure

27:36P Lit hiss

Ezekiel 28 Notes

28:2A Lit Because your

28:12B Or sealer

28:12C Hb obscure

28:13D Hb obscure

28:13E Or lapis lazuli

28:13F Or malachite, or garnet

28:13G Or beryl

28:14H Or With an anointed guardian cherub

28:16I Or and the guardian cherub banished you

28:23J Or within her by the sword

28:24K Lit longer have

Ezekiel 29 Notes

29:3A Or crocodile

29:12B Or Egypt the most desolate of

29:12C Or be the most desolate of

Ezekiel 30 Notes

30:5A Or all Arabia

30:5B Lit Cub ; Hb obscure

30:7C Or be the most desolate of

30:7D Or will be the most ruined of

30:10E Or pomp, or wealth

30:15F Or pomp, or wealth

30:16G Or foes daily

30:17H Or and the women ; lit and they

30:18I Or Egypt

Ezekiel 31 Notes

31:3A Or thick foliage

31:10B Or thick foliage

31:10C Lit its heart

31:14D Or thick foliage

31:15E Or I covered it with the underground deep

31:17F Lit arm

Ezekiel 32 Notes

32:2A Or Lion of the nations, you are destroyed;

32:2B Lit their

32:18C Lit the lower parts of the earth

32:24D Lit the lower parts of the earth

32:26E Lit Meshech-tubal

32:27F Or Do they not . . . heads?

Ezekiel 33 Notes

33:5A Lit on him

33:24B Lit these

33:31C Lit you like the coming of a people

Ezekiel 34 Notes

34:10A Lit their hand

34:26B Lit season; they will be showers

Ezekiel 36 Notes

36:5A Lit gave

36:5B Or contempt, to empty it of ; Hb obscure

36:7C Lit lift up My hand

36:26D Lit stone from your flesh

36:37E Lit flock of people

36:38F Lit the flock of consecrated things, as the flock

Ezekiel 37 Notes

37:9A Or wind, or spirit

37:10B Or wind, or spirit

Ezekiel 38 Notes

38:2A Or the prince of Rosh,

38:8B Lit from the sword

38:13C Lit young lions, or villages

38:18D Lit up in My anger

Ezekiel 39 Notes

39:1A Or Gog, prince of Rosh,

39:11B Hb obscure

39:14C Or basis, some to pass through the land, and with them some to bury those

39:26D Lit will bear

39:28E Lit behind there any longer

Ezekiel 40 Notes

40:5A Lit six cubits by the cubit and a handbreadth

40:5B Lit was one rod

40:5C Lit was one rod

40:7D Lit was one rod

40:7E Lit and one rod

40:7F Lit five cubits

40:7G Lit was one rod

40:9H Lit eight cubits

40:9I Lit two cubits

40:11J Lit 10 cubits

40:11K Lit length

40:11L Lit 13 cubits

40:12M Lit one cubit

40:12N Lit six cubits

40:13O Lit 25 cubits

40:14P Lit 60 cubits

40:14Q Hb obscure

40:15R Lit 50 cubits

40:19S Lit 100 cubits

40:21T Lit 50 cubits

40:21U Lit 25 cubits

40:23V Lit 100 cubits

40:25W Lit 50 cubits

40:25X Lit 25 cubits

40:27Y Lit 100 cubits

40:29Z Lit 50 cubits

40:29A Lit 25 cubits

40:30B Lit five cubits

40:33C Lit 50 cubits

40:33D Lit 25 cubits

40:36E Lit 50 cubits

40:36F Lit 25 cubits

40:42G Lit one and a half cubits

40:42H Lit one cubit

40:43I Lit one handbreadth

40:43J Or ledges

40:47K Lit 100 cubits

40:48L Lit five cubits

40:48M Lit 14 cubits

40:48N Lit three cubits

40:49O Lit 20 cubits

40:49P Lit 12 cubits

Ezekiel 41 Notes

41:1A Lit six cubits

41:2B Lit 10 cubits

41:2C Lit five cubits

41:2D Lit 40 cubits

41:2E Lit 20 cubits

41:3F Lit two cubits

41:3G Lit six cubits

41:3H Lit seven cubits

41:4I Lit 20 cubits

41:5J Lit six cubits

41:5K Lit four cubits

41:6L Lit another three and 30 times

41:7M Hb obscure

41:8N Lit a full rod of six cubits of a joint ; Hb obscure

41:9O Lit five cubits

41:10P Lit 20 cubits

41:11Q Lit five cubits

41:12R Lit 70 cubits

41:12S Lit five cubits

41:12T Lit 90 cubits

41:13U Lit 100 cubits

41:15V Or ledges

41:21-22W Or and in front of the sanctuary was something that looked like [22] an altar

41:22X Lit three cubits

41:22Y Lit two cubits

41:25Z Hb obscure

41:26A Hb obscure

Ezekiel 42 Notes

42:2A Lit 100 cubits

42:2B Lit 50 cubits

42:3C Lit 20 [cubits]

42:4D Lit 10 cubits

42:4E Lit 100 cubits

42:7F Lit 50 cubits

42:8G Lit 100 cubits

42:12H Or protective ; Hb obscure

42:16I Lit 500 in rods

42:16J Lit rod all around

42:17K Lit 500 in rods

42:17L Lit rod all around

42:18M Lit 500 in rods

42:18N Lit rod all around

42:19O Lit 500 in rods

42:19P Lit rod all around

Ezekiel 43 Notes

43:7A Or monuments

43:9B Or monuments

43:13C Lit in cubits (a cubit being a cubit plus a handbreadth)

43:13D Lit one cubit

43:13E Lit one span

43:14F Lit two cubits

43:14G Lit one cubit

43:14H Lit four cubits

43:15I Hb obscure

43:15J Lit four cubits

43:16K Lit 12 cubits

43:17L Lit 14 cubits

43:17M Lit one-half cubit

43:17N Lit one cubit

43:26O Lit will fill its hands

Ezekiel 44 Notes

44:12A Lit I lifted My hand

Ezekiel 45 Notes

45:1A Lit 25,000 [cubits]

45:2B Lit square all around

45:2C Lit 500 by 500 [cubits]

45:2D Lit 50 cubits

45:3E Lit this measured [portion]

45:3F Lit 25,000 [cubits]

45:3G Lit 10,000 [cubits]

45:3H Lit be

45:5I Lit 25,000 [cubits]

45:5J Lit 10,000 [cubits]

45:6K Lit 5,000 [cubits]

45:6L Lit 25,000 [cubits]

45:9M Lit Enough of you

45:10N Lit an honest ephah

45:10O Lit and an honest bath

45:11P Lit the ephah

45:11Q Lit the bath

45:11R Lit one-tenth of a homer

45:11S Lit one-tenth of a homer

45:11T Lit be [based] on the homer

45:13U Lit One-sixth of an ephah

45:13V Lit a homer

45:14W Lit oil, the bath, the oil

45:14X Lit be a tenth of the bath from the 45:14Y Lit 10 baths, a homer

45:24Z Lit an ephah

45:24A Lit a hin

Ezekiel 46 Notes

46:5A Lit an ephah

46:5B Lit a hin

46:7C Lit an ephah

46:7D Lit a hin

46:9E Or the festivals

46:11F Lit an ephah

46:11G Lit a hin

46:14H Lit one-sixth of an ephah

46:14I Lit one-third of a hin

46:22J Hb obscure

46:22K Lit 40 [cubits]

46:22L Lit 30 [cubits]

46:23M Or a row

Ezekiel 47 Notes

47:3A Lit 1,000 cubits

47:4B Lit 1,000 cubits

47:4C Lit 1,000 cubits

47:5D Lit 1,000 cubits

47:8E Or enters the sea, being brought out to the sea ; Hb obscure

47:14F Lit lifted My hand

47:22G Lit They will be to you

Ezekiel 48 Notes

48:8A Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:9B Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:9C Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:10D Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:10E Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:10F Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:10G Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:13H Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:13I Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:13J Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:13K Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:15L Lit 5,000 [cubits]

48:15M Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:16N Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:16O Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:16P Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:16Q Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:17R Lit 250 [cubits]

48:17S Lit 250 [cubits]

48:17T Lit 250 [cubits]

48:17U Lit 250 [cubits]

48:18V Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:18W Lit 10,000 [cubits]

48:20X Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:20Y Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:21Z Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:21A Lit border, and to the west,

48:21B Lit 25,000 [cubits]

48:30C Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:32D Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:33E Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:34F Lit 4,500 [cubits]

48:35G Lit 18,000 [cubits]

Daniel 1 Notes

1:1A Or Nebuchadrezzar

1:2B Lit Shinar

1:2C Or gods

1:3D Or his eunuchs

1:5E Lit to stand before the king

1:10F Lit would make my head guilty

1:15G Lit fatter of flesh

1:20H Lit hands

Daniel 2 Notes

2:5A Lit be made into limbs

2:14B Or executioners

2:15C Or urgent

2:23D Lit matter

2:29E Lit happen after this

2:34F Lit off not by hands

2:40G Lit all these

2:43H Lit another in the seed of men

2:45I Lit mountain, not by hands

2:45J Lit happen after this

Daniel 3 Notes

3:1A Lit statue, its height 60 cubits, its width six cubits

3:5B Or lyre

3:5C Or sambuke

3:5D Or pipe

3:8E Lit and eat the pieces of

3:18F Lit But if not

3:22G Or harsh

3:22H Lit the flame of the fire

3:25I Or of a divine being

3:27J Lit fire had not overcome

3:28K Or messenger

Daniel 4 Notes

4:11A Lit of all the

4:16B Lit animal as seven times pass over him

4:26C Lit enduring

Daniel 5 Notes

5:2A Or When he tasted

5:2B Or father, or grandfather

5:5C Lit part of the hand

5:5-6D Lit writing, [6] the king's brightness changed

5:9E Lit his brightness changed on him

5:10F Lit your brightness change

5:23G Lit and all your ways belong to Him

5:26H Or a mina

5:27I Or a shekel

5:28J Or half a shekel

Daniel 6 Notes

6:1A Lit It was pleasing before Darius

6:3B Lit Now this Daniel

6:18C Hb obscure

6:20D Lit said to Daniel

6:24E Lit had eaten his pieces

6:28F Or Darius, even

Daniel 7 Notes

7:1A Lit beginning

7:15B Lit was distressed in the middle of its sheath

7:25C Lit wear out

7:25D Lit change times

7:25E Or for three and a half years

7:28F Lit my brightness changed on me

Daniel 8 Notes

8:3A Lit I lifted my eyes and looked

8:5B Lit a horn of a vision

8:23C Lit have become complete

8:23D Lit king, and understanding riddles

Daniel 9 Notes

9:11A Lit The curse and the oath

9:12B Lit against rulers who ruled us

9:18C Lit Stretch out Your ear

9:25D Or until an anointed one, a prince

9:26E Lit Its, or His

9:26F Or end of a

9:27G Or will enforce a covenant

9:27H Or And the desolator will be on the wing of abominations, or And the desolator will come on the wings of monsters (or of horror); Hb obscure

Daniel 10 Notes

10:8A Lit my splendor was turned on me to ruin

10:9B Lit a sleep on my face

10:17C Lit Can I, a servant of my lord

10:19D Lit afraid, man

Daniel 11 Notes

11:7A Lit from the shoot of her roots

11:10B Lit advance and overflow and pass through

11:13C Lit At the end of the times

11:17D Lit him the daughter of women

11:20E Or not openly

11:21F Or come without warning

11:23G Or a few people

11:24H Or Without warning

11:28I Or the Jewish people and religion

11:29J Lit but the last

11:37K Or God

11:39L Or those he acknowledges

11:41M Lit the first

11:43N Lit Cushites at his steps

11:45O Or the seas at

Daniel 12 Notes

12:7A Lit raised his right and his left

Hosea 1 Notes

1:6A Or Lo-ruhamah

1:9B Or Lo-ammi

1:9C Lit not be yours

1:11D Or and flourish in ; Hb obscure

Hosea 2 Notes

2:1A Lit Say to

2:14B Lit speak to her heart

2:16C Or My master

2:18D Or war on the earth

Hosea 3 Notes

3:2A Lit silver, a homer of barley, and a lethek of barley

Hosea 4 Notes

4:4A Hb obscure

4:8B Or sin offerings

4:12C Lit promiscuously from under

4:18D Lit Her shields ; Ps 47:9; 89:18

4:18E Hb obscure

4:19F Lit wind will bind it in its wings

Hosea 5 Notes

5:2A Hb obscure

5:5B Lit against his face

5:11C Or follow a command ; Hb obscure

5:13D Or to King Yareb

Hosea 6 Notes

6:5A Or have cut down the prophets

6:7B Or they, as at Adam, or they, like men,

6:11C Or you. Judah, when I

Hosea 7 Notes

7:5A Lit wine — he stretches out his hand to scorners ; Hb obscure

7:3-7B These vv. may refer to a king's assassination; Hb obscure.

7:10C Lit against his face

7:12D Lit news to

Hosea 8 Notes

8:4A Lit themselves that it might be cut off

8:5B Lit calf

8:12C Or Though I wrote out . . . instruction, they are

8:13D Hb obscure

Hosea 10 Notes

10:1A Or ravaged

10:2B Or divided

10:6C Or to King Yareb

10:7D Or will be cut off

10:7E Or a stick

10:11F Lit will pass over

Hosea 11 Notes

11:6A Or devour his empty talkers, or devour his limbs ; Hb obscure

11:9B Or come into any city ; Hb obscure

11:12C Or to the Holy One ; Hb obscure

Hosea 12 Notes

12:1A Or feeds on, or tends

12:4B Or Him

12:8C Lit crime which is sin

Hosea 13 Notes

13:2A Or Those who make human sacrifices

13:10B Lit your

13:10C Or judges

13:13D Lit he will not present himself at the opening of the womb for sons

13:14E Or Should I ransom . . . Should I redeem . . . ?

13:15F Or among reeds

Hosea 14 Notes

14:2A Lit repay the bulls of our

Joel 1 Notes

1:11A Or The farmers are dismayed, the vinedressers wail

1:17B Or clods ; Hb obscure

1:20C Or animals pant for ; Hb obscure

Joel 2 Notes

2:3A Lit consumes

2:16B Or elders

2:23C Or righteousness

Joel 3 Notes

3:18A Or Shittim

Amos 1 Notes

1:1A Or the shepherds

1:2B Or dry up

1:5C Lit gate bars

1:9D Lit and did not remember

Amos 2 Notes

2:13A Or hinder ; Hb obscure

Amos 3 Notes

3:12A Or Israelites will be rescued, those who sit in Samaria on a corner of a bed or a

3:12B Hb obscure

Amos 4 Notes

4:2A Lit coming on you

4:6B Lit you cleanness of teeth

4:11C Lit God

4:13D Or his

Amos 5 Notes

5:8A Or turns the shadow of death

5:9B Hb obscure

5:9C Or stronghold

5:13D Or the prudent will perish

5:16E Lit will say, "Alas! Alas!"

5:16F Lit and those skilled in lamentation

5:26G Or you will lift up

Amos 6 Notes

6:5A Hb obscure

6:5B Or compose on

6:10C Lit His uncle

6:10D Lit remove bones

6:14E Or from Lebo-hamath

Amos 7 Notes

7:12A Lit Eat bread

7:14B Or am

7:14C Or am

7:17D Lit unclean

Amos 8 Notes

8:3A Or palace

8:5B Lit reduce the ephah and make the shekel great

8:10C Lit every loin

8:14D Or power

Amos 9 Notes

9:10A Or You will not let disaster come near

9:14B Or restore My people Israel from captivity

Obadiah Notes

3A Or in Sela ; probably = Petra

4B Or to build high

11C Or forces

12-14D Or You should not throughout vv. 12-14

12E Lit not make your mouth big

14F Hb obscure

18G Lit they

18H Lit them

20I Or of this host of the Israelites ; Hb obscure

21J Or Those who have been delivered

Jonah 1 Notes

1:2A Or has come up to

1:6B Or God

1:9C Or fear

1:12D Lit sea that's against you

1:17E Lit in the belly of

Jonah 2 Notes

2:1A Lit from the belly of

2:3B Lit river

2:5C Or me, threatening my life

2:9D Or Deliverance

Jonah 3 Notes

3:3A Or was a great city to God

3:5B Or believed God

3:8C Or injustice

3:8D Lit violence in their hands

Jonah 4 Notes

4:6A Lit to deliver him from his evil

4:11B Or men

Micah 1 Notes

1:2A Or land

1:3B Or high places

1:8C Or eagle owls ; lit daughters of the desert

1:11D Lit its standing place ; Hb obscure

1:15E Lit glory

Micah 2 Notes

2:5A Lit LORD stretching the measuring line by lot

2:11B Or spirit

Micah 3 Notes

3:7A Lit mustache

Micah 4 Notes

4:8A Or flock, Ophel

4:10B Hb obscure

Micah 5 Notes

5:2A Lit His going out

5:2B Or from ancient times

5:14C Or shrines

Micah 6 Notes

6:5A Or Shittim

6:9B Or attention, you tribe. Who has ordained it? ; Hb obscure

6:10C Hb obscure

6:14D Hb obscure

6:16E Lit and its

6:16F Lit residents a hissing

Micah 7 Notes

7:9A Or righteousness

7:16B Or ashamed in spite of

Nahum 1 Notes

1:2A Lit is a master of

1:5B Lit lifts

1:8C Lit her place

1:10D Hb obscure

1:12E Lit intact

1:14F Lit It will not be sown from your name any longer

Nahum 2 Notes

2:1A Lit Strengthen

2:2B Or like

2:7C Hb obscure

2:8D Hb obscure

2:13E Lit will burn her chariots in smoke

Nahum 3 Notes

3:8A Or No-amon

3:8B Lit sea from sea

3:9C Lit your

3:11D Or will be overcome

3:16E Or sheds [its skin]

Habakkuk 1 Notes

1:3A Lit observe

1:8B Or and quicker

1:9C Hb obscure

1:11D Or wind, and transgress and incur guilt

Habakkuk 2 Notes

2:2A Lit one who reads in it may run

2:4B Hb obscure

2:4C Or faithfulness

2:5D Or man does not endure ; Hb obscure

2:9E Or dynasty

2:15F Or venom

Habakkuk 3 Notes

3:6A Or surveys

3:9B Or set

3:9C Hb obscure

3:10D Lit hands

3:13E Lit foundation

3:19F Lit on my

Zephaniah 1 Notes

1:9A Hb obscure

1:11B Or the market district

1:11C Or Canaanites

1:12D Lit who thicken on their dregs

Zephaniah 2 Notes

2:1A Or shameless

2:14B Lit every wild animal of a nation

2:14C Or the pelican

2:14D Or the hedgehog

2:14E Lit sing

2:14F Hb obscure

2:15G Or hisses

Zephaniah 3 Notes

3:1A Or filthy

3:3B Lit Her

3:3C Or that had nothing to gnaw in

3:9D Lit with one shoulder

3:18E Hb obscure

Haggai 1 Notes

1:5A Lit Place your heart on

1:7B Lit Place your heart on

1:9C Lit blew on

1:10D Or So above you

Haggai 2 Notes

2:3A Lit Is it not in your eyes?

2:9B Or The glory of this latter house

2:16C Hb obscure

Zechariah 1 Notes

2:8A Or me

2:8B Or apple

2:9C Or my

2:9D Or me

2:11E Or me

Zechariah 3 Notes

3:1A Or the adversary

3:4B Lit He

Zechariah 4 Notes

4:2A Or seven lips to

4:10B Lit the tin stone

Zechariah 5 Notes

5:2A Lit 20 cubits

5:2B Lit 10 cubits

5:6C Lit It's an ephah

Zechariah 6 Notes

6:5A Or winds

Zechariah 7 Notes

7:7A Or prosperous

Zechariah 9 Notes

9:1A Or eyes of the LORD are on mankind —

9:8B Or house as a guard

9:9C Or and has salvation

9:13D Lit Javan

Zechariah 10 Notes

10:3A Lit male goats

10:4B Lit them

10:4C Lit also from them the . . ., from them every

10:11D Lit He

Zechariah 11 Notes

11:3A Lit for the majesty of the Jordan is

11:16B Lit young

11:16C Or exhausted

11:17D Lit be against

Zechariah 12 Notes

12:10A Or out the Spirit

12:10B Or to

Zechariah 13 Notes

13:5A Or sold

13:6B Lit wounds between your hands

13:8C Lit two-thirds in it

Zechariah 14 Notes

14:6A Lit light; the precious things

14:10B Or will be inhabited

14:10C Or the former gate

14:15D Lit be on

14:18E Lit family

14:21F Or merchant

Malachi 1 Notes

1:4A Or will return and build

1:4B Or LORD is angry with

1:5C Or great over

1:11D Or Burnt offerings

1:11E Or is great . . . are presented . . . is great

1:13F Lit blow at

1:13G Or injured

1:14H Or Because I am . . . Yahweh of Hosts, My name

Malachi 2 Notes

2:8A Lit corrupted

2:11B Or profaned what is holy to the LORD

2:12C Lit off one waking or answering ; Hb obscure

2:15D Or Did the One not make them? So their flesh and spirit belong to Him, or No one who does this even has a remnant of the Spirit in him ; Hb obscure

2:15E Lit So guard yourselves in your spirit

2:16F Or The LORD God of Israel says that He hates divorce and the one who

2:16G Lit Therefore, guard yourselves in your spirit

Malachi 3 Notes

4:2A Or like stall-fed calves

4:6B Or earth

Matthew 1 Notes

1:1A Or The book of the genealogy

1:16B Lit Mary, from whom was born

1:21C Jesus is the Gk form of the Hb name “Joshua,” which = “The LORD saves” or “Yahweh saves.”

Matthew 2 Notes

2:2A Or star at its rising

2:2B Or to pay Him homage

2:8C Or and pay Him homage

2:9D Or star . . . at its rising

2:11E Or they paid Him homage

2:16F Lit were from two years

Matthew 3 Notes

3:7A Lit to his baptism

3:8B Lit fruit worthy of

3:11C Or in

3:11D Or to carry

3:11E Or in

Matthew 4 Notes

4:9A Or and pay me homage

4:16B Lit dawned on them

4:23C Or every kind of

Matthew 5 Notes

5:2A Lit Then opening His mouth

Matthew 7 Notes

7:28A Lit had ended these words

Matthew 8 Notes

8:3A Lit cleansed

8:9B Lit under me

8:13C Or that hour ; lit very hour

8:29D Lit What to us and to You

Matthew 9 Notes

9:2A Lit then they

9:8B Lit afraid

9:10C Lit came, they were reclining (at the table); at important meals the custom was to recline on a mat at a low table and lean on the left elbow.

9:18D Lit daughter has now come to the end

9:21E Or be delivered

9:22F Lit hour

9:33G Lit the man who was unable to speak

9:35H Or every kind of

Matthew 10 Notes

10:1A Or every kind of

10:4B Lit the Cananaean

10:4C Iscariot is probably "a man of Kerioth," a town in Judea.

Matthew 12 Notes

12:20A Or until He has successfully put forth justice

12:22B Lit mute

Matthew 14 Notes

14:3A Or bound

14:6B Lit danced in the middle

14:14C Lit Coming out (of the boat)

14:15D Lit and the time (for the evening meal) has already passed

14:19E Lit to recline

14:24F Lit already many stadia ; 1 stadion = 600 feet

14:25G Lit fourth watch of the night = 3 to 6 a.m.

14:35H Lit sent into

Matthew 15 Notes

15:2A Lit eat bread = eat a meal

15:23B Lit she is yelling behind us or after us

15:28C Lit hour

Matthew 16 Notes

16:5A Lit disciples went to the other side

16:22B Lit Mercy to You = May God have mercy on You

Matthew 17 Notes

17:2A Or transfigured

17:5B Or enveloped ; Ex 40:34-35

17:15C Lit he is moonstruck ; thought to be a form of epilepsy

17:18D Lit rebuked him or it

17:18E Lit the demon

17:18F Lit hour

17:25G Lit Jesus anticipated him by saying

Matthew 18 Notes

18:1A Lit hour

Matthew 20 Notes

20:21A Lit Say

Matthew 21 Notes

21:41A Lit him the fruits in their seasons

Matthew 22 Notes

22:15A Lit trap Him in [a] word

22:16B Lit don't look on the face of men ; that is, on the outward appearance

22:26C Lit so until the seven

22:28D Lit all had her

22:36E Lit is great

22:46F Lit answer Him a word

Matthew 26 Notes

26:43A Lit because their eyes were weighed down

26:58B Or high priest's palace

26:58C Or the officers, or the servants

26:58D Lit end

26:66E Lit What does it seem to you?

26:73F Or speech

Matthew 27 Notes

27:6A Lit the price of blood

27:22B Lit "Him — be crucified!"

27:24C Lit that it availed nothing

27:38D Or revolutionaries

27:39E Lit passed by blasphemed or were blaspheming

27:43F Or if He takes pleasure in Him

27:45G Lit From the sixth hour to the ninth hour

27:45H Or whole earth

27:54I Or the Son of God

27:65J Or "Take

27:66K Lit stone with the guard

Matthew 28 Notes

28:12A Lit After they

28:14B Lit this is heard by the governor

28:14C Lit will persuade

Mark 1 Notes

1:4A Or John the Baptist came, or John the Baptizer came

1:4B Or a baptism based on repentance

1:8C Or in

1:11D Or In You I am well pleased

1:14E Or gospel

1:14F Either from God or about God

1:24G Lit What to us and to You

1:42H Lit made clean

Mark 2 Notes

2:6A Or thinking in their hearts

2:15B Lit reclining (at the table); at important meals the custom was to recline on a mat at a low table and lean on the left elbow.

Mark 3 Notes

3:18A Lit the Cananaean

3:19B Iscariot is probably "a man of Kerioth," a town in Judea.

3:20C Or eat a meal ; lit eat bread

Mark 5 Notes

5:7A Lit What to me and to You

5:7B Or adjure

5:23C Lit My little daughter has it finally ; = to be at the end of life

Mark 6 Notes

6:5A Lit miracle

6:15B Lit Others said, "A prophet

6:20C Or Herod feared

6:26D Lit and those reclining at the table

6:39E Lit people recline

6:48F Or them struggling as they rowed

6:48G Lit Around the fourth watch of the night = 3 to 6 a.m.

6:51H Lit were astounded in themselves

Mark 7 Notes

7:31A Or into

7:35B Lit opened, the bond of his tongue was untied

Mark 9 Notes

9:2A Or transfigured

9:15B Or surprised

Mark 10 Notes

10:22A Or he became gloomy

10:51B Hb for you my teacher

Mark 12 Notes

12:13A Lit trap Him in (a) word

12:14B Lit don't look on the face of men ; that is, on the outward appearance

12:23C Lit the seven had her as a wife

12:28D Lit Which command is first of all?

12:42E Lit dropped in two lepta, which is a quadrans ; the lepton was the smallest and least valuable Gk coin in use. The quadrans, $^{1}/_{64}$ of a daily wage, was the smallest Roman coin.

Mark 14 Notes

14:11A Or money ; in Mt 26:15 it is specified as 30 pieces of silver; see Zch 11:12-13

14:40B Lit because their eyes were weighed down

14:54C Or the officers ; lit the servants

14:54D Lit light

14:64E Lit How does it appear to you?

14:72F Or he burst into tears, or he broke down

Mark 15 Notes

15:25A Lit was the third hour

15:27B Or revolutionaries

15:29C Lit passed by blasphemed

15:33D Lit the sixth hour

15:33E Or whole earth

15:33F Lit the ninth hour

15:34G Lit the ninth hour

15:39H Or the Son of God ; Mk 1:1

Luke 1 Notes

1:1A Or events that have been accomplished, or events most surely believed

1:4B Or informed

1:7C Lit child

1:7D Lit Elizabeth was sterile or barren

1:7E Lit in their days

1:12F Lit and fear fell on him

1:18G Lit in her days

1:34H Lit since I do not know a man

1:38I Lit Look, the Lord's slave

1:41J Lit leaped in her abdomen or womb

1:42K Lit and the fruit of your abdomen (or womb) is blessed

1:44L Lit in my abdomen or womb

1:46M Or soul magnifies

1:55N Or offspring ; lit seed

1:58O Lit the Lord magnified His mercy with her

1:71P Lit the hand

1:74Q Lit from the hand of enemies

Luke 2 Notes

2:1A Or the whole inhabited world

2:2B Or This registration was the first while, or This registration was before

2:9C Or Lord appeared to

2:9D Lit they feared a great fear

2:10E Or the whole nation

2:14F Or earth to men of good will

2:19G Lit these words

2:21H Or conceived in the womb

2:23I Lit "Every male that opens a womb

2:23J Lit be called holy

2:27K Lit And in the Spirit, he came into

2:32L Or the nations

2:34M Or spoken against

2:35N Or schemes

2:36O Lit in many days

2:36P Lit years from her virginity

2:37Q Or she was a widow until the age of 84

2:38R Lit very hour

Luke 3 Notes

3:1A Or ruler

3:3B Or baptism based on repentance

3:5C Lit be humbled

3:6D Lit all flesh

3:9E Lit the ax lies at

3:11F Lit tunics

3:15G Or hearts

3:16H Or in

3:16I Or in

Luke 4 Notes

4:2A Lit were completed

4:7B Lit will fall down before me

4:15C Or glorified

4:22D Or They were testifying against Him

4:29E Lit brow

4:34F Or Ha!, or Ah!

4:34G Lit What to us and to You

Luke 5 Notes

5:2A Lit boats standing by the lake

5:9B Lit For amazement had seized him and all those with him

5:15C Lit the word

5:29D Lit were reclining (at the table); at important meals the custom was to recline on a mat at a low table and lean on the left elbow.

Luke 6 Notes

6:20A Lit Then lifting up His eyes to

Luke 7 Notes

7:6A Lit and He already was not far from

7:8B Lit under me

7:14C Or the bier

7:16D Or awe

7:16E Or come to help

7:29F Lit they justified God

Luke 8 Notes

8:25A Lit Who then is this?

8:28B Lit What to me and to You

8:42C Lit she was dying

8:47D Lit she had not escaped notice

Luke 9 Notes

9:11A Or healed ; in this passage, different Gk words are translated as heal. In Eng, "to heal" or "to cure" are synonyms with little distinction in meaning. Technically, we do not heal or cure diseases. People are healed or cured from diseases.

9:12B Lit When the day began to decline

9:17C Lit Then were picked up by them

9:19D Lit has risen

9:31E Or departure ; Gk exodus

9:32F Lit were weighed down with sleep

9:39G Lit convulsions with foam

9:39H Or bruising, or mauling

9:45I Lit about this statement

9:51J Lit He stiffened His face to go ; Is 50:7

Luke 10 Notes

10:39A Lit to His word or message

10:40B Or tell her to help me

Luke 11 Notes

11:38A Lit He did not first wash

Luke 12 Notes

12:1A Or Meanwhile, or At this time, or During this period

Luke 13 Notes

13:11A Lit had a spirit of disability

13:11B Or straighten up completely

13:12C Or He summoned her

13:23D Or are the saved few? (in number); lit are those being saved few?

Luke 14 Notes

14:1A Lit eat bread ; = eat a meal

Luke 17 Notes

17:11A Or through the middle of

17:14B Lit cleansed

Luke 18 Notes

18:39A Or those in front rebuked him

Luke 19 Notes

19:8A Or I give

19:8B Or I pay

19:48C Lit people hung on what they heard

Luke 20 Notes

20:1A Lit It happened on one of the days

20:7B Or know where it was from

20:20C Or upright ; that is, loyal to God’s law

20:20D Lit catch Him in [a] word

20:21E Lit You don’t receive a face

20:26F Lit catch Him in [a] word

20:26G Lit in front of the people

20:33H Lit had her as wife

Luke 21 Notes

21:2A Lit two lepta ; the lepton was the smallest and least valuable Gk coin in use.

Luke 22 Notes

22:5A Or money ; Mt 26:15 specifies 30 pieces of silver; Zch 11:12-13

22:45B Lit sleeping from grief

22:66C Or council of elders

Luke 23 Notes

23:8A Or sign

23:12B Lit friends with one another

23:16C Gk paideuo; to discipline or "teach a lesson"; 1Kg 12:11,14 LXX; 2Ch 10:11,14; perhaps a way of referring to the Roman scourging; Lat flagellatio

23:39D Or began to blaspheme

23:44E Lit about the sixth hour

23:44F Or whole earth

23:44G Lit the ninth hour

23:53H Or interred, or laid

23:54I Lit was dawning ; not in the morning but at sundown Friday

Luke 24 Notes

24:5A Lit and inclined their faces to the ground

24:13B Lit village, which name is

24:13C Lit about 60 stadia ; 1 stadion = 600 feet

24:16D Lit their eyes

24:34E Gk is specific that this refers to the Eleven and those with them.

John 1 Notes

1:1A The Word (Gk Logos) is a title for Jesus as the communication and the revealer of God the Father; Jn 1:14,18; Rv 19:13.

1:5B Or grasp, or comprehend, or overtake ; Jn 12:35

1:7C Or through it (the light)

1:9D Or The true light who comes into the world gives light to everyone, or The true light enlightens everyone coming into the world.

1:11E The same Gk adjective is used twice in this verse: the first refers to all that Jesus owned as Creator (to His own); the second refers to the Jews (His own people).

1:11F The same Gk adjective is used twice in this verse: the first refers to all that Jesus owned as Creator (to His own); the second refers to the Jews (His own people).

1:12G Or become

1:13H Lit bloods ; the pl form of blood occurs only here in the NT. It may refer either to lineal descent (that is, blood from one's father and mother) or to the OT sacrificial system (that is, the various blood sacrifices). Neither is the basis for birth into the family of God.

1:13I Or not of human lineage, or of human capacity, or of human volition

1:14J Or and dwelt in a tent ; lit and tabernacled ; this word occurs only here in John. A related word, referring to the Festival of Tabernacles, occurs only in 7:2; Ex 40:34-38.

1:14K Son is implied from the reference to the Father and from Gk usage.

1:18L Lit is in the bosom of the Father

1:26M Or in

1:31N Or in

1:33O He refers to God the Father, who gave John a sign to help him identify the Messiah. Vv. 32-34 indicate that John did not know that Jesus was the Messiah until the Spirit descended upon Him at His baptism.

1:33P Or in

1:33Q Or in

1:39R Lit about the tenth hour. Various methods of reckoning time were used in the ancient world. John probably used a different method from the other 3 Gospels. If John used the same method of time reckoning as the other 3 Gospels, the translation would be: It was about four in the afternoon.

1:41S In the NT, the word Messiah translates the Gk word Christos ("Anointed One"), except here and in Jn 4:25 where it translates Messias.

1:43T Or he, referring either to Simon Peter (vv. 41-42) or Andrew (vv. 40-41)

John 2 Notes

2:6A Lit 2 or 3 measures

2:11B Lit this beginning of the signs ; Jn 4:54; 20:30. Seven miraculous signs occur in John's Gospel and are so noted in the headings.

John 3 Notes

3:29A Lit with joy rejoices

3:31B Or of earthly things

John 4 Notes

4:5A Lit piece of land

4:6B Lit the sixth hour ; see note at Jn 1:39; an alt. time reckoning would be noon

4:9C Or do not share vessels with

4:25D In the NT, the word Messiah translates the Gk word Christos (“Anointed One”), except here and in Jn 1:41 where it translates Messias.

4:39E Lit because of the woman’s word

4:41F Lit because of His word

4:50G Lit the word

4:52H Or seven in the evening ; lit at the seventh hour ; see note at Jn 1:39; an alt time reckoning would be at one in the afternoon

John 5 Notes

5:13A Lit slipped away, there being a crowd in that place

John 6 Notes

6:19A Lit 25 or 30 stadia ; 1 stadion = 600 feet

6:60B Lit hear

6:71C Lit Judas, of Simon Iscariot

John 7 Notes

7:2A Or Booths

7:39B Lit the Spirit was not yet ; the word received is implied from the previous clause.

7:42C Lit seed

John 8 Notes

8:11A Or Sir ; Jn 4:15,49; 5:7; 6:34; 9:36

8:33B Or offspring ; lit seed ; Jn 7:42

8:53C Lit Who do You make Yourself?

8:59D Or Jesus hid Himself

John 9 Notes

9:24A Give glory to God was a solemn charge to tell the truth; Jos 7:19.

9:32B Lit From the age

John 10 Notes

10:22A Or Hanukkah, also called the Feast of Lights ; this festival commemorated the rededication of the temple in 164 B.C.

10:24B Lit How long are you taking away our life?

10:24C Or openly, or publicly

John 11 Notes

11:18A Lit 15 stadia ; 1 stadion = 600 feet

11:33B The Gk word is very strong and probably indicates Jesus' anger against sin's tyranny and death.

11:38C See note at 11:33.

11:39D Lit he already stinks

John 12 Notes

12:11A Lit going away

12:34B Or exalted

12:38C Lit which he said

12:43D Lit loved glory of men more than glory of God ; v. 41; Jn 5:41

John 13 Notes

13:23A Lit reclining at Jesus' breast ; that is, on His right; Jn 1:18

John 18 Notes

18:30A Lit an evil doer

18:40B Or robber ; see Jn 10:1,8 for the same Gk word used here

John 19 Notes

19:12A Lit Pilate was trying

19:14B Lit the sixth hour ; see note at Jn 1:39; an alt. time reckoning would be about noon

19:20C Or Aramaic

19:29D Or with hyssop

19:31E Lit great

19:39F Lit 100 litrai ; a Roman litrai = 12 ounces

John 20 Notes

20:1A Lit She saw the stone removed

20:16B Rabbouni is also used in Mk 10:51

20:18C Lit these things

20:22D Lit He breathed and said to them

20:31E Or that the Messiah, the Son of God, is Jesus

John 21 Notes

21:1A The Sea of Galilee; Sea of Tiberias is used only in John; Jn 6:1,23

21:6B Lit they cast

21:7C Lit he girded his garment

21:8D Lit about 200 cubits

21:14E Lit was revealed (v. 1)

21:23F Lit this word

21:25G Lit scroll

Acts 1 Notes

1:4A Or He was eating, or He was lodging

1:14B Or prayer, with their wives and Mary

Acts 2 Notes

2:14A Lit let this be known

2:15B Lit it's the third hour of the day

2:23C Or used the hand of lawless ones

2:30D Lit one from the fruit of his loin

2:37E Lit they were pierced to the heart

2:40F Or crooked, or twisted

2:45G Or to all, according to one's needs

Acts 3 Notes

3:1A Lit at the ninth hour

3:5B Or he paid attention to them

3:15C Or the Prince, or the Ruler

3:21D Or receive, or retain

Acts 4 Notes

4:2A Lit proclaiming in Jesus the resurrection from the dead

4:6B Or high-priestly class, or high-priestly clan

4:11C Lit the head of the corner

4:27D Lit peoples

4:35E Lit person as anyone had need

Acts 5 Notes

5:18A Lit laid hands on

5:37B Lit and drew people after him

Acts 6 Notes

6:2A Or to serve tables

Acts 7 Notes

7:1A Lit "Are these things so?"

7:23B Lit 40, it came into his heart

7:54C Or were cut to the quick

7:55D Lit and

Acts 8 Notes

8:10A Or This is the power of God called Great

8:13B Or he kept close company with

8:16C Or yet fallen on

8:24D Gk words you and pray are pl

8:26E Or is a desert place

8:35F Lit Philip opened his mouth

8:40G Or Philip was found at, or Philip found himself in

8:40H Or Ashdod

Acts 9 Notes

9:29A Lit Hellenists ; that is, Gk-speaking Jews

9:34B Or and get ready to eat

Acts 10 Notes

10:3A Lit About the ninth hour

10:9B Lit about the sixth hour

10:14C Perhaps profane, or non-sacred ; Jews ate distinctive food according to OT law and their traditions, similar to modern kosher or non-kosher foods.

10:30D Lit at the ninth hour

10:37E Or word ; lit thing

10:46F Or and magnifying

Acts 11 Notes

11:2A Lit those of the circumcision

11:14B Lit speak words

11:18C Or repentance to life

11:28D Or the whole world

Acts 12 Notes

12:12A Lit John who was called Mark

12:18B Or was no small disturbance

Acts 13 Notes

13:2A Or were worshiping

13:17B Lit with an uplifted

13:24C Lit Before the face of His entrance

13:27D Lit fulfilled them

13:33E Or I have begotten You

13:34F Lit faithful holy things

13:47G Lit the end

Acts 14 Notes

14:8A Lit from his mother's womb

14:22B Lit the souls of the 14:28C Or spent no little time

Acts 15 Notes

15:23A Lit Writing by their hand:

15:27B Lit things through word

15:37C Lit John who was called Mark

Acts 16 Notes

16:3A Lit wanted this one

16:16B Or a spirit by which she predicted the future

16:18C Lit out this hour

Acts 17 Notes

17:4A Lit as well as not a few

17:18B Lit this seed picker ; = one who picks up scraps

17:19C Or Mars Hill, the oldest and most famous court in Athens with jurisdiction in moral, religious, and civil matters

Acts 18 Notes

18:3A Or leatherworkers, or less likely manufacturers of theatrical properties

18:6B Lit •clean

18:19C Or and addressed

18:25D Or in the Spirit

18:26E Lit they received him

Acts 19 Notes

19:12A Or that also sweatbands and sweatcloths or handkerchiefs

19:23B Lit was not a little

19:24C Lit provided not a little

19:31D Lit not to give himself

Acts 20 Notes

20:22A Or in the Spirit

20:26B Lit •clean

Acts 21 Notes

21:38A Lit 4,000 men of the Assassins

21:39B Lit of no insignificant city

Acts 22 Notes

22:14A Lit to hear a voice from His mouth

Acts 23 Notes

23:23A Lit at the third hour tonight

Acts 24 Notes

24:23A Lit him

Acts 25 Notes

25:3A Lit asking a favor against him

Acts 27 Notes

27:4A Lit sailed under the lee

27:7B Lit sailed under the lee

27:14C Lit Euraquilo, a violent northeast wind

27:16D Or Clauda

27:27E Lit thought there was land approaching them

27:28F Lit 20 fathoms

27:28G Lit 15 fathoms

Acts 28 Notes

28:4A Gk Dike, a goddess of justice

28:11B Gk Dioscuri, twin sons of Zeus

28:14C Lit brothers

28:15D Lit brothers

Romans 1 Notes

1:1A Or Jesus, a called apostle

1:3B Lit was of the seed of David

1:4C Or the spirit of holiness, or the Holy Spirit

1:5D Or Him for ; lit Him into

1:5E Or the obedience that is faith, or the faithful obedience, or the obedience that comes from faith ; Rm 16:26

1:5F Or Gentiles

1:8G Or because your faith

1:13H Lit I don't want you to be unaware

1:13I Lit have some fruit

1:14J Or non-Greeks

1:17K Or revealed out of faith into faith

1:17L Or The one who is righteous by faith will live

1:19M Or what is known

1:26N Lit natural use

1:27O Lit natural use

1:27P Or in themselves

1:32Q Lit things are worthy of death

1:32R Lit even take pleasure in

Romans 2 Notes

2:1A Lit Therefore, O man, every one

2:4B Or patience, because you do not recognize

2:13C Or will be justified or acquitted

2:20D Or the embodiment

2:29E Or heart — spiritually, not literally

2:29F In Hb, the words Jew, Judah, and praise are related.

Romans 3 Notes

3:5A Or shows, or demonstrates

3:5B Lit I speak as a man

3:9C Lit Greeks

3:19D Lit those in the law

3:19E Or become guilty before God, or may be accountable to God

3:20F Or will be declared righteous, or will be acquitted

3:21G When capitalized, the Law and the Prophets = OT

3:22H Or through the faithfulness of Jesus Christ

3:23I Or and lack the

3:25J Or as a propitiatory sacrifice, or as an offering of atonement, or as a mercy seat ; 2Co 5:21; Heb 9:5

3:26K Or and justify, or and acquit

3:27L Or what principle?

3:27M Or a principle

Romans 4 Notes

4:1A Lit our ancestor according to the flesh

4:2B Or was declared righteous, or was acquitted

4:5C Or who acquits, or who justifies

4:11D Lit righteousness of faith

4:13E Lit righteousness of faith

4:16F Or not to those who are of the law only

4:25G Or because of

4:25H Or because of

4:25I Or acquittal

Romans 5 Notes

5:12A Or have sinned

5:14B Or figure, or pattern ; = an OT person or thing that prefigures a NT person or thing

5:16C Or acquittal

5:18D Lit is justification of life

Romans 6 Notes

6:4A Or in newness

6:6B Lit man ; = the person before conversion

6:6C Lit that the body of sin

6:7D Or justified ; lit acquitted

6:7E Lit from sin

6:13F Or members

6:13G Or members

6:16H Lit that to whom you offer yourselves

6:17I Or entrusted

6:19J Lit I speak humanly ; Paul is personifying sin and righteousness as slave masters.

6:19K Or your human nature

6:19L Or members

6:20M Lit free to righteousness

6:21N Lit what fruit do you have

6:22O Or holiness

Romans 7 Notes

7:5A Lit of our members

7:6B Lit in newness

7:13C Lit good become death to me?

7:21D Or law

7:22E Lit inner man

7:23F Lit my members

7:23G Lit my members

7:25H Or Thanks be to God — (it is done) through Jesus Christ our Lord!

Romans 8 Notes

8:3A Or weak

8:3B Lit in the likeness of sinful flesh

8:5C Or those who are

8:5D Or those who are

8:9E Or provided that

8:10F Or the body will die

8:10G Or spirit

8:17H Or provided that

Romans 9 Notes

9:1A Or testifying with me by the Holy Spirit

9:3B Lit were anathema

9:5C Lit them, according to the flesh

9:5D Or the Messiah, the One who is over all, the God who is blessed forever, or Messiah. God, who is over all, be blessed forever

9:7E Lit seed

9:7F Lit called

9:8G Lit children of the flesh

9:10H Or Rebekah conceived by the one act of sexual intercourse

9:16I Or on the one running; lit on the one willing

9:28J Or land

9:29K Gk Sabaoth ; this word is a transliteration of the Hb word for Hosts, or Armies.

Romans 10 Notes

10:4A Or goal

10:15B Or welcome, or timely

Romans 11 Notes

11:8A Lit stupification

11:9B Lit table

11:11C Or transgression

11:12D Or transgression

11:14E Lit flesh

11:26F Or And then all

11:29G Or are not taken back

Romans 12 Notes

12:6A Or the

12:19B Lit the

Romans 13 Notes

13:6A Lit to this very thing

13:8B Or Leave no debt outstanding to anyone

Romans 14 Notes

14:1A Or weak in the Faith

14:22B Lit have faith

14:23C Or faith

14:23D Or faith

Romans 15 Notes

15:5A Lit God of

15:23B Lit now, having no longer a place in these parts

15:28C Lit delivered this fruit

15:31D Lit that my service for

Romans 16 Notes

16:1A Others interpret this term in a technical sense: deacon, or deaconess, or minister, or courier

16:3B Traditionally, Priscilla, as in Ac 18:2,18,26

16:5C Lit the firstfruits

16:6D Or Maria

16:7E Either a feminine name or "Junias," a masculine name

16:7F Or are outstanding among

16:18G Lit belly

16:22H Or letter in the Lord, greet you

16:26I Or the obedience that is faith, or the faithful obedience, or the obedience that comes from faith ; Rm 1:5

1 Corinthians 1 Notes

1:14A Or I am thankful

1:20B Or wise

1:26C Lit wise according to the flesh

1:29D Lit that not all flesh

1 Corinthians 2 Notes

2:11A Or things

2:11B Or things

2:13C Or things with spiritual words

2:14D Or unspiritual; lit natural

2:14E Or judged, or discerned

2:15F Or judge, or discern

2:15G Or judged, or discerned

1 Corinthians 3 Notes

3:3A Lit and walking according to man

3:4B Lit not [just] human

3:9C Or are coworkers belonging to God

3:15D Lit yet so as through fire

1 Corinthians 4 Notes

4:3A Lit a human day

1 Corinthians 5 Notes

5:11A Or now I wrote

5:11B Lit anyone named a brother

1 Corinthians 6 Notes

6:4A Or life, appoint those (as a command)

6:6-8B Lit brothers

6:9C Lit adulterers, passive homosexual partners, active homosexual partners

6:13D Lit both it and them

1 Corinthians 7 Notes

7:1A Lit not to touch

7:2B Lit because of immoralities

7:6C Lit say this ; some interpret the word as referring to v. 2, vv. 2-5, v. 5 (wholly or in part), or v. 6

7:10D Or separate from, or divorce

7:14E Lit the brother

7:17F Lit called each

7:20G Lit in the calling

7:21H Or But even though you can become free, make the most of your position as a slave.

7:28I Lit in the flesh

7:36J Or virgin, if his passions are strong,

7:38K Or marries off

7:38L Or marry her off

1 Corinthians 8 Notes

8:11A Or destroyed

1 Corinthians 9 Notes

9:5A Lit a sister as a wife

9:23B Lit partner of it

1 Corinthians 10 Notes

10:6A Lit they desired

10:7B Or to dance

10:8C Lit them committed sexual immorality

10:9D Lit them tested

10:10E Lit them complained

10:10F Or the destroying angel

10:18G Lit Look at Israel according to the flesh

1 Corinthians 11 Notes

11:3A Or the husband is the head of the wife

11:6B Lit a woman

11:16C Or no such

11:27D Lit be guilty of the body

1 Corinthians 12 Notes

12:1A Or concerning spiritual things, or spiritual gifts

12:6B Lit God acts all things in all

12:13C Or with, or in

1 Corinthians 13 Notes

13:12A Or indirectly

1 Corinthians 14 Notes

14:2A Or in spirit, or in his spirit

14:10B Lit and none is without a sound

14:11C Gk barbaros = in Eng "a barbarian." To a Gk, a barbaros was anyone who did not speak Gk.

14:12D Lit zealous of spirits ; spirits = human spirits, spiritual powers, or the Holy Spirit

14:16E Or praise by the Spirit

14:16F Lit the one filling the place of the uninformed

14:22G Lit that languages are for a sign

1 Corinthians 15 Notes

15:1A Or I make known

15:2B Or believed without careful thought, or believed in vain

15:8C Or one whose birth was unusual, He

15:14D Or proclamation is useless, and your faith also is useless, or proclamation is empty, and your faith also is empty

15:32E Lit Ephesus according to man

15:32F Lit what to me the profit?

15:34G Lit Sober up righteously

15:37H Lit but a naked seed

1 Corinthians 16 Notes

16:2A Or Each Sunday

16:9B Lit for a door has opened to me, great and effective

16:11C With the brothers may connect with Paul or Timothy.

16:22D Or Maran atha (an Aram expression transliterated into Gk) = Our Lord has come!

2 Corinthians 1 Notes

1:1A Lit the

1:4B Or trouble, or tribulation, or trials, or oppression ; the Gk word has a lit meaning of being under pressure.

1:12C The word fleshly (characterized by flesh) indicates that the wisdom is natural rather than spiritual.

1:17D Or a worldly, or a fleshly, or a selfish

1:19E Or Silas ; Ac 15:22-32; 16:19-40; 17:1-16

1:24F Or we lord it over, or we rule over

2 Corinthians 2 Notes

2:1A Lit I decided this for myself

2:1B Lit not again in sorrow to come to you

2:2C Lit the one pained

2:14D Or always leads us in a triumphal procession, or always causes us to triumph

2:14E Lit in the Christ, or in the Messiah ; 1Co 15:22; Eph 1:10,12,20; 3:11

2 Corinthians 3 Notes

3:3A Lit ministered to

3:5B Lit from

3:14C Lit their thoughts were hardened

3:18D Or are reflecting

3:18E Or from the Spirit of the Lord, or from the Lord, the Spirit

2 Corinthians 4 Notes

4:4A Or the gospel of the glorious Christ, or the glorious gospel of Christ

4:17B See note at 2Co 1:4.

2 Corinthians 5 Notes

5:12A Lit in face

5:14B Or For the love of Christ impels, or For the love of Christ controls

5:16C Or regard

5:16D Lit anyone according to the flesh

5:16E Or have regarded

5:16F Lit Christ according to the flesh

5:16G Or regard

5:21H Or be a sin offering

2 Corinthians 6 Notes

6:1A Or As we work together

6:11B Lit Our mouths have been open

6:15C Or Beliar, a name for the Devil or antichrist in extra-biblical Jewish writings

2 Corinthians 7 Notes

7:1A Or spirit, perfecting holiness

7:2B Lit Make room for us

7:5C Lit our flesh

7:7D Or lamentation, or mourning

7:13E Lit the joy of Titus

2 Corinthians 8 Notes

8:10A Lit to will

8:11B Lit finish the doing

8:13C Lit but from equality

8:18D Lit churches, in the gospel

8:19E Or grace

2 Corinthians 9 Notes

9:4A Or in this confidence

9:6B Lit And this

9:13C Or your obedient confession to

9:14D Or will long for

2 Corinthians 10 Notes

10:2A Or are living as a non-Christian ; lit are walking according to flesh

10:3B Lit flesh

10:3C Lit war according to flesh

10:4D Lit fleshly

10:7E Or You are looking at things outwardly

2 Corinthians 11 Notes

11:1A Or Yes, you are putting up with me

11:10B Or silenced

11:12C Lit cut off

11:15D Lit end

11:17E Or business, or confidence

11:18F Lit boast according to the flesh

11:23G Lit and in deaths

11:28H Lit Apart from

2 Corinthians 12 Notes

12:7A Or me, an angel

12:15B Lit for your souls, or for your lives

12:19C Or Have you thought . . . to you?

12:20D Lit be as you want

12:21E Or come again my God will

2 Corinthians 13 Notes

13:1A Lit mouth

13:5B Or you are disqualified, or you are counterfeit

13:9C Or become complete, or be restored

Galatians 1 Notes

1:7A Or gospel

1:8B Or you, let him be condemned, or you, let him be condemned to hell ; Gk anathema

1:11C Lit not according to man

1:16D Lit flesh and blood

1:20E Lit Behold, before God

Galatians 2 Notes

2:6A Or God is not a respecter of persons ; lit God does not receive the face of man

2:11B Or he was in the wrong

2:16C Or by the faithfulness of Jesus Christ

2:16D Or by the faithfulness of Christ

2:16E Lit law all flesh will not

2:17F Or servant

2:18G Lit rebuild those things that

2:20H Or flesh

Galatians 3 Notes

3:2A Lit by law works or faith hearing or hearing the message

3:5B Lit by law works or faith hearing or hearing the message

3:9C Or with believing Abraham

3:15D Lit I speak according to man

3:15E Or will, or testament

3:22F Lit under sin

3:24G The word translated guardian in vv. 24-25 is different from the word in Gl 4:2. In our culture, we do not have a slave who takes a child to and from school, protecting the child from harm or corruption. In Gk the word paidogogos described such a slave. This slave was not a teacher.

Galatians 4 Notes

4:3A Or spirits, or principles

4:8B Or beings

Galatians 5 Notes

5:19A Lit obvious, which are:

5:22B Or faithfulness

Ephesians 1 Notes

1:4A Or In His sight in love

1:10B Or dispensation ; lit house law (Gk oikonomia)

1:10C Lit the fulfillment of times

1:11D Or we also were chosen as an inheritance, or we were also made an inheritance

1:14E The possession could be either man’s or God’s

1:17F Or the Father of glory

1:17G Or you the Spirit

1:18H Lit the eyes of your heart

1:21I Lit every name named

Ephesians 2 Notes

2:2A Lit ruler of the domain of the air

2:2B Lit sons of disobedience

2:4C Lit love with which He loved us

2:16D Or death in Himself

Ephesians 3 Notes

3:5A Lit to the sons of men

3:12B Or through His faithfulness

Ephesians 4 Notes

4:2A Or tolerating

4:4B Lit called in one hope

4:8C Or He led the captives

4:9D Or the lower parts, namely, the earth

4:10E Or fulfill ; Eph 1:23

4:19F Lit with greediness

4:21-22G Or Jesus. This means: take off (as a command)

4:22H Lit man ; = a person before conversion

4:22-23I Or desires; renew (as a command)

4:23-24J Or minds; and put on (as a command)

4:29K Lit for the building up of the need

4:30L Or Spirit, by whom you were sealed

Ephesians 5 Notes

5:3A Or be named

5:6B Lit sons of disobedience

5:16C Lit buying back the time

5:26D Or having cleansed

Ephesians 6 Notes

6:1A Lit parents in the Lord

6:2B Or is a preeminent commandment

6:3C Or life on the earth

6:5D Lit according to the flesh

6:6E Lit from soul

6:11F Or schemes, or tricks

6:21G Or deacon

6:24H Lit all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in incorruption

Philippians 1 Notes

1:3A Or for your every remembrance of me

1:6B Or work among you

1:7C Or because you have me in your heart

1:10D Or until

1:13E Lit praetorium, a Lat word that can also refer to a military headquarters, to the governor's palace, or to Herod's palace.

1:17F Lit sincerely, intending to raise tribulation to my bonds

1:19G Or vindication

1:27H Lit soul

Philippians 2 Notes

2:6A Or to be grasped, or to be held on to

2:11B Gk kurios = Yahweh; Is 42:8 LXX

2:16C Or Offer, or Hold out

Philippians 3 Notes

3:9A Or through the faithfulness of Christ

3:14B Or upward

Philippians 4 Notes

4:3A Or true Syzygus, possibly a person's name

4:17B Lit fruit

Colossians 1 Notes

1:1A Lit the

1:6B Or and truly recognized God's grace

1:9C Or all spiritual wisdom and understanding

1:12D Or holy ones'

Colossians 2 Notes

2:9A Or of the deity

2:9B Or nature lives in a human body

2:15C Or them through it ; = through the cross

2:16D Or or sabbaths

2:17E Or substance belongs to

2:18F Or no one cheat us out of your prize

2:18G Lit fleshly

2:23H Lit value against indulgence of the flesh

Colossians 3 Notes

3:5A Lit death the members on the earth

3:9B Lit man ; = a person before conversion

3:10C Lit his

3:11D Lit Where

3:23E Lit do it from the soul

1 Thessalonians 1 Notes

1:1A Or Silas ; Ac 15:22-32; 16:19-40; 17:1-16

1:8B Or in every place news of your faith

1:9C Lit report about us

1 Thessalonians 2 Notes

2:16A Or to the end

1 Thessalonians 3 Notes

3:3A Or are destined for

1 Thessalonians 4 Notes

4:1A Lit walking

4:4B Or to acquire his own wife ; lit to possess his own vessel

4:6C Lit things

4:11D Lit to practice one's own things

4:12E Or may live respectably

4:12F Or not need anything, or not be in need

4:14G Or in

4:15H Or a word of the Lord

4:15I Or certainly not precede

4:16J Or command

4:18K Or comfort

1 Thessalonians 5 Notes

5:14A Or who are disorderly, or who are undisciplined

2 Thessalonians 1 Notes

1:1A Or Silas ; Ac 15:22-32; 16:19-40; 17:1-16

2 Thessalonians 2 Notes

2:3A Or rebellion

2:4B Or temple

2 Thessalonians 3 Notes

3:2A Or for the faith is not in everyone

3:8B Or bread

3:12C Or bread

1 Timothy 1 Notes

1:10A Or slave traders

1 Timothy 2 Notes

2:15A Lit if they continue

1 Timothy 3 Notes

3:2A Or hospitable, skillful in teaching

1 Timothy 5 Notes

5:3A Lit Honor

5:9B Lit be enrolled

5:17C Or of respect and remuneration ; lit of double honor

5:22D Lit to lay hands on = to ordain

5:24E Lit follow

1 Timothy 6 Notes

6:1A Or owners

6:8B Or food and shelter

6:10C Or is the root

6:19D Or foundation

2 Timothy 1 Notes

1:6A Or to rekindle

1:7B Or us the Spirit

1:12C Or guard what I have entrusted to Him, or guard my deposit

2 Timothy 2 Notes

2:20A Or special

2:20B Or ordinary

2:21C Lit from these

2:21D Or an honorable

2:24E Or everyone, skillful in teaching

2 Timothy 3 Notes

3:16A Lit breathed out by God ; the Scripture is the product of God's Spirit working through men; 2Pt 1:20-21.

2 Timothy 4 Notes

4:3A Or to hear what they want to hear ; lit themselves, itching in the hearing

Titus 1 Notes

1:1A Or according to

1:1B Or corresponds

1:6C Or believing

1:10D Lit the circumcision

Titus 2 Notes

2:11A Or appeared, bringing salvation ; or appeared with saving power

2:15B Or despise

Philemon Notes

5A Lit faith that you have toward

9B Or an ambassador

10C In Gk, Onesimus means useful.

12D Lit you — that is, my inward parts

Hebrews 1 Notes

1:2A Lit ages

1:3B Or reflection

1:3C Or representation, or copy, or reproduction

1:3D Or He sat down on high at the right hand of the Majesty

1:5E Or have begotten You

1:6F Or And again, when He

1:7G Or spirits

1:7H Or ministers

1:8I Or about

1:9J Or associates

1:13K Or enemies a footstool for Your feet

Hebrews 2 Notes

2:2A Or valid, or reliable

2:10B Or pioneer, or leader

2:11C Or father, or origin, or all are of one

2:17D Lit things

Hebrews 3 Notes

3:14A Or confidence

Hebrews 4 Notes

4:1A Or that any of you might seem to have missed it

4:3B Or rest), just as

Hebrews 5 Notes

5:1A Lit things

5:7B Lit In the days of His flesh

Hebrews 6 Notes

6:2A Or about baptisms

6:6B Or while

6:15C Lit he

Hebrews 7 Notes

7:5A Lit have come out of Abraham's loins

7:6B Lit their

7:7C Or Beyond any dispute

7:10D Lit still in his father's loins

7:16E Or fleshly

7:25F Or He is able to save completely

Hebrews 8 Notes

8:8A Lit with them

Hebrews 9 Notes

9:24A Or antitype, or figure

9:28B Lit time, apart from sin,

Hebrews 10 Notes

10:29A Or ordinary

Hebrews 11 Notes

11:1A Or assurance

11:1B Or conviction

11:3C Or the worlds were, or the ages were

11:3D Or word

11:11E Or By faith Abraham, even though he was past age — and Sarah herself was barren — received the ability to procreate since he

11:18F Lit called

11:19G Or a foreshadowing, or a parable, or a type

Hebrews 12 Notes

12:2A Or us, looking to Jesus

12:2B Or the founder and completer

12:2C Or who instead of the joy lying before Him ; that is, the joy of heaven

12:8D Lit discipline, of which all have become participants

12:13E Or so that the lame will not be turned aside

12:23F Or registered

12:28G Or let us give thanks, or let us have grace

Hebrews 13 Notes

13:3A Or mistreated, since you are also in a body

13:12B Or set apart, or consecrate

13:17C Or rulers

13:19D Lit to do this

13:21E Or perfect

James 1 Notes

1:8A Or A doubting, or A double-minded

1:12B Lit trial, used as a collective

1:13C Or evil persons, or evil things

1:21D Lit evil excess

1:21E Lit save your souls

1:23F Lit at the face of his birth

1:27G Or before the

James 2 Notes

2:14A Or Can faith, or Can that faith, or Can such faith

James 3 Notes

3:2A Lit in word

3:2B Lit to bridle the whole body

3:3C Lit whole body

3:9D Or praise the

James 4 Notes

4:1A Lit war in your members

4:4B Or Unfaithful people!

4:5C Or He who caused the Spirit to live in us yearns jealously, or the spirit He caused to live in us yearns jealously, or He jealously yearns for the Spirit He made to live in us

James 5 Notes

5:4A Gk Sabaoth ; this word is a transliteration of the Hb word for Hosts, or Armies.

5:5B Or hearts in

5:11C Or have persevered

1 Peter 1 Notes

1:6A Or In this [fact] rejoice

1:7B Lit may be found for

1:9C Or your lives

1:11D Or inquired about the person or time

1:11E Or the sufferings of Christ

1:11F Lit the glories after that

1:13G Lit Therefore, when you have the loins of your mind girded

1:20H Or foreknown

1:22I Or purified your souls

1:22J Or intensely

1 Peter 2 Notes

2:6A Or valuable

2:6B Lit head of the corner

2:6C Or be disappointed

2:8D Or a stone causing stumbling

2:8E Or a rock to trip over

2:9F Or generation, or nation

2:9G Or the mighty deeds

2:11H Or against the soul

2:12I Or among the nations, or among the pagans

2:13J Or creature

2:13K Lit king

2:17L Lit king

2:18M Or unscrupulous ; lit crooked

2:19N Lit if, because of conscience toward God

2:25O Or Overseer

1 Peter 3 Notes

3:1A Lit may be gained

3:3B Lit and of putting around of gold items

3:4C Lit Instead, the hidden man of

3:7D Lit understanding as the weaker vessel

3:8E Lit sympathetic, loving the brothers

3:13F Or mistreat, or do evil to

3:13G Or you are partisans for the good ; lit you are zealots

3:15H Or sanctify ; lit set apart

3:15I Or who demands of you an accounting

3:16J Lit good

3:16K Or keeping a clear conscience

3:16L Lit your good behavior in Christ

3:17M Lit if the will of God should will

3:18N Or the Righteous One in the place of the unrighteous many

3:18O Or in the flesh

3:18P Or in the spirit, or in the Spirit

3:19Q Or In whom, or At that time, or In which

3:20R Lit souls

3:21S Or the appeal

1 Peter 4 Notes

4:1A Or arm

4:1B Or perspective, or attitude

4:1C Or the one who has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin

4:2D Lit for desires of human beings

4:3E Or Gentiles

4:4F Lit you don't run with them into the same pouring out

4:6G Or in the flesh

4:6H Or in the spirit

4:12I Lit the burning

4:15J Or as one who defrauds others

1 Peter 5 Notes

5:5A Lit you tie around yourselves

5:6B Lit in time

5:10C Lit Himself

5:10D Or a little while, or to a small extent

5:12E Or Silas ; Ac 15:22-32; 16:19-40; 17:1-16

2 Peter 1 Notes

1:1A Or obtained a faith of the same kind as ours

1:3B Lit As His

1:3C Or to

1:15D Or my death

2 Peter 2 Notes

2:5A Lit righteousness, as the eighth

2:18B Or people who are barely escaping

2 Peter 3 Notes

3:12A Or and speed the coming

3:18B Or now and forever

1 John 1 Notes

1:6A Or not living according to

1 John 2 Notes

2:5A Or truly completed

2:10B Or in it

2:15C Lit things in

2:16D Lit that is in

1 John 3 Notes

3:1A Or at what sort of love

3:4B Or also commits iniquity

3:6C Or not keep on sinning

3:6D Or who keeps on sinning

3:8E Or practices

3:9F Or not practice sin

3:9G Or to keep on sinning

3:12H Or slaughtered

1 John 4 Notes

4:2A Or confesses Jesus to be the Christ

4:9B Or revealed in us

4:10C Or a

4:12D Or remains among

4:15E Or acknowledges

4:18F Or fear has its own punishment or torment

1 John 5 Notes

5:16A Lit He

5:16B Or is a sin

5:18C Or the one who is born of God keeps himself

2 John Notes

1A Or Presbyter

1B Or Kyria, a proper name; probably a literary figure for a local church known to John; the children would be its members.

6C Lit in it

7D Or confess Jesus Christ as coming in the flesh

12E Lit mouth to mouth

3 John Notes

1A Or my beloved

2B Or Beloved

2C Lit as your soul prospers

5D Or Beloved

5E Lit are doing a faithful thing

8F Or coworkers for

11G Or Beloved

14H Lit mouth to mouth

Jude Notes

7A Lit and went after other flesh

12B Or like spots

14C Or came

15D Lit convict all

19E Or natural

Revelation 1 Notes

1:1A Or Revelation of, or A revelation of

1:1B Or soon

1:2C Or witness

1:2D Lit as many as he saw

1:3E Or follow, or obey

1:4F Or the sevenfold Spirit

1:6G Or made us into (or to be) a kingdom of priests ; Ex 19:6

1:7H Or impaled

1:7I Or all the tribes of the land

1:7J Or will wail because of Him

1:9K Lit the witness of Jesus

1:10L Or in spirit ; lit I became in the Spirit

1:13M Or like a son of man

1:15N Lit many

1:16O Lit like the sun shines in its power

Revelation 3 Notes

Revelation 4 Notes

4:2A Or in spirit ; lit I became in the Spirit

4:6B Lit In the middle of the throne

4:8C Or they never rest

Revelation 5 Notes

5:6A Or standing in the middle of

5:9B Or purchased

Revelation 6 Notes

6:1A Lit saw when

6:1B Or Go!

6:2C Lit went out conquering and in order to conquer

6:3D Or Go!

6:4E Or was granted ; lit was given

6:5F Or Go!

6:7G Or Go!

6:8H Or a greenish gray

6:9I Lit souls

6:10J Or Master

6:12K Lit I saw when He opened

6:12L Or the full moon

Revelation 7 Notes

7:2A Lit angels to whom it was given

7:14B Lit My lord

7:15C Or will spread His tent over

Revelation 9 Notes

9:3A Or authority

9:10B Or authority

9:11C Or as king over them

9:11D Or destruction

9:11E Or destroyer

9:21F Or magic potions, or drugs ; Gk pharmakon

Revelation 10 Notes

10:1A Or a halo on his head

10:1B Or feet

10:6C Or be a delay

10:7D Or slaves

10:11E Lit And they said to me

10:11F Or prophesy again against

Revelation 11 Notes

11:1A Lit Arise

11:2B Or Gentiles

11:3C Lit I will give to

11:7D Or wild animal

11:8E Lit Their corpse

11:8F Or lie on the broad street

11:8G Or spiritually, or symbolically

11:9H Lit And from

11:11I Or spirit

Revelation 12 Notes

12:1A Or great symbolic display ; see Rv 12:3

12:3B Or another symbolic display

12:3C Or crowns

12:5D Or rule

12:6E Lit God, that they might feed her there

12:17F Or seed

Revelation 13 Notes

13:1A The beasts in Rv 13:1,11 are customarily referred to as “he” or “him” rather than “it.” The Gk word for a beast (therion) is grammatically neuter.

13:3B Lit be slain to death

13:3C Lit amazed after the beast

13:5D Or to rule

13:6E Lit He opened his mouth in

13:8F Or scroll

13:8G Or written in the book of life of the Lamb who was slaughtered from the foundation of the world

13:10H Lit Here is the perseverance

13:11I Or ram

13:14J Or statue, or likeness

13:15K Or give breath, or give life

13:16L Or stamp, or brand

13:18M Or This calls for wisdom

13:18N Or count, or figure out

13:18O Or is a man's number, or is the number of a person

Revelation 14 Notes

14:2A Or voice

14:3B Or purchased

14:4C Or purchased

14:8D Lit Another angel, a second

14:8E Or wine of her passionate immorality

14:9F Lit Another angel, a third

14:11G Lit They have no rest

14:12H Lit Here is the perseverance

14:12I Or and faith in Jesus, or and faithfulness to Jesus

14:14J Or like a son of man

14:20K Lit 1,600 stadia

Revelation 15 Notes

15:1A Or and awesome symbolic display

15:2B Or harps of God ; = harps belonging to the service of God

Revelation 16 Notes

16:2A Lit and a severely painful sore

16:3B Lit and every soul of life

16:8C Or It

16:8D Or authority

16:9E Or authority

16:10F Lit They

16:17G Or on the air

16:19H Or the Gentile cities

16:20I Lit mountains were not found

16:21J Lit about a talent ; talents varied in weight upwards from 75 pounds

Revelation 17 Notes

17:1A Or by many

17:3B Or in spirit

17:3C Lit was filled

17:9D Or This calls for the mind with wisdom

17:17E Or sovereignty

17:18F Or has sovereignty or rulership

Revelation 18 Notes

18:2A Or prison

18:5B Or sins have reached up

18:12C Or bronze, or copper

18:13D Or amomum, an aromatic plant

18:13E Or perfume

18:13F Or bodies

18:20G Or God pronounced on her the judgment she passed on you ; see Rv 18:6

18:24H Lit in her

Revelation 19 Notes

19:10A Or to

19:10B Or the Spirit

19:12C Or diadems

19:13D Or a robe dipped in

19:15E Or rule

19:17F Or in

Revelation 20 Notes

20:4A Lit souls

20:6B Or authority

20:13C Lit each

Revelation 21 Notes

21:3A Or tent, or tabernacle

21:4B Or the first things

21:10C Or in spirit

21:16D A stadion (sg) = about 600 feet; 12,000 stadia = 1,400 miles.

21:21E Or The public square

Revelation 22 Notes

22:2A Or was a tree of life, or was a tree that gives life

22:3B Lit in it

22:6C Or soon

Introduction to Genesis

AUTHOR

Although the author of Genesis is not identified in the book, its integral part in the Pentateuch (Genesis—Deuteronomy) suggests that the author of these five books was the same person. The books of the Pentateuch give evidence of unity through their common plot, theme (divine promises), central figure (Moses), and literary interconnections. Jewish and Christian traditions attribute the Pentateuch to Moses, whose life paralleled the events of Exodus—Deuteronomy (cp. 2 Ch 23:18; Lk 16:29,31; Ac 28:23).

Passages in Exodus—Deuteronomy testify that Moses authored diverse materials (Ex 17:14; 24:4-8; Nm 33:2; Dt 31:9,22). Although we cannot be certain about the contents of the "book of the law [of Moses]" (Jos 1:7-8; 8:31; 23:6; 2 Kg 14:6), its association with Moses established a "psychology of canonicity" that set the pattern of divinely authoritative writings (Nm 12:6-8; Dt 18:15; 34:10). Scholars have usually recognized that minor post-Mosaic contributions must exist in the Pentateuch, such as the report of Moses' death (Dt 34). Some have contended that the first-person ("I") sections were written by Moses and that another author set them in a third-person ("Moses") narrative frame. Prior to the nineteenth century, the consensus remained that Moses wrote the essential whole, probably during the wilderness sojourn.

THE RELIABILITY OF GENESIS

Since the events of Genesis preceded Moses, this raises the question of where he got his information. For most of the Christian era, the principal explanation was divine revelation coupled with the availability of written records, such as genealogies and stories.

Gradually, though, by the nineteenth century, a new consensus arose among "critical" scholars. They believed that the Pentateuch was the product of a series of unnamed Jewish editors who progressively stitched together pieces of preexisting sources dating from the tenth to the sixth centuries B.C. Instead of being Mosaic, the Pentateuch was viewed as a mosaic. Such scholars today often view the stories in the Bible's first five books as fabrications conceived hundreds of years after the supposed events, perhaps during the exile.

There is significant evidence, however, that Genesis reflects the political and cultural setting of the second millennium B.C. The structure and contents of chapters 1–11 generally parallel the Babylonian epic Atrahasis (c. 1600 B.C.). Social and religious practices among the patriarchs correlate better with the earlier period than with the first millennium BC. For example, Abraham's marriage to his half-sister Sarah was prohibited under the Mosaic law (20:12; Lv 18:9). It is unlikely that the Jews of the exilic period would have fabricated offensive events or preserved such stories unless these were already well-entrenched traditions. Also the prevalent use of the El compounds for the name of God (e.g., God Almighty–El Shaddai, 17:1) in Genesis contrasts with their virtual absence in first-millennium B.C. texts. The tolerant attitude toward Gentiles and the unrestricted travels of the patriarchs do not suit the later setting. The evidence, when considered as a whole, supports the position that Genesis remembers authentic events.

GENESIS AND ANCIENT MYTHS

The parallels between chapters 1–11 and creation and flood myths have elicited the question, Is the Bible merely a Hebrew version of myths about beginnings?

When weighing the importance of parallels, these principles should be kept in mind. First, not all parallels are equally significant, since minor ones can be attributed to common content.

Second, the identity of who is borrowing from whom cannot be definitively concluded. Often it is best to assume a universal memory as the source. Third, the functions of the stories are much different. For example, the flood story of the Babylonian Gilgamesh Epic is incidental to the main idea of telling how Gilgamesh sought immortality. In the Bible, by contrast, the flood narrative is central to the development of the theme.

That the Bible's theology is divergent from the polytheism of antiquity argues against the Bible's dependence on sources from other cultures. The author of Genesis was aware of the cultural context of the nations and often crafted his accounts to counter the prevailing view. The historical framework of chapters 1–11 (e.g., "these are the records of," 2:4; 5:1) and the genealogies (chaps. 4–5; 10–11) indicate that the author presented a historical account, not a literary myth.

Genesis Articles

Are the Days of Genesis to Be Interpreted Literally?

by Ted Cabal

This question has stoked controversy among conservative Christians in recent times, but it has proved to be of little interest to theistic evolutionists (those who accept evolution as God's mechanism in creation) and those rejecting Genesis as God's inerrant Word. The debate has been primarily between young- and old-earth creationists, who believe that God literally created the various kinds of living things (as opposed to the common descent of Darwinism). Both sides hold that humans have not descended from other species, and both reject the atheism and macroevolutionary theory of neo-Darwinism.

The two creationist camps, however, differ in interpreting the creation days of Genesis. If the days were consecutive 24-hour periods, and if the earth was created on the first day, then calculations based on biblical genealogies reveal that the earth was created only thousands of years ago. If the days were either of indeterminate length or nonconsecutive, then the Bible does not reveal when the earth was created. Interestingly, both sides agree that the genealogies reveal that Adam and Eve were specially created only thousands of years ago.

Young earth creationists (YCs) interpret the days as 24-hour, consecutive periods for reasons such as the following: (1) The days in Gn 1 are consecutively numbered and comprised of an "evening and morning." (2) Exodus 20:8-11 commands a literal week of six days of work and one day of rest based on God's original creation/rest week. The two weeks would seem, then, to be of equal duration. (3) According to Rm 5:12, "sin entered the world through one man, and death through sin," but old-earth creationism would have animal death entering the world before the sin of Adam and Eve.

Old earth creationists (OCs) argue against 24-hour creation days for reasons such as these: (1) The Hebrew word for "day" (yom) is used in different ways in the creation account. For instance, Gn 1:5 refers yom only to daytime (daylight), not nighttime. Also, Gn 2:4, literally translated, speaks of "the yom that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens." (2) God's rest on the seventh "day" has no evening and morning (Gn 2:2-3), and Heb 4:3-11 portrays this same Sabbath as continuing to the present time. (3) Adam could not have named all the birds and animals in 24 hours according to Gn 2.

Both sides believe they have strong arguments favoring their interpretation and rebutting the other side. And historically, debate regarding biblical interpretation has often led to a clearer understanding of God's Word. But it is also highly debatable whether this issue merits the rancor and division often attending it. Some YCs accuse OCs of compromising the Bible with evolutionary science. Some OCs charge YCs with undermining biblical credibility by generating a false conflict between science and the Scriptures.

Happily, one thing is not debatable among those who believe the Bible: even if the correct interpretation of the creation days is not readily apparent in the present generation, the Bible can be trusted in every way. Debates about biblical interpretations should not be interpreted as the failure of Holy Scripture.

Evolution: Fact or Fantasy?

by Phillip E. Johnson

Evolution is a fact only at a very small scale. It is fantasy when it is used to explain how plants and animals came into existence or how human beings supposedly evolved from apelike ancestors. We might summarize the fantasy by saying that, where the theory of evolution is true, it is not very interesting, and where it is most interesting, it is not true.

If "evolution" merely refers to a process of cyclical (back and forth) variation in response to changing environmental conditions, then evolution is a fact that can be observed both in nature and in laboratory experiments.

For example, when a population of insects is sprayed with a deadly chemical like DDT, the most susceptible insects die but the individuals most resistant to the poison survive to breed and leave offspring, which inherit the genes that provide resistance. After many generations of insects have been sprayed, the entire surviving population may be comprised of the DDT-resistant variety, and some new form of insect control will have to be applied. Such changes are not permanent, however, because the resistant mosquitoes are more fit than the others only for as long as the insecticide is applied. When the environment becomes free of the toxic chemical, the insect population tends to revert to what it was before.

A similar effect explains how disease-causing bacteria become resistant to antibiotic drugs like penicillin, which then are no longer as effective in controlling the disease as they formerly were.

Almost all illustrations of "evolution in action" in textbooks or museum exhibits are similar to these examples. They involve no increase in complexity or appearance of new body parts or even permanent change of any kind. Small-scale, reversible population variations of this sort are usually called microevolution, although "adaptive variation" would be a better term.

It is misleading to describe adaptive variation as "evolution," because the latter term commonly refers also to macroevolution. Macroevolution is the grand story of how life supposedly evolved by purely natural processes from very simple beginnings to become complex, multicelled plants and animals, and eventually human beings, without God's participation being needed at any step along the way.

Charles Darwin assumed that macroevolution was merely microevolution extended over very long periods of time. Biology textbooks, museums, and television programs still teach people to make the same assumption, so that examples of microevolution are used as proof that complex animals and even human beings evolved from simpler organisms by a similar process.

The primary flaw in the story of macroevolution is that all plants and animals are packed with information—the complicated instructions that coordinate the many processes enabling the body and brain to function. Even Richard Dawkins, the most famous living advocate of Darwin's theory, admits that every cell in a human body contains more information than all the volumes of an encyclopedia, and every one of us has trillions of cells in his or her body, which have to work together in marvelous harmony.

The greatest weakness of the theory of evolution is that science has not discovered a process that can create all the necessary information, which can be likened to the software that directs a computer. Without such a demonstrated creative process, evolution is merely a story, because its supposed mechanism can neither be duplicated in a laboratory nor observed in nature.

It is true that there are patterns of similarity among living creatures. For example, humans, apes, mice, worms, and even plants have many similar genes. The important question is not whether there are similarities among all living things but whether those similarities came about through a natural process akin to the observable examples of adaptive variation that we find in textbooks and museum exhibits.

One mistake Christians often make in debating evolution is to take on too many issues at once, rather than starting with the most important problem and solving it first. For example, evolution requires a time scale of many millions of years, while many people understand the Bible to allow for an earth history of only a few thousand years. The evolutionary time scale is debatable, but debating it involves several complex scientific disciplines and distracts attention from the most important defect of the theory of evolution. The only mechanism the evolutionists have is a combination of random variation and natural selection, illustrated by the survival of the insects that happened to be resistant to an insecticide. This Darwinian mechanism has never been shown to be capable of creating new genetic information or new complex body parts such as wings, eyes, or brains. Without a mechanism that can be demonstrated to be capable of the necessary creation, the theory of evolution is just a fantasy with no real scientific basis.

The Bible teaches, "In the beginning God created" and "In the beginning was the Word." A simple way of explaining this basic principle is to say that a divine intelligence existed before anything else and that intelligence was responsible for the origin of life and for the existence of all living things, including human beings. No matter how much time we might allow for evolution to do the necessary creating, the evidence shows that the process would never get started, because all evolution can do is to further minor variations in organisms that are already living, without any change in their basic classification. When the Bible says, "In the beginning God created" (Gn 1:1), it is presenting us with a fact, which we need to know to understand everything else, including what we were created for and how God wants us to live.

The Bible also says that God created men and women in His own image. That, too, is a fact. If it were not true, there would be no science, because no theory of evolution can demonstrate how intelligence came into existence, including the intelligence of misguided people who misuse science to try to explain creation without allowing any role to God.

"In the beginning was the Word." The Bible says it and, properly understood, the evidence of science confirms it. Anyone who says otherwise is peddling fantasy, not fact.

Are the Biblical Genealogies Reliable?

by Kenneth A. Mathews

Biblical genealogies must be understood in the context of the ancient Near East. Typically, genealogies expressed more than family descent. They reflected political and socioreligious realities among people groups. For example, "Salma fathered Bethlehem" (1 Ch 2:51) describes the founder of the village Bethlehem. Therefore the genealogies were fluid, showing differences due to changing political and social realities.

The adoption of Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, by Jacob created a new way of interpreting the 12-tribe configuration (Gn 48:5). "Joseph" appears in the blessing of Jacob (Gn 49:22-26), but the blessing of Moses counts 12 tribes by deleting Simeon and dividing the house of Joseph into Ephraim and Manasseh (Dt 33:17). Thus, as we see from this example, the contents of genealogies were selective and not intended to be exhaustive and precise.

Shortening genealogies by omitting names was commonplace. Matthew's genealogy of Jesus exhibits a pattern in which three sets of 14 generations are achieved (Mt 1:17). The number 14 was desirable because of the importance attributed to the symbolic meaning of seven ("complete, perfect"). Thus "Joram fathered Uzziah" (Mt 1:8) omits three generations (2 Ch 21:4–26:33) so as to accomplish the desired number (cp. Ezr 7:1-5 with 1 Ch 6).

From this example we discover another unexpected feature in biblical genealogies. Genetic terms, such as "son of" and "father," were flexible in meaning, sometimes indicating a "descendant" and "grandfather or forefather." The word "daughter," for example, could mean a subordinate village affiliated with a nearby city and thus be translated "surrounding settlements" (Jdg 1:27, NIV).

One technique in the ancient world for legitimizing a new king was the concoction of a fictional ancestry. Moreover, scholars often assume that persons named in genealogies are metaphors for tribes and actually have no familial connection. The charge of fiction has been leveled against the genealogies of the 12 tribes of Israel as descended from the one person Jacob (e.g., Gn 46:8-27; Nm 1:20-43; 1 Ch 2:1-2).

The argument that the term "sons of Jacob" reflects only an evolving social reality and not a reliable domestic one is an unnecessary assumption that contradicts the plain meaning of the biblical witness. The biblical account of the patriarchs reveals a family story primarily and a national one secondarily. Also, since genealogies impacted domestic, legal, and religious matters of importance, reliable genealogical records and censuses were fastidiously maintained (Nm 1:45; Ru 4:10; 1 Ch 4:33; 9:1; Neh 7:5; see Nm 27:1-11; Ezr 2:62).

A special problem is the long life spans in Genesis 5:1-32. In that passage, for example, Adam is said to have lived to be 930 years old.

The Sumerian King List presents a list of the reigns of kings and includes a reference to a great flood. The King List claims fantastic numbers, the longest reign at 72,000 years. After the flood the regal years diminish. Despite its fantastic numbers, however, the King List includes historical individuals, not just legendary ones.

Both Genesis and the Sumerian King List remember a time in the ancient past when people lived for long periods. The life spans before Noah's flood were longer and afterward gradually decreased. The long lives of the patriarchs, such as Adam and Noah, shrink to moderate figures when compared to the Sumerian King List. A significant difference is that Adam's genealogy is not for political purposes but instead shows that the descending ages of humanity were due to a moral factor when God judged a corrupt humanity (Gn 6:1-8).

Although the years are reliable, this genealogy cannot be used to reconstruct the age of the earth. Genesis does not present genealogies for establishing absolute chronology (see 1 Kg 6:1). Also, Genesis 5 does not possess a complete list. Genesis 5 and 11 exhibit 10-name genealogies that consist of stereotypical patterns. The two genealogies are also linear, meaning that they include only one descendant per generation (segmented genealogies have more; see Gn 10:1-32). Since genealogies may telescope generations (see above), and since Genesis 5 is highly stylized, it is likely an "open" (selective) genealogy that spans many generations.

Did Those Places Really Exist?

by E. Ray Clendenen

The ancient Egyptian equivalent of a "voodoo doll" was to write one's enemy's name on a clay statue or pottery vessel and then smash the pot while pronouncing a curse. Archaeologists have uncovered hundreds of such pottery pieces, called "execration texts." Dating about the time of Joseph (nineteenth–eighteenth century B.C., Egyptian twelfth dynasty), they contain the names of many towns in Palestine and their rulers considered at the time to be enemies of the Egyptian state. Many of these are towns mentioned in the Bible, which underlines the authenticity of the biblical account. They also verify that cities were ruled at the time by "kings." Some of the towns identified are Acco (Jdg 1:31), Aphek (Jos 12:18), Achshaph (Jos 11:1), Ashkelon (Jos 13:3), Beth-shean (Jos 17:11,16), Beth-shemesh (Jos 15:10), Bozrah (Gn 36:33), Damascus (Gn 14:15; 15:2), Ekron (Jos 13:3), Laish (Jdg 18:29), Midian (Ex 2:15-16), Migdol (Ex 14:2; Nm 33:7), Rehob (Nm 13:21; Jos 19:28,30), Shechem (Gn 12:6; 33:18; 37:12-14), Byblos, and Jerusalem (Jos 10:1).

Although not referring to the patriarch of Israel, the name Aburahana as an Egyptian transcription of a Semitic name is also found in these texts (m and n often interchange in such transcriptions).

The Hebrew word chanikim, rendered "trained," found in the Bible only in Genesis 14:14, is also found in the execration texts, supporting the credibility of the Genesis 14 account.

Does the Old Testament Teach Salvation by Works?

by E. Ray Clendenen

According to Genesis 15:6, Abram did not buy righteousness with his faith. Rather, God gave Abram righteousness, which means right standing or acceptability before God. The biblical message is clear and consistent in both testaments: the curse of condemnation and death that rests on everyone because of Adam's sin (Rm 5:12-21) cannot be removed and exchanged for righteousness through any amount of good deeds that one might do. The exchange can be effected only by God as a free act of His grace in response to a person's faith (Hab 2:4; Rm 1:16-17; 4:1-25; Gl 3:6-9).

What matters in this exchange is not the quality or degree of faith but rather God's grace; faith is not a means to earn acceptance with God. The apostle Paul considered Abraham a model of transforming faith even though the content of Abraham's faith was different from Paul's. Abraham simply trusted God and His promise to give him a son and then other descendants. Presumably Abraham would have supplemented God's promise here with that of Genesis 12:1-3, trusting that his offspring would be vast not only in number but also in significance, bringing blessing to the world. The content of Abraham's faith was not inconsistent with that of Paul, only less specific. Also, Abraham believed what God would do, and Paul believed what God had done.

Finally the New Testament explains that faith itself cannot purchase or serve as the foundation for acceptance with God. Only the cross of Christ can purchase our salvation. But since the eternal and timeless God is sovereign over events, He could apply the work of Christ to Old Testament believers in response to their faith, even though they had no specific knowledge of Christ.

Is Mormonism Compatible with the Bible?

by Chad Owen Brand

Joseph Smith Jr., the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, claimed he was restoring the genuine church to the earth, a church absent since the first century. But is Mormonism truly Christian?

Students who ask such questions often differentiate among denominations, sects, cults, and world religions. Denominations are movements that differ on doctrinal issues but hold to a common core of beliefs about God, Christ, and the Scriptures. They see God as trinitarian, Christ as unique in His human-divine person, and the Scriptures as the authoritative text passed down from the prophets and apostles. Sects agree with the denominations on these matters, but they often have some characteristic that places them on the fringe of Christianity, such as the radical separatism of the Amish. Cults are connected to Christianity in that they employ Christian Scripture and appeal to Jesus, but they also differ from the traditional faith in certain core areas. They may deny or reinterpret the Trinity. They may have novel views about Christ. They may reject part of the Christian Scripture, add new texts to it, or claim to have an infallible interpretation that replaces traditional doctrine with a new approach. World religions are those historic traditions that include the Christian religion as well as others, such as Islam and Hinduism.

Is Mormonism Christian? If the question asks only whether Mormonism is connected to Christianity in some sense, the answer would be "Yes." But that is not enough. Religions such as Baha'i claim some connection to Christianity, and Muslims believe in the second coming of Jesus. In order for a faith to be Christian it must pass both the doctrinal test and the experiential test. Doctrinally it must be orthodox on the key issues outlined above, and experientially it must see salvation as a faith encounter with Christ alone as the pathway to being right with God. How does Mormonism stack up?

Mormonism is neither monotheistic nor, technically, trinitarian. In one of the Mormon scriptures, The Pearl of Great Price, we are told that the world was fashioned "by the Gods." In his famous King Follett sermon, Joseph Smith stated that God was once as we are and that we may become as He is—a God. Mormonism teaches that Father, Son, and Spirit are all God, but it denies the historic Christian view on the Trinity. Mormon scholar Robert Millet has written that the Trinity is comprised of "Three Beings." Mormonism is not trinitarian but tritheist. Mormon theology teaches that Jesus is an incarnation of Elohim, conceived as the literal son of God. But He is not the unique incarnation, since we also can be incarnations of the Father. Jesus is important to the whole of Mormon theology but in a different way than for traditional Christians. In Mormonism we are not saved by the atoning work of Christ but by obedience to Mormon principles. Mormons follow the Bible as Scripture, but they have placed three other texts alongside the Bible—The Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and The Pearl of Great Price. It is in the last two books in particular that the novel Mormon doctrines can be found.

Because of these departures from standard Christian teachings, Mormonism falls outside orthodox Christianity.

Does the Bible Provide Guidance Regarding Genetic Engineering?

by Scott B. Rae

Since human beings weren't able to manipulate the genetic code when the Bible was written, it doesn't directly address genetic engineering. It does, however, give general principles regarding medical technology that apply to genetic technologies.

Humans are created in God's image and likeness, and so He charges them to exercise dominion over His creation (Gn 1:27-28). Their mandate? To subdue and kindly master the earth, unlocking its resources to benefit themselves and their successors—in a sense continuing the spirit of creation by being subordinate "creators" with God in unlocking the secrets of the creation to benefit humankind.

The command to subdue the earth takes on added complexity after the entrance of sin into the world in Genesis 3. Exercising dominion over creation after the fall now involves dealing with sin's effects in the world. Dominion includes working toward improving the creation or reversing the effects of the entrance of sin. The most important of sin's effects is the reality of death (Gn 3:2-3), which is universal in its scope (Rm 5:12). That is, after the fall, death, decay, and deterioration face every person. Thus dominion over creation largely involves dealing with death and disease (disease being the cause of death in most cases), which can alleviate the harshness of life after the fall, even genetic disease. In order to exercise dominion God (through general revelation) provided human beings with resources necessary for accomplishing that task. That ingenuity and wisdom come from God as His "common grace" gifts to humans (Is 28:23-29).

The knowledge and skill necessary to develop the kinds of technologies that enable humankind to subdue the creation are part of God's general revelation. Humans didn't acquire the ingenuity and skill to develop sophisticated technology on their own apart from God. It's not an accident that these technologies came to be so useful in our exercise of dominion over creation. They are gifts from God. Thus technologies that generally improve the lot of humanity and specifically help reverse the effects of sin's entrance into the world are part of God's common grace. The skill and expertise needed to bring about these creation-subduing technologies come ultimately from God, being His good gifts to humans in harnessing creation.

This is particularly the case when it comes to medical technology. Since death is one of the primary consequences of the entrance of sin into the world, and disease is the primary cause of death and physical deterioration, medical technologies bringing cures to diseases and other afflictions are among God's most gracious gifts to the human race.

Medical technology can be part of God's common grace to assist humans in fulfilling their role in exercising loving dominion. The more controversial technology of genetic engineering should be used only for therapeutic reasons (repairing damage), in keeping with the creation mandate. It should not be used for eugenic reasons (creating a kind of super race, as Hitler and the Nazis hoped to do, considering other races inferior to the so-called Aryans). C. S. Lewis warned that if "the dreams of some scientific planners are realized" by using their power to make their descendants into what they please, then their "conquest of Nature . . . means the rule of a few hundreds of men over billions upon billions of men."

Notable Christian Apologist: William Paley

by Ted Cabal

In an era that dignified science while degrading revelation, God raised William Paley (1743–1805). Receiving his education at Cambridge in mathematics, he would go on to produce history's most influential argument from design for God's existence. Written while suffering a debilitating disease, Paley's Natural Theology compares nature's intricate design to the complexity of a watch. If a person walking in a field stumbled upon a timepiece, they would assume it had a designer even if they had never seen a watch before. How much more should those who examine the exquisite craftsmanship of objects such as the eye infer a master Craftsman.

Many believed for much of the twentieth century that David Hume and Charles Darwin had definitively demolished the argument philosophically and scientifically. But Paley's argument is making a comeback. Mathematician/philosopher William Dembski has demonstrated recently that design inferences of the watch/Watchmaker sort can legitimately be philosophically constructed. And biologist Michael Behe has presented a powerful contemporary scientific version of the argument in Darwin's Black Box.

Paley also produced A View of the Evidences of Christianity in which he defended the veracity of biblical miracles. Unlike miracle claims from other sources, the stellar character of Christ and the willingness of the apostles to die for their message vouchsafe biblical miracles. Paley, in the mainstream of Christian apologetic tradition, also pointed to fulfilled prophecy as reason to trust the Bible.

Genesis Study Notes

1:1 The Hebrew word for "God," Elohim, is grammatically plural, but does not indicate a numerical plural (i.e., "gods"). Hebrew uses the plural form to indicate honor or intensity, sometimes called the "plural of majesty." The consistent appearance of a singular adjective (Ps 7:9) or verb (Gn 20:6) used with Elohim shows that the one God is intended. Where the plural adjective or verb occurs, the context determines whether Elohim means the "gods" of the nations (Ex 20:3) or whether the plural agreement is simply due to scribes being more grammatically precise (Gn 19:13; cp. 1:26-27). From the Israelite standpoint the oneness of the true Deity is never in question. In Dt 6:4 "The LORD," that is, Yahweh the God of Israel, is called "our Elohim," and declared to be "One."

1:14-18 The lights were "signs" that mark off time periods. They were not to be heeded as astrological signs, correlating heavenly movements with events on earth. The worship of heavenly bodies is condemned(Dt 4:19).

1:26-27 "Let Us make . . ." (3:22; 11:7; Is 6:8) does not indicate multiple gods. Such a polytheistic view would be inconsistent with the lofty theology of the chapter and with the singular "His own image" (Gn 1:27;cp. 5:1-2). Ancient theories of the universe's origin typically explained creation as the outcome of either a sexual cohabitation of male and female deities or of a battle between the major deity and some other hostile entity. The Bible uniformly affirms that God is asexual with no corresponding female consort. God made the universe by His authoritative speech, not by battling chaos deities. Genesis 1 was written in part to show that the view of the physical world current at that time (i.e., physical entities representing various deities) was wrong. The cosmos is inanimate and entirely under the control of the one God. Plural and singular forms are combined in 1:26-27 (cp. "the Spirit of God," v. 2), reflecting God's unity and yet His fullness. Subsequent scriptural revelation develops this further.

Although humans are created in the "image" and "likeness" of God (the terms are essentially synonyms; cp. 5:3), it does not follow that God has a body. "Image" or "likeness" often refers to a physical representation of something that may be non-material. Man was created to serve as God's representative to govern the earth. Since man is God's image-bearer, murder merits the strongest retribution (9:6). The OT prohibits making any material image of God (Ex 20:1-4; Dt 4:16) because God is spirit (Jn 4:24). In Lk 24:39 Jesus explains that a spirit "does not have flesh and bones" (see Is 31:3). Because God is spirit, He is invisible (Jn 1:18; Rm 1:20; Col 1:15; 1 Tm 1:17).

2:2-3 "Rested" (Hb shabat) does not imply fatigue but means only "ceased" because it is connected to the completion of the work of creation.

2:4-26 Chapter 2 is a second creation account only in the sense that it gives a more detailed accounting, not a contradictory one. While chapter 1 provides a general description, chapter 2 is specific. Twofold accounts were common in ancient theories of creation (e.g., the Babylonian story of Atrahasis). The differences in the order of the creation events are due to the narratives' respective purposes. The first gives a loosely chronological account, gathering creation events into a discernible pattern to show the symmetry of creation's purpose. The second is topical, focusing on the sixth day by expanding on the creation and the relationship of the man and woman. Genesis 2 presupposes chapter 1 and does not duplicate all the creation events.

2:7,21-22 The creation of the first man and woman is not myth. The author of the account intends to portray a historical event. The heading "these are the records/family records" (v. 4) occurs 11 times in Genesis to introduce genealogies and historical narratives (e.g., 5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 11:27). The first man (Hb adam) is treated in genealogies as a historical individual named "Adam" (5:1; Lk 3:38). Since the name Adam means "man(kind)," the author also intends him to represent humanity in general (Gn 3:17-18; cp. Rm 5:12-21). The account of the man and woman's creation views them as special creations, not merely types of humans. The concept of evolution of humans from lower forms is inconsistent with the author's purpose in this narrative.

2:10-14 The lack of archaeological evidence for the garden of Eden would not mean that the place existed only in myth. Despite advances in archaeology, what has been discovered of the ancient Near East is only a small percentage of what might one day be found. The two rivers Tigris and Euphrates exist today in modern Iraq. The identities of the Gihon and Pishon are uncertain but may have been local streams or canals. Floods, climatic changes, and land shifts since ancient times may well have brought about significant changes in topography.

2:19 The verb rendered "formed" can also be "had formed" (NIV), which would alleviate the alleged contradiction with the order of animals created before man (1:24-26). Moreover, chapter 2 may be understood as a topical telling, setting the creation of the animals in contrast to the creation of the woman so as to highlight her dignity as fully human.

3:1 While snakes do not speak, this is more than just a folk story explaining why people tend to find them repulsive. The animal's life is finite and will end in a future destruction ("all the days of your life," v. 14). Snakes/serpents in ancient times were associated with both life and death, wisdom and evil (Nm 21:6,8; Mt 10:16). Thus they served as effective symbols for wisdom that gives life or for evil that leads to death. Though a literal creature, the serpent in the garden embodied the evil being (Satan) that opposed God and the human couple (see Jb 1–2; Zch 3:1-2; Rm 16:20). The serpent was an unclean animal (Lv 11:42) and symbolized the enemies of God (Is 14:29; Rv 12:9; 20:2). The snake talked to the woman as would a deceitful opponent.

3:4 The couple did not immediately die physically (cp. 2:17). By God's grace, their death was postponed till a later time. But their expulsion from the garden (vv. 23-24) shows that the word of God was indeed fulfilled as the immediate consequence of their disobedience. They were cut off from access to the tree of life, which symbolized the source of life (2:9; Rv 2:7; 22:2,14,19). In Israel expulsion from the tabernacle in the camp, such as quarantine (e.g., Lv 13:46), meant that the person was ceremonially dead until he was declared fit again. The human couple's expulsion signaled their spiritual death (see Eph 2:1). That their physical death occurred is confirmed by the refrain "then he died" in Adam's genealogy (Gn 5:5). Physical death for humans was the result of disobedience in the garden (Rm 5:12-21; 6:23).

3:8 That God walked is a common figure of speech (anthropomorphism). From the human standpoint, it is not possible to describe God's interaction with people without attributing to Him some of the properties of a human body, such as back or face (Ex 33:11,23), eyes or ears (1 Kg 8:29; Ps 34:15), arm or hands (Ex 3:20; 6:6; Dt 4:34; 33:3; Is 53:1; Heb 1:10; 10:31). God does not have a physical body (see note on 1:26-27), although He can manifest Himself in the form of a man (Gn 18:16-22;32:30; Ezk 1:26) or even a burning bush (Ex 3:2-4) or a fiery pillar (Ex 13:21-22).

3:9-11 The Bible is full of affirmations of God's unlimited knowledge (see 16:13; Ex 3:7; Jb 12:13; 28:23-24; 36:4; Ps 33:13-15; 139:1-4; Is 46:10; Jr 23:24; Mt 10:29; Ac 15:8; Heb 4:13). Therefore God's questions here are rhetorical; He is not unaware of the couple's location and what had transpired in the garden. The passage describes God as a parent who instructs His children with restoration as His purpose. He did not question the serpent, because He had no plan to redeem the tempter.

3:14 The snake's penalty does not suggest a belief that snakes once walked on legs. The characteristic slithering of the snake was a sufficient symbol of its degradation. Food laws were to prohibit the eating of animals who crawled along the ground, making them abhorrent to Israel (Lv 11:42). The mention of "dust" further symbolized the snake's humiliation for its crime (see Mc 7:17).

3:15 This predicted battle between the serpent and the woman would not be a literal confrontation in the garden. The language is figurative, indicating the life-and-death struggle between the adversary and the human family borne by the woman. Like the word "sheep" in English, the word "seed" in Hebrew is both singular and plural, meaning either descendants without number, taken as a whole, or one particular descendant. The passage incorporates both meanings by referring to the ongoing opposition to the people of God by their enemies and by predicting the rise of a particular seed, Jesus Christ, who will destroy the serpent in the end (Rm 16:20; Rv 12:9-10).

3:16 The woman's penalty was not in bearing children but in the pain attached to giving birth. "Yet he will dominate you" does not warrant the enslavement of women as chattel. Woman is also created in the image of God and has the honored role of giving birth by which the blessing for all humanity is realized (1:26-28). The Lord's pronouncement predicts the future rivalry between the sexes for dominance, a rivalry resulting from the sinful condition of the man and woman. These words are not an exhortation directed to the man to dominate his wife. Hebrew law recognized the vulnerability of women and required special deference to them (Ex 22:22; Dt 25:5-10). The NT explicitly commands husbands to love and honor their wives (Eph 5:25; Col 3:19; 1 Pt 3:7), and Christian husbands and wives observe their spiritual equality (Gl 3:28) while carrying out their respective God-given roles.

3:20 Although skeptics find it absurd that Eve "was the mother of all the living," the meaning of her name makes sense in this passage. Her husband recognized that she was the source of the "seed" (v. 15) that would eventually defeat the serpent and restore life. She was the first woman to bear children (4:1), and Adam showed faith in God's promise that she would bear more in the future.

3:22 God's admission that the man "has become like one of Us" does not indicate that the serpent's suggestion that God was insecure about His position was correct. God was not threatened by the man's wisdom when He expelled him from the garden, but it was necessary to prohibit the couple's access to the tree of life or thepenalty of death for disobedience could not be carried out. Although the human couple would die, it was ultimately merciful to deny them the tree; otherwise they would live forever in a sinful and painful world. Godgraciously provided for their new environment outside the garden (v. 21), and ultimately for their eternal salvation through the promised "seed." For the plural "Us," see note on 1:26-27.

4:4-5 God preferred Abel's offering not because He liked meat more than vegetables or shepherds more than farmers, but because Abel's offering was made in faith (Heb 11:4). He offered the best of his flock ("the firstborn"), and Cain offered only "some" of his produce (Gn 4:3; cp. Ex 23:19; Lv 2:14).

4:12,16-17 That Cain founded a city does not contradict the Lord's declaration that Cain will be a "restless wanderer." "Nod" sounds similar to the word "wanderer" (Hb nad), creating a wordplay between the punishment of wandering and the region where he roamed. The point of the curse is that Cain could no longer live a settled life as a farmer. Therefore he developed the first urban center "east of," that is, no longer affiliated with, his parents and their descendants.

4:15 Although the only other humans mentioned thus far are his parents, Cain's fear of retaliation for the murder of Abel is understandable. Adam fathered many children during his 930 years (5:4-5), producing future generations that could exact revenge. That God marked to safeguard Cain does not contradict the divine provision of capital punishment (9:6). By this sign God declares that the taking of life is His prerogative, in contrast to Cain's presumptuous murder of Abel. With the threatening development of widespread violence, the Lord instituted capital punishment as a societal obligation to restrict murder (6:11-12; 8:21).

4:17 The age-old question, Who was Cain's wife?, has raised the specter that Cain committed incest, which was prohibited (Lv 18:6-18). But the Mosaic laws were not given until much later, and even the implied condemnations of incest in Genesis (Lot in 19:30-38; Reuben in 35:22; 49:3-4) relate to a time later than that of Cain and his siblings.

4:19,23 The Bible nowhere explicitly forbids polygamy, and Lamech is the first of many polygamists in the OT, including favored patriarchs and kings (e.g., 29:21-30; 1 Sm 27:3). We must not assume, however, that the absence of explicit prohibition entails divine approval. First, God's mind and will may also be expressed implicitly through story and description. Here Lamech's arrogant vengefulness is clear, showing him to be a true descendant of the murderer Cain. His practice of polygamy, then, is to be understood as typical of the wicked whose willful pride seeks to be satisfied by the multiplication of wives or other symbols of status and acts of self-indulgence (Gn 26:34; 28:9; 36:2; Dt 17:17). Second, God's mind and will can be gauged from positive statements like Gn 2:21-25, which mandates the divine pattern of monogamous marriage (see Mal 2:14,16; Mt 19:4-6). Plural marriage is not, and never has been, biblical marriage. When polygamy occurred, it had predictably disastrous results for the family (e.g., 2 Sm 13:4-37). We may not fully understand why God did not denounce Abraham, Jacob, David and others when they corrupted true marriage in this way, but we should not take His silence as indicating His lack of interest in the matter.

5:24 That God "took" Enoch obliquely describes his ascension to heaven (cp. Heb 11:5). He alone in this genealogy avoided death, thereby reflecting the hope that death was not inevitable. The statement in Jn 3:13 that "no one has ascended into heaven" except the Son of Man refers in context to the acquisition of spiritual truth, not to physical ascension as with Enoch and Elijah (2 Kg 2:11). If Nicodemus cannot understand the spiritual significance of Jesus' teaching when He uses an earthly analogy (spiritual birth), he cannot understand the things of heaven where there is no analogy (Jn 3:12).

6:2-4 The "sons of God" and the "Nephilim" are not evidence of polytheism or mythical lore about a race of giants. On the contrary, the account repudiates the pagan belief concerning a race of giants by insisting that the children born to "the sons of God" were no more than "men" (v. 4)—not semi-divine beings. These were perhaps the warrior class, infamous for their acts of violent oppression in this decadent period (vv. 5-8). The "sons of God" have been traditionally identified either as fallen angels (see Jb 1:6; 2:1) who had intercourse with women (1 Pt 3:19-20; 2 Pt 2:4), or the favored descendants of Seth (see Dt 14:1; Jn 1:12-13) who intermarried with the wicked Cainite women (cp. the two genealogies in Gn 4–5). In the first interpretation, the Nephilim are usually understood as the descendants of fallen angels. The translation "giants," popularized by the KJV, reflected the Septuagint gigantes, which relied on the allusion to a race of tall people in Nm 13:32-33. Based on the phrase "both in those days and afterwards" (Gn 6:4), others interpret the Nephilim as contemporaries of "the sons of God," not their children. The Nephilim of Moses' day could not have been descendants of the same Nephilim, since these were destroyed in the flood. The Hebrew spies exaggerated ("we seemed like grasshoppers," Nm 13:33) in their allusion to the "Nephilim" because of their ancient reputation for violence.

6:6-7 Although "regret" is the customary translation of the Hebrew verb in verse 6, its basic meaning is to "be pained." This is the sense here, as suggested by the parallel "be grieved." As it hurts a loving parent to see the disobedience of his children, so it pained God to see how wicked men had become. Human regret arises from one's inability to foresee or alter the effects of one's actions. But because of God's perfect knowledge and unlimited power He is not subject to these human limitations. The correspondence between human emotions and the heart of God provides insight into the mystery of God's nature. Although the Bible describes God as responding with human emotions, thecorrespondence is not exact. People often act out of sinful, irrational, or uncontrolled emotion, but God's emotion is always consistent with His righteous character and eternal purposes (cp. 2 Th 2:13). A close reading of the passage shows that God's disappointment was not with human creation but with human sin. God is not indifferent to sin's effects, but His grief is not a feeling of helplessness. Coupled with His pained heart is the just recompense of His anger (cp. Ps 78:40-41; Is 63:10).

6:9–8:22 The story of Noah and the ark testifies to the Bible's reliable memory of this catastrophic event. Other ancient cultures had similar stories, including the Sumerian account of Atrahasis and the Babylonian epic of Gilgamesh. The Bible's resemblance to these accounts can be attributed to a shared memory, rather than to borrowing. Although some remarkable parallels exist (such as the kind and purpose of the released birds, 8:7-12), the differences in detail and purpose are substantive. For example, in the Gilgamesh story the ark is a perfect cube of about 197 feet; such a vessel would capsize and sink in turbulent water. Noah's ark possessed a seaworthy shape of a long rectangular barge (450 ft. by 75 ft.). More importantly, the pagan accounts are typically polytheistic. The purpose of the flood is to rid the earth of the pesky and noisy humans whose explosive population disturbs the sleep of the gods, and the survivor receives immortality from the gods. By contrast, the biblical account presents a high moral motivation for the flood, through which God judges sin and also purifies the earth. Moreover, Noah is decidedly mortal, and God preserves the human family out of His grace. The lessons of the flood account are Noah's obedience to God's word and the perpetuation of God's blessing for humanity and the world.

6:14-22 The ability of the ark to house the many animal species known today has elicited doubt, but this is the result of a misreading of the text. The word "kinds" refers to general categories; the animals on board were representative of genera, or groups of species. Moreover, the three levels of the ark provided approximately 1.4 million cubic feet. The gathering of the animals was divinely guided (v. 22), so it is reasonable to propose that the Lord superintended the care and feeding of the animals.

6:17; 7:19-23 Although the geological record contains ample evidence of widespread, devastating local flooding, most geologists claim to see no evidence of a universal flood. Nevertheless, many ancient cultures preserved the memory of a worldwide flood. Some Christian geologists contend that only a worldwide flood can best explain the earth's sedimentary layers. The description "all the high mountains . . . were covered" indicates the same (7:19-20), and the planet's lack of sufficient water for such a flood can be explained if the water's weight pushed mountains higher than they were before. The Biblical account abounds with expressions that indicate a universal flood (e.g., "all flesh under heaven"). Some who hold to the idea of a regional flood explain this as exaggeration or hyperbole or claim that it represents only the situation as viewed from the ark. But the flood's purpose was to judge all human life with divine destruction (e.g., 6:7,12-13; cp. Lk 17:26-30; 2 Pt 2:5; 3:6), and animal life would not have to have been rescued from a local flood unless all life were located in that region. From the Bible's standpoint, Noah's flood was the greatest flood in world history (9:15).

6.19–7:3 Those unfamiliar with ancient Near Eastern narrative literary style have supposed that repetitions in the flood account result from the clumsy collage of two contradictory traditions. Repetition in Hebrewnarrative is a common device that gives emphasis, coherence, and structural symmetry. For example, the command to take on board "two" of every creature (6:19-20) is a general instruction to gather the animals in reproductive pairs. Then follow the specific instructions to collect "seven" such pairs of clean animals, which will be used for offerings (8:20), and only one pair of unclean animals (7:2-3; cp. 7:13-16). In this case, the repetition reveals that there was more than one purpose for collecting the animals. The "clean" and "unclean" distinctions would later be standardized (Lv 11; Dt 14), but recognition of these differences occurred before Moses. The Sabbath was also observed before Moses' command normalized it (Ex 16:23-29; 20:8-11).

7:4,11-12,17,24 The chronology of the flood may seem confusing but it is consistent. Noah waited on the ark seven days before the 40 days of rain began. The waters "surged" for 150 days (five months) of destruction(v. 24). This includes 40 days of rain followed by 110 days, during which the waters began to recede until the ark settled somewhere on the mountains of Ararat. In 40 more days land became visible (8:5-6). For about three weeks Noah sent out birds until the dove failed to return (8:12). But Noah had to wait another three months before he saw that the "ground was drying" (8:13), and another month before he and his shipmates could disembark, 377 days after climbing aboard.

7:12 Although some contend that Noah's flood was the first time it ever rained, therefore a new experience for Noah's generation, the Bible does not say this. The first mention of something is not necessarily the first time it occurred. Sunrise and sunset occurred before they are specifically mentioned in the text (15:12,17; 19:23).

7:13-17 The entry of Noah, his family, and the animals into the ark is repeated here (in the case of the animals twice, vv. 13,15). The repetition is part of the literary buildup to the concluding remark, "Then the LORD shut him in" (v. 16).

7:20 Where did all that water go? The story is internally consistent with its claims of God's special intervention at points in the flood events. The Lord "caused a wind to pass over the earth" (8:1). It was a divinely-induced wind that divided the sea and dried the riverbed to allow the exodus (Ex 14:21). God accomplished the drying of the earth by a unique means in the times of Noah and Moses. Some prefer the explanation that the flood was not global but local (see 6:17 note).

8:1 The expression that "God remembered" does not imply that He had forgotten. It is a figure of speech meaning that God acted on the basis of His promise to save Noah (cp. 19:29; Ps 105:42).

8:13-14 Was the date of the earth's drying the first month or the second month? The drying of the "ground" (adamah, v. 13) on the first of the month was the beginning, and the drying of the whole "earth" (erets, v. 14) was not complete until the twenty-seventh day of the second month.

8:21-22 The Lord mercifully promised not to destroy the earth again in the same manner (by flood), yet He will destroy the earth again by fire (2 Pt 3:10-13). The promise of uninterrupted seasons refers to the general pattern of seed and harvest that would provide agricultural stability for the people of earth. It does not entail the absence of famines and other natural disasters due to climatic conditions that might arise.

9:2 After the flood the animal world received a new decree imposing on them an inherent fear of humans. As with the creation decree that animals are subject to mankind, the new command is not a license for the inhumane treatment of animals. The new environment following the flood's judgment was a hostile one characterized by violence and death. Humans maintained their authority over the lower animals, but the relationship would involve struggle in a sinful, fallen world (Rm 8:19-23). All life is valuable to God (Lv 17:14), and the new decree contributed to the preservation of both human and animal life. Israel's laws provided animals for food but prohibited wanton killing (Lv 17:8-16;Dt 12:23; 15:21-23) and required special protections (Ex 20:10; 23:11; Dt 22:10; 25:4). Despite the fall, God did not revoke man's stewardship of the earth.

9:4 The purpose of prohibiting the eating of unbled meat (cp. Lv 17:10-14; Ac 15:29) was to affirm the value of life, for the blood represents the life force (Lv 17:14; 19:26) and the prerogatives of life and death belong to God alone. But the commands to Noah's family in verses 1-7, such as diet, procreation, and capital punishment, were never intended to be absolute, as was shown by subsequent laws (e.g., proscribed foods, Lv. 11). Not every divine command or prohibition in the Bible applies to everyone. Jeremiah, for example, was told not to marry (Jr 16:2), and Isaiah was told to go naked and barefoot for three years (Is 20:2-4). The prohibition required by the Jerusalem Council was a temporary measure (Ac 15:28-29), designed to appease the ritual practices of the Jews for the sake of the unity of the church. Paul's higher principle permitted the consumption of previously unlawful foods (Rm 14:20; Col 2:16-17). Unbled meat is not prohibited for Christians today, even though some groups (e.g., the Watchtower Society, see the article "Are the Teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses Compatible with the Bible?" in Lk 23) have mistakenly inferred that the Bible prohibits the transfusion of whole blood and certain products.

9:12-17 The passage does not claim that God newly created the rainbow, indicating that it had not existed before; rather, the Lord attached new meaning to the bow's appearance as "the sign of the covenant."

9:25 Although Ham was the one guilty of dishonoring his father, the curse is against his son Canaan. The Bible prohibits inflicting judgment against an innocent son in the place of his guilty father (Dt 24:16; Ezk 18:20), but it also recognizes that the influence of sinful parents typically leads children to follow their pattern of behavior (Ex 20:5). This was especially the case in ancient Israel's patriarchal society where multiple generations often lived in the household of the patriarch.

The creation account makes it clear that all people are of equal worth (Gn 1:26-27). Slavery contradicts this principle. Those OT and NT passages that provide for and regulate slavery assume it as a regrettable aspect of sinful human society. Early indications that slavery eventually would become obsolete were laws that prohibited the mistreatment of slaves (see notes on Ex 21:2,7; 21:20-21,26). The gospel and the brotherhood of the saints (Gl 3:28; Phm) undermine the practice of slavery. These considerations suggest that Noah's curse of Canaan was either figurative, or a misunderstanding of the Lord's intent. The narrative does not portray Noah as an entirely exemplary character (v. 21).

10:5,20,31 The description of the nations in chapter 10 chronologically follows the tower of Babylon incident in 11:1-9. However, the narrative reverses the order for rhetorical effect, concluding the pre-Abrahamic history with an illustration of the incorrigibility of human sin. As long as the people of the tower had a common language (11:1,6-9) they could maintain their prideful autonomy despite God's command to spread over the earth (9:1). (That the nations continued to develop diverse languages was a natural result of their dispersion, 11:8-9.) To underscore his point, the author then returns in 11:10-26 to the genealogy of Shem, ancestor of the patriarchs through whom salvation will come to the nations (12:3).

10:22; 11:10 According to 11:10, Arpachshad was Shem's firstborn. In 10:22 Shem's children are listed geographically rather than in birth order (see notes on 11:10; 11:26,32).

11:7 On the plural pronouns for God, see note on1:26-27.

11:10 Shem was 100 years old "two years after the deluge" and thus 98 at the flood. But Noah was 500 when he "fathered Shem, Ham, and Japheth" (5:32) and 600 when the flood began (7:6,11), suggesting that Shem may have been 100 at the flood. But this neglects some facts that the reader is expected to observe: (1) Shem, Ham, and Japheth were not triplets (cp. 9:24), so they were not all born when Noah was 500, making 5:32 an approximation. The NIV translation "After Noah was 500 years old" is syntactically possible, but no word for "after" is in the text. (2) Since Ham was the youngest, Noah's sons are apparently listed in order of importance rather than birth order. Japheth may have been the oldest, born when Noah was 500, allowing Shem to be born two years later. (3) We are not told whether "two years" counts from the beginning or the end of the flood period, which lasted one year and ten days (7:11; 8:14).

11:26,32 How old was Abraham when he left Haran? If Abram was the eldest son, he was born when Terah was 70. Genesis 12:4 says Abram was 75 when he departed, which would mean that he left 60 years before the death of his father. However, Stephen's sermon indicates that he left after the death of Terah (Ac 7:4), making Abram 135 years old. Was Abraham 75 or 135 when he left? There are three plausible responses. (1) Haran was the eldest son born when Terah was 70 (Gn 11:26) and Abraham was the youngest son born 60 years later when Terah was 130. Thus, 70 (birth of Haran) + 60 (birth of Abraham) + 75 (Abraham's departure) = 205. Abraham was 75 when his father died at 205. A difficulty for this proposal is the surprise of Abraham at fathering a son at 100 (17:17) when his own father did so at 130. (2) The Samaritan Pentateuch has Terah's death at "145 years"; some scholars conclude that Stephen and the Jewish author Philo (On the Migration of Abraham, 177) reflected an alternative tradition. (3) The author announced the death of Terah proleptically for thematic reasons, to close out the career of Terah since he plays no further part in the story. Stephen's sermon gave a general accounting of the history of Israel (e.g., sometimes telescoping events) rather than a strict chronology which did not impact his central message.

12:1 Did God call Abram from Ur or from Haran to leave Mesopotamia for Canaan? According to 11:31, it was Abram's father Terah who decided to take his family from Ur in Mesopotamia to Canaan, though we are not told why. The context of verses 1-3 suggests that Abram was in Haran when God summoned him to Canaan. According to Stephen in Ac 7:2 God appeared to Abram in Mesopotamia "before he settled in Haran" and called him to leave for a new land. If God had spoken to Abram while Abram was in Ur, this could have been part of Terah's motive for moving his family. God could then have repeated His summons to Abram to proceed to Canaan after his father had died in Haran (Gn 11:32).

12:2 Abram would not become "a great nation," as God had promised, during his lifetime. However, his descendants apparently numbered over two million by the time of the exodus (some 600,000 men, plus their wives and many children; Ex 12:37). Abram has become significant in history as the physical father of Israel and the one regarded as spiritual "father" by Jews, Christians, and Muslims. Abram became "a blessing" by his example of proper worship and proclamation of the Lord's name (12:8), as well as by his justifying faith (15:6; Rm 4:3). His name may be reflected in a tenth-century B.C. Egyptian list of places in the Negev that includes "The Enclosure of Abram."

12:3 The blessing and curse here have played out repeatedly in history. The nations or groups (plural: "those") who have blessed Abram or his descendants have been blessed by God. The individuals (singular: "him") who have cursed Abram or Israel have been "cursed," coming eventually to a bad end. This, however, is not a blank check for the actions of unbelieving Israel, as if the nation could do no wrong or deserves no criticism or has no accountability for its actions. It is a general ongoing promise. Acts 3:25 and Gl 3:8 indicate that all the families of the earth are blessed in the availability of salvation through Jesus Christ, and Gl 6:16 refers to the church as "the Israel of God" through which, by implication, that blessing is extended.

12:5 In referring to "the people [Abram] had acquired in Haran" the Bible is not sanctioning slavery. "Acquired" may refer to household servants, which wealthy families of the era had, rather than to slaves. Furthermore, even characters whom the Bible views favorably do not always act in accordance with what God approves. In evaluating their actions, we must recall that God did not reveal His will in its entirety at the beginning, but rather gradually throughout the course of biblical history. Biblical narrative often conveys the divine and human authors' evaluation of a character's actions implicitly rather than explicitly, not by denouncing the actions but by recording their outcome. The disgrace resulting from Abram's lie in verses 12-13 is an example of this.

12:6 Some have supposed the note "At that time the Canaanites were in the land" (see note on 13:7) means that in the author's day they were no longer there. If so, Moses could not be the author. But "that time" is clearly not being contrasted to the author's time but to Abram's time. The point is that when God made His promise to Abram the land was already occupied.

12:10-15 A tomb painting of Khnumhotep III at Beni Hasan from 870 B.C. depicts a trading donkey caravan of "Asiatics" visiting Egypt. Their beards, multicolored robes, weapons, and goods would have been typical of visitors from Canaan during the time of the patriarchs. During the first half of the second millennium B.C. Egyptian kings had a northern palace in the eastern Delta region near Avaris. Egyptologist Kenneth Kitchen points out that "the pharaohs were commonly partial to attractive foreign ladies, as finds and texts for the Middle and New Kingdoms attest."

13:7 "At that time" does not mean the Canaanites and Perizzites were not there when the book was written but that in Abram's time the land promised to him was already occupied (see note on 12:6). So Abram and Lot were competing not only with each other but also with others for water and food.

14:1-2 Skeptical scholars in earlier generations doubted the historical existence of some, or all, of the kings in these verses. Although these kings of ancient city-states cannot be identified (Amraphel is no longer supposed to be the later famous king Hammurabi), their names are recognized as authentic ancient names from the regions they are here said to rule.

14:3,8,10 The "Valley of Siddim" was apparently the name of the land now covered by the Dead Sea, one of the world's richest areas in mineral content (perhaps reflected by the presence of "many asphalt pits," v. 10). How the valley filled in to become a great body of water is not known, though it appears the flow of the Jordan River out of the south end of the valley into the Arabah was blocked, damming the river. That could have been caused by upheaval related to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

14:14-16,24 Many have scoffed at the assertion that Abram and the 318 male servants and slaves of his household and his allies (v. 24) could have routed the sizeable armies of these four kings (v. 9). However, the power of the Lord has overcome much greater military odds (cp. 2 Kg 19:35-36), including a similar victory at night by Gideon and his purposely pared-down force of 300 (Jdg 7:9-22).

15:2-3 Extrabiblical texts from the ancient Near East (e.g., discoveries at Nuzi and Larsa) confirm the practice of servants becoming heirs in some cases.

15:4-6 The Lord expected Abram to believe the extraordinary assertion that, even at his advanced age, he would have his own physical child and that his descendants would be as numerous as the stars in the sky. Abram believed what the Lord told him, becoming the great model of justifying faith.

15:7 This verse does not necessarily conflict with the apparent sense of Terah rather than Abram leading his family from Ur to Haran, as suggested by 11:31. In a patriarchal culture, Abram was part of the extended household of his father.

15:8-9 Although the wording of verse 8 could be taken to reflect unbelief on Abram's part (cp. Ex 7:17; Nm 16:28; Lk 1:18), verse 6 clarifies that is not the sense intended. The Lord's response, in which He sets up a ceremony to reaffirm the covenant He is granting (Gn 15:9-10,17-18), shows that Abram was simply seeking a sign of the divine promise upon which to hang his continued confidence (cp. Is 7:10-14). Abram's complaint shows he takes God seriously.

15:13-14 Some scholars hold that Moses, or a later editor of Genesis, is here simply projecting a knowledge of later history into the narrative in the guise of advance prophecy. The logic is that it could not possibly have been known in Abram's time (2000 B.C.) that Israel would be in Egypt for "400 years" and that they would be "enslaved and oppressed" for most of that period. Such a perspective, however, is rooted in an anti-supernatural bias and flies in the face of the bulk of predictive biblical prophecy that has been fulfilled in amazing detail.

15:13,16 Verse 13 predicts the length of Israel's Egyptian captivity as "400 years." Verse 16 says it will end in "the fourth generation." That would make the average life span of a generation 100 years, which seems far-fetched by the standards of almost all of recorded history. However, since Jacob lived to be 147 years old, part of it in Egypt (47:28); Joseph lived to be 110, most of it in Egypt (50:22,26); and Moses lived to be 120, the first 40 of which were in Egypt (Dt 34:7), the idea of a hundred-year generation is plausible. In addition, the recorded life spans before the flood were much longer. It may well be that, for various reasons, human life spans were decreasing over time, just as they have gradually increased in modern times due to improvements in medicine, diet, and sanitation.

15:18 The boundaries of the promised land in the Abrahamic covenant in verse 18 can be misunderstood. It is highly unlikely that the "brook of Egypt" is the Nile River. Rather, it is almost surely the Wadi el'Arish, a riverbed that is dry much of the year (except the rainy season), located midway between southwestern Israel and the Nile. The reference to the "Euphrates River" is not to the entire length of that great river, just its northwestern arm in Syria where it is closest to Israel. Whether or not Israel has ever controlled the full extent of these boundaries is a matter of debate.

15:19-21 Over a century ago there was no historical or archaeological evidence for the existence of several of the peoples listed among these 10 nations ("Kenites . . .Jebusites"). As a result, certain scholars doubted the veracity of this verse. A century ago, however, important archaeological findings have greatly strengthened the likelihood that all 10 did, in fact, exist when Abram and Moses lived.

16:1-4 Hagar's conceiving a child by Abram seems like adultery or polygamy to modern readers, and does not reflect a later Christian standard. But it would have been common in that culture for a female servant to become a secondary wife for the purpose of bearing children (e.g., Rachel's and Leah's servants, Bilhah and Zilpah, who bore four of Jacob's sons who became heads of four of the 12 tribes of Israel). This custom was noted in the Code of Hammurabi and the Nuzi tablets.

16:6-9 This narrative may appear to sanction slavery and to devalue the human life of Hagar and her unborn son. However, the actions played out here are a reflection of the culture and Sarai's selfish jealous rage against her servant girl.

16:6-14 The trusting obedience of Hagar to the words of the Angel of the Lord strongly implies that she shared the faith of Abram (15:6). Hagar is the "mother" of the Arab peoples.

16:7,9-11,13 The angel of the Lord may have been an angel sent as a spokesman for the Lord (Hb mal'ach means "messenger"). However, verse 13 suggests that Hagar understood she was speaking directly to the Lord. Thus, in the history of interpretation, many have understood the Angel of the Lord to be a Christophany (i.e., a pre-incarnate appearance of the Second Person of the Trinity, later born as Jesus Christ).

16:11 Although not referring to the same people, biblical names beginning with i/j [Hb y] are extremely common in archaeological texts from the ancient Near East of the early second millennium B.C., the time of the patriarchs. They diminish in frequency sharply after that time. Such names include Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph. According to W. C. Kaiser, Jr., "If the stories had been invented in much later times, such as those of the Babylonian Exile, the use of such names would have been most unlikely since they had little or no currency in that era."

16:12 The prophecy regarding Ishmael and his descendants may seem harsh and stereotypical. However, the description of a mobile warlike people has been true to the history of many of Ishmael's descendants among the Arab peoples. It is also striking that, while none of the 10 nations listed in 15:19-21 has survived to the present day, the Arab peoples are now among the largest ethnic groups in the world.

17:1,18 It had been 13 years since Ishmael was born and, apparently, there had been no further revelation from the Lord during that period. That would mean Abram and Sarai were under the impression that Sarai's scheme to have a child that was legally hers through her servant, Hagar, had God's blessing. Verse 18 indicates that Abram viewed Ishmael as his blood heir and was emotionally attached to him as his son and the means through which God's promise would be fulfilled.

17:1-2 The Abrahamic covenant is in the form of an unconditional contract with Abram and his divinely chosen descendant; ultimately it is guaranteed by the faithfulness of God alone (v. 2). Nevertheless it has a secondary conditional aspect. To enjoy the benefits of this covenant, Abram must still obey God's commands. This requirement is seen here in the words: "Live in My presence and be devout" (v. 1).

17:5,10-14,15,21 Throughout the Bible God's plan is clarified in successive parts, sometimes over an extended period. This gradual unfolding of His purpose in history is called "progressive revelation." In this case the revelation of the Abrahamic covenant began 24 years earlier (12:1-4). It has been restated and clarified (13:14-17; 15:17-21) and, at this point, becomes even more specific. The renaming of Abraham and Sarah, the giving of a sign for the covenant, and the statement that Sarah would physically bear the son of the promise, as well as the date of birth for the child, represent a further expansion of the revelation.

17:9-14,23-27 Many peoples of Old Testament times practiced circumcision, so it is of religious significance not only in the Judeo-Christian tradition. However, as Jr 9:25-26 and Rm 2:28-29 make clear, what set apart the circumcision related to the Abrahamic covenant was its expectation that the people would be "circumcised in heart" (i.e., trusting the Lord and obedient to the commitment represented by the outward sign of circumcision).

17:17 In ordinary human experience 90-year-old women do not have babies and 100-year-old men do not father them. The birth of Sarah's child prefigures other remarkable births that reveal God's intervention in the human scene, including the birth of John the Baptist and the virgin birth of Christ. As Mary is told, "nothing will be impossible with God" (Lk 1:37).

17:18,20-21 Abraham's prayer concerning Ishmael inv. 18 did not go unanswered. Just as there were 12 tribes of Israel, there were 12 tribes of Ishmael (v. 20; 25:16). The difference between the two was God's sovereign choice of Isaac's descendants as His covenant people (17:21).

18:1–19:2 At first glance, the identity of the persons with whom Abraham (chap. 18) and Lot (chap.19) interacted may seem confusing. There are references to "the LORD" (18:1,10), "three men" (18:2,9) and "two angels" (19:1). The best explanation is that both the Lord and angels took human form (i.e., appeared to be human beings). Of the three, the Lord conversed with Abraham (18:1,10-33), while the two angels (19:1) continued on to Sodom, where Lot responded to them (19:1-2) in a manner similar to the way in which Abraham had met the three men in 18:1-4), implying that their appearance remained human.

18:9-14 An ironic play on words occurs in chapters 17–18. Abraham laughed when he heard that Sarah and he would have a child at their advanced ages (17:17). Sarah laughed when she found out the timing of the baby's birth. They laughed at the human impossibility of this happening (v. 12). Ironically, God named the miraculously conceived child Isaac," which means "laughter." The only sin involved in these episodes, however, was that Sarah, out of fear of the Lord, lied about her laughter (v. 15).

18:20-21 It is possible to misunderstand these verses in two ways: (1) that God is distant from His creation; and (2) that God is not all-knowing. God already knows the wretched spiritual state of Sodom (Ps 139:1-12), which has "come up" to Him in His transcendence (i.e., existence over and beyond the created universe). However, because God is also fully immanent (i.e., personally involved with His creation), this passage speaks of His "coming down" to "see" the sinfulness of Sodom for Himself. There is an echo here of the story of the tower of Babylon; when the people thought to raise up a tower into the sky, God "came down" (Gn 11:5) to see what they had done.

18:23-32 The negotiation between the Lord and Abraham does not imply that man is able to manipulate God in order to change His mind. Rather, it demonstrates God's desire to be merciful, contrasted with mankind's wickedness and addiction to evil behavioral patterns. God is willing to forego stated judgment, as evidenced by His relenting after the repentance of the people of Nineveh in response to Jonah's preaching (Jnh 3:10). However, unlike Nineveh, not even the minimal number of 10 righteous people could be found in Sodom (Gn 18:32; 19:12-13). A broader issue here is the meaning of being "righteous." Even though the grossly wicked behavior of the people of Sodom is in view in the immediate context, the preceding account of Abraham's life emphasizes that the basis of his righteousness was faith in God's promises (15:6).

19:4-8 The term "sodomy" is derived from this passage. It is widely held that the severity of God's judgment of Sodom had to do with the prevalence of homosexuality there. This view is disputed by some, notably some religious homosexuals. Lot's offer of his virgin daughters (vv. 7-8) probably indicates a pervasive environment of sexual sin. Nevertheless, God had already said that Sodom's sin was "extremely serious" (18:20) and homosexuality is the sin spotlighted in the text (v. 5). Paul also makes clear that a tragic part of the downward spiral of mankind's sinful rebellion against God, which incurs His wrath, is homosexual behavior (Rm 1:26-27).

19:11 God sometimes protects His people through blinding those who threaten them, as here (cp. 2 Kg 6:18). He also reveals Himself to people by imparting physical (Jn 9:5,25) or spiritual (2 Kg 6:16-17) sight.

19:12-29 The theological theme of this section is similar to that in the latter part of chapter 18: God's mercy and compassion are revealed despite justly deserved judgment. In this case, the angels interact with Lot and compassionately adjust their original instructions in accord with Lot's physical limitations (vv. 17-22). Still, the proclaimed judgment arrived as soon as Lot's family was safe (vv. 23-24). Even then, Lot's wife was lost because she disobeyed the express command not to look back at the destruction (v. 26).

19:24-25,27-29 The truth of this entire chapter has been questioned due to a supposed lack of related archaeological evidence. A plausible explanation for that absence is that the locations of Sodom, Gomorrah, and the other cities of the plain are now under the Dead Sea. Possibly, as the result of geological upheaval (earthquakes are not uncommon in that area), the south end of the Jordan River rift was blocked. This created a body of water so thick in mineral content that it has not been feasible to carry out significant exploration of the deep bottom of the south end of the Dead Sea.

19:30-38 This explanation of the origins of the Moabites and Ammonites should not be taken as approval of the incestuous advantage Lot's daughters took of their father. The narrative merely describes what happened. Even in the family tree of the Messiah in Matthew 1:2-16, three of the four women mentioned (i.e., Tamar,Rahab, and "Uriah's wife") had questionable moral backgrounds. Providentially, the Lord used them in spite of the stigma attached to their names.

20:1-16 Three aspects of this episode have been thought troublesome: (1) that Abraham would fall into the same error he committed in Egypt in 12:10-20; (2) that Sarah would be taken into Abimelech's harem at her advanced age (17:17); and (3) that Abraham would rely on the shaky half-truth of Sarah being his half-sister (20:11-13). The first and third of these problems are related. Abraham had told Pharaoh that Sarah was his sister (12:13) and, though forced to leave Egypt when the deception was discovered (12:18-20), he left a much wealthier man than he had come (12:16; 13:2). Thus, it may have appeared to Abraham that God blessed his deception. As to Sarah's age, it is significant that beauty is not mentioned as the reason for taking her into the king's harem, as it was before (12:14-15). The likely reason for taking her was her wealth, since, as Abraham's presumed "sister," she would have had some control over the family's vast holdings. It is worth noting, in addition, that in upper Mesopotamia where Abraham came from it had been common for a wealthy man to legally adopt his wife as his sister, thus enhancing her social status.

20:17-18 People in modern Western culture tend to think of pregnancy in terms of technological issues like birth control or fertility drugs. The Bible reminds us that, ultimately, it is God who opens and closes wombs. The theme of women being unable to conceive, then later being able to bear children, is a recurring motif in chapters 12–50. It sets the stage for other remarkable births in the unfolding of God's historical purpose (see note on 17:17).

21:1-2 Sarah apparently became pregnant while the events of chapter 20 were taking place. Thus, while the wombs of all the women of Gerar were closed (20:17-18), Sarah's had been opened miraculously at a very advanced age.

21:9-21 It may appear, at first glance, that God cannot make up His mind on how Abraham and Sarah should treat Hagar and Ishmael. In 16:9-10, after Sarah's attempt to expel the pregnant Hagar, the Lord ordered her to return to Sarah. In 21:11-12, He orders Abraham to listen to Sarah and send Hagar and Ishmael away. By this time, however, Ishmael is not the unborn baby of a defenseless pregnant woman, as in chapter 16. He is a teenager and the older son—the normally recognized heir—of Abraham. In addition, God's pledge that Ishmael would be the father of a nation (v. 13) implies that He would protect him, which proved to be the case (vv. 17-20).

21:22-33 The most obvious reason for the odd placement of this passage is as an update for the events of chapter 20. However, it cannot be mere coincidence that both 21:9-21 and 21:22-33 have to do with the need to provide water in the vicinity of what became known as Beer-sheba. Thus, these are side-by-side examples of God's providing for the weak and the wealthy.

22:2 If it seems barbaric to command Abraham to offer his beloved son, Isaac, God did not ask any more than He would do in sacrificing His beloved Son for the sins of the world (Jn 3:16).

22:2,5 Since God ordered Abraham to offer Isaac as a sacrifice (v. 2), some have charged that Abraham lied in telling his servants, "The boy and I will . . . come back to you" (v. 5). However, Heb 11:17,19 clarifies that Abraham's response to God's test of his faith was to believe that, if necessary, the Lord would raise Isaac from the dead.

22:12 God certainly "knew" beforehand what Abraham would do in this predicament (Ps 139:1-6). The language here simply indicates that it was a test or demonstration of Abraham's complete loyalty to God.

22:15,17 To note that God blesses Abraham because of his obedience does not alter the fact that God's covenant with Abraham is unconditional—based on God's promise rather than Abraham's fulfillment of some obligation. But a covenant is, first of all, a relationship between persons—in this case, human and divine. Within that framework, obedience always brings about divine blessing and disobedience always results in the enactment of a curse, or judgment.

22:20-24 The purpose of this passage is to update the status of Abraham's family, which had stayed in Haran when he went on to Canaan (11:27-31). It also prepares for the marriage of Isaac to Rebekah, the granddaughter of Nahor, Abram's brother (11:27; 22:20-23).

23:1-20 It may appear that this chapter is overly sentimental in relating Abraham's negotiation of the burial plot price for his beloved wife, Sarah. But its significance goes deeper. This is the only land that Abraham ever owned in Canaan, the one piece of property that served as an earnest of Israel's eventual possession of the land. Although Ephron the Hittite made as if to "give" Abraham the field (v. 11), the price he eventually extracted from him ("400 shekels of silver," v. 15) was an inordinately high price for that time. This field is also where the patriarchs Abraham (25:9-10), Isaac (35:27-29), and Jacob (49:29-32; 50:12-13) were buried.

24:2-4 Abraham was not an ethnic elitist in seeking a wife for Isaac from outside Canaan. Rather, the sinfulness of the peoples of Canaan (15:16), especially their idolatry, was repugnant to the Lord and thus to Abraham, the man of faith (15:6).

24:5-8 Abraham did not want Isaac to leave the promised land since he was to inherit it. There was always the possibility that, if he went back to Haran, he might not return.

24:10-67 This is the longest continuous passage in Genesis, and its quality of narration is striking. Generally, it is one of the classic biblical case studies on seeking to follow God's will. Specifically, it reflects how important it was for the heir of promise to have the right wife and for that marriage to come about according to God's direction.

25:1-6 After Sarah's death, Abraham remarried and, miraculously, continued to have children. The passage is notable for two reasons. First, the descendants of some of these children (e.g., the Midianites) became significant in later generations. Second, Abraham sent the children "to the land of the East," away from Isaac and the promised land. This was an effort to head off potential family conflicts, which might complicate the progress of God's promise through Isaac's descendants.

25:12-18 Although Isaac was the son of promise, the size of Ishmael's family and wider holdings developed more quickly and extensively.

25:19-26 Besides the ongoing theme in Genesis of God's opening the womb of barren women, we see here the recurring theme of the younger son displacing the older. This practice was completely contrary to the prevailing custom of the oldest son being the primary heir.

25:27-34 Though it seems outrageous for Jacob to ask for Esau's birthright as payment for some of Jacob's stew, the "irreverent" Esau had only himself to blame. With only a short-range view to the satisfaction of his immediate needs, he "sold his birthright in exchange for one meal" (Heb 12:16).

26:1-11 Because of the strong similarities between this incident and 12:10-20 and 20:1-18, some modern interpreters have expressed the opinion that it is a copy of those episodes and never actually happened. They also note that the king is, as in chapter 20, named "Abimelech." There are, however, key differences between the passages, and it is not uncommon for kings to have the same name (e.g., Darius I and II of the Medo-Persian Empire). In addition, it is possible that "Abimelech" (a compound of the words for "father" and "king") is a Philistine royal title, like Pharaoh in Egypt, which means "great house." Perhaps Isaac, while growing up, had heard the stories of what his father, Abraham, had done in those earlier incidents and decided to mimic his behavior. Given that Rebekah was not Isaac's sister in any sense, this would be a classic example of the repetition of "the sins of the fathers" by a later generation.

26:12-22,26-33 The conflicts over the wells occurred despite earlier agreements between Abraham and Abimelech (21:22-31). This happened because of jealousy over God's blessing on Isaac. A resentful response by others against those blessed by the Lord is a common theme in Genesis.

26:34-35 Though Esau married at age 40, as did Isaac his father (25:20), his parents were hardly pleased with his choices. His wives were Hittites who worshiped many gods, none of which was the one true God of Abraham and Isaac. Isaac is partly responsible for these religiously mixed marriages, since he had not made it clear to Esau what his standards were (28:1,6-9). There are two possible explanations for why Judith, the first named wife of Esau (26:34) is not mentioned in the "family records" of Esau in chapter 36. Either she did not live long enough to have children, or the marriage ended quickly in divorce.

27:1-29 Though the Lord had told Rebekeh that her older son, Esau, would serve her younger son, Jacob (25:23), that in no way excuses the elaborate deception on the part of Rebekah and Jacob to defraud Esau of his blessing as the older son. Instead of trusting the Lord to accomplish what He had promised, Rebekah took the matter into her own hands, much as Sarah had by giving Hagar to Abraham in chapter 16.

27:30-45 Esau was justified in his anger about how his blessing was stolen, but he had no right to become enraged and hold a murderous grudge (Eph 4:26-27). No one involved in this incident was an innocent bystander, given Rebekah's and Jacob's scheming and Isaac's extravagant blessing—which he thought he was giving to Esau—apparently ignoring the Lord's word to Rebekah (Gn 25:23).

27:46–28:1 Sadly, it appears to have taken Isaac's experience with Esau's wives to open his eyes in regard to the prospects for Jacob's marriage. Isaac did not emulate his own father's care in seeking a wife for his son(chap. 24).

28:6-9 Esau's attempt to regain his father's favor was misguided. In his spiritual insensitivity, he thought the problem had to do with having a wife from the right bloodline. It was, instead, a matter of faith in, and worship of, the one true God.

28:10-22 Because Jacob's vision at Bethel was his closest encounter with God up to this point in his life, he was convinced this place was unique. For him it was "the house of God," (the literal meaning of Bethel), and "the gate of heaven" (v. 17). At his stage in God's progressive revelation, he could not see that no earthly spot could play this role (Ac 7:48-50). Like his brother Esau, Jacob had not been a man of faith. But, even though the conditions he states toward the Lord (Gn 28:20-22) fall short of true faith, they represent a step in the right direction.

29:1-12 This passage echoes chapter 24. While that chapter is much longer and more detailed, the marked similarity is intended to inspire similar confidence in the Lord's provision of the right wife for Jacob.

29:13-30 Ironically Laban deceived Jacob in regard to the marriage of his daughters just as Jacob had deceived his father, Isaac, in the matter of the birthright blessing. It is uncertain whether it was an ironclad cultural custom for an older daughter to be married first, or only a custom of Laban's family. It is interesting, though, that Jacob, who had displaced his older brother, now sought to marry the younger daughter. Again we meet the Genesis theme of younger displacing older.

29:31–30:24 This period of the births of the progenitors of the tribes of Israel is characterized by tragic resentment and rivalry. Though Sarah and Hagar had experienced mutual disdain (chaps. 16; 21), the ongoing hostility between Jacob's wives profoundly marked the family life.

30:25-43 This passage is crucial as an explanation of how Jacob became wealthy in his own right. He had lived as a part of Laban's wider family wherein his own expanding family had been cared for sufficiently. But he was in no financial position to leave with his wives and children and go back to his own father and the land of promise. While this passage may appear to describe a type of magic, God instructed Jacob in this through a dream (31:10-12). The following narrative makes it clear that, throughout the six years described here, Laban repeatedly changed Jacob's wages in seeking to gain material advantage over him (31:6-7,38-42).

31:1-3 Providentially, the Lord's command for Jacob and his family to return to his father and the promised land coincided with the rapidly growing desire for retribution by Laban and his sons.

31:4-16 Jacob was concerned that Rachel and Leah would oppose leaving Laban's extended family and going to Canaan. In attempting to persuade them, he reminded them of Laban's cheating (vv. 5-7). He also came to fully realize God's protection and guidance during this time (vv. 7-13). While Rachel and Leah do not echo Jacob's growing faith, they display no loyalty to their father because of the way he has treated them (vv. 14-16).

31:19-20 The Bible does not condone, but merely observes, Rachel's "sin of commission" (i.e., stealing her father's household idols) and Jacob's "sin of omission" (i.e., not telling Laban he was leaving, though he was still employed by him as his herdsman). The narrative reveals that both sins caused larger problems, giving Laban reason to pursue and endanger Jacob's family and herds.

31:30,32-35 This passage demonstrates that, much as Jacob had learned deception from his father (26:7-10) and mother (27:5-17), Rachel took after her father as a master deceiver. Children watch their parents' behavior and learn from them, for good or evil. The narrative does not condone Rachel's deception, but portrays the realities of family life.

32:1-23 There is striking interplay in this passage between the sovereign protection of God and the responsibility of man. The two are not contradictory, but complementary. On the way, Jacob met angels (vv. 1-2) whose protection had not been apparent to him before. In addition, his prayer reflects growing faith in the Lord's promises during a time of danger (vv. 9-12). However, Jacob also does his best to appeal humbly and diplomatically (vv. 6-8,13-23) to his brother, Esau, from whom he has long been estranged.

32:24-31 The mysterious "man" (v. 24) whom Jacob wrestled with until dawn was God Himself (vv. 28,30). The Lord had taken human form previously to interact with Abraham (18:2,10,16). Remarkably, the all-powerful Lord did not see fit to overpower Jacob, but allowed him to cling tenaciously to Him all night. The concept of a Christian "wrestling with God" during particularly difficult or fearful times originates in this passage. Though Jacob physically limped away (32:25,31) from this unexpected struggle, his new divinely given name, "Israel," indicated that "he struggled with God" and prevailed, growing spiritually in the process.

32:32 The nation of Israel, so named as Jacob's descendants, abstained from eating "the thigh muscle that is at the hip socket" before Moses wrote Genesis. Observant Jews maintain this practice today.

33:1-4 Bowing seven times has been documented as a reflection of sincere regret and submission as early as the fourteenth century B.C. in Egypt. Unexpected forgiveness and reconciliation, especially when it occurs amidst volatile family squabbles or feuds, is touching and joyful.

33:8-11 Since the Hebrew word for "present" in verse 11 is the same as that used in 27:35 for Esau's expected "blessing" as the older son, it is likely Jacob is sincerely attempting to repay the "blessing" he had deceptively stolen from Esau.

33:12-17 Sadly, there is no indication that Jacob, in fact, intended to go and meet Esau in Seir (v. 14). If so, in spite of his spiritual growth and sincere regret regarding his earlier behavior, he remained deceptive.

34:1-31 Significantly, God is not mentioned in this tragic chapter. Unlike the book of Esther in which God is also not named but in which God's people do act nobly (Est 4:16), there is nothing but treachery and angry vengeance here.

34:3,18-24 Though his act was heinous, Shechem, for whom the city may have been named, desired to marry Dinah, even being willing to undergo circumcision.

34:13-31 Jacob's sons, in their deceit at Shechem, employed the divine covenant sign of circumcision (17:10-14) as a means of ambushing the men of the city. Their looting the city and taking of its wives and children, for which they evidenced no shame or repentance (34:30-31), would cause the descendants of Simeon and Levi to be dispersed among Israel with no definite allotment of territory, through their father's deathbed pronouncement (49:5-7).

35:1-7 Jacob's faith in the Lord had grown greatly, but his wives and children still worshiped the gods of Laban's household. Still, the Lord protected the family when it responded in obedience, putting away everything related to idolatry and building an altar at Bethel as the Lord had directed.

35:9-10 This explanation of why God changed Jacob's name to Israel does not contradict the original statement in 32:27-28, but reaffirms it. The two names are used interchangeably from this point forward in the book of Genesis.

35:16-20 Rachel is the only major figure in the Abrahamic line of promise not to be buried in the cave at Machpelah, which Abraham purchased as a burial site for Sarah (23:17-20). The naming of Benjamin, meaning "Son of the Right Hand," indicates her new son now assumed Rachel's special place of love and honor in Jacob's life.

35:22-26 Reuben, Jacob's oldest son, attempted to assert his right over his father's estate by sleeping with Jacob's concubine Bilhah, the mother of two of his brothers. By doing so, however, he forfeited his blessing as the oldest son (49:3-4).

35:27-29 Isaac lived longer than either Abraham or Jacob. That both Esau and Jacob buried Isaac implies that their reconciliation (33:1-15) continued through the rest of their father's lifetime, extending approximately 50 years after Jacob returned to the promised land.

36:1-5,9-19,43 Esau's ties by marriage to various Canaanite peoples almost assured that his descendants would engage in false worship (Neh 13:23-26). In spite of this, as Isaac's son, Esau was greatly blessed. His descendants intermarried and developed into a large, full-fledged kingdom, Edom, before Israel had a king.

36:6-8 Because of the size and continuing growth ofEsau's and Jacob's households and herds, it was necessary for them to separate, as had Abram and Lot (13:5-12). As heir of the promise to Abraham, Jacob lived in the land of Canaan, while Esau moved his family to Seir, southeast of the Dead Sea in what is now Jordan.

37:1-2 Though Isaac's death is mentioned earlier (35:27-29), the order of events here keeps the focus on Joseph. The story of Joseph explains to Moses' original readers how Israel came to Egypt.

37:2-4 It is likely that, because of the special relationship with Joseph, Jacob asked him for a report on his brothers' work habits (v. 2). The brothers resented Jacob's favoritism, of which the special garment was ample evidence.

37:5-11 The reference to "your mother" would refer to Leah, Jacob's remaining primary wife, since Rachel had died in childbirth years before (35:16-20). The observation that Jacob "kept the matter in mind" looks back on the prophecy of Jacob, the younger son, ruling over his older brother, Esau (25:23), as well as Jacob's significant dreams revealing God's will (28:12-15; 31:10-13). Jacob will live to see these prophecies fulfilled when Joseph becomes the second ruler in Egypt (46:29-30).

37:12-14 Remarkably, Jacob allowed his sons to pasture their flocks in the vicinity of Shechem, the site of their earlier treachery (chap. 34). Apparently the "terror from God" (35:5) continued to protect them in the towns surrounding Shechem.

37:15-17 The brothers had moved the family's herds from Shechem to Dothan. Though located in northern Palestine, Dothan was situated on the primary trade route between the Fertile Crescent and Egypt. Those providential circumstances led to Joseph's being carried to Egypt (vv. 28,36).

37:21-22,30-31 Two things probably motivated Reuben to try to save Joseph's life. First, as the oldest son (35:23), he was most responsible to his father for the safety of his young sibling. Second, after having sexual relations with his father's concubine, Bilhah (35:22), Reuben was undoubtedly attempting to get back in Jacob's good graces.

37:24-28 This passage reveals the low value Joseph's brothers placed on his life, as well as their cruelty. Joseph was thrown into a pit without food or water while his brothers ate a meal. In addition, when Joseph was sold into slavery his brothers accepted "20 pieces of silver" (v. 28), far less than the typical 30 pieces of silver (Ex 21:32).

37:25,28 The Midianites (25:2,4) and Ishmaelites (25:12-18) were closely related as descendants of Abraham (though not Sarah). At this time the two peoples must have enjoyed a close working relationship, since their names are used interchangeably.

37:35 When Jacob says that he will go down to "Sheol," he does not mean he will go to hell (or heaven), but that he will be reunited with his son beyond death. In the Hebrew Bible, Sheol is the general term for the afterlife, the abode of departed spirits beyond the grave.

38:1-30 This passage, which spotlights Judah, has been viewed by some as an awkward intrusion into the long narrative about Joseph (chaps. 37; 39–50). However, it reflects the continuing spiritual hardheartedness of Joseph's brothers, seen in their massacre of the men of Shechem (chap. 34) and in selling Joseph into slavery after nearly killing him (chap. 37). Judah's ethical failures stand in stark contrast to the solid moral character of Joseph (chap. 39).

38:8-11 Two questions might arise in connection with this passage: (1) Why did Judah have his son, Onan, sleep with Tamar, his widowed daughter-in-law, and then withhold his remaining son, Shelah, from her? (2) Why was Onan killed for "evil" behavior after having sexual relations with Tamar? In regard to (1), an established institution of the culture was the "levirate marriage," in which a widow was to be taken as wife by the closest male in her husband's family. Any children from that marriage would be legally considered those of the deceased husband. This practice was made part of the Mosaic law (Dt 25:5-10) and is central in the book of Ruth. Thus, what Judah did in giving Tamar to Onan was morally appropriate, while stalling in regard to Shelah was not. As to (2), the "evil" which caused Onan to be killed was not, as some have said, that he had sex outside marriage or that he practiced a crude form of birth control (vv. 9-10). Rather, it was his selfishness in refusing to allow his sister-in-law to become pregnant by him. He knew that, while he would have to support the child, he would not receive any of his deceased brother's estate, since it would legally belong to the child.

38:11-26 Judah's conclusion that Tamar was "more in the right" (v. 26) is not inferring that her impersonation of a prostitute was morally acceptable. Judah is acknowledging his greater fault in seeking a prostitute and his neglect of Tamar's needs as a helpless widow, to which he should have attended. The fact that Tamar chose to play the prostitute to ensnare Judah speaks volumes about his moral reputation. By wearing the customary veil of the religious prostitute, she avoided being recognized by Judah.

38:18,23,25 A "signet ring" impressed a person's distinctive seal into clay or wax, functioning much like a signature on a legal document today. Tamar was shrewd to insist on keeping Judah's signet ring as a guarantee of payment for her services. Her possession of the ring was undeniable proof of his involvement in her pregnancy.

38:27-30 This passage stands out in the narrative of Genesis for two reasons. First, it is one of several examples of the struggle between older and younger siblings in the ongoing line of Abraham. Second, the sordid incident in which Judah impregnated his daughter-in-law, Tamar, would not thwart God's plan to bless the world through Abraham. Indeed, it would lead to a demonstration of His grace when their illegitimate son would find a place in the Messiah's genealogy (Mt 1:3; Lk 3:33).

39:1-6 Joseph's success in whatever he did indicated divine blessing to Potiphar, just as Isaac's and Jacob's earlier success revealed God's favor (26:12-14; 30:43–31:1).

39:6-10 Joseph's refusal to sleep with Potiphar's wife stands in stark contrast with the behavior of his brother, Judah, who sought out a prostitute (38:15-16).

39:11-19 This passage parallels what happened to Joseph and Judah in regard to an item left behind in each case. Judah's signet ring convicted him and prevented a cover-up of his behavior (38:25). Joseph's garment, left behind when Potiphar's wife made her aggressive sexual advances, allowed her to fabricate a convincing lie about his behavior.

40:1-4 The king's "cupbearer" (or butler) and "baker" were highly trusted "officers" in ancient royal courts. They made sure the king was not poisoned in his food or drink, and because they were highly trusted, both often served as his advisers. The honor of their positions is reflected by the fact that, though they had "offended" Pharaoh, their imprisonment was a kind of house arrest in which Joseph served as their "personal attendant."

40:5-8 Because of his own previous dreams (37:5-10), and his ability to interpret them straightforwardly, Joseph was confident the Lord would allow him to interpret the dreams of the cupbearer and the baker. Joseph's question—"Don't interpretations belong to God?"—was a bold declaration of faith, especially since he had not yet heard the dreams.

40:9-13,16-22 Though the two dreams were significantly different, they occurred the same night and were parallel in the use of the number three, which meant "three days" (v. 18) in each case. Joseph's interpretations repeat the phrase "Pharaoh will lift up your head" (vv. 13,19). The cupbearer's head was lifted up in restoration to his position, while the baker's head was lifted up in being hanged (vv. 20-22). These dreams, containing a number that designates a period of time and pointing to starkly contrasting outcomes, preview Pharaoh's dreams (41:1-7).

41:1-8 Pharaoh's dreams were dominated by the number seven and were full of the common agricultural imagery of Egypt. It was surprising that none of the "magicians" (who relied on occult knowledge), or so-called "wise men," a group of advisors found in many ancient royal courts (e.g., Dn 2:2,10), ventured an interpretation. Perhaps the down-to-earth imagery in the dreams suggested it would be obvious if their interpretation proved false, and that Pharaoh's distress concerning the dreams (Gn 41:8) might lead to their being treated somewhat like the baker.

41:9-13 It is striking that the cupbearer, in bringing up Joseph's name and skill in interpreting dreams to Pharaoh, admits his own faults (lit., "sins," v. 9). Since ancient rulers had the power of life and death over all their subjects, he was taking a risk in reminding the king of this. Perhaps the cupbearer is including his previous failure to mention Joseph to Pharaoh among his acknowledged shortcomings.

41:17-32 Given the annual overflow of the Nile River that left deposits of rich soil, a long drought with resultant famine seemed an unlikely possibility to the Egyptians. When the "thin, ugly cows" in Pharaoh's dream had devoured the "well-fed, healthy-looking cows," their appearance was as repulsive as before. This was a detail he had not told the magicians and wise men (vv. 1-8), but which he disclosed to Joseph.

41:33-36 These words could be a continuation of Joseph's God-given interpretation or they could be the advice of the divinely gifted manager that Joseph had proven to be, both in Potiphar's house (39:1-6) and in the prison (39:22-23). In either case, Joseph certainly was not interviewing for a job as overseer of the famine preparation effort.

41:37 The acceptance of Joseph's proposal by Pharaoh and his honored servants was an insult to the recognized wise men of Egypt.

41:38-39 Although Pharaoh does apparently attribute Joseph's knowledge and ability to the true God of Israel, he would not have known at this point about the Spirit of God (i.e., the Holy Spirit). Instead, his words should be translated "a spirit of the gods," since the Egyptians believed in many gods.

41:40-44,46-49 Potiphar had almost immediately trusted Joseph with everything related to his household (39:3-6), and the warden of the prison had done the same in his sphere of responsibility (39:21-23). Amazingly, Pharaoh immediately made Joseph the vizier (i.e., second ruler) over all the land of Egypt. In the description of Joseph's newfound splendor and power, the most significant item is his possession of Pharaoh's signet ring. Given Pharaoh's confidence in Joseph's intelligence and wisdom (41:39), the king's signet was virtually a blank check for anything Joseph decided to do anywhere in Egypt.

41:45,50-52 In contrast to Daniel's being given a Babylonian name to draw him into the culture of Babylon (Dn 1:6-7), Joseph's Egyptian name recognized his faith in the God of Israel. Zaphenath-paneah means "the God speaks and lives." Within Joseph's family his brother, Judah, had chosen to marry a Canaanite and had largely lowered his moral and spiritual standards to the surrounding culture (Gn 38). Joseph's arranged Egyptian marriage (41:45), by contrast, produced two children whose names honored the one true God(vv. 50-52).

41:53–42:3 The famine of seven years' duration becomes the occasion for Joseph's reintroduction to his family. It is striking that Jacob chooses to purchase grain but not relocate from the promised land due to the famine, even though both Abram (12:10-20) and Isaac (26:1-2) had done so in similar circumstances.

42:4-6 When Joseph's 10 brothers (Benjamin remained with Jacob; v. 4) bowed down before him (v. 6), it was the literal fulfillment of Joseph's first dream (37:5-8).

42:7-22 Joseph was indeed testing his brothers (v. 15), but not in regard to their being spies (vv. 9,14). Instead, the fear and anguish they must have felt because of Joseph's accusations were similar to his pleas not to be sold into slavery (v. 21). Also, having his brothers imprisoned, even briefly (vv. 16-17), gave them a taste of what he had been through as an inmate in 39:20. Had the brothers been spiritually sensitive, they would have followed up on the strong clue in Joseph's testimony that he feared God (v. 18). At least, though they assumed Joseph was dead (v. 13), they perceived that their predicament was from the Lord and was a delayed punishment for their horrible treatment of Joseph (v. 21; cp. 37:23-28).

42:20 Joseph's insistence on seeing Benjamin was not a whim. Benjamin was his only brother born to Rachel, his mother (30:22-24; 35:16-18).

42:21-24 Joseph was deeply touched by his brothers' awareness of guilt in their mistreatment of him, and especially of learning of Reuben's attempt to save him from being sold into slavery. That is the apparent reason why Joseph chose to hold Simeon, his second oldest brother (35:23), as his hostage. As next in line to the oldest brother, he bore the most responsibility for Joseph's ill-treatment.

42:25-38 Joseph was not being cruel in his behavior. By holding Simeon, he guaranteed that his family would return to Egypt so that he could have further interaction with them. By having the money they had paid for the grain put back in each bag, he made sure they had the financial means to pay when they needed to return for more grain. However, Joseph's presumed death years before and the odd circumstances surrounding the money made Jacob that much more reluctant to allow his beloved youngest son, Benjamin, to go to Egypt.

43:1-14 This passage reflects a change of character on Judah's part and a fallback to an earlier strategy on the part of Jacob. Judah had apparently been humbled by what had happened in regard to Tamar (38:26) and now was willing to accept responsibility before his father for Benjamin's safety. Much as he had done with Esau (chaps. 32–33), Jacob chose to send gifts in appealing for mercy.

43:15-34 To be invited to eat with the powerful Egyptian official was not what Jacob's sons had expected to happen. Stranger yet was the pleasant atmosphere, in contrast to the previous encounter when Joseph had upbraided them as spies (42:9,14). The only practice they had expected was that Joseph, presumed to be an Egyptian, ate separately from his brothers. Egyptians found Hebrews to be "abhorrent" (43:32), probably because they considered their bodily hair and beards repulsive.

43:34 The text here does not condone drunkenness but describes a typical banquet behavior. Joseph's brothers were relieved to be treated so grandly, and drowned their confusion about the odd coincidences they were observing.

44:1–45:3 This extended episode hangs together seamlessly. Joseph set up his final test to establish two things. He wanted to determine whether his brothers would attempt to lie their way out of the situation. And he wanted to see if they would desert their youngest brother, Benjamin, in favor of their own self-interest—what they had done, essentially, in selling Joseph into slavery many years before. They passed both tests. They told the truth and, in the process, gave Joseph a great deal of information about relationships in the family of Jacob. Also, Judah did, in fact, offer himself in place of Benjamin to protect him, just as he had promised his father (43:8-10). His brothers' unexpectedly righteous and sensitive response to Joseph's testing led him to reveal his identity.

44:5,15 Divination, widely practiced in Egypt and most other ancient cultures, was the attempt to extract hidden knowledge from supernatural powers other than the Lord. It was later condemned in the Mosaic law (Lv 19:26; Dt 18:10,14). Mention of it in these verses does not constitute approval of the practice; Joseph refers to it by way of threat but does not actually attempt it. Hidden knowledge had come to him from the Lord, in the interpretation of dreams (Gn 40–41).

45:4-8 This passage does not minimize the responsibility of Joseph's brothers in selling him into slavery. Joseph's statement, though, is beautifully balanced. While he holds his brothers responsible for their actions he nevertheless offers forgiveness and urges them to forgive themselves (vv. 4-5), since God used the circumstances to accomplish His wider purposes (vv. 5,7-8). His words anticipate his assurances in 50:19-20

45:6,11 The immediate reason for the move of Jacob's family to Egypt was the continuing famine, which had five more years to run, but there was a long-term consideration as well. God had revealed to Abram that his descendants would spend 400 years in an unstated country before returning to the promised land (15:13). Now it was clear that Egypt was that prophesied country of sojourn. Jacob's family did not remain in Egypt simply because they had become comfortable there.

45:8-28 Because of Pharaoh's gratitude and confidence in Joseph, he was able to settle his family in the land of Goshen (v. 10), the part of Egypt most suitable for shepherds. Goshen would also be relatively close to Joseph's abode near Pharaoh. Israel would continue to have favored status in Egypt until "a new king, who had not known Joseph, came to power in Egypt" (Ex 1:8) and enslaved them. Interestingly, Jacob had sent a very generous gift (Gn 43:11-12) through his sons to smooth the way for additional grain purchase without endangering his beloved Benjamin. Still, he seemed to expect the worst. It was an unexpected blessing not only to receive more gifts in return, but to learn that his long-mourned son, Joseph, was still alive.

45:28–46:4 Jacob was overjoyed at seeing his beloved son, Joseph, but still had serious misgivings about going to Egypt, and especially about staying there for any prolonged period. At Beer-sheba the Lord revealed two things to Jacob. First, it was God's will that Jacob's family and their descendants live in Egypt (46:3) no matter what had happened in previous generations (12:10-20; 26:2). Second, it would be Joseph, his long-lost son, who would bury Jacob's body, returning it to the promised land (46:4). Beer-sheba was the place Jacob had left when he started for Haran many years earlier (28:10).

46:8-27 This list is organized according to Jacob's sons by his wives: Leah's sons (and one daughter, Dinah; vv. 8-15); the sons of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid (vv. 16-18); the sons of Rachel (vv. 19-22); and the sons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid (vv. 23-25). The number 70, considered a number of completeness by the Hebrews, was maintained by not counting the wives of Jacob's sons. It is striking that, since Isaac and Rebekah only had Esau and Jacob, Jacob's family had grown to 70 persons within two more generations. This foreshadowed how large Israel would become by the time they would leave Egypt (Ex 12:37) 400 years later (Gn 15:13-14).

46:28–47:6 Joseph used his knowledge of the Egyptians' sense of ethnic superiority in favor of his family. Knowing that Egyptians considered shepherds "abhorrent" (46:34), Joseph emphasized this so that Pharaoh would send his people to Goshen, keeping them separate from the other peoples of Egypt. While they were in Canaan, the temptation to intermarry had threatened both the bloodline and the faith of God's people. Living in Goshen would make it easier to preserve their distinctiveness.

47:6-7,11 Goshen was "the best part of the land" of Egypt for shepherding flocks. Located in the wider Nile River delta, it was well-watered during the remaining years of the famine.

47:7,10 Jacob's blessing upon Pharaoh as his host in the land of Egypt was an extension of part of the Abrahamic promise in 12:3: "I will bless those who bless you."

47:8-9,28 Jacob's words should not be taken to mean that his lifespan of 130 years to that point was shorter than average. In Ps 90:10, Moses observed: "Our lives last seventy years or, if we are strong, eighty years." Jacob was comparing his lifetime, which would end at 147 years, with those of his father, Isaac (180 years; Gn 35:28), and his grandfather, Abraham (175 years; 25:7).

47:12,27 While the famine effectively erased the wealth and holdings of the people of Egypt and Canaan (vv. 13-26), Joseph took good care of his family, allowing them to be virtually insulated from the famine's devastating impact.

47:13-26 When Joseph was made second-in-command to Pharaoh in the land of Egypt, his mission was to serve in Pharaoh's best interest (41:40-44). In discharging his task, Joseph acquired most of the property of Egypt in the name of Pharaoh, which effectively made almost all the people Pharaoh's personal servants. But the people were so grateful to Joseph for their survival that they were quite willing to be "Pharaoh's slaves" (v. 25).

47:29-31 To put your hand under another's thigh and make a promise was, in ancient cultures, a most solemn way of committing yourself to carry out that promise. Over time, Jacob had begun to take more seriously the Lord's promises at Bethel to give the land of Canaan to Abraham's descendants and to bring Jacob back to that land permanently (28:13,15; 48:4). When he had first received those promises from God, he had been content to remain away from Canaan for 20 years (31:41). As he neared the end of his life, Jacob came to view things much differently.

48:1-2 Fearing that Jacob's death might be near, and that he and his sons might not get to see their father and grandfather alive again, Joseph went to Goshen to see Jacob as soon as he heard of his weakening condition.

48:3-7,22 God's promise quoted here was made to Jacob as he was leaving the promised land (28:13-15). Consequently, all of Jacob's sons except Benjamin were born outside Canaan. When Joseph was sold into slavery in Egypt, this set in motion the circumstances in which his own two sons came to be born in Egypt (41:50-52). Jacob is here effectively saying he is "adopting" Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, into the places of honor formerly held by Reuben and Simeon. He held them responsible for two tragic acts. Reuben, the firstborn, had slept with Bilhah (35:22). Simeon, the second-born, had led the slaughter at Shechem (34:25,30). This is how Ephraim and Manasseh rose to prominence as the fathers of two of the tribes of Israel. Joseph was allotted a double portion through his sons as a result of his role in saving the family.

48:8-10 Verses 8-9 should not be understood to mean Jacob had never seen Ephraim and Manasseh or that his mind was confused in old age. Rather, because Jacob's eyesight had deteriorated, he could not see who accompanied Joseph. It is unthinkable that Jacob would have lived in Egypt for almost 17 years without ever meeting Joseph's sons (47:28).

48:11-20 This scene looks back ironically at Jacob's deception in receiving the blessing intended for his older brother Esau from his blind father, Isaac (27:1-29). In this case, even though Jacob could no longer see well physically, he had perfect insight into what he was doing in blessing Joseph's younger son, Ephraim, over the older, Manasseh.

48:22 Not enough information is presented to know what Jacob is referring to in the phrase translated "the one mountain slope that I took from the hand of the Amorites with my sword and bow." "One mountain slope" is rendered Shechem, which probably 'relates to the destruction and capture of that city by Jacob's sons (chap. 34). The connection seems likely because the wording in 48:22 refers to a land transfer, and Joseph is later buried in Shechem (Jos 24:32).

49:1,28 Blessing his sons before his death (v. 28), Jacob claims to be predicting what will happen to his sons' descendants, the 12 tribes of Israel (v. 28), in the distant future (lit. "the last days"). Since these things did come to pass in later history, those who deny that such prophecy could be legitimate do so only on the basis of an anti-supernatural bias.

49:3-7 Jacob's three oldest sons—Reuben, Simeon, and Levi (35:23)—all forfeited their status by rash acts. Reuben violated Bilhah, his father's concubine (35:22; 49:4). Simeon and Levi led the deadly slaughter at Shechem (vv. 5-7; 34:25).

49:8-12 Apparently because of his willingness to accept responsibility for his earlier sin and for Benjamin's safety, Judah, Jacob's fourth-born son (35:23), is graced to become the progenitor of the Messiah (49:10). This forms the basis (v. 9) for Christ's being called "the Lion from the tribe of Judah" (Rv 5:5).

49:16-17 Verse 16 seems to look ahead to Samson, the "judge" from the tribe of Dan (Jdg 13:2,24-25). Verse 17 probably refers to the gross idolatry of the tribe of Dan in Jdg 18.

49:22-26 The tribe named for Joseph's son Ephraim (48:13-20) would become the dominant tribe of the northern kingdom of Israel; the northern kingdom was sometimes referred to as "Ephraim."

49:27 The wording of this verse apparently refers to the warfare between the tribe of Benjamin and the rest of the tribes of Israel in Jdg 20.

49:29-33 What Jacob had made Joseph solemnly promise in regard to his burial (47:29-31), he now commanded to all his sons in more detail. During his trek to Egypt, God had promised that Jacob would return to the promised land after Joseph had witnessed his death (46:4). In his last words before dying (49:29-33), Jacob focused on making sure he would be buried alongside Abraham, Isaac, and his wife Leah, who had preceded him in death (v. 31).

50:1-3 Embalming was common only among royal families during this time. Joseph had his father embalmed because he could not be buried immediately. The journey back to Canaan would be a long one. The 70-day period of mourning may represent a month beyond the 40 days it took for embalming. Joseph was also embalmed at his death, so his remains could be taken to Canaan for burial when his people returned to the promised land (vv. 24-26; Jos 24:32).

50:4-14 Pharaoh not only allowed Joseph to take a leave of absence to go to Canaan and bury Jacob in the family plot in the cave of Machpelah, he also sent an impressive entourage to accompany him in honor of both Joseph and his deceased father. When they reached the threshing floor of Atad they mourned for a week, perhaps because they had just reentered the promised land.

50:15-21 Just as Jacob had feared Esau's retaliation after a long period of time (chaps. 32–33), Joseph's brothers feared he might take revenge on them after Jacob's death for selling him into slavery (37:28). So they sent a message to Joseph, citing Jacob's plea before his death for Joseph to forgive. That his brothers bowed down to Joseph was a fulfillment of his early dream (37:5-8). While he does not at all discount their guilt, Joseph had long since forgiven them, recognizing God's providential hand of protection behind what had taken place.

50:22-26 Dying at 110 years, more than 90 years of which he had lived in Egypt (37:2,36), Joseph did not live as long as his immediate forefathers: Jacob, 147 years (47:28); Isaac, 180 years (35:28); Abraham, 175 years (25:7). He did, however, live long enough to see his great-grandchildren. When he neared death, like Jacob (49:29-32) he insisted on being buried in Canaan. He was embalmed, partly because of his high position in Egypt but also so that his remains could be transported at the right time.

Exodus Articles

Can Religious Experience Show That There is a God?

by R. Douglas Geivett

The Bible reports many direct experiences of God. As we read in the OT, for example, Moses came across a burning bush in the desert, and God commanded him to return to Egypt to free his people (Ex 3–4). The Angel of the Lord promised Gideon divine deliverance from Israel's enemy the Midianites (Jdg 6:11–8:32). In Abraham's old age, and despite his having no children, the Lord promised Abraham that he and his aged wife, Sarah, would have a son through whom Abraham would become the father of a great nation (Gn 12 and 28). In 1 and 2 Kings God appears to kings and prophets with numerous warnings and promises.

In the New Testament we read of the experiences surrounding the birth announcements of Jesus and John the Baptist (Lk 1:5-38); the transfiguration (Mt 17:1-8; Mk 9:2-8; Lk 9:28-36); Paul's conversion while on his way to Damascus to persecute Christians (Ac 9:1-19); and Peter's decision, motivated by a vision, to take the gospel to the household of Cornelius (Ac 10). There are many other reports of this kind in the Bible—but the record does not end there. Every generation of believers has testified to the immediate presence of God in various ways.

Admittedly, in most cases, these religious experiences occurred in people who already believed in God. The experiences often were intended to impart reliable information or divine guidance and were frequently accompanied by miraculous confirming events. On the other hand, these experiences confirmed the participants in their belief in God, led them to testify to the existence and supremacy of the Lord, and emboldened them to act on the information and guidance they received.

This raises an important question: does religious experience provide grounds for believing that God exists? It is reasonable to think so, and here's why.

A basic principle of rationality is that how things appear in our experience is good grounds for believing that that is how things are, unless there is a good a reason to think that how things appear to us is actually mistaken. If I seem to see an orange tree in my garden, then, in general, I have good grounds for believing there is an orange tree there. But suppose that, during the past 10 years, I've never seen an orange tree there, I did not arrange for an orange tree to be planted there, my wife now looks and says she does not see an orange tree there, and I've recently been prescribed medication known for its hallucinogenic side-effects. These considerations now make it very unlikely that I am seeing what I seem to be seeing. And thus I have no good grounds for believing an orange tree is in the garden.

While alleged religious experiences do not involve the five senses, they do correspond to perceptual experiences of things like orange trees. An entity (an object or a person) is present to the consciousness of some person. So if I seem to be directly aware of God's presence, and if there are no overriding reasons why things are not as they seem, then I have good grounds for believing that God is present and hence for believing that God exists (since God would not be present if God did not exist).

But now we must ask, would my experience be evidence for others if I reported my experience to them? Is testimony about an experience of God good grounds for believing that God exists?

A basic principle is that the testimony of an experience should be trusted unless there is at least as good a reason to think that it is mistaken. If I report to others that I saw a particular orange tree, then, in general, recipients of my testimony have good grounds for believing that I saw it and hence that that particular orange tree exists. But if I have a reputation for clowning around or telling lies, or if I have no idea what an orange tree looks like, or if recipients of my testimony have strong independent reasons for denying that there is an orange tree in the garden, then it would not be so reasonable for them to accept my testimony.

Similarly, if I report a personal experience of God, then this will be grounds for others to believe that God exists if what I report is plausible, if it is likely that my faculties are adequate for such an experience, and if I have a reputation for honesty.

In general it seems rational that, for those who have had the experience, belief in God may be grounded in an experience of God. Also, testimony about the experience may even provide grounds for belief in God for those who do not have such experiences themselves. In combination with other evidences for God's existence, direct religious experience and testimony about such an experience may provide strong motivation for believing in God. It should at least provide motivation for exploring other evidence for God's existence.

Are Miracles Believable?

by Ronald H. Nash

Miracles are essential to the historic Christian faith. If Jesus Christ was not God incarnate, and if Jesus did not rise bodily from the grave, then the Christian faith as we know it from history and the Scriptures would not—could not—be true (see Rm 10:9-10). It is, then, easy to see why enemies of the Christian faith direct many of their attacks against these two miracles of Christ's incarnation and resurrection in particular and against the possibility of miracles in general.

What one believes about the possibility of miracles comes from that person's worldview. On the question of miracles the critical worldview distinction is between naturalism and supernaturalism. For a naturalist, the universe is analogous to a closed box. Everything that happens inside the box is caused by, or is explicable in terms of, other things that exist within the box. Nothing (including God) exists outside the box; therefore, nothing outside the box we call the universe or nature can have any causal effect within the box. To quote the famous naturalist Carl Sagan, the cosmos is all that is or ever has been or ever will be. The major reason, then, why naturalists do not believe in miracles is because their worldview prevents them from believing.

If a naturalist suddenly begins to consider the possibility that miracles are really possible, he has begun to move away from naturalism and toward a different worldview. Any person with a naturalistic worldview could not consistently believe in miracles. No arguments on behalf of the miraculous can possibly succeed with such a person. The proper way to address the unbelief of such a person is to begin by challenging his naturalism.

The worldview of Christian theism affirms the existence of a personal God who transcends nature, who exists "outside the box." Christian supernaturalism denies the eternity of nature. God created the world freely and ex nihilo (out of nothing). The universe is contingent in the sense that it would not have begun to exist without God's creative act and it could not continue to exist without God's sustaining activity. The very laws of the cosmos that naturalists believe make miracles impossible were created by this God. Indeed one of naturalism's major problems is explaining how mindless forces could give rise to minds, knowledge, and sound reasoning.

Is the Old Testament Ethical?

by Christopher Wright

The prevailing prejudice against Scripture is that the Old Testament portrays a violent God of a violent people and is filled with narratives recounting horrendous events with disreputable people playing major roles. Is the Old Testament ethical? Here are some reasons why it is.

It was ethical enough for Jesus. Jesus accepted the truth and ethical validity of the OT ("the Scriptures") in His own life, mission, and teaching. His noted "you have heard that it was said . . . but I tell you" (see Mt 6–7) sayings don't contradict or criticize the OT but either deepen its demands or correct distorted popular inferences. "Love your neighbor" meant "Hate your enemy" to many in Jesus' day, even though the OT never says any such thing. Jesus reminded His hearers that the same chapter (Lv 19) also says, "Love the alien as yourself," extending this to include "Love your enemy." Jesus thus affirmed and strengthened the OT ethic.

Narratives describe what happened, not what was necessarily approved. We assume wrongly that if a story is in Scripture it must be "what God wanted." But biblical narrators dealt with the real world and described it as it was, with all its corrupt and fallen ambiguity. We shouldn't mistake realism for ethical approval. Old Testament stories often challenge us to wonder at God's amazing grace and patience in continually working out His purpose through such morally compromised people and to be discerning in evaluating their conduct according to standards the OT itself provides.

The conquest of Canaan must be understood for what it was. This event, rightly, is troubling to sensitive readers. We can't ignore its horror, but some perspectives can help us evaluate it ethically.

• It was a limited event. The conquest narratives describe one particular period of Israel's long history. Many of the other wars that occur in the OT narrative had no divine sanction, and some were clearly condemned as the actions of proud, greedy kings or military rivals.

• We must allow for the exaggerated language of warfare. Israel, like other ancient Near East nations whose documents we possess, had a rhetoric of war that often exceeded reality.

• It was an act of God's justice and punishment on a morally degraded society. The conquest shouldn't be portrayed as random genocide or ethnic cleansing. The wickedness of Canaanite society was anticipated (Gn 15:16) and described in moral and social terms (Lv 18:24; 20:23; Dt 9:5; 12:29-31). This interpretation is accepted in the NT (e.g., Heb 11:31 speaks of the Canaanites as "those who disobeyed," implying awareness of choosing to persist in sin—as the Bible affirms of all human beings). There's a huge moral difference between violence that's arbitrary and violence inflicted within the moral framework of punishment (this is true in human society as much as in divine perspective). It doesn't make it "nice," but it changes the ethical evaluation significantly.

• God threatened to do the same to Israel—and He did. In the conquest God used Israel as the agent of punishment on the Canaanites. God warned Israel that if they behaved like the Canaanites, He would treat them as His enemy in the same way and inflict the same punishment on them using other nations (Lv 26:17; Dt 28:25-68). In the course of Israel's long history in OT times, God repeatedly did so, demonstrating His moral consistency in international justice. It wasn't a matter of favoritism. If anything, Israel's status as God's chosen people, the OT argues, exposed them more to God's judgment and historical punishment than the Canaanites who experienced the conquest. Those choosing to live as God's enemies eventually face God's judgment.

• The conquest anticipated the final judgment. Like the stories of Sodom and Gomorrah and the flood, the story of Canaan's conquest stands in Scripture as a prototypical narrative, or one that foreshadows what is to come. Scripture affirms that ultimately, in the final judgment, the wicked will face the awful reality of God's wrath through exclusion, punishment, and destruction. Then God's ethical justice will finally be vindicated. But at certain points in history, such as during the conquest period, God demonstrates the power of His judgment. Rahab's story, set in the midst of the conquest narrative, also demonstrates the power of repentance, faith, and God's willingness to spare His enemies when they choose to identify with God's people. Rahab thus enters the NT hall of fame—and faith (Heb 11:31; Jms 2:25).

An eye for an eye is remarkably humane. Unfortunately this phrase sums up for many what OT law and ethics are all about. Even then they misunderstand that this expression—almost certainly metaphorical, not literal—wasn't a license for unlimited vengeance but precisely the opposite: it established the fundamental legal principle of proportionality; that is, punishment mustn't exceed the gravity of the offense. The rest of OT law, when compared with law codes from contemporary ancient societies (e.g., Babylonian, Assyrian, Hittite), shows a remarkable humanitarian concern, especially for the socially weak, poor, and marginalized (the classic trio of "the widow, the orphan, and the alien"). Israel's laws operated with ethical priorities of human life above material property and of human needs over legal rights. Not surprisingly, then, Jesus (who clearly endorsed the same priorities) could affirm that He had no intention of abolishing the Law and the Prophets but rather of fulfilling them.

The Uniqueness of Israel's Religion

by E. Ray Clendenen

Biblical scholars have been jubilant over the discovery of law tablets and other literature from the ancient Near East as well as the ruins of structures such as multichambered temples. Such discoveries have done much to help us understand the cultural and literary climate in which Israel and its Scripture arose and developed. But with these advances comes a nagging question. Why would a religion based on revelation have so much in common with religions that are only products of human imagination?

First, paganism is a corruption of an earlier, pure religion. The worship of the only true God did not develop from animism (the belief in many spirits) to ethical monotheism (the one-God belief of the Jews) according to an evolutionary scheme, as modernists claim. The Bible teaches that paganism began to develop when sin corrupted the worship of the true God (Rm 1:18-23). Thus some of the similarities between paganism and biblical faith could result from a common memory (however faulty) of early events and an earlier legitimate worship that lingers in human personality and culture.

Second, the nations, peoples, and cultures of the world, in spite of their rejection of God, have not developed independently of the Lord's supervision (Dt 2:5,9,19; Am 1:3–2:16; 9:7). On the contrary, their course of departure has been within divinely decreed limits, and they have been included from the beginning in God's redemptive purposes (Gn 12:1-3). Thus, just as God prepared the NT world for the proclamation of the gospel, so also He prepared the ancient Near East culturally for the revelation of the divine name in Israel. That is, the forms that Israel shared with the surrounding peoples were products of God's common grace, though perverted in the nations' case (and frequently in Israel) by paganism.

Third, however the forms of paganism arose, when God began revealing to the patriarchs and early generations of Israel how He was to be worshiped, it was only reasonable that He would employ forms that would have some meaning to them. That would mean using familiar events, symbols, and practices that could be redirected and filled with new meaning. Thus, while the forms of Israel's faith shared many elements with their pagan neighbors, the substance or heart of Yahweh worship could diverge drastically.

Old Testament faith had five main distinctives. First and foremost, it was to be monotheistic and exclusivistic. Cities in the ancient Near East were often filled with temples to various gods. Each of Babylon's nine city gates was dedicated to a different god. Practitioners of other religions often expended great effort in either identifying their gods with those of other nations or demonstrating the subordination of other gods to their patron deity. But Israel's God demanded not a special place in a pantheon but exclusive allegiance. In the context of ancient Near Eastern polytheism, the call of Deuteronomy 6:4 to the worship of Yahweh as the one true God would have seemed revolutionary.

Monotheism also differed from polytheism in the nature of worship itself. By definition, polytheism precluded wholehearted devotion and loyalty to one god. If divine power existed in many gods, none could possess unlimited wisdom or power, and the activities of one god could often be counteracted by the activities of another. The divine will was thus fragmented so that a person could never be safe from divine displeasure and punishment since the will of one god may very well conflict with that of another. But if there is only one God, we can be wholehearted in our devotion to him, as Deuteronomy 6:5 goes on to demand.

The second distinctive was that the God of Israel was transcendent and self-sufficient. He was not the personification of nature with a sovereignty limited to the earth, the heavens, or the underworld. He did not need to be tended or fed in his temple like a Babylonian or Egyptian god. Nor did He need other divine or human assistance through religious rites to maintain cosmic and political order and agricultural productivity. Egyptian temple rituals were the means by which the people contributed to holding the forces of chaos at bay, and Canaanite fertility rites ensured continuing agricultural and human productivity. Yahweh is rather the transcendent One who created an inanimate universe of nature out of nothing and who continually maintains and controls it for His glory. “The profoundest insight of Hebrew religion,” John Oswalt declares, may be that “Whatever God is, he is not the world around us.” This means that magic has no part in biblical worship.

The third distinctive is that although God is transcendent, He has not kept His character or His will hidden as did the gods of other peoples. T. Jacobsen describes the Babylonian god Enlil this way: “Man can never be fully at ease with Enlil, can never know what he has in mind. . . . In his wild moods of destructiveness he is unreachable, deaf to all appeals.” Where the other peoples had to search continually for the divine will through divination, try to awaken divine interest through bodily mutilation (1 Kg 18:26-29), and avoid misfortune through incantations and the wearing of amulets, the Lord had revealed His will in His written Word (Dt 4:6-8).

The fourth distinctive was the nature of the relationship between God and His people. Israel’s relationship with Yahweh was based on divine election in which God established in history a covenant with His people. No other ancient people in that part of the world had a covenantal relationship with their god. The Bible presents mankind as the “crown of creation” and the natural world as theirs to oversee and enjoy. But the foreign gods were primarily feudal gods of the land, which they had created for themselves. People were little more than serfs, a necessary nuisance seldom receiving more than a brief expression of pity or remorse for their grievous situation. But the Lord had formed a people, bound them to each other and to Himself by covenant, and pledged to shepherd them faithfully forever by His grace and to guard jealously their relationship to Him.

Finally, while the Lord ordained the use of ritual in worship, He abhorred ritual that aimed at divine manipulation. The only actions that pleased God were those that arose from the heart (Hs 6:4-6), and true worship was to be accompanied by joy in the Lord (Dt 12:12,18). Thus biblical religion gives at the same time a higher view of humanity and a higher view of God—omnipotent, undivided, purposeful, merciful, uniformly righteous, and deserving of our undivided love. Israel was to be a kingdom of priests, singing to the Lord and declaring His glory among the nations day after day (1 Ch 16:23).

Does the Bible Affirm Open Theism?

by John M. Frame

A group of thinkers known as "open theists," such as Clark Pinnock, John Sanders, Gregory Boyd, and William Hasker, seek to do justice to the give-and-take in Scripture between God and human beings. For example, in Exodus 32:7-10, God tells Moses He will destroy Israel for worshiping the golden calf and raise up a new nation from Moses himself. Moses intercedes, however, and in verse 14 God "changed His mind." God also seems to change his mind in several places, such as in Isaiah 38:1-5, where Isaiah prophesies that King Hezekiah will die, but in response to Hezekiah's repentance adds 15 years to his life. Another example is Jonah 3–4, where God retracts an announcement of judgment in response to Nineveh's repentance.

From these and other such passages, the open theists infer that God is a temporal being (not "above time," as in much traditional theology, but within time), that He changes His mind, that His plans are influenced by creatures, that He sometimes regrets actions that He has performed (as Gn 6:6), and that He does not have exhaustive knowledge of the future. In their view, God's regretting and relenting come about because free human decisions are utterly undetermined and unpredictable. Therefore, God must adjust His plans to the free choices of human beings.

We should not ignore these "relenting" passages. On the other hand, we should also not forget the pervasive biblical emphasis on God's sovereign control of the world and His exhaustive knowledge of past, present, and future. God brings about natural events (Ps 65:9-11; 135:5-7), even apparently random ones (Pr 16:33). He controls the smallest details of nature (Mt 10:29-30). He governs human history (Is 10:5-12; 14:24-27; Ac 17:26). If someone dies accidentally, it is because "God caused it to happen" (Ex 21:12-13). Contrary to open theism, God brings about human free decisions, even sinful ones (Gn 45:5-8; Jdg 14:4; 2 Sm 24; Is 44:28; Lk 22:22; Ac 2:23-24; Rv 17:17). He hardened Pharaoh's heart (Ex 4:21; 7:3), and others as well (Dt 2:30; Jos 11:18-20; 1 Sm 2:25; 2 Ch 25:20), for His own purposes (Rm 9:17). He is also the source of human faith (Jn 6:37,44,65; Ac 13:48; 16:14-15; 18:27; Eph 2:4-10; 2 Tm 1:9) and repentance (Zch 12:10; Ac 5:31; 11:18). So human freedom is not indeterminate as open theists maintain. We are free in that we do what we want to do, but behind our plans and desires are those of God (Jms 4:13-16).

In general, God "works out everything in agreement with the decision of His will" (Eph 1:11; cp. Lm 3:37-38; Rm 8:28; 11:33-36). And God cannot fail at anything He seeks to do (Ps 33:11; 115:3; 135:6; Pr 21:30; Is 14:27; 43:13; 46:10; 55:11; Dn 4:35; Rv 3:7).

Since God controls everything, He knows everything, including the future. Knowing the future is a test of a true prophet (Dt 18:22) and indeed of a true God (Is 41:21-23; 42:9; 43:9-12; 44:7; 48:3-7). Through His prophets God often predicts the future centuries in advance (as Gn 9:26-27). Contrary to the open theists, who think God cannot anticipate human free decisions, He often predicts human behavior in detail (1 Sm 10:1-7; Jr 37:6-10; Mt 26:34). He predicts the behavior and character of human beings in the distant future (1 Kg 13:1-4; Is 44:28–45:13).

How, then, should we understand God's "relenting"? For one thing, God states as a general policy in Jeremiah 18:5-10 that if He announces judgment and people repent, He will relent; He will do the same if He pronounces blessing and people do evil. In other words, relenting is part of God's unchanging plan, not a change forced on Him by His ignorance. Further, God is not only transcendent (beyond our experience) but also immanent (involved in our experience). He has dwelled on earth in the tabernacle and temple, in Christ, and in His general omnipresence (Ps 139:7-12). When God interacts with people in time, He does one thing, then another. He curses, then He blesses. His actions are in temporal sequence and are therefore, in one sense, changing. But these changes are the outworking of God's eternal plan, which does not change.

It is important, then, to see God as working from both above and below, in eternity and in time, and not only within time, as open theists propose.

Introduction to Exodus

AUTHOR

Exodus has been termed "the central book of the Old Testament." Indeed its pages contain some of Scripture's greatest treasures, including the Ten Commandments, the primary accounts of the ten plagues, Israel's exodus from Egypt into freedom, God's establishment of a covenant with His people at Mount Sinai, and the construction of the tabernacle along with its sacred furnishings. Not surprisingly, much controversy has developed around this book as well. Critics have questioned its authorship, challenged the accuracy of its historical accounts, and suggested that its theological and moral teachings contradict statements found elsewhere in the Bible.

Traditional Judaism and Christianity have maintained for thousands of years that God is the author of the book of Exodus and that Moses was the human agent He used to pen its words. The acceptance of Moses as the human author of the first five books of the Bible is based first of all on biblical statements indicating that Moses wrote sacred Scripture. These statements are found within the Torah, or first five books of Scripture (Ex 24:4; 34:28; Nm 33:2; Dt 31:9,22), as well as in other parts of the Bible (Jos 8:31-32; Mk 12:19; Lk 20:28; Jn 1:45). Jesus Himself affirmed that Moses wrote Scripture (Jn 5:46). Within the Bible, the usual way of referring to the first five books of the Bible is to call them the law of Moses (Jos 8:31-32; 23:6; 1 Kg 2:3; 2 Kg 14:6; 23:25; 2 Ch 23:18; 30:16; Ezr 3:2; 7:6; Neh 8:1; Dn 9:11,13; Mal 4:4; Lk 2:22; 24:44; Jn 7:23; Ac 13:39; 15:5; 28:23; 1 Co 9:9). For an extended discussion of the authorship of the Pentateuch, see "Who Wrote the Pentateuch and When Was It Written?", p. 158).

THE RELIABILITY OF EXODUS

Some nineteenth-century skeptics rejected Mosaic authorship because they believed that Semitic writing systems had not been devised at the time he was alive. However, archaeological evidence has dispelled that objection; Semitic inscriptions written at least a hundred years earlier than Moses have been discovered in the Sinai desert. Narrative accounts in the Torah dealing with the events of Moses' lifetime contain details that suggest an eyewitness account and a thorough acquaintance with Egypt. Furthermore, references in the Torah to the land of Canaan are consistently those of one who lived outside the region, as did the Egyptian-born Moses. Linguistic evidence for an early date of composition is also found in the archaic uses of certain terms, particularly the third-person singular feminine pronoun. The way that the narrative hangs together as a whole provides evidence favoring single authorship for the first five books of the Bible.

While accepting Moses as the author of the Torah, conservative scholars have regularly acknowledged that editors living after the time of Moses helped to shape the first five books of the Bible. Evidence for this is found in the use of place names that did not exist during Moses' day (e.g., Dan; see Gn 14:14; Dt 34:1), reference to Israelite kingship (Gn 36:31), updated place names (Gn 14:2,3,7,8,17; 23:2; 35:6,19,27; 48:7), and the account of Moses' death (Dt 34:1-12). It is also possible that editors were responsible for the inclusion and final arrangement of narrative passages beyond the account of Moses' death. To admit that God may have used editors in the process of producing the finished book of Exodus and the rest of the Torah in no way reduces the central role Moses played in producing these books: Moses is legitimately their human author. These books are properly referred to as the law of Moses.

At a more basic level, some skeptics have suggested that there never was an actual person named Moses who led Israel from Egyptian slavery to freedom. For them the story of Moses presented in Exodus—Deuteronomy is a work of fiction created for religious and political reasons. According to these critics, the absence of any mention of Moses in the records of ancient Egypt or contemporary non-Israelite Semitic cultures, as well as the extraordinary claims about him in Scripture, are enough to convince them that Moses was the invention of an ancient Israelite storyteller.

Of course, throughout the centuries Christians have had no problem accepting Moses' reality. As with many other controversial issues, the starting point for addressing this issue is considering the explicit claims of the Bible. Clearly the narratives in Exodus—Deuteronomy present Moses as a historical reality. Numerous passages in the rest of the OT (e.g., Jos 1:1-7; 14:7-11; Jdg 4:11; 1 Sm 12:6; 1 Kg 8:9; 2 Kg 18:4-6; 1 Ch 6:3; 2 Ch 5:10; Neh 1:7-8; Ps 77:20; 106:23; Is 63:11-12; Jr 15:1; Mc 6:4) as well as in the NT (Mt 19:7-8; Mk 12:26; Lk 5:14; Jn 3:14; Ac 3:22; Rm 5:14; 1 Co 10:2; 2 Co 3:7-15; 2 Tm 3:8; Heb 3:2; 11:23-24) make it clear that the biblical writers believed that Moses really lived. Jesus also implied that Moses was an actual person (Jn 5:46-47).

THE FOUNDATION STONE

In many ways the book of Exodus is the foundation stone upon which the rest of the Bible stands. Its laws established the outlines of Israel's social life and provided the authoritative basis for the religious practices that informed Israelite culture for more than a thousand years. The events in this book prepare the reader for Israel's conquest of Canaan and occupation of the land. Its regulations regarding the proper treatment of others serve as the core around which the teachings of Proverbs, the lyrics of many psalms, and the proclamations of the prophets were built.

From a NT perspective, this book is used in three main ways. First, it prefigures the life and ministry of Christ, especially in His role as our sacrificial lamb (Heb 9:12; 1 Pt 1:19; Rv 5:8-9). Second, it provides examples that illustrate the Christian life. Finally, it presents the moral and ethical framework to guide Christians in their decision making.

Exodus Study Notes

1:5 The number 70 mentioned here and in Gn 46.27 seems to contradict Stephen's figure of 75 in Ac 7:14. The number 75 can also be found at Ex 1:5 within the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the OT) and the Dead Sea Scrolls. However, these two numbers can be reconciled. The higher figure includes 5 additional sons born to Ephraim and Manasseh sometime after Jacob and his other clan members arrived in Egypt. These additional individuals are named in Nm 26:28-37 and 1 Ch 7:14-23, as well as in the Greek version of Gn 46:27.

1:7 The succession of Hebrew verbs in this verse translated as "were fruitful . . . increased rapidly . . . became numerous" is the same as those used in God's command to the first human beings in Gn 1:28. This precise parallel serves as one more piece of evidence that the Torah is a unified document.

1:8 The biblical writer's use of the term "king" to refer to the supreme leader of Egypt has been used as evidence that Moses could not have written the book of Exodus, since anyone familiar with Egyptian culture would have used the Egyptian term "pharaoh." But "pharaoh" is used 185 times elsewhere in the Torah. Moses was writing this document to a Hebrew, not Egyptian, audience. In the language of the original readers the term "king" (Hb melek) referred to the highest governmental official within a social system. Perhaps, for the sake of clarity for his readers as well as for literary variety, Moses chose to use the usual Hebrew term.

1:11 The mention of a city named Rameses cannot be used to prove that the events of this narrative took place during the days of Rameses II (c. 1290 B.C.). However, the Bible's chronological references (see esp. 1 Kg 6:1) suggest that the events of chapter 1 occurred at least 150 years prior to Rameses II's reign. The city's name means literally "Born of [the god] Ra." Ra was one of the most popular gods in the history of Egypt, worshiped since at least the Fourth Dynasty (c. 2772 B.C.). It is entirely possible that a city honoring this popular god was built hundreds of years before Rameses II.

1:15 The fact that only two Hebrew midwives were named here may suggest that only a small number of Israelites were living in Egypt at this time. Yet the Bible states that the Israelites had become very numerous in Egypt (v. 7), apparently numbering in the millions (cp. 38:26). The best explanation for the small number of midwives mentioned here is that these two women were the authorized representatives of a larger group of Hebrew nurses.

1:19 Were the Hebrew midwives lying? The Hebrew midwives misled Pharaoh in order to save innocent human lives. The Bible teaches that lying is wrong (20:16; Lv 19:11; Eph 4:29; Col 3:9; Rev 22:15) and that people should tell the truth (Zch 8:16). What the midwives did is not meant as an example of behavior of which God approves. Nevertheless, their act was intended to avert a far greater wrong — the murder of innocent children. Because of Pharaoh's wicked intentions in this matter, he did not deserve to hear the truth from these women. Others in the OT were recorded as deliberately misleading people in order to protect innocent human life, including Samuel (1 Sm 16:2) and Jeremiah (Jr 38:24-27). In a world marred by sin it is not always possible to choose between pure good and pure evil, and one is sometimes compelled to choose the least sinful alternative. Christians are to speak the truth in love (2 Co 4:2; Eph 4:15). Jesus set the example for Christians by telling the truth even when it produced personal pain and suffering (Mt 26:63-66; Jn 8:40-59).

2:10 Is it reasonable to suppose that Pharaoh, who had ordered the death of all male Hebrew children, would permit Moses to live (1:16)? Yes. Ancient parallels exist in which governments raised and educated select young males of hostile cultures. Daniel and several other young Israelites were raised and educated in Babylon so they could serve as government officials (Dn 1). Similarly, Moses' life was apparently spared by Pharaoh in order to prepare him as an administrator over Egypt's Hebrew slaves (see 2:11; Ac 7:22).

2:10 Why would an Egyptian princess have given Moses a Hebrew name? Because the name she chose was both an Egyptian word and a Hebrew word. In Egyptian the root word means "born," and was commonly used as an element in personal names (e.g., Pharaohs Ah*mose*, Thut*mose*). In Hebrew it means "to draw out [of water]." This bilingual wordplay fit Moses in both ways, especially since he was "drawn out" of the Nile.

2:14 This verse has been taken by some as contrary to Heb 11:27, which states that Moses was not afraid of the king's anger. Note, however, that this verse only states that Moses was afraid, not that he feared Pharaoh's wrath. What then might Moses have feared? Perhaps it was the loss of support from his fellow Israelites, since they were willing to betray him. Or perhaps he feared that he had lost his opportunity to be the deliverer of his people.

3:1 Who was Moses' father-in-law: Jethro, Reuel, Raguel, or Hobab? Reuel is the first name given (2:18). Here, only eight verses later, he is called Jethro. His name is given as Hobab in Jdg 4:11, while in Nm 10:29 we learn that Hobab was Reuel's son, Moses' brother-in-law. (The KJV has Raguel for Reuel in Nm 10:29, but the name in Hebrew is the same.) This is not an instance of two different men being identified as Moses' father-in-law. It was not uncommon for people mentioned in the Bible to be known by more than one name, especially where their names were changed because of a significant event, positive or negative. Examples in the OT include the confirmation of the Lord's covenant with an individual (Abram/Abraham, Gn 17:5), the birthing of a son (Sarai/Sarah, Gn 17:15), a life-changing encounter with God (Jacob/Israel, Gn 32:28), personal tragedy (Naomi/Mara, Ru 1:20), or defeat and domination by a foreign king (Eliakim/Jehoiakim, 2 Kg 23:34). In the NT at least two individuals are known by two names: Simon/Peter (Mt 16:17-18), and Saul/Paul (Ac 13:9). Although the Bible gives no explanation for Reuel's change of name, possibly it is a clan name or a title meaning "excellency/his excellency."

3:2 Who appeared to Moses at the burning bush—the Angel of the Lord, or the Lord Himself (v. 4)? Both terms are used in this passage. Elsewhere in the OT the two terms could be used in close proximity, in ways that draw no clear distinction between them (Gn 16:7-13; Jg 6:11-14). Since the Hebrew mal'ach means "messenger," one does not have to think of the "angel" here as falling into some unscriptural stereotype. Perhaps both expressions are simply different ways of referring to the one God. The intimate relationship between the Lord and the Angel of the Lord hints at the relationship demonstrated in the NT between God the Father and God the Son (see Jn 10:30).

3:6 If God cannot be seen, why was Moses afraid to look upon Him? The Bible states that God is invisible (1 Tm 1:17; 6:16) and that no one has ever seen Him (Jn 1:18; 1 Jn 4:12,20). But biblical narrative also makes it clear that God personally visited human beings at various times, and did so in awesome and mysterious ways. The divine disclosure might take the form of a phenomenon of nature—a storm (Jb 38:1), a fire (Dt 4:12), a fiery cloud (Ex 13:21), or a burning bush (vv. 2-4)—or the revelation could be human in appearance (Gn 18:1-33). But the Bible suggests that these self-expressions of God were mediated and partial, not the direct appearance of God in His fullness. The Israelites saw the fire of God, but they did not see Him; they heard God's voice, but they never saw His mouth speaking (Dt 4:12). Moses saw God's form (Nm 12:8), but never saw His face (Ex 33:20-23). When Moses became aware that the bush was burning because God's presence was within it, he showed reverent submission by practicing the timeless Asiatic custom of avoiding eye contact with a superior. To have gazed directly upon God would have been to show contemptuous pride, and risk destruction.

3:8 Which people groups did Israel actually conquer? The Bible's lists of nations that inhabited the land of Canaan differ from one another. Among the seven lists of nations provided in the Torah, only three agree completely (vv. 8,17; Dt 20:17). The first list (Gn 15:19-21) is the longest, containing the names of 10 people groups. One contains 7 names (Dt 7:1), while the others contain only six (Ex 3:8,17; Dt 20:17). There are at least two explanations for these differences. First, some of the groups may have been exterminated from the land before the time of Moses. The Kadmonites, Kenizzites, and Rephaim are mentioned only in the list given to Abraham, who lived hundreds of years earlier. According to Dt 2:20-22, the Ammonites destroyed the Rephaim. Perhaps the Kadmonites and Kenizzites were also eliminated before the time of the exodus. Second, the remaining lists may not have been intended as an exhaustive cataloging of all the cultural groups present in the land; they merely listed the major people groups with which Israel would have to deal.

3:14-15 Why did God tell Moses to say, " 'I AM' has sent me," but then later to say, "the LORD has sent me"? The Hebrew words translated "I AM" and "the LORD" are two forms derived from the same Hebrew verb. Though "I AM" is not reused as a name for God in the OT, "the LORD" is used more than 5,000 times. The phrase "the LORD" is a rendering of the Hebrew word YHWH ("Yahweh") that seems to mean "He [Who] Is" or "He [Who] Causes to Be." The translation of God's name into English as a title, rather than a personal name, is a way of showing reverence for Him; it continues a tradition that predates Christianity and is reflected in the NT (see Ac 2:21). Jewish readers, coming to the divine name in the text, substituted the word 'Adonai, "Lord," and the Masoretic scribes inserted the vowel signs ("points") for 'Adonai in the word YHWH as a reminder. In some older English translations YHWH is rendered "Jehovah," a form derived from combining the vowel sounds for 'Adonai with the consonants for YHWH.

3:22 Stealing is a sin (20:15; Lv 19:11; Matt 19:18; Mk 10:19; Lk 18:20) and never condoned by God (see Eph 4:28). On the other hand, receiving reparations for crimes committed against someone is part of God's law (see Ex 22:1). The Egyptians had stolen the freedom and labor of the Hebrews, and would now be required to pay for their misdeeds. God was not asking the Israelites to steal from the Egyptians. Furthermore, because the Israelites had gained favor in the eyes of the Egyptians they voluntarily gave goods to those they had oppressed.

4:3-8 Could a stick actually become a serpent, or a hand suddenly become leprous and then instantly healthy again? Yes, if God transforms them. According to vv. 5 and 8, God made these things happen to convince doubters that He had really appeared to Moses. An "impossible" act—that is, one occurring outside of the natural order—would be more convincing than an ordinary action. As Creator of the universe, God is not limited to actions in accordance with the laws of nature; the occurrence of these miracles would convince all but the most determined doubters that God had come to His prophet.

4:11 Would a God who claims to be love (see 2 Co 13:11-13; 1 Jn 4:8,16) make people mute, deaf, or blind? According to the Bible, God's ways are always righteous (Ps 145:17) and good (Ps 25:8; 34:8; 100:5). Yet God also performs acts of judgment against sinners, including removing a person's ability to speak or see (2 Kg 6:18; Lk 1:18-22; Ac 9:3-8). God may also allow physical problems in peoples' lives for redemptive purposes, in order to provide a witness to Jesus' healing power (see Jn 9:2-3) or to demonstrate God's sustaining grace (2 Co 12:9).

4:21 The Bible teaches that human beings are free to make choices (Gn 2:19; 4:7; Ezk 18:2-32). God is good (Ps 25:8; 34:8; 100:5) and always acts consistently with His nature. Yet people can choose to rebel against God's goodness, and consistent rebellion can lead to their hearts being "hardened." As the saying goes, "The same sun that melts butter also hardens clay." Egyptian pharaohs believed they were divine, and Pharaoh would never have been inclined to submit to the Israelites' God. Each time God placed a demand on him, he became more determined to resist. Thus it was both God's demands and Pharaoh's own pride-motivated stubbornness (Ex 8:15,32; 9:34) that led to his hardened heart. God would use Pharaoh's stubbornness for a good end, to demonstrate His power and extend His reputation (9:16).

4:24 Why did the Lord try to kill Moses? To answer this question, it is necessary to examine how Moses' life was spared; the situation was reversed only when Moses' wife circumcised his son. Since the days of Abraham God had required His people to circumcise their sons as a sign of their relationship with Him (Gn 17:10-14). As a leader of God's people, Moses was expected to set the proper example before the Israelites. When he failed to have his son circumcised before returning to Egypt he incurred the Lord's displeasure. Failure to meet God's requirement had imperiled both his life and ministry.

5:1 When Moses and Aaron asked Pharaoh to let the Israelites leave Egypt to "hold a festival" in the wilderness, they were not lying. The proper worship of the Lord had been denied the Israelites in Egypt, yet it was more fundamental to their calling as the people of God than freedom from slavery. Pharaoh had the opportunity to accommodate Israel's desire, but his denial of the request made it clear that the only way Israel could worship the Lord as He required was to leave Egypt for good (see 6:11).

5:7 Archaeology reveals that bricks made with straw were a common building material in Egypt during the OT era. Such evidence from archaeology gives the biblical narrative greater credibility.

6:3 People began calling on the name of Yahweh during Seth's lifetime (Gn 4:26), and Abraham and Sarah (Gn 14:22; 16:2), Isaac (Gn 26:22), and Jacob (Gn 27:20) explicitly used the name. Yet here the Lord seems to suggest that he had not previously been known by that name. Two possible reasons may exist for this. First, God may be saying that He is revealing Himself to Moses more fully than to anyone before him. Thus Moses and the generations to follow would have a more complete knowledge of who Yahweh is. Second, the Lord's statement may be translated from the Hebrew as a rhetorical question: "And did I not make My name Yahweh known to them?" In this case, the Lord was affirming the continuity of relationship that had existed between Himself and His people over a period of time.

6:16-20 In accordance with the promise given to Abraham (Gn 15:16) and the genealogy listed in 1 Ch (6:3,18), four generations of Israelites lived in Egypt. The Israelites had entered Egypt as permanent residents during the days of Levi (Gn 46:5-11). The majority of Levi's life was spent in Egypt, and he, his son and his grandson all died in that land. But during the eightieth year of his great grandson Moses, Israel left Egypt.

A careful reading of the Bible makes it clear that the four successive generations of tribal leaders are listed here. Even though Moses' sons Gershom and Eliezer were alive at the time of the exodus (Ex 18:1-5), they were not considered in the reckoning of four generations because they had not yet achieved patriarchal status.

For a discussion of how much time the Israelites spent in Egypt, see note on 12:40. As to whether or not the Israelites could have achieved a population of more than 600,000 adult males in the time from Jacob until the exodus, see note on 12:37.

Some scholars are unable to reconcile the four generations mentioned here and in Gn 15:16 with the traditional Hebrew (Masoretic) Text of Ex 12:40, which states that the time the Israelites spent in Egypt amounted to 430 years. They suggest that the genealogy of Gn 46 omits several generations. In other words it is "telescoped," several generations being omitted in order to create the impression that only 4 generations of Israelites resided in Egypt. It is true that some of the genealogy lists in the Bible omit names (see the article Are the Genealogies Reliable?). But since the generations presented here exactly match those presented in 1 Ch 6, it is reasonable to conclude that what is presented here is a complete genealogy.

6:18 This list of Kohath's sons does not necessarily contradict the one given in 1 Ch 6:22. This list agrees exactly with the ones found in 1 Ch 6:2 and 6:18. Amminadab, mentioned as a son of Kohath in 1 Ch 6:22, may be an otherwise unmentioned fourth son of Kohath, or the name may be a secondary designation for Izhar. (For a discussion of individuals known by more than one name, see note on 3:1.)

7:3 For a discussion of the Lord's hardening Pharaoh's heart, see note on 4:21.

7:9-10 Did the Egyptians really turn their rods into serpents (see v. 12)? Another translation of the Hebrew word rendered "by their occult practices" (v. 11) is "by their flames." The Egyptian sorcerers, like modern magicians, seem to have used a bright distraction to conceal their substitution of serpents for the sticks. (The NT, in 2 Tm 3:8, gives their names as Jannes and Jambres.) The activities of these sorcerers foreshadow those of a "lawless one" who will come at the end of the age and perform pseudo-miracles (2 Th 2:9).

7:20 Did the Nile River actually turn to blood? The OT uses the Hebrew word translated "blood" in two different senses—in the literal sense, to refer to the life-giving fluid in the circulatory system of human beings and animals (Gn 4:11); and in the figurative sense, to refer to the color of blood (see Jl 2:31). Either interpretation is possible here: the Nile could have become literal blood, or it could have turned the color of blood due to the presence of some toxin within it. In either case, the Bible is describing a true miracle. God produced the results He said He would, and He did it when He said He would.

7:20-21 Were the ten plagues natural occurrences, not miracles? According to the Bible they were true miracles—signs and wonders performed by God (6:6; 7:3-4; 8:19).

Theologically, a miracle can be defined as God's working at just the right time, in just the right place, in just the right degree to produce a redemptive outcome. Miracles are acts of God, but God can make them happen in various ways. As Creator of the universe He can work miracles through nature, or outside the natural order when it suits His purposes. The events of Jos 3:16 may be an example of a miracle occurring when God worked through natural forces. But God is not bound by nature; He is Spirit (Jn 4:24) and exists outside the material order. Thus He can act in ways that differ from the patterns we call "scientific laws." Christ's resurrection from the dead is the greatest miracle of this type.

The biblical description of the events associated with the ten plagues allows for the possibility that God used natural processes to bring judgments on Egypt's gods (Ex 12:12) and set His people free from Egyptian captivity. Some have suggested that bacteria turned the waters red, and the poisoned waters killed the fish and forced the frogs to seek cool, moist places away from the Nile. When the frogs died their corpses were a breeding ground for two types of small insects. These, in turn, spread communicable diseases among both animals and humans, resulting in death to the livestock and boils upon the people. A well-timed locust plague followed by a spring hailstorm devastated Egypt's crops. Shortly thereafter a desert sandstorm or dust cloud darkened most of Egypt. Finally a devastating plague, perhaps one caused by the insects, killed both humans and beasts among the non-Israelites. God was at work in the entire sequence of events, making them occur in the appropriate location, at the designated time, and at the prescribed intensity level.

If God chose to work outside the natural order, it is reasonable to assume that the waters of the Nile were transformed for a time into actual blood. No causal chain would be needed to link the events of the first plague with those that followed up through the sixth, and possibly the tenth, as described above. God could bring small insects into existence directly from the dust of the earth (8:16-17) without resorting to natural causes. He made these ten events take place in response to Pharaoh's stubbornness. Though this second option may be less intellectually satisfying to Americans and Europeans, it is within God's power to have brought about the plagues in this way.

Which of these methods did God employ to create the ten plagues? Since both account for all the biblical facts, either is a viable possibility. It is enough to affirm that God did them and that they fully accomplished His purposes.

7:22 The Bible suggests it was human cunning, not miraculous powers, by which the Egyptian magicians turned the water from the Nile into blood. The same Hebrew expression, "by their flames," occurs here as the explanation for what they performed (see note on 7:9-10).

8:7 See note on 7:9-10.

8:26-27 The Bible never says that Moses tried to deceive Pharaoh in requesting permission to leave Egypt in order to conduct a sacrifice. Apparently, on three occasions (vv. 26-27; 10:9,25-26) the Lord told Moses to make relatively minor requests of Pharaoh —all of which would be turned down—to show the extent of his hardness of heart (see note on 5:1).

9:6 How did God kill all the Egyptians' livestock? See note on 7:20-21.

If all the Egyptians' livestock were killed in the plague, where did the livestock come from that later died in the hailstorm (vv. 19-25)? The Bible doesn't explain this; however, two possibilities exist. The first assumption is that the word "all" should be taken literally. In that case the livestock later killed in the hailstorm were imported from farther up the Nile river, perhaps from Cush; or that in the interval between the plagues the Egyptians had acquired some of the Israelites' flocks. Alternatively, the word "all" in v. 6 might be used here in a restrictive sense to mean "all that were in a particular area," or "all who were afflicted," or perhaps simply "the great majority."

9:7 For a discussion of Pharaoh's heart being hardened, see note on 4:21.

9:9 How could furnace ash create boils? It is not necessary to assume that the outbreak of boils was caused directly by contact with the ash; the Lord could have inflicted the boils independently of the dust when Moses acted in obedience to His command. As with many of the other miracles, God may have acted through nature, perhaps through a bacterium or virus, or beyond the realm of the natural, to accomplish His purposes.

9:25 For a discussion of how the Egyptians could have flocks even after a plague killed their livestock, see note on 9:6.

10:1 For a discussion of the Lord's hardening Pharaoh's heart, see note on 4:21.

10:19 For a discussion of what is meant by "Red Sea," see note on 14:16.

11:3 Self-praise is condemned in Scripture (Pr 27:2), yet Moses, traditionally viewed as the author of the Pentateuch or first five books of the Bible, appears to praise himself here. Such complimentary statements about Moses appear also in Nm 12:3 and Dt 34:10-12. The Pentateuch, however, has been subjected to a process of transmission, even in an oral stage, and it is by no means certain that Moses himself inserted these words. It is possible that they come from the same editor who provided the account of Moses' death (Dt 34:5-12). The inspired scriptures came into being when "moved by the Holy Spirit, men spoke from God" (2 Pt 1:21), but all their names may not be known to us. Still, even if Moses wrote these self-complimentary words, they are not so much an attempt to glorify himself as they are a declaration of the degree of respect the Israelites and their leader had gained among the Egyptians.

11:10 For a discussion of the Lord's hardening Pharaoh's heart, see note on 4:21.

12:3-7 Was the Passover animal supposed to be slain at the sanctuary, or at home? According to Dt 16:1-7, the only permissible place to sacrifice the lamb or goat was at the place where the Lord would choose to put His name–that is, at Jerusalem; it was forbidden to slay the animal at a person's home. But of course this requirement was not applicable to the Israelites while they were still slaves in Egypt. The instructions provided in Ex 12:7 applied specifically to the first Passover, and perhaps also the Passovers that were celebrated prior to the construction of the temple in the days of Solomon.

12:5 This passage appears to contradict Dt 16:2 regarding which animals may be used for the Passover sacrifice. The instruction of Dt 16:2 allows animals of the herd—that is, cattle or oxen—as well as lambs or goats from the flock. But a careful reading suggests that these two passages are addressing different issues. Exodus 12:5 deals with the animal that is to be eaten as part of the Passover meal, on the first night of an eight-day celebration that included both the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread. On the other hand, Dt 16:2-8 mentions the kinds of sacrificial animals that were to be used for different purposes throughout the festival period. The guidelines of Dt 16:2 are spelled out in greater detail in Nm 28:16-31, which specifies that bulls, sheep, and goats were to be sacrificed on each of the days of this lengthy celebration.

12:7 It was the people's obedience to God that saved them, not the blood on the doorpost. Those who obeyed the Lord's instruction to place the blood of an unblemished male lamb or goat on the doorposts of their home were spared. By doing so, they demonstrated that they were placing their trust in a sacrificial death prescribed by God for their salvation. Since the days of the apostles, Christians have seen in this event a foreshadowing of the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ, "our Passover" (1 Co 5:7), whose blood spares us from the coming wrath of God (Rm 5:9).

12:12 For a discussion of what animals the Egyptians would have had left for the Lord to kill, see note on 9:6.

12:13 God knows all things (1 Jn 3:20) and did not need to make an inspection tour through the land, noting the blood on each doorpost to discern who was obedient to Him. The blood was the "distinguishing mark," a sign for the benefit of the Israelites that confirmed their obedience to God and His promise of salvation. The phrase "when I see the blood" is used figuratively to indicate the Lord's knowledge of those who trust Him. The expression looks ahead to God's response to those who, having entered into the death of Christ (Rm 6:3-7), are protected by His blood from the wrath of God's judgment.

12:31 If the exodus occurred as the Bible describes it, why does it receive no mention in Egyptian records? The probable answer is that the official Egyptian records were written by government functionaries not to provide an objective recording of historical events, but in order to support the existing political and religious powers of their day. Egyptian annals glorify the accomplishments of the Pharaohs and reinforce the prevailing Egyptian religious convictions. Any set of events that cast Egyptian gods and their Pharaoh (who was himself considered a god) in a bad light would hardly be mentioned in an official Egyptian document.

12:35 Some have suggested that Moses' scheme to gain Israel's freedom was to mislead Pharaoh and the Egyptians into thinking Israel would make only a brief pilgrimage into the wilderness, temporarily "borrowing" others' possessions, while his secret intent was a permanent departure. The Bible's narrative does not support this view. Far from a secret departure, Israel was publicly forced by the Egyptian government to leave the land for good, and the general Egyptian population supported Pharaoh's decision (vv. 31-33). For a discussion of Israel "stealing" from the Egyptians, see note on 3:22.

12:37 How could the Israelites have become so numerous during their years in Egypt? The Bible seems to claim that the 75 males of Jacob's family had increased to more than 600,000 males age 20 and older in Moses' time (603,550 at the time of the first censuses taken at Mount Sinai—see 38:26; Nm 1:46). This has struck many scholars as impossible, especially if one accepts that Jacob was Moses' great-great-grandfather.

Two considerations make plausible this rapid growth from 75 to 600,000 males. First, Ex 1:7 states that "the Israelites were fruitful, increased rapidly, multiplied, and became extremely numerous so that the land was filled with them." Furthermore, 1:9-12 suggests that the Israelites' dramatic population increase was the primary factor in Egypt's decision to oppress them. The Bible clearly affirms that the Israelites experienced explosive growth in population once they arrived in Egypt.

Second, the evidence in both the OT and NT suggests that 215 years elapsed between Jacob's entry into Egypt and the exodus (see note on 12:40). It is mathematically possible for Jacob's twelve sons to have produced a nation with a population of more than 600,000 males in slightly more than two centuries. During this period from five to eight generations of Israelites could have lived, depending on the family line. Moses' line was five —Levi, Kohath, Amram, Moses, Gershom and Eliezer (see 6:16-20; 1 Ch 6:1-3); Joshua's was apparently eight—Joseph, Ephraim, Shuthelah, Laadan, Ammihud, Elishama, Nun, Joshua (see 1 Ch 7:20-27). The number of sons produced by each family would vary, depending on how many generations were involved. For 8,600 Kohathite males to have been alive at the time of the exodus (see Nm 3:28) would have required each family to produce as average of seven sons; the 40,500 adult males in Joshua's tribe at the time of the exodus narrative (see Nm 2:19) would require four to five sons per family. While such large families might be considered unusual, the numbers are consistent with the claims of Ex 1. It is worth noting that many individuals in the Bible were said to have produced more than seven sons—Abraham had eight (Gn 25:1-2,9), Jacob had 12 (Ex 1:1-5), Jair and Ibzan had 30 (Jdg 10:4; 12:9), Abdon had 40 (Jdg 12:14), Ahab had 70 (2 Kg 10:1), and Gideon had 71 (Jdg 9:56).

12:40 How much time did the Israelites spend in Egypt? The Hebrew text used as the basis for English translations of this verse states literally that "the dwelling of the sons of Israel which they dwelt in Egypt was four hundred and thirty years." The Samaritan Pentateuch, on the other hand, states that the Israelites spent 215 years in Egypt. The difference in numbers may not be a true contradiction, but the result of different ways of computing Israel's time in Egypt. The Samaritan Pentateuch, following a very old tradition that is reflected in the NT (see Gl 3:17), probably arrived at the figure 215 by starting with the number 430 and then factoring in certain events associated with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. By taking into account the number of years between Abraham's visit to Egypt and the birth of Isaac (25 years, see Gn 12:4; 21:5), Isaac's age when Jacob was born (60 years, Gn 25:26), and Jacob's age at the time he entered Egypt (130 years, Gn 47:9), the editors of that version concluded that Jacob's descendants spent 215 years in the land.

The Septuagint likewise clarifies the number 430, but does so in a different way. It expands the reading found in the Hebrew text, stating that "the dwelling of the sons of Israel, and of their fathers, which they dwelt in the land of Canaan, and in the land of Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years" (italics added).

The NT provides conclusive evidence that the chronological clarifications in the Samaritan Pentateuch and Septuagint are accurate. In Gl 3:17 the apostle Paul noted that the Law was given to Israel 430 years after God's covenantal promise had been delivered to Abraham. The first-century Jewish historian Josephus (Antiquities 2:15:2) accepted this number, as did many significant voices in Christian history prior to the twentieth century (e.g., Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, Bishop James Ussher). When the NT evidence is considered together with that of the OT, it seems clear that 430 years elapsed from the time of Israel's first entrance into Egypt, and that the reckoning began with Abraham's dealings with Pharaoh (Gn 12:10-20).

12:43,48 Although the OT requires non-Jews adopting the faith of Israel to be circumcised, the NT discourages the practice (1 Co 7:18; Gl 5:2). The prophet Jeremiah foresaw a time when God would make a new covenant that would replace the one He made with Israel at Mount Sinai (Jr 31:31). Jesus Christ brought that new covenant into being through His sacrificial death on the cross (Heb 9:15). Through Christ a new relationship exists between God and humanity (2 Co 5:17; Gl 6:15), one that does not require men to be circumcised (see Ac 15:1-21).

13:12-16 Offering every firstborn male animal from their flocks required financial sacrifice on the part of the Israelites, yet the Lord required it. God is interested in more than his people's material prosperity; He also wants them to develop their values, character, and spiritual life. As each succeeding generation of Israelites gave its firstborn males to God, they would in some way recreate the exodus event. They would be reminded of the seriousness of sin; whenever they ate the meat of the animal, they would be reminded of the sacrificial meal eaten by their forefathers on the night of the exodus. By sparing their own firstborn sons through the death of a sacrificial animal, in obedience to the Lord's command, they would experience the lifesaving grace of God in a deep and unforgettable way. Unlike the Canaanites, who gave firstborn sons and daughters to their gods by killing them (Lv 18:21), the Israelites were to let their children live (Dt 18:10). They were to pay a redemption price for each child redeemed. The males of the tribe of Levi were then to serve as lifelong substitutes for the redeemed sons (Nm 3:12).

13:18 For a discussion of what is meant by "Red Sea," see note on 14:16.

13:21-22 According to Nm 10:29-31, Moses asked Hobab, son of his father-in-law Reuel (see note on Ex 3:1), to assist the Israelites during their time in the desert. As a local resident Hobab knew that area well, and his insights would be invaluable to the Israelites. His role, however, was only supportive. God would guide the covenant people to the promised land through the pillars of cloud and fire.

Was the pillar of smoke and fire simply the result of an altar fire being burnt by the priests? The Bible does not indicate the physical origin, if any, of the cloud or fire. However, it emphatically claims that throughout the exodus events the cloud was inhabited by God (v. 21) and possessed lifelike qualities. When Israel was threatened by the Egyptians the cloud moved between the Israelites and their enemies, expanding and spreading so as to hide the Israelites (14:19). Whenever Moses entered the sacred tent the cloud would descend and stand at the door (Nm 12:5). It could also come down and rise up again to execute judgment (Nm 12:5-10). These characteristics suggest that the cloud had supernatural origin and control. Even if a natural explanation could be found for it, the Bible makes it clear that this cloud was supernatural, in that God controlled it and His presence resided in it.

14:4 For a discussion of the Lord's hardening Pharaoh's heart, see note on 4:21.

14:9 For a discussion of how the Egyptians could have horses even after a plague killed their livestock, see note on 9:6.

14:16 Did the Israelites pass through a marsh—a "sea of reeds"—and not the Red Sea? Many scholars have accepted this suggestion, but a full consideration of the biblical evidence leads to the conclusion that Israel escaped the armies of Pharaoh by passing through a large and dangerous body of water. The biblical text states that the waters were deep (Is 63:13), but that God split them and made them stand "like a wall" (Ps 78:13) on either side of the fleeing Israelites (Ex 14:22,29). When the waters returned to their original position they covered the Egyptians' chariots, horses, and soldiers (v. 27; 15:1; Dt 11:4; Jos 24:7; Ne 9:11; Ps 78:53), thereby killing all the enemy (Ex 14:27-28,30; Ps 106:11). In the NT, Stephen, the apostle Paul, and the writer of Hebrews referred to the body of water as a sea (Ac 7:36; 1 Co 10:1; Heb 11:29).

Commentators have noted that the Hebrew phrase yam suph, traditionally translated as "Red Sea," can also mean "sea of reed." While that translation is possible, the OT always employs this phrase to refer to a deep body of water east of Egypt and adjacent to the Sinai Peninsula. In 1 Kg 9:26-28 Solomon is said to have built a fleet of trading ships that sailed on the Red Sea to the land of Ophir. Both the NT and the Septuagint translate yam suph as "Red Sea" (see Ac 7:36; Heb 11:29) and not "sea of reeds," or a marsh.

14:21 How could a dry path be created through the middle of the Red Sea? God performed a miracle, using, at least in part, the forces of nature. The biblical writer mentions the role of wind in this event, but that does not preclude the possibility that God used other aspects of nature of which we have no knowledge. The suggestion that a tsunami was responsible for the temporary displacement of water in the Red Sea area is interesting, but does not account for the description of a "wall" of water on either side of the fleeing Israelites (vv. 22, 29). Possibly God augmented the forces of nature with supernatural activity to create a safe passage for Israel through the body of water.

14:25 Some scholars have suggested that most of the exodus narrative is fabricated, though it may contain kernels of historical truth. They reject the Bible's claim that the Red Sea actually parted, but accept the possibility that Egyptian chariots became mired in the muddy marshlands in pursuit of escaping Asiatic slaves, allowing them to escape.

Certainly the Bible indicates that the Egyptians had trouble with their chariots, but this is not portrayed as the primary reason the Israelites' escape succeeded. Nine different books in the Bible (Ex, Dt, Jos, Ps, Is, Ac, 1 Co, Heb) explicitly affirm, or clearly assume, that the Red Sea split apart, saving Israel but destroying their pursuers. Any approach to the Bible that selectively rejects the straightforward narrative in Exodus in order to produce a naturalistic explanation of events will create more problems than it solves. Such an approach requires one to assume that the writers of eight other books in the Bible got it wrong. It reflects unwarranted pride, crediting modern readers of the Bible with a better grasp of biblical events than those who witnessed and wrote about those events.

15:3 Is God a "man of war" or the God of peace (Rm 15:33) and love (2 Co 13:11-14; 1 Jn 4:8,16)? According to the Bible, He is all of these. Just as human beings, made in the image of God (Gn 1:26-27), are capable of participating in war yet also of working for peace, so God can and does do the same. As the God of perfect justice (Gn 18:25; Ps 145:17), He will not let evil behavior go unpunished. When appropriate, He acts decisively against wrongdoers. God's acts that put an end to the activities of the wicked are expressions of His perfect love for both them and their victims. His acts of judgment bring about a greater peace.

15:11 Some have suggested that the OT teaches henotheism (the worship of only one God, though many exist) rather than monotheism (the worship of the only God who exists). Certainly the writer knew that people worshiped many different gods (12:12; 23:13, 32), but that is not to say he believed these other gods actually existed.

To the contrary, one of the great teachings in the Bible is that there is one, and only one, God (Dt 6:4; Mal 2:10; 1 Co 8:5-6; Gl 4:8; Eph 4:6), who is the creator of the entire universe (Gn 1:1; Jn 1:3; Rm 11:36; Col 1:16; Heb 1:2). At the same time, the Bible teaches that God created spiritual beings, and that people are inclined to worship them (Col 2:18; Rv 19:10). These God-created spirit beings possess superhuman powers (2 Kg 19:35) and can appear impressive (Jdg 13:6,20; Ac 12:7; 2 Co 11:14). Among the created beings in the spiritual order are those who now live in rebellion against God (2 Pt 2:4). It is possible for people to believe they are worshiping a god while worshiping a powerful demonic being instead (2 Co 11:14; Col 2:18).

Some people may treat an object manufactured by a craftsman as though it were a god (Is 44:9-19; 45:20). But such objects are obviously not God, and are infinitely inferior to the true God, who stands without peer in the spiritual realm. All worship of created things is prohibited in the Bible (see Ex 20:4-5; Lv 26:1; Dt 4:15-19; 5:8).

15:20 If women are supposed to be silent and not teach or have authority over men in churches (1 Co 14:34-35; 1 Tm 2:11-12), why was Miriam a prophetess? Apart from the fact that Miriam lived before there were churches, being a prophetess is not the same as being the pastor of a church. A prophet or prophetess is simply one who receives a message from God and passes it along to others. Though some women–as well as some men–were false prophets (Neh 6:14; Ezk 13:17; Rev 2:20), others were genuine spokespersons for God (Jdg 4:4; 2 Kg 22:14; Is 8:3; Lk 2:36; Ac 21:9). Women acting as prophets is part of God's plan (Jl 2:28), and the apostle Paul assumed that women would perform this act in church services (1 Co 11:5).

16:16 In the wilderness the Israelites apparently lived in both tents and booths. Many of them probably did not have tents when they first left Egypt, and so had to sleep in temporary structures they fashioned from available materials (Lv 23:42-43). However, they would have made tents for themselves as soon as possible after departing from Egypt.

16:31 The Bible compares the taste of manna with both honey and oil (Nm 11:8). Its flavor was evidently reminiscent of both substances. The comparisons suggest that manna, like many of today's common foods, contained both fats and sugars. Which flavor predominated may have depended on how it was prepared.

17:5-6 Providing enough water in a desert to quench the thirst of a group of more than 600.000 men, besides women and children, was a miracle of the highest order, all the more impressive considering that Israel spent 40 years in the desert. Moses' striking of the rock was not what produced the water, but rather God standing with Moses at the rock (v. 6).

17:14 If God blotted out the remembrance of Amalek, why do we still know about them? Even the inclusion of this verse in the Bible ensures that Amalek would never be forgotten. It is clear that the phrase "blot out the memory" in this context means "to remove any concern that Amalek would pose a threat to another nation." That promise was fulfilled during the days of King David (1 Sm 30:16-17).

18:5 For the name of Moses' father-in-law, see note on 3:1.

19:1-2 The meeting in chapter 18 between Moses and his father-in-law Reuel took place at "the mountain of God," which is elsewhere understood to be Mount Horeb/Sinai. Yet it is not until 19:1-2 that Israel is said to arrive at that location. Probably this section of the book of Exodus is an instance of materials being arranged thematically rather than chronologically. While events are usually told according to the order in which they occurred, sometimes it suits the writer's purpose to join materials together according to topic instead. Other biblical writers certainly did this, as can be seen in the arrangement of narratives and prophecies in the book of Jeremiah and in Matthew's presentation of the life of Jesus. The writer wanted to connect the events associated with God's giving of the Law, so he told the important but unrelated account of Moses' meeting with his father-in-law first.

19:2 Although scholars do not agree on the location of Mount Sinai, this is no reason to conclude that the events said to have taken place there never occurred. While the Bible records the names of many places where the Israelites stayed in the desert following their exodus from Egypt, those places are notoriously hard to identify. They camped only in tents or temporary huts during their years in the wilderness, and there is no record that they built roads or permanent structures or prepared fields for agricultural purposes. The mention of an oasis with twelve springs (15:27), while helpful, does not provide definitive information about which route the Israelites took to reach Mount Sinai. Thus scholars have suggested various sites in the northern, central, and southern portions of the Sinai Desert, as well as at least one site in western Saudi Arabia.

19:11,18 Was the Law given at Mount Sinai, or Mount Horeb (Dt 4:10-13)? Horeb and Sinai are two names for the same location. Early in the book of Exodus the Lord appeared to Moses at Horeb and promised him that the Israelites would worship God on that mountain (3:1-12). That promise was fulfilled in chapter 19 when Israel came to Mount Sinai. Perhaps Horeb and Sinai were names given to the same site by different people groups. Numerous other locations mentioned in the Bible were known by more than one name (cp. Gn 28:19; 31:47; Jos 15:9,10,13,25,49,54,60).

19:22 Since God had not yet established a priesthood for Israel (see 28:1), the priests mentioned here were probably those who would later become the Levitical priests. The priestly role of offering sacrifice was not limited to men specifically set apart as priests. Cain and Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob all acted as priests during their days. Israelites living after the time of Jacob may also have acted as priests on behalf of their families. Moses had previously told Pharaoh the Israelites were commanded to offer sacrifices (5:3; 8:27; 10:25), indicating that he knew some of his countrymen were authorized to perform priestly rituals at that time. Such action would be permissible until the family line of Levi, especially the line of Aaron, was officially designated for priestly service (28:1; Nm 3:6).

20:1–23:33 The list of prohibited acts in these chapters is the primary and most complete list of sins, but not the only one. Other lists of a similar nature are found in the law of Moses (see also Lv 18:1–19:37; Dt 27:15-26). Though the lists differ, all are expressions of the same presuppositions: people must love the one true God with all their being, and their neighbor as themselves (Mk 12:29-31). Any act that fails to express these demands is a sin.

20:1-17 God and Moses perceived obedience to the laws, not as a way of or precondition to salvation, but as the grateful response of those who had already been saved. God did not reveal the law to the Israelites in Egypt and then tell them that as soon as they had measured up to this standard He would rescue them. On the contrary, by grace alone, through faith they crossed the Red Sea to freedom. All that was required was belief in God's promise that He would hold up the walls of water on either side and see them safely through to the other shore.

The Decalogue begins, not with the first commandment, but with a preamble: "I am the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the place of slavery" (v. 2; Dt 5:6). Obedience to the Decalogue or any other law has never been intended as the way of salvation but as the appropriate response to salvation already received.

20:3 For a discussion of what the Bible teaches about the existence of other gods, see note on 15:11.

20:4 This command (see Dt 4:23; 27:15) prohibited Israel from shaping images of anything that might become an object of worship. Israel was to make no physical representations of the Lord, or of any other being the nations around them might worship. Israel was to destroy any such objects made by others (Ex 23:24; 34:13; Dt 7:5; 12:3). The prohibition of images for worship did not ban artistic expression, nor prevent the production of elegant adornments used in the worship of the Lord such as the cherubim (25:18-20). The Lord created people with artistic skills which He intended them to use in representing the beauty of the world He created (e.g., Bezalel, Ex 31:1-11; 36:1-2). When He gave instructions to Moses for building the tabernacle, He commanded the Israelites to make beautiful objects of gold and silver, and ornate clothing using the finest materials available. But God expects people to worship the Creator, not His creation (see Rm 1:18-26).

20:5 Although this verse seems to say that God punishes children for the sins of their parents, that is not the case. God does not condemn children because of their parents' misbehavior (see Dt 24:16; Ezk 18:20). However, children suffer the consequences of their parents' sinful choices. A parent's adultery, substance abuse, manipulation or other dysfunctional behavior establishes a pattern that children model as they mature. The result can be a repetition of their parents' emotional brokenness leading to conflict, divorce, poverty or other conditions that make their children's, and even their grandchildren's, lives difficult.

In this verse God suggests that one reason we should obey Him is for the sake of our children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. Like ripples spreading across a pool of calm water, our actions have consequences for generations to come. We can create waves of difficulty or blessing (v. 6), according to the choices we make.

20:8-11 How are Christians obligated to "remember the Sabbath day," or seventh day of the week? May a Christian work on Saturdays? The fourth commandment is unique among the Ten Commandments in containing both ceremonial and moral elements. It establishes a key element in a religious calendar, designating one day in seven as holy. But it is also moral, directing people to be imitators of God in His rest from the work of creation, and to use His gift of time for sacred purposes. Because it can be taken in both a ceremonial and moral sense, this commandment became a center of controversy in Jesus' ministry, and continued to be so in the history of the church.

Jesus violated first-century Jewish ceremonial customs regarding the Sabbath (Mt 12:10-13; Lk 13:10-17). He also defended His disciples when they violated the Sabbath customs (Mt 12:1-8), even though OT law mandated the death penalty for those who worked on that sacred day (Ex 31:14-15; 35:2). The apostle Paul likewise de-emphasized the need for Christians to maintain Jewish customs related to the calendar (Rm 14:5; Col 2:16). At the same time, Jesus was careful to keep the moral aspects of this command, stating that "it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath" (Mt 12:12). Jesus saw beyond the ceremony to the sacred use of time. Every day, but especially the Lord's Day, is to be used to accomplish the work of God.

Should Christians use Saturday as their day of worship? Before the coming of Jesus, Jews used the seventh day as a sacred day of rest, and of prayer and study of the scriptures. However, the first day of the week could also be a special day of worship during the annual Feast of Tabernacles (see Lv 23:36). In honor of Jesus' resurrection, which occurred on the first day of the week, early first-century Christians made that day their regular day of worship (see Ac 20:7; 1 Co 16:2), calling it "the Lord's Day" (see Rev 1:10). At the same time, the NT makes it clear that Christians are not bound to rigid rules regarding days for worship (see Rm 14:5-6). It is vital for Christians to gather regularly for worship (Heb 10:25), but many interpreters believe that no day of the week is inherently better than another for doing so.

20:12 The Bible consistently teaches that we should honor and obey our parents (Lv 19:3; Dt 5:16; Pr 23:22; Mt 15:4; 19:19; Mk 7:10; 10:19; Lk 18:20; Eph 6:1-2; Col 3:20), following the example of Jesus Himself (Lk 2:51). At the same time, we are taught to make God our highest authority, esteeming Him above any earthly authority, including parents (Mt 10:37). On those rare occasions when one must choose to reject parental authority in order to obey God, family conflicts will be inevitable (see Lk 12:51-53). In spite of the tension and potential consequences, it is necessary to follow God's way (Ac 5:29). Although Jesus speaks of hating our parents (Lk 14:26), the expression does not mean what we mean by "hate"; it means simply to avoid making them the highest authority in our lives.

20:13 Should we never kill people, or simply not commit murder? According to the Bible, death was not part of God's original plan for humanity, but became part of the human experience as a result of humanity's sin (Gn 2:17; 3:19; Rm 5:12; Heb 9:27). All human beings are made in God's image (Gn 1:26-27) and therefore all human life is sacred and to be treated with special respect. At the same time, the law of Moses sanctions the taking of human life as a penalty for certain serious crimes committed against persons or God (Gn 9:6; Ex 21:12-17; 31:14-15; 35:2; Lv 20:2,9-16,27; 24:16-17,21; 27:29; Nm 35:33; Dt 13:5-9; 21:21; 22:21). The NT implicitly affirms the right of governmental authorities to impose the death penalty (Rm 13:4). The Bible's prescription of the death penalty in certain circumstances is aimed at preventing greater evils from occurring, and thus preserves the principle of the sacredness of human life. Murder, the unauthorized taking of human life, is clearly what this command prohibits.

20:14 If adultery is always wrong, why did God command a prophet to marry a promiscuous wife (Hs 1:2)? The prophet Hosea was not given permission to commit adultery, he was told to marry a woman who would be unfaithful after their marriage. The prophet's experience with his unfaithful wife became an object lesson in Israel's spiritual unfaithfulness toward God. Adultery, or sexual intercourse with another person's spouse, is always condemned in the Bible (Gn 20:3; Lv 18:20; Dt 5:18; Pr 6:32; Mt 5:27-32; 19:18; Jn 8:3-11; Gl 5:19; 2 Pt 2:14). It was considered a crime so serious that it warranted the death penalty (Lv 20:10; Dt 22:22).

20:15 For a discussion of stealing, see note on 3:22.

20:16 Strictly speaking, this commandment applies to perjury during a legal proceeding, and not to speech in general. Nevertheless God, who is Himself the Truth and speaks only the truth (Ps 119:160; Jn 1:14; 17:17) expects people to tell the truth (see note on Ex 1:19). Yet the Bible records an instance where the Lord caused, or permitted, false prophets to lie (1 Kg 22:23). That passage reflects the OT writers' tendency to attribute all things to God, recognizing that events could occur only if the Lord permitted them. King Ahab had hired false prophets to spread lies supporting his personal ambitions, and these prophets conveniently proclaimed messages in the Lord's name that agreed with the king's desires. The Lord permitted them to do what they were determined to do, to provide Ahab with the lie he wanted to hear—and which led to his death (1 Kg 22:34-37). In this way God allowed a disobedient man to bring judgment upon himself.

20:17 If God commanded people not to covet other peoples' property, why did He have the Israelites take the land of Canaan away from its inhabitants? Israel's conquest of Canaan was not to be based on the people's desire to take land owned by other people. The land was given by God as a gift to Abraham's descendants through Isaac, but it could only become theirs when the time for judgment against its inhabitants had come (Gn 15:16). Israel's invasion of Canaan and the destruction of its residents were not acts of covetousness but acts of divine judgment against the sinful culture of the inhabitants. Israel's possession of the land would also be based on their obedience to the Lord, and they would lose the land if they strayed too far from God's will for them (Dt 28:15-68), as the events of history reveal (2 Kg 17:6-23).

20:24 In this verse the Lord asks Israel to make a sacrificial altar of earth, but the instructions of 27:1,6-8 refer to bronze and wood. These passages need not be seen as contradictory. The transportable altar made of bronze and wood was box-shaped and hollow. Possibly a layer of earth was placed in the bottom before sacrifices were offered on it. The surface on which the sacrifice was laid would have been earthen, not bronze or wood. The earth could have been easily removed to lighten the altar for transporting to another location.

20:24 The narrative of events after Israel came out of Egypt is filled with instructions about burnt offerings and sacrifices, yet in Jr 7:21-22 God appears to deny giving Israel such commands during that period (see Am 5:25). The contradiction is more rhetorical than substantive. In Jr 7, God contrasts wholehearted obedience to the Lord (Jr 7:23) with the mere performance of outward ritual (Jr 7:22). God did not want Israel to put observable activity ahead of inner devotion to Him.

This same literary device of expressing a complex concept in abbreviated fashion is found in Hs 6:6, a passage that suggests that God does not desire sacrifices (cp. Am 5:21-22). God commanded sacrifices, but wanted them to come from people who could back up their commitment to God with a life of merciful concern for others.

20:26 Ascending the altar on steps would expose the sacrificial area to the underside of the priest's clothing, and possibly to his private parts. This was considered an affront to the Lord.

21:2,7 Some have suggested that these verses contradict the command in Lv 25:42, which forbids selling Israelites as slaves. However, the rules set forth in Lv 25 do not prohibit Israelites from becoming slaves. Instead, they regulate situations in which Israelites had to sell themselves to other Israelites in order to pay debts. Israelites who became slaves had to be given rights and privileges normally associated only with hired workers.

21:7-11 Was a female who became a slave always a slave, or was she to be set free after six years? The instruction of Dt 15:12 appears to provide a different guideline for the treatment of a female slave. Jewish commentators and others have suggested, however, that the regulations reflect different situations. If a slave woman was used as a sexual partner she was not to be set free, but must be given a lifetime of proper care. If she served in any other capacity, she was to be emancipated after six years.

21:10 Polygamy, like many other sins including divorce, is an expression of the hardness of people's hearts and is contrary to God's will (Mt 19:8). God's ideal from the beginning was for one man to marry one woman, and for the couple to remain in an exclusive sexual relationship for as long as both partners were alive. Biblical evidence for this is found in the fact that God created woman as a uniquely suitable helper for one man—Adam (Gn 2:18-24). When the pair disobeyed God, they could no longer implement many aspects of God's plan for human life. Because of sin conflict, oppression and death became part of the human landscape. People's sinful nature often leads to sexual misconduct. As in the case of Lamech, the first recorded polygamist (Gn 4:19), men will be inclined to take multiple sexual partners for themselves.

The law presented here and in other laws in the Torah is not meant to condone polygamy. It is not an expression of God's ideal, but a concession to humanity's hardheartedness. The law recognizes the male's sexual inclinations, but seeks to limit the injury to women that could result; all wives must be given adequate food, clothing, and intimacy. Far from approving of polygamy, the law of Moses discourages it by placing high demands on anyone who chooses this option, and it preserves the essential rights of polygamy's potential victims.

21:20-21,26 The Bible does not condone slavery any more than it condones polygamy or divorce. Instead, it establishes humane limits for an existing, evil system. Slavery had long been a feature of human society. The Israelites were always to remember that they themselves had been the victims of this practice for an extended time (Gn 37:28,36; Ex 1:8-14) as slaves in Egypt (Dt 5:15; 15:15; 16:12; 24:18,22). Accordingly, Israelite slave owners were to treat their slaves in a fair and charitable manner. They were to be given a day of rest every week (Ex 20:10) and, as beings created in God's image, were expected to attend religious festivals (Dt 12:12,18; 16:11). Israelites who were slaves were to be treated with special benevolence, and to be released after six years (Ex 21:2; Dt 15:12) or in the Year of the Jubilee (Lv 25:40-41), whichever came first. Female slaves who became wives to their owners or owner's sons were to be treated with all the respect and rights of a regular wife (Ex 21:8-11). When an Israelite's term of slavery had ended, he was to be given a gift (Dt 15:13-14). If slaves were physically abused by their owners, they were to be granted immediate freedom (Ex 21:26-27) and, unlike animals, the killing of a slave constituted a crime (v. 20).

Through these measures the law of Moses made it clear that slaves were to be treated as persons with God-given rights and standing before God. Furthermore, slavery for Israelites was to be a temporary state, not a lifetime condition. The law of Moses laid the groundwork for the eventual demise of one of the most demeaning institutions in human society.

21:23-25 Does the Bible teach that people should retaliate, or that they should "turn the other cheek" (Mt 5:38-39; Lk 6:27-29)? In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus contrasted a popular interpretation of the law of Moses with His own teachings. In doing this He was not saying that OT law was wrong, only that his adversaries' way of applying it to situations was wrong; by emphasizing the letter of the law they had missed its true intent.

The "eye for eye, tooth for tooth" passage did not require people to pay someone back for a wrong done to them. Its purpose was to establish limits for retaliation. The most one could do in response to knocking out a tooth was to knock out the other person's tooth; a person could not be killed for injuring someone's eye. As Jesus pointed out, a person who was wronged by another could choose not to retaliate for what had been done to him. Often such a response would be the best way to deal with the problem. In every case, it should be the first option considered.

21:29 For a discussion of capital punishment, see note on 20:13.

21:29-30 This passage indicates that the person responsible for the death of another might be able to ransom his life; Nm 35:31, on the other hand, suggests that the death penalty could not be commuted. Biblical commentators have long noted that these two passages complement, rather than contradict, each other. The passage teaches that a person whose negligence caused someone else's death would have to be punished, but their life might be spared. The passage in Numbers directs that anyone who has willfully taken someone else's life must be executed.

22:25 Is it permissible to charge interest on loans? Charging interest was the normal practice in ancient western Asia. In Babylon people were permitted to charge 20 to 50 percent interest on loans of silver bullion or food. The OT also permitted Israelites to charge interest on loans made to non-Israelites (Dt 23:20), though the rate for such loans was not specified. But when it came to lending to fellow Israelites, the Lord's people were to follow a different standard: interest was not to be charged on such loans. It seems that God was teaching His people not to profit from the hardship of their brothers and sisters.

22:29 For a discussion of whether sons should be given to the Lord or redeemed, see note on 13:12-16.

23:7 If the Israelites were not to kill the innocent, why were they ordered to kill Canaanite children (see Dt 7:1-2; 20:16-17)? This verse is part of a larger section that provides guidance to judges when trying cases in Israel: in courts of law the innocent were not to be punished. But the elimination of entire cultural groups as punishment for long-term institutionalized sin was not considered a legal matter. It was an issue of divine judgment following centuries of unacceptable conduct. God ordered the Israelites to eliminate cultures that had institutionalized despicable sin. Canaanite cultures were steeped in a religion that was polytheistic, idolatrous, and highly immoral. As part of their religious corruption, those cultures permitted human sacrifice and practiced cultic prostitution (worship of their "gods" involved intercourse with women attached to their temples). All of this cultural perversity was offensive to God and was to be brought to a complete end when the iniquity of the inhabitants of Canaan was complete (Gn 15:16).

23:10-11 The produce of the Israelites' land was to be left for the poor and the animals, but it could also be eaten by the landowner's family during the seventh year (Lv 25:6). The landholder was to be considerate of the needs of the poor. They, too, must be given access to the food needed to sustain them. To assure that there would be enough food for all in the seventh year, the landowner and his family were to stockpile surplus grain from the previous year (Lv 25:21-22).

23:20-23 Did the Angel of the Lord lead the Israelites through the desert, or was it God (Dt 8:2; Ps 136:16)? The biblical answer seems to be that God led His people through His angel. For further discussion of the close connection between God and the Angel of the Lord, see note on 3:2.

24:9-11 If God is invisible (Jn 5:37; 1 Tm 1:17; 6:16), how could Moses and the elders see Him? The Bible states that no one has ever seen God directly (see Ex 33:20; Jn 1:18). Yet the Bible records a number of theophanies, or appearances of the Lord or the exalted Christ (e.g., Gn 12:7; 15:1; Is 6:1; Ezk 8:1-4; Ac 9:3-6; Rv 1:12-15). It is not easy to determine, from the biblical descriptions, whether such events are inward "visions" or outwardly visible events. The fire that Moses saw in a bush (Ex 3:2-4) and the sacred cloud that was filled with the presence of God (13:21) are instances of visible manifestations that were, nevertheless, indirect and obscured by "unapproachable light" (1 Tm 6:16). The theophany described here, which was experienced by the elders of Israel as well as by Moses and the priests, must be of the same order. Alternatively, this incident may refer to an appearance of God's divine representative, the Angel of the Lord. For further information on the connection between the Angel of the Lord and God, see the note on 3:2.

25:3 The Hebrew word for bronze is translated "brass" by KJV and other versions published prior to the middle of the twentieth century. However, "brass" is inaccurate. Bronze, a mixture of copper and tin, was widely used in the ancient Near East. Brass, a mixture of copper and zinc, was not available in ancient western Asia. Bronze is what Israelites were to give as an offering for the construction of the tabernacle and its furnishings.

25:10 For a discussion of when the ark of the covenant was constructed, see the note on 37:1-10.

25:15 Though God here instructs the Israelites not to remove the poles from the ark of the covenant, many English translations of Nm 4:6 suggest that they had been removed and had to be reinserted in the rings, with no indication that their removal had been an act of disobedience. But the Hebrew text of the relevant portion of Nm 4:6 simply states, "and they [the high priest Aaron and his sons] set its poles." For centuries, many interpreters have suggested that this phrase means "and they adjusted its poles." This translational tradition removes any conflict between the Ex and Nm passages.

25:18 If God prohibited the Israelites from making images of any earthly or heavenly beings, why did He command them to make the golden cherubim? In five separate passages within the Torah God commanded the Israelites not to make carved or molded images (20:4-6; Lv 26:1; Dt 4:15-19; 5:8; 27:15). The first three of these passages (20:4-6; Lv 26:1; Dt 4:15-19) add that these objects must not be worshiped; only the final two omit the additional statement, suggesting that these were just shortened forms of the fuller commands expressed earlier.

It seems clear that God never intended to prohibit people from making things of carved wood or molded metal. If so, how could people build houses or make tools? What was prohibited was the fashioning of items intended as objects of worship. The ornately decorated ark of the covenant was not an idol, it was a throne or footstool for the living God (Nm 7:89; 1 Sm 4:4; Ps 80:1); thus, it was permissible to adorn it with the golden cherubim. Similar figures were used in other ancient Near Eastern cultures to signify the presence and authority of a ruler.

31:14-15 For a discussion of why the death penalty for violating the Sabbath does not apply to Christians, see note on 20:8-11.

31:18 The phrase "finger of God" is best understood as an anthropomorphism, that is, a metaphor comparing some aspect of God with the traits of a human being. The phrase does not assert that the Lord God possesses a human body; it affirms that God, and not Moses, was ultimately responsible for the creation of the text inscribed on the stones (cp. 24:12; 32:16; Dt 4:13; 5:22; 9:10). The wording suggests that the means by which the words were recorded was supernatural, but does not indicate the exact method God chose to inscribe them.

32:14 If God never sins, why do some Bible versions translate this verse to indicate that God planned to do evil and then repented? This verse takes its place among a series of passages in the OT that seem to indicate that God does evil (2 Sam 24:16; 1 Ch 21:15; Is 45:7; Jr 18:8; 26:13,19; Jl 2:13; Jnh 3:10; 4:2). However, the Bible affirms that God is completely righteous (Ps 119:137; Jr 12:1; Jn 17:25; Rv 16:5) and does not repent (Nm 23:19; 1 Sm 15:29). The contradiction is only apparent, and can be resolved by examining the relevant words in the Hebrew language.

The Hebrew word ra'ah, translated in some Bible versions as "evil," actually possesses a broad spectrum of meanings ranging from moral wickedness to "trouble," without any reference to morality. Applied to the result of God's action, the term refers to affliction. God will never behave immorally, but He will bring affliction upon those who live in defiance of His will.

Similarly, the Hebrew term nacham is translated in some versions as "repent," as though one is turning away from a sinful action. It is more accurately translated as "relent," to decide to pursue a different course of action. As people change their actions and wills, God changes His response to them (Jr 18:8; Jnh 3:10). Although He is prepared to bring affliction (ra'ah) upon people because of their sins, He is prepared to relent (nacham) as they repent.

32:27 For a discussion of justifications for taking human life, see note on 20:13.

32:32-33 Does God keep a book with people's names in it? Several verses indicate that God keeps written records (17:14; Ps 56:8; 69:28; 139:16; Dn 12:1; Mal 3:16; Rev 3:5; 5:1-9; 10:2-10; 13:8; 17:8; 20:12-15; 21:27; 22:7-19). But such expressions could be metaphors, using a human analogy—keeping account books—to symbolize the fact that God remembers what people do, just as biblical language regarding God's eye or hand is figurative. The point is that every person will be held accountable for his actions and words (see Ec 12:14; Mt 12:36).

33:11 If the Lord spoke face to face with Moses, why does the book later suggest that Moses never saw His face (33:20-23)? On three occasions the Bible states that God spoke "face to face" with Moses (33:11; Nm 12:8; Dt 5:4). However, it is also clear that this expression was not meant to be taken literally; in the book of Numbers, "speaking face to face" is equated with "openly, and not in riddles" (Nm 12:8). For a discussion of Moses' seeing God, see note on 3:6.

34:6-7 For a discussion of God's punishing the descendants of a person who sins, see note on 20:5.

34:14 The Hebrew word qanna', translated in many versions as "jealous," can also be translated as "zealous." The term describes God's expectation that human beings will make Him their highest priority in life, loving Him with all their heart, soul, and strength (Dt 6:4). As Creator of the universe and all life, God has the right to expect people to value Him most highly. This type of "jealousy" is not a bad thing. It is proper in a marriage; a wife or husband expects the spouse to be faithful in thought, word, and deed, and would be rightfully upset should the spouse prove unfaithful. The Israelite prophets sometimes compare God's relationship to His people, in His covenant, to a marriage (Jr 3:20; 31:32; Hs 2:16).

34:29-35 Does the Bible state that Moses' face glowed, or that it grew horns? The Hebrew word translated in most versions as "shone" or "glowed" is based on a root which means "horn." The Latin Vulgate translation depicted Moses as growing horns; as a result, the Renaissance sculptor Michelangelo carved a statue of Moses with horns. In the NT Paul stated that Moses' encounter with God caused his face to become glorious (2 Co 3:7); this suggests that Moses' face glowed (cp. Ps 119:130).

35:2 For a discussion of why the death penalty for violating the Sabbath does not apply to Christians, see note on 20:8-11.

37:1-9 Did the Israelites construct the ark after Moses returned with the second set of stone tablets inscribed with the Ten Commandments, or before (see Dt 10:3-5)? Moses received the command to build the ark and the directions for its construction (Ex 25:9-22) before his second journey up Mount Sinai. Deuteronomy 10 suggests that Moses built the ark, went up and down the mountain, and then put the Ten Commandments in the ark. This sequence of events would require that the events of Ex 35–37 take place before Ex 34:29. But, while these passages may be out of chronological order, it is not necessary to conclude that they are.

A harmonization of the narrative in Ex 25–37 and Dt 10 is possible if one understands that the process of building the ark began when Moses first received the command to make it. Even though the ark was not completed until later, Moses could reasonably speak of its existence earlier because it was a work in progress. Though the Ten Commandments were not placed in the ark immediately after Moses came down the mountain, they were put in it as soon as the ark was completed.

38:24-25 It seems surprising that slaves in Egypt would have possessed the 2,200 pounds of gold and 7,545 pounds of silver needed for the construction of the tabernacle and its furnishings. However, the Bible suggests that the Israelites' wealth came from the Egyptians, residents of the richest nation in the world at that time, and was gained in obedience to God's command (3:22; 12:35).

No individual Israelite would have had to obtain a large quantity of gold and silver from the Egyptians. Each of the more than 600,000 adult males was asked to give only one-fifth of an ounce of silver to supply the amount needed for the tabernacle (v. 26). The gift of each of the adult male members of the community would have averaged less than one-seventeenth of an ounce of gold. Such limited quantities could have reasonably been obtained from ancient Egypt.

38:25-26 The biblical record indicates that Moses had two separate censuses taken of the adult Israelite males during the first 14 months after they had left Egypt. The first of these, mentioned here, was carried out prior to the beginning of the second year after the exodus from Egypt (40:2) for the purpose of collecting contributions for the tabernacle construction. The second, conducted during the second month of the second year after the exodus, and described in Nm 1:1-46, was a military census intended to help the Israelites prepare for their planned invasion of Canaan.

40:20 Did the ark of the covenant contain the Ten Commandments only, or manna and Aaron's rod that budded, in addition (see Heb 9:4)? The Bible suggests that from the days of Moses at least through the time of Solomon (see 1 Kg 8:9), only the Ten Commandments were present within the ark. It is possible, however, that during a time of national apostasy—perhaps during the time of Manasseh (see 2 Kg 20:21–21:18)—an Aaronic priest tried to protect other sacred relics from the time of Moses by placing them in the ark of the covenant. God's command to place the stone slabs containing the Ten Commandments inside the ark (Dt 10:2) did not prohibit the placement of other items alongside them. Their presence together underneath the Lord's symbolic throne would symbolize three different dimensions of His gracious provision for His people: law, leadership, and sustenance.

Leviticus Articles

Who Wrote the Pentateuch and When Was It Written?

by Daniel I. Block

Although Jewish and Christian tradition almost unanimously recognize Moses as author of the Pentateuch, few issues relating to the OT now are debated as hotly, and in few issues is the gulf between critical and evangelical scholarship so wide. Many conservative scholars continue to believe that Moses wrote virtually all of the Pentateuch with his own hand. So long as critical scholars recognized Moses as an historical figure, in principle his involvement in the composition of the Pentateuch was not excluded—unless, of course he was thought to be illiterate. However, from the middle of the nineteenth century A.D., especially following Julius Wellhausen, most critical scholars have rejected Moses having a significant role in the origin of the Pentateuch.

The questioning began early with doubts whether Moses recorded his own death and burial (Dt 34), knew of a place in northern Israel called Dan (Gn 14:14; cp. Jos 19:47; Jdg 18:28-29), or referred to the conquest of Canaan as having occurred in the past (Dt 2:12). Thus scholars developed an alternative explanation for the origin of the Pentateuch known as the Documentary Hypothesis. According to the classical form of the theory, the Pentateuch is the product of a long and complex literary evolution, specifically incorporating at least four major literary strands composed independently over several centuries and not combined in the present form until the time of Ezra (fifth century B.C.). These sources are identified as J, E, D, and P. J represents a ninth century B.C. (c. 850) document that originated in Judah, distinguished by its preference for the name Yahweh (Jehovah, hence the "J"). The E source preferred the divine title Elohim, and theoretically was composed in Israel in the eighth century B.C. The D stands for Deuteronomy, supposedly written around 621 B.C. to lend support to Josiah's reforms. The priestly document, P, supposedly was composed c. 500 B.C. by priests seeking to preserve their own version of Israel's history. According to the theory, these sources were compiled and combined in the middle of the fifth century B.C. Nehemiah 8 recounts the moment when Ezra publicly read the Pentateuch as a unit for the first time. Because Joshua describes the fulfillment of the promises of land to the patriarchs and because of stylistic links to Deuteronomy, Gerhard von Rad added Joshua to the pentateuchal corpus, calling the six books the Hexateuch.

Variations of the Documentary Hypothesis prevailed for more than a century. However, due to advances in literary studies, today the state of pentateuchal scholarship is confused, with new theories or radical modifications appearing often. The new theories push the dates for pentateuchal origin ever later. R. N. Whybray argued that the Pentateuch is a unitary composition written in the fourth century B.C., inspired perhaps by the Greek Histories of Herodotus.

The internal evidence suggests that Moses kept a record of Israel's experiences in the desert (Ex 17:14; 24:4,7; 34:27; Nm 33:1,2; Dt 31:9,11). Furthermore, many statements in the OT credit the Pentateuch to Moses (e.g., Jos 1:8; 8:31,32; 1 Kg 2:3; 2 Kg 14:6; Ezr 6:18; Neh 13:1; Dn 9:11-13; Mal 4:4), and the NT identifies the Torah very closely with him (Mt 19:8; Jn 5:46,47; 7:19; Ac 3:22; Rm 10:5). A series of additional features within the text point to an early date for its composition: (1) the forms of the names and many of the actions of the patriarchs make best sense in a second millennium B.C. environment; (2) the narratives suggest a thorough acquaintance with Egypt; (3) Egyptian loanwords appear with greater frequency in the Pentateuch than anywhere else in the OT; (4) the name Moses itself suggests an Egyptian setting for the story; (5) the general viewpoint of the narrative is foreign to Canaan; (6) the seasons are Egyptian; the flora and fauna are Egyptian and Sinaitic; (7) in some instances the geography reflects a foreign viewpoint (e.g., a comment like that found in Genesis 33:18, "the Canaanite city of Shechem," is unlikely after the exile because by then Israel had been in the land for 900 years); (8) and archaisms in the language (like the use of the third person singular pronoun, hi, for both genders).

It is doubtful he wrote the account of his death in Deuteronomy 34. Frequently the text provides explanatory notes updating facts for a later audience, such as, "Esau (that is Edom)," in Genesis 36:1; the aboriginal inhabitants of the Transjordan, Deuteronomy 2:10-12. Furthermore, the form of the cursive Canaanite script that Moses probably used was still in its infancy and was replaced with the square Aramaic script in the postexilic period, and the vowels were added a millennium later. The archaic qualities of the poems (such as Gn 49; Ex 15) in contrast to the surrounding narrative suggests the latter may have been updated periodically in accordance with the evolution of the Hebrew language. This may explain why the grammar and syntax of Deuteronomy in its present form reads much like Jeremiah, who lived long after Moses. At the same time Moses could have used a scribe or secretary.

There is no reason to doubt that Moses wrote down the speeches he delivered (Dt 31:9-13), or that when he came down from Mount Sinai, he arranged for the transcription of the revelation he had received on the mountain, if he did not write it all himself. Just as the pieces of the tabernacle were constructed and woven by skilled craftsmen and finally assembled by Moses (Ex 35–40), so literary craftsmen may have composed some bits and pieces of the Pentateuch and submitted them to Moses, who then approved them. When exactly the Pentateuch achieved its present form we may only speculate (Dt suggests some time after the death of Moses), but it seems likely that by the time David organized the temple worship, the contents of the Torah were fixed.

Does the Bible Provide Ethical Guidance for Business?

by Scott B. Rae

Scripture has much to say about economic life, and that teaching encompasses more than simply personal finance. Here's a summary of the Bible's ethical guidance for business.

First, God calls men and women to business. In Genesis 1–2 God ordains work as part of His calling to Adam and Eve. They were intended to work the garden as a part of their role in exercising dominion over creation. Work has intrinsic value and is the way in which human beings fulfill the ongoing mandate to subdue the earth. It wasn't instituted as a consequence of the entrance of sin into the world, though sin did serve to make work more taxing and difficult. From the beginning, work has been blessed by God. Thus His people working in business are doing His work in the world in the same way that a pastor is doing His work in the church. The Bible also calls people to work in order to support themselves and their families (2 Th 3:6-12; 1 Tm 5:8), to take care of the poor (Eph 4:28), to support the church and its outreaches (1 Co 16:1-3), and to provide a platform for sharing one's faith.

Second, the Bible teaches that business is to be run with integrity. The Bible makes it clear that business is to be conducted honestly and is not to be used as a mechanism to exploit others, especially the vulnerable. The Mosaic Law contains numerous mandates regarding business integrity. For example, Leviticus 19:35 mandates that one's weights and measures be accurate—something very important in an agricultural society. Further, Proverbs makes clear that God demands integrity in one's business dealings (Pr 10:9; 11:1). The prophets demanded that those in business not use their resources to exploit the poor (Am 2:6-7; 4:1; Mc 6:10-12). The command to "act justly, to love faithfulness, and to walk humbly with your God" applies to business and establishes values of justice, love, and humility that should govern one's business dealings (Mc 6:8). Jesus continued this emphasis in the NT. He instructed tax collectors to collect only what was prescribed (Lk 3:12-13), urged His hearers to take care of the poor (Mt 25:31-46), and taught that business is a legitimate enterprise if conducted with integrity (Mt 25:14-30). Likewise, the apostles suggested that work is necessary, that idleness is sinful, and that generosity for the poor is not only virtuous but mandatory.

Third, the Bible condemns greed but condones an ambition for contentment. Greed motivates most of the unethical behavior in business today as ever. The Bible is clear that greed is a vice that needs to be put away once someone comes to faith in Christ (1 Co 6:10; Col 3:5). By contrast, contentment is a virtue to be cultivated (1 Tm 6:6-8). Paul made it clear that the love of money, not the mere possession of wealth, is the root of all kinds of evil. In the ancient world, it was not uncommon for someone to acquire wealth through means that exploited others. The notion that someone could do well financially and also do good for the community is relatively new, coming as a result of the emergence of capitalism—a system that itself cannot function well without a proper ethical foundation.

Introduction to Leviticus

AUTHOR

The belief that Moses was the author of the Pentateuch (which includes the book of Leviticus) is clearly affirmed by a plain reading of the biblical text (see the article, "Who Wrote the Pentateuch and When Was It Written?" p. 158). Large amounts of the Pentateuch are attributed to Moses (Ex 24:4; 30:11,17; 33:1,5; 39:1,5,29; Lv 1:1; 4:1; 6:1; Nm 4:1; Dt 1:1, 5; 5:1; 31:22,30; 33:1) and his authorship of the Pentateuch is assumed by Jews in the post-exilic community (1 Ch 15:15; 22:13; 2 Ch 23:18; 24:6; 25:4; 30:16; 35:12; Ezr 3:2; 7:6; Neh 1:7; 8:1; 13:1; Mal 4:4) as well as the NT (Mt 8:4; Mk 12:26; Lk 16:31; 25:27,44; Jn 1:17; Ac 3:22). In John 5:46-47 Jesus responded to His own Jewish critics who questioned His practices by saying: "If you believed Moses, you would believe Me, because he wrote about Me. But if you don't believe his writings, how will you believe My words?" Could it be any clearer that Jesus and the Jews of His day had no doubts about who wrote the Pentateuch? Similarly, in Romans 10:5 Paul claims that the expression, "The one who does these things will live by them," was a statement written by Moses (cp. Lv 18:5). Jesus and the NT writers repeatedly refer to the OT as "Moses and the prophets" (Lk 16:29,31; 24:27) or the Law of Moses and the Prophets (cp. Lk 24:44; Ac 28:23).

THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM

Exodus closes with the glory of the Lord filling the tabernacle that His people built. Proper response to God's presence is worship. Through Leviticus God instructs His people in how He is to be worshiped. Leviticus continues a major theme of Exodus—that God is holy and His people are to be holy. This manual of worship is highly detailed but makes clear that details are important to God. Leviticus gives instructions on the consecration of priests and clearly demonstrates the consequences of not worshiping God as He instructs. Although Israel has been set apart as God's people, they are still a sinful people. Leviticus provides numerous pictures of how sinful human beings can commune with a holy God. Sacrifice is a pivotal concept in Israel's worship.

The practice of slaying an animal for a sacrifice was not unique to the Israelite tradition. The slaughtering of an animal as a "religious" expression was a common practice in the ancient world, particularly in the ancient Near East. However, the purposes for offering sacrifices in Israel could not have been more different from the motivations for sacrifice among Israel's neighbors. The rationale for sacrifices in the ancient world was confined to the maintenance and sustenance of the gods, as the gods were believed to have the same appetites and desires as humans. The motivation to present food to a god was to gain that god's favor. Pagan worship was self-serving at its core, as the person presenting the offering was using the gift for his own advantage. The offering of sacrifice from the pagan conception was actually no different than magic—a mechanism employed to effect a supernatural intervention. It is thus not surprising that in Mesopotamia, for example, the magician was as important as the priest.

The purpose of the Israelite sacrificial system was twofold—to offer a gift to God and to effect atonement. The word "atonement" addresses the need for reconciliation in the disturbed relationship between God and humans brought about by sin. The need for atonement is necessitated by the universality of sin, the seriousness of sin, and humanity's inability to remove or deal with sin. The word "atonement" is closely related to and frequently occurs in context with the prominent theological terms "forgiveness" and "reconciliation." It specifically addresses the need for removal of sin (expiation) in order to effect reconciliation with God.

Sacrificial offerings preceded the era of the Mosaic law. God had prescribed offerings from the time of Abel (Gn 4). After the flood, Noah offered burnt offerings (Gn 8:20), as did Abraham (Gn 22:9). In harmony with the OT prophets (cp. Hs 6:6; Am 5:21-24; also 1 Sm 15:22), Jesus focused on the motivation underlying the sacrificial act and taught that the offering was only acceptable to God when the worshiper's devotion was genuinely heartfelt (Mt 5:23-24; 9:13; 12:7; Mk 12:33). The OT sacrifices to God were types of the ultimate, climactic sacrifice made by Jesus Christ, the Son of God. His sacrifice can never be repeated (Rm 6:10; Heb 7:27; 9:12; 10:10), and now the most desirable sacrifice that anyone, rich or poor, can bring to God is a consecrated life (cp. Rm 12:1; 15:15-16; 2 Co 2:14-17; Php 2:17; 4:18; 2 Tm 4:6; Heb 13:15; 1 Pt 1:15-16; Rv 6:9).

Adherence to the OT sacrificial system made the nation of Israel a holy nation and distinct from other nations. Perhaps no other category of laws would contribute more to Israel's distinctiveness than the dietary laws (chap. 11). As God classified the world at creation, so God's holy people were expected to classify their world. The driving force behind this novel consideration was surely the notion that Israel had been called to be a holy people. Observation of these laws goes beyond the more limited notion of personal purity in that it distinguishes not only clean people from those who are not, but also Israelites from other nations. The main reason for the purity instructions was to keep Israel separate from the neighboring nations (Lv 18:3; 20:24,26). The dietary laws prevented Israelites from participating in pagan worship to foreign gods, as well as made the possibility of intermarriage with a nonbeliever less likely (cp. 11:44-45; Dt 14:2,21).

Leviticus Study Notes

1:1 The book of Leviticus, as part of the Pentateuch, has no general introduction. Leviticus 1:1 indicates that the tabernacle was fully operative, and this links Leviticus with the sequence of events described at the conclusion of the book of Exodus. The concept of a tabernacle or portable shrine existed in Egypt as early as the Amarna age (fifteenth and fourteenth centuries B.C.). The Egyptians normally took these tents on military campaigns and placed them at the center of their encampments.

1:2 Hebrew qorban, "offering," is a generic term for anything presented to God at the sanctuary. Archaeological excavations at various sites in Israel have uncovered objects inscribed with the term qorban. The term is transliterated also in the NT as Corban (Mk 7:11). The "herd" (Hb baqar) was the most valuable category of sacrificial animals; it is always listed first (e.g., in Nm 7:15-88; 28:11–29:38). The following laws deal with private offerings. The public national sacrifices offered each day are listed in Nm 28–29.

1:3 The characteristic feature of the burnt offering was that the whole animal (apart from its skin, 7:8, or crop, 1:16) was burned on the altar. The Hebrew term for burnt offering, 'olah, is related to the root 'lh which means, "to go up." This action may intend to refer to the smoke of the offering that ascends to God (cp. Jdg 13:20).

An "unblemished" animal would be an animal free from blindness, injury, maimed condition, irregular members, warts or festering sores, and damaged testicles (Lv 22:22-24). The Greek translation renders the Hebrew for "unblemished" as amomos. This adjective is applied to Jesus in the NT (Heb 9:14; 1 Pt 1:19).

1:4 Moses laid his hands on Joshua when appointing him leader of the Israelite people (Nm 27:18-23; Dt 34:9). In contexts that deal with sacrifices, the laying on of hands was a symbolic act in which an animal was to stand in the offender's place as a substitute. In Nm 8:10,12; 27:18,23 and Dt 34:9 it appears that the purpose of the laying on of hands was to transfer the spiritual qualities of the performer to a person or an animal. One may regard the sacrificial animal either as dying in the worshiper's place or as receiving the death penalty because of the sin transferred to it by the laying on of hands.

1:5 The Israelites understood the close connection between blood and life. The flowing away of one's blood is equivalent to the departure of life and the cessation of existence. The blood is the most holy element of the sacrifice and, as the means of atonement (cp. 17:11), could be handled only by the priest.

1:6 The exception to this sectioning of sacrificial animals was the Passover lamb, which was roasted whole (Ex 12:9).

1:9 The "pleasing aroma" of the burnt offering conveys the idea that God accepted the sacrifice.

1:14-17 The five kinds of animals specified for the burnt offering—bull, sheep, goat, turtledove, and pigeon—are exactly the five animals Abraham offered to God in Gn 15:9. As in that passage the birds were not split because they were much smaller animals.

1:15 According to rabbinic tradition, the priest applied his fingernail close to the nape of the neck to cut through the windpipe and gullet.

1:17 The burnt offering foreshadows the sacrifice of Christ on the cross (Heb 13:15-16; cp. Php 4:18; 1 Pt 2:5). Paul had the burnt offering in mind in Rm 12:1-2—the believer is to present himself entirely just as the burnt offering was entirely consumed on the altar.

2:1 The grain offering was appropriate for various occasions and often served as a less costly alternative to animal sacrifices. The grain offering was made of semolina, the choice part of wheat that was taken from the inner kernels. In non-sacrificial contexts the term for grain offering (minchah) designated a "tribute" or "gift" (cp. 2 Sm 8:2-6; 1 Kg 8:64; 2 Kg 8:8-9; 17:3-4; see also Gn 32:14; 43:11; 1 Kg 10:25; 2 Kg 17:4). Thus, this offering represented the duty of the worshiper to present gifts to God. In Gn 4:3-5 the different sacrifices of Cain and Abel, one consisting of grain offering and the other an animal sacrifice, are both called grain offerings (minchah). The grain offering normally accompanied every burnt offering, especially those in the prescribed sacred calendar (Nm 28–29). The Septuagint translation of grain offering (thusia) is the common word for sacrifice in the NT.

2:4 The oven was a cylindrical vessel with a large opening at the top, and frequently, a small hole at the base for air. Because of its tendency to ferment, leaven could never be placed on the altar. Fermentation would alter the nature of the grain. In addition, leaven was used in the offerings of various pagan religions.

2:9 In a few cases the grain offering sacrifice was completely consumed by the altar fire, but in most cases the priests were to eat the larger portion of the offering.

2:11 "Yeast in the dough" was a common rabbinic metaphor for man's evil inclinations (e.g., b. Ber 17a; see Mk 8:15; Lk 12:1; 1 Co 5:8) and was a symbol of fermentation, deterioration, and death. Bee honey was regularly offered to nearly all of the Greek gods, and was used in offerings of the Hittites and Mesopotamians. Therefore it was prohibited in Israelite worship.

2:13 The application of salt would remove whatever blood remained in the sacrificial meat after slaughter. Large quantities of salt were delivered to the postexilic temple of Jerusalem for use in the sacrificial ritual (Ezr 6:9; 7:22). Salt was the primary preservative in the ancient world. In the OT salt is associated with two covenants (Nm 18:19; 2 Chr 13:5).

3:1 The fellowship offering was an optional sacrifice that a man could bring when he so desired. It accompanied a confession offering as a freewill offering or in fulfillment of a vow (7:12-14). It afforded the worshipers the experience of joining together with the priests in a sacred meal. As a communal meal, therefore, it anticipated the Last Supper of Jesus with His disciples. It was also part of the public celebration of the Festival of Booths, or Pentecost. Whereas all other animal sacrifices were specified as to their sex, the fellowship offering could be either male of female.

3:3 The fatty portions were regarded as the choice parts of the animal.

3:4 The liver (Hb kaved) is literally the heavy (Hb kvd) organ; it weighs about three and a half pounds.

4:2 The sin offerings were efficacious only when offenses were inadvertent or unwitting; they were not applicable to defiant acts or premeditated crimes. When a voluntary sin is confessed, it falls into the category of involuntary sin for which there is sacrificial expiation. The deliberate sinner is not excluded from possible atonement if he repents, but the unrepentant sinner will receive no benefit from a sacrifice (Nm 5:6-8). No sacrifice could atone for sins of absolute defiance (Nm 15:30-31). Offenses requiring the death penalty fall into the category of sins for which sacrifices will not provide expiation. In general, these offenses can be classified as violations of the Ten Commandments. Paul identified the Messiah with the sin offering (Rm 8:3; 2 Co 5:21).

4:7 The horns of the altar are projections at each of its four corners and are part of the altar (Ex 27:2; 30:2). Altars with horns have been uncovered in Megiddo and Beer-sheba.

4:12 The portions of the priest's sin offering that could not be burned on the altar had to be burned at a special place "outside the camp." Such a designated dump for the sacrificial ashes existed outside Solomon's temple (Jr 31:39-40). In Heb 13:11-12, the death of Christ "outside the gate" is compared to the burning of the sin offering "outside the camp."

4:13 The Hebrew term 'edah ("community") was used in Aramaic papyri from Elephantine, in Upper Egypt (present-day Aswan). A Jewish community lived there through most of the fifth century B.C.

5:5 Indeed, there are only four passages where confession (Hb hitwaddah) is required, and each instance deals with deliberate sins (5:1-4; 16:21; 26:40; Nm 5:6-7). Through confession, deliberate sins are converted into inadvertent sins, thereby qualifying them for sacrificial expiation (see note on 4:2). Confession of sin is basic to the Yom Kippur ritual. Leviticus 16:21 explains the procedure to be followed.

5:10 The sin offering preceded the burnt offering because one was obliged to be in good standing before God before he could worship Him. Coming immediately after the sin offering, which atoned for sin, the burnt offering symbolized the restoration of the offender and represented his first act of worship after forgiveness.

5:15-16 The term "offends" (Hb ma'al) refers to a betrayal of trust, whether in regard to marital infidelity, deception, or to the violation of the covenant between God and Israel by the worship of foreign gods. In legal texts, the crime of ma'al involves actual loss of property to other persons. The story about Achan, preserved in Jos 7, is classified as ma'al (see 2 Ch 26:16-18; 28:19-25; 29:19; 36:14; Neh 1:8; Ezk 17:19-20; Dn 9:7).

The "restitution offering" was a specialized kind of sin offering (cp. v. 7) required in cases when someone had been denied his rightful due. The value of the amount of which he had been defrauded had to be restored to him, plus a fine of 20 percent (5:16; 6:5). The "restitution offering" was commanded whenever another party had suffered some deprivation (14:12-18).

6:4-5 Sin is treated as a debt and places the offender under debt (see Mt 18:21-35; Lk 7:41-42). In Is 53, the Servant of the Lord offered Himself as a restitution offering. That passage looks ahead to the death of Christ, Who made full and perfect compensation for the sins of the world.

6:10-11 The priestly vestments were to be worn only in the confines of the sanctuary (Ex 28:43). In some ancient Near Eastern religions the priest performed certain rituals in the nude, but in Israel this was considered an affront to the Lord (see note on Ex 20:26).

6:12 The sacrifices offered up at the inauguration of the priesthood were consumed miraculously by a divine fire (9:24). This fire was not to be extinguished to ensure that God might accept all subsequent sacrifices.

6:22-23 Every grain offering brought by a priest on his own behalf, whether for expiation or as a voluntary offering, was to be burned entirely on the altar. Priests could benefit only for services undertaken on behalf of other Israelites.

7:31 The sons of Eli, the priest of Shiloh, failed to observe this law (1 Sm 2:15-17).

7:34 The presentation offering (tenuphah) and the contribution offering (terumah) were usually distinguished as two movements performed with an offering, the tenuphah being a horizontal motion "extending and bringing back," and the terumah being a vertical motion "raising and lowering." Recent research, based on an Egyptian relief from Karnak, indicates that the so-called "wave offering" (tenuphah) should now be understood as an elevation offering, a ritual of elevating and lifting the offering in dedication to God. The "contribution" offering (terumah) is to be understood as a gift.

8:1 Nearly every verse in chapter 8 is an adaptation of commands given in Ex 29. The family of Aaron needed to maintain a level of purity and ceremonial cleanness beyond that of their fellow worshipers, although Israel as a whole was to be "My kingdom of priests and My holy nation" (Ex 19:6; cp. 1 Pt 2:9).

8:7 In Ex 3:5 and Jos 5:15, Moses and Joshua removed their sandals when standing on sacred ground. Islamic practice still requires removal of one's shoes upon entering a mosque or shrine. Aaron's tunic and sash were woven of fine linen and embroidered with blue, purple, and scarlet woolen threads (Ex 28:39). These components correspond to the fabric of the tabernacle's lower curtains (Ex 26:36: 27:16).

8:8 The Urim and Thummim are mentioned in Scripture in only six other places (Ex 28:30; Nm 27:21; Dt 33:8; 1 Sm 28:6; Ezr 2:63; Neh 7:65). They may have been flat stones, similar to the puru used in Mesopotamia, and attested in Hebrew as purim ("lots") in Esther (Est 9:24-26). Archaeological excavations have recovered such objects from non-Israelite sanctuary sites. The Urim and Thummim may have functioned like dice in determining God's will. Rabbinic tradition dates the cessation of their use to the time of David and Solomon.

8:10 Scripture often connects the act of anointing with the receiving of God's Spirit (1 Sm 10:1-10; 16:13; Is 61:1).

8:24 These actions are analogous to what occurred at the enactment of the Sinaitic covenant (Ex 24:6-8).

9:2 The sin offering provides the foundation for all the other offerings, in that it offers both propitiation and expiation from all sin by the shedding of the blood of a substitute.

9:24 God appeared as fire in passages such as Ex 24:17 and Dt 4:12; 9:3. On four other occasions God sent fire to consume a burnt offering: (Jdg 13:15-20; 1 Kg 18:22-39; 1 Ch 21:26; 2 Ch 7:1-3).

10:1 Nadab and Abihu apparently took their fire from somewhere outside the altar area and placed it in their censers.

11:1-23 The main purpose of dietary laws was to separate Israel from the other nations. These laws had practical benefits. See the article "How Can Modern Medicine Relate to the Old Testament?" p. 233. In all four sources where the prohibited foods are enumerated (vv. 44-45; 20:25-26; Dt 14:21) the reason for such restrictions is the holiness of the Lord and His people. The handful of species fit for God's altar table was definitive for cleanness throughout the rest of the animal world. Interpreting this theologically, one might say that since God had limited His "diet" to these animals, His people must do so in imitation of their creator (Lv 11:44-45). Applying this standard, only those animals that specifically resembled the sacrificial model were allowed. These have in common cloven hoofs and rumination (chewing the cud). However, Israel alone is required to observe such special ceremonial cleanness, because they are the holy people; Dt 14:21 explicitly allows Israelites to sell carcasses to aliens and foreigners.

Looking at the larger arrangement of the chapter, note that it contains regulations concerning four major groups of animals: land animals, birds or flying creatures, water animals, and "small creeping things." This is the same general classification of animal life found in the Gn account of creation. In the text of the Torah, a generic distinction between pure and impure animals first occurs in the narrative of the flood (Gn 7:2). There is no evidence of a broad nutritional or health-related basis for the dietary classifications of the Torah. The greatest obstacle to the health being the primary reason for these laws is that the NT removes distinctions between clean and unclean foods; Jesus directed his hearers to a more fundamental distinction (Mk 7:14-23). Romans and Egyptians, also, did not eat fish without scales.

11:13-17 Carrion-eating birds of prey would be defiled by the dead carcasses of their victims as well as by the blood still present in the flesh.

11:47 The separation of the animal kingdom into the pure and the impure illustrates Israel's separation from the nations. The latter had defiled themselves by their idolatry and immorality. Israel must refrain from partaking in these practices to live a holy life founded on the way and nature of God. In the NT these laws were set aside as barriers between Jew and non-Jew.

12:1-5 Some have suggested that the longer waiting period of uncleanness upon the birth of a daughter reflects an Israelite view of the inferiority of women. Alternatively, the longer period of impurity after the birth of a daughter may reflect apprehension and anticipation about the infant daughter's ability to eventually become a mother in her own right. Ancient Near Eastern polytheism, related to the cycles of nature, placed great emphasis on fertility; the Israelite regulations governing a new mother may represent a reaction to this emphasis. It was the discharge of blood following birth that rendered a new mother unclean for one or two weeks, similar to the time of uncleanness for a woman during her menstrual period.

12:3 Other ancient cultures practiced circumcision (Jr 9:25). With the transfer of circumcision to infancy, it became a sign of the covenant, a rite of initiation into the religious bond between Israel and its God (Gn 17:1-27).

12:4-5 A longer period of defilement should not be construed as an indication of inferior social worth. For example, a human corpse defiles more than a dead pig. The sacrifices a mother was to offer were the same for either a girl or a boy, indicating that both genders were considered equal before God.

12:8 Mary the mother of Jesus followed this regulation after His birth. She offered up two birds, the offering of the poor, for her purification (Lk 2:22-24).

13:1-46 Typically, during the OT period, disease was regarded as a punishment from God for some wrongdoing. In the case of "skin disease" (tsara'at) specifically, there was a tradition that it represented a punishment from God for acts of malice, illustrated for example by what happened to Miriam when she criticized Moses (Nm 12:1-10). The term does not refer to a single type of skin disease, but is a broad descriptive term covering all kinds of disfiguring diseases of the skin or scalp. Older English versions translated it as "leprosy."

13:45 Tearing the clothes, messing the hair, and covering the moustache are signs of mourning for the dead (Ezk 24:17,22).

13:46 "Outside the camp" was the farthest place from God to which the sinner and the impure were banished (10:4-5; Nm 5:1-4; 12:14-15; 31:19-24). It was also the place where wrongdoers were executed (Nm 15:35-36). To live outside the camp was to be cut off from the blessings of the covenant. It is understandable that a person diagnosed as unclean would go into mourning (Lv 13:45).

13:48 The phrase "warp or woof" occurs only in this chapter in the Bible (vv. 48,49,51,53,56,57,58) and refers to the lengthwise and cross threads in a woven garment.

14:11 The phrase "the priest who performs the cleansing" probably indicates a specialization of priestly functions. Certain priests were specifically trained for such purifications and were routinely assigned to administer them (cp. Mk 1:44). Priests in Egypt and Mesopotamia followed a similar practice.

14:12-18 The restitution offering was offered to compensate God for loss. The person with "skin disease" fell into this category because the Lord was deprived of his sacrifices, tithes, and firstfruits as long as uncleanness kept the infected person outside the worshiping community.

14:33-53 The procedures for purifying the house that has "mildew contamination" are identical to those prescribed in verses 1-32 for purifying a diseased person.

14:57 In Scripture, disease is one of the images of sin (Ps 147:3; Is 1:5-6; Jr 8:2; 30:12; Mk 2:17). The OT records several instances of people who developed serious skin disease following sacrilegious behavior (e.g., Nm 12:9-10; 2 Kg 5:27; 2 Ch 26:17-21). The Levitical law provided no means of curing such conditions. The sufferer had to wait in hope of a cure from God, without human aid. Only then could he present himself to the priest. The banishment of the diseased person from human society and God's sanctuary was analogous to the fall when Adam and Eve were expelled from Eden (Gn 3).

15:1-33 All the impurities dealt with in this chapter threatened the purity of the sanctuary (v. 31). They are discharges resulting from illness or infection, in addition to menstruation and seminal emissions. While these regulations may have involved personal hygiene, their main concern is the holiness of the worshiper.

15:18 The rites of other ancient Near Eastern religions celebrated the fertility of the gods, even to the point of dramatizing it through human sexual intercourse. Israel's faith, in contrast, prohibited sexual intercourse within sacred precincts. The uncleanness resulting from normal sexual relations is of the mildest type. Emission of semen, in intercourse (v. 18) or at other times (vv. 16-17), causes pollution, but no sacrifice was required to purify a person from it. The man (and his wife when she was involved) had simply to wash and wait until evening (vv. 16,18). Though the couple might be ritually unclean, it was not a question of their having sinned. (See the article, "Is the Bible Sexually Oppressive?" p. 987.)

15:19 A woman's time of uncleanness was longer, since her menstrual discharge would last longer than an emission of semen. Egyptians, Persians, and Arabs also subscribed to the view that menstruation entailed ritual uncleanness.

15:32-33 Good sexual hygiene may increase the fertility of both males and females. The primary purpose of these laws, however, was to make Israel holy and to prevent intermarriage with groups who were not worshipers of Yahweh. In Heb 13:4 the laws of ritual purity are cited metaphorically and applied to personal integrity within marriage. In the NT, Mk 5:25-34 reveals Jesus' general attitude concerning the uncleanness regulations; his focus was on faith for healing the condition, rather than upon the ritual pollution of the afflicted person. Jesus pointed beyond the letter of the OT regulations to the moral principles that informed them, within God's greater purpose of revealing His kingdom.

16:2 The mercy seat, 44 by 26 inches, was the cover on the top of the ark of the covenant and was connected with the cherubim.

16:8 The meaning of Azazel has been explained three ways: (1) It is a proper name for the goat itself, meaning "the goat that departs," i.e., its traditional meaning of "scapegoat." (2) It was the particular desolate and rugged area into which the goat was released. (3) It refers to the leader of the evil spirits of the wilderness, possibly to be identified with "demons" (Dt 32:17; Ps 106:37) and "satyrs" (2 Ch 11:15). The NT does not explicitly state that the scapegoat was a type of Christ. Early in church history, however, as attested in the Epistle of Barnabas, written c. A.D. 200, Christians saw in the scapegoat a type of Christ. As the scapegoat was led out to die in the wilderness bearing the sins of the people, so Christ was crucified outside Jerusalem for the sins of His people.

16:21 The imposition of hands on the head of an animal is clearly explained as the symbolical transference of the people's sins to the animal victims.

16:22 A tradition in Jewish literature (Mishnah.Yoma 6:6) attests to the fact that the goat was led to a steep cliff and pushed over backward to kill it.

16:29 In biblical literature the idiom "practice self-denial" connotes fasting (Ps 35:13; Is 58:3,10). Subsequent Jewish literature elaborated on the practice. Mishnah Yoma 8:1 interprets self-denial as involving five abstentions: from food and drink, bathing, use of oil on the body, wearing leather shoes, and sexual intercourse. In Judaism the Day of Atonement continues to be the most important and solemn day of the year. Since, with no temple, it is not possible to offer sacrifice, Jews observe it by fasting, abstinence, and prayers of penance as they seek God for forgiveness. Most NT references to the Day of Atonement focus on the access now available into the most holy place. When Christ died, the curtain in the temple was torn in two (Mt 27:51). Christ as our High Priest "entered the holy of holies once for all . . . by His own blood" (Heb 9:12).

17:1 Here begins a section of Leviticus that many scholars refer to as the Holiness Code, continuing through chapter 26. It is especially concerned with the holiness of the Lord's people, as a reflection of His holiness.

17:4 This ordinance was to prevent sacrifices to the goat-demons who inhabited the wilderness. To offer sacrifices to demons was a flagrant breach of the first commandment to "not have other gods besides Me" (Ex 20:3; Dt 5:7). This law could be effective only when everyone lived near the sanctuary in the wilderness period.

17:11 Blood is considered efficacious because it represents life. Creatures cannot live without it, and killing is expressed as shedding blood (Gn 9:4). The blood of the sacrificial victim offered on the altar is its "life" and can stand in place of human life. Blood essentially signifies the life given up in death.

18:1–20:27 The sexual aberrations listed in these chapters refer to irregularities known in pagan religions.

18:3 Homosexuality and bestiality were apparently common in Canaanite culture. Homosexuality (v. 22) is mentioned with reference to the Canaanites (Gn 19:5-11; Jdg 19) and also attested in Mesopotamia. Bestiality (v. 23) is also known from Egyptian, Canaanite, and Hittite sources. In the Egyptian royal family brothers married sisters. In the laws of Hammurabi and in the Hittite law codes some of the incestuous relationships listed in 18:6-18 are prohibited.

18:4 Since marriages within the extended clan were encouraged there was a tendency toward endogamy—that is, marrying within one's own group. Marriages of this kind were essential to ensure that ancestral lands would be retained within the clan. These incest laws are meant to prevent excessive inbreeding within families that were otherwise bound together as socioeconomic units.

18:8 This was the sin of Reuben (Gn 35:22; 49:4).

18:9 What was acceptable during the Patriarchal period (Gn 20:12) is now forbidden. This change in what is permitted proves the antiquity of the patriarchal traditions.

18:21 The Molech cult involved the sacrifice of children (see 20:2-5; Dt 12:31; 18:10; 2 Kg 23:10; Jr 32:35). Remnants of Molech sacrifices have been found in North Africa, and there is evidence to suggest that these rites originated in Phoenicia. The book of Jubilees (part of the OT apocryphal literature) connects intermarriage, specifically the marrying of one's children to pagans, with the sin of Molech.

18:22 Many scholars maintain that pagan priests regularly engaged in homosexual acts (see Dt 23:18; 1 Kg 14:24). While lesbianism is not explicitly forbidden in the OT, the Jewish rabbis agreed that the same laws applied to women (Rm 1:27).

18:23 Hittite laws assign the death penalty to lying with some animals, but lying with a horse or a mule carried no penalty. In Israel, all bestiality was a capital offense.

18:24-25 God was evicting the Canaanites from the land because of their evil practices (18:24; 20:24). If the Israelites followed the Canaanites' customs and practices (which they later did), the same thing would happen to them. The incident of Baal of Peor (Nm 25:1-3) illustrates the relationship between sexual immorality and idolatry.

19:1-37 In this chapter we find the most concentrated occurrence of the phrase, "I am the LORD your God" in the Bible. This passage quotes, or alludes to, all the Ten Commandments; sometimes they are expounded or developed in a new way.

19:9 "Gleanings" refers to that which falls to the ground during reaping. It was the practice in ancient Israel to cut the stalks of grain with one hand while catching what was reaped with the other. Whatever the reaper failed to catch in his other hand fell to the ground and was known as "gleanings" (see Ru 2:3,7).

19:11-18 Concern for the poor, the widow, and the orphan is widespread throughout the ancient Near East and in the OT (Ex 22:21-22; 23:9; Lv 19:33-34; Dt 15:7-11; 24:14,17; 27:19; Jr 7:6; 22:3; Zch 7:10). Israelite law is unique however, in mandating kind treatment for the alien or stranger. But the motivation for such benevolence is not derived from its social value; it is based on the need to reflect the Lord's holiness.

19:13 The term "neighbor" (Hb rea') can also refer to a non-Israelite (cp. Gn 38:12,20 friend; Ex 11:2); that extended meaning is intended here.

19:18 According to the eminent Rabbi Akiba (c. A.D. 50–132), the expression "love your neighbor as yourself" is a central principle in the Torah.

19:19 Explanations of laws against mixtures include these: (1) Mixtures are a violation of the order God brought into the world by separating the species (Gn 1). (2) Mixtures are symbolic of mixtures of human beings; thus these laws prohibit intermarriage and assimilation. (3) Mixtures are to be avoided because they belong to the sacred sphere, namely the sanctuary, as do its officiants, the priests. The lower cover of the tabernacle and the curtain closing off the most holy place are a mixture of linen and wool (Ex 26:1,31). The high priest's ephod, breastpiece, and belt contain the same mixture (Ex 28:6,15; 39:29). Mixtures, then, characterize the holiness of the sacred sphere and those authorized to enter or serve it.

19:24-25 The Babylonians, also, regarded the fruit of the first four years as unfit for food.

19:26 The expression "with blood in it" (lit. "eating over blood") may signify a form of divination, involving the consultation of ancestral spirits. These practices existed in Greek and ancient Near Eastern societies.

19:27 Tearing out the hair of one's beard, as well as of the head, was a custom associated with mourning over the dead (cp. 21:5; Dt 14:1; Is 15:2; 22:12; Jr 16:6; Am 8:10).

19:28 Laceration was included in the rites of Baalistic fertility worship (cp. 1 Kg 18:28), and may have been a universal religious practice in the ancient Near East.

19:31 Spiritists were involved in necromancy, or purported communication with the dead (see 1 Sm 28:3-25; Is 29:4; cp. Lv 20:6; Dt 18:11; 2 Kg 21:6; 23:24; Is 8:19).

19:33 The "foreigner" (Hb. ger) in the Bible was most often a foreign merchant, craftsman, or mercenary soldier. This term never refers to the prior inhabitants of the land. Generous actions to foreigners were motivated by the memory of the Israelite sojourn in Egypt (Ex 23:9; Dt 5:14-15).

20:2 Crimes punishable by stoning in the OT include blasphemy (24:16; cp. 1 Kg 21:9-14), Sabbath violation (Nm 15:32-36), idolatry (Dt 13:10; 17:5), adultery with a betrothed virgin (Dt 22:24), and failure to restrain a dangerous ox (Ex 21:29). Stoning was also the penalty for incorrigible children (Dt 21:18-21) and a bride who was found not to be a virgin (Dt 22:21).

20:26 An exceptional feature of biblical law is the prominent focus on human values. In Israel, religious offenses and offenses against life tended to be punished more severely than in other ancient Near Eastern law, which regarded financial loss as more serious than loss of life. Punishment, in Israelite law, stands in marked contrast to the degrading brutality of many penalties under Assyrian law. Mutilation is demanded only once in the Pentateuch, in an extreme case (Dt 25:11-12), and there the penalty is mild compared with those in Assyrian laws. The OT demand for at least two witnesses (Dt 19:15) limited the application of penalties to flagrant violations.

21:14-15 In marrying a virgin, a priest would ensure that her children are his own. If a priest married a woman who was not a virgin, it would be possible that the first child (and therefore potential high priest) would not be of the Levitical line.

22:22-24 Many of the deformities that bar a priest from offering sacrifice (21:18-20) preclude animals from being offered as sacrifices.

23:3 The kinds of work not permitted on the Sabbath, according to the Pentateuch, included plowing and harvesting (Ex 34:21), preparing food by baking and boiling (Ex 16:23), making a fire (Ex 35:3) and gathering of wood (Nm 15:32-36). The Sabbath was to be a day of joy and praise (Ex 23:12; Dt 5:12-15; Is 58:13; Hs 2:11). It was a distinctive sign of the covenant (between Yahweh and Israel, Ex 31:13-17). As the first sacred assembly listed in the chapter, the Sabbath was the most celebrated assembly, observed every seven days. The recurrence of the Sabbath in a seven-day cycle seems to be a model for the rest of the other sacred assemblies. There are seven festivals in the year. During these festivals there are seven days of rest. Most of these festivals occur in the seventh month of the year. This elaborate system of festivals and sabbatical years underscored the importance of the Sabbath.

23:5 The orthodox Jewish view is that "twilight" means "between midday and sunset." In NT times the Passover sacrifice began around what would correspond to 3 p.m.

23:6 The Hebrew word for festival is chag. It is linguistically related to the Arabic expression hajj, a term that designates Muslim pilgrimages to Mecca. In Israel, all males were required to appear before the Lord at three feasts annually (Dt 16:16).

23:17-18 The giving of the law at Mount Sinai occurred on the occasion of the first Pentecost, or Festival of Booths (Ex 19:1). After the destruction of the second temple in A.D. 70, the Festival of Booths became a festival of the law. Several prophets use symbols from this feast when they allude to the coming reign of God (e.g., Is 52:7-13; Zch 14:16-19).

23:23-24 The seventh month (vv. 24,33) commemorated the end of the agricultural year. The festivals in this month had a more solemn character than those in the spring. Four extra Sabbaths are prescribed in the space of a month, including the most holy Day of Atonement (vv. 27-28).

23:37-44 The religious calendar was closely aligned with the agricultural year and its times of harvest. The Passover and Festival of Unleavened Bread came at the time of the barley harvest in the spring, and the Festival of Booths was celebrated during the wheat harvest in our June. The seventh month (our September–October) contained three festivals—the Festival of Trumpets, the Day of Atonement, and the Festival of Booths—and coincided with the ripening of grapes, figs and olives.

24:10-14 Blasphemy brings guilt on those who hear it as well as on the blasphemer. To rid themselves of this guilt the hearers had to lay their hands on the blasphemer's head.

24:13-23 On four other occasions Moses made a special inquiry of God about a legal decision (Nm 9:6-14; 15:32-36; 27:1-11). The death penalty was administered outside the area of settlement because of the impurity of a corpse (see Dt 17:5).

24:19-20 The principle known as lex talionis, or "law of such" (i.e. of corresponding retaliation) is found in other ancient law codes before the time of Moses. The laws of Eshnunna and the laws of Ur-Nammu, rediscovered through archaeology, predate the Code of Hammurabi (seventeenth century B.C.) by a few centuries. These codes, too, establish fines for personal injury.

The goal of the penal system in the Bible is compensation, or restitution. The phrase "eye for eye, tooth for tooth" was an illustration of the principle, not to be applied literally. The punishment must be proportionate to the offense (cp. Ex 21:23-25; Dt 19:21), not disproportionately severe. Only in the case of premeditated murder was such compensation forbidden (Nm 35:16-21). The principle of "life for life" must be literally enforced, because man bears the image of God (Gn 9:5-6). Jesus' statement, "Whatever you want others to do for you, do also the same for them" (Mt 7:12; Lk 6:31), is a reflection of the lex talionis in this broader sense (Dt 19:19).

25:4 Allowing the land to lie fallow every seventh year helped to reduce the amount of sodium in the soil due to irrigation. But it was also a way to recognize that the Lord is the ultimate owner of the land.

25:10 The Year of Jubilee, the fiftieth year, would follow the seventh sabbatical year. Thus, when the Jubilee was celebrated the land would remain uncultivated for two consecutive years.

25:10 This verse is inscribed on the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. This legislation has contributed to the Western ideal that every family has a right to own property. The Sabbath Year foreshadows the time when creation will be delivered from the bondage of corruption (Rm 8:21).

25:26-28 An owner of land who had sold his land under economic stress could redeem it at any time, either through his own resources or those of a relative. The purchaser could not refuse the right of redemption.

25:39-55 These laws are designed to make slavery as humane as possible. Slavery in the OT was somewhat akin to imprisonment in the modern world, and served a roughly similar purpose, enabling a man who could not pay a debt to work it off directly. In some respects it was less degrading and demoralizing than the modern penitentiary; for one thing the man was not cut off from outside society as he would be in prison. Harshness characterized slavery in Egypt (Ex 1:13-14).

Debt could never force a family to sell its land. Faced with financial hardship, however, an Israelite landowner could lease his land for the number of years until the next Jubilee. Land was passed from father to son; the right of redemption that went with such a patrimony permitted the original owner to reclaim full control of his family lands whenever he met the debt of obligation. That is, the lessee could not refuse to return the land to the lessor. The lessor was able to redeem the land in any one of three ways: (1) A relative could pay off the debt. (2) Whenever the head of the family accumulated enough money, he could redeem it himself. (3) At the Year of Jubilee a patrimony was automatically returned to its original owner free of debt. In the last instance Yahweh Himself was acting as the next of kin, liberating His kinsman's property.

It is evident from 2 Ch 36:21, where it is said that the land lay desolate during the captivity for 70 years to make up for its Sabbath Years, that the celebration of the sabbatical year had been neglected during the last centuries before the captivity. If the number is taken exactly, the passage points to an omission of the Sabbath Year reaching back about 500 years, i.e. to the days of Solomon (Jr 34:8-10; Ezk 7:12). There is some evidence that both Alexander the Great and Julius Caesar (109–44 B.C.) reduced the annual tribute Jews had to pay every seventh year.

26:14-39 A list of curses occurs in nearly all ancient Near Eastern treaties that have been preserved, as sanctions that guarantee the observance of the agreement. The classic collections of biblical curses in 26:14-33 and Dt 28:15-68 resemble the epilogue of the Code of Hammurabi. But Leviticus and Deuteronomy are unique in holding out the hope of survival for those who experience even the most severe punishment, exile from the homeland. The presence of these curses underscores the character of the biblical covenant as a "treaty" between Yahweh and His people.

26:21-22 The curse of devouring animals is found in other treaties, particularly the eighth century Aramaic Sefire treaty (cp. Dt 28:38,39,42; Jr 8:17). The region of Samaria, after it fell to the Assyrians, experienced something of a fulfillment of this warning (2 Kg 17:25-26; cp. Ezk 14:15). Conversely, Is 11:6-9; 35:9, and Hs 2:18 speak of the future age when animals will live in harmony with humans.

26:46 The belief that God disciplines his people in order to keep them from continuing in their sinful paths is also expressed in Dt 8:5 and Pr 3:11-12 (see Heb 12:4-11). While the ultimate curse of exile would cause Israel to forfeit her occupation of the land of her inheritance for a period of time (cp. 18:24-28), it would not threaten the existence of Israel, the seed of Abraham (Rm 11). The NT seems to regard the principle of blessing and cursing as applying to the church, individually and corporately. As in the OT, those who accept God's grace will enjoy its privileges in doing God's will but will suffer if they do not (e.g., Rm 2:6-10). Many of the horrifying judgments described in Rv 6 find their original setting in the covenant curses of Lv 26 and Dt 28.

27:1-8 These figures may represent the price of slaves of different age and gender in ancient Israel. The average earning of an Israelite worker in biblical times was about one shekel per month.

Numbers Articles

How Can Modern Medicine Relate to the Old Testament?

by John A. Bloom

Many laws in the Pentateuch (Genesis–Deuteronomy) relate to diet and hygiene for the Hebrew people. Theologians for centuries thought that these merely served a ceremonial function or formed a cultural barrier to separate Israel from the surrounding pagan cultures. However, with the rise of modern medicine and the germ theory of disease in the nineteenth century, it was recognized that obeying these laws also confers important health benefits. These commands are unique compared with the health practices of neighboring cultures in Old Testament times, suggesting that God inspired Moses in giving these laws. Moreover, they show that God's rules are not arbitrary and that He has our best interests at heart.

Laws instructing people to wash after touching the dead or sick (Lv 13–15; Nm 19), to properly dispose of excrement and blood (Lv 17:13; Dt 23:12-13), and to isolate (quarantine) diseased individuals and anything that they touch (Lv 13) are extremely effective at limiting the spread of disease. Modern medicine has also shown that circumcision brings a health benefit—the wives of circumcised men have a much lower risk of contracting cervical cancer because the lack of a foreskin reduces the male's ability to harbor and transmit the human papillomavirus. Interestingly, the study of blood clotting factor levels in newborns has also shown that circumcision on the eighth day—the age prescribed to Abraham (Gn 17:12)—is the safest time in a male's life to have this surgery.

As our understanding of germs and parasites improves, the Old Testament prohibitions against eating unclean animals, or even associating with them, receive increasing medical verification. For example, people commonly argue that we no longer need to treat pigs as unclean because we now know how to cook pork well. However, modern research on the flu virus shows that most new deadly strains of influenza arise under conditions where people are in close contact with pigs and birds. Pigs function as a bridge between the bird and human forms of influenza; thus new deadly flu outbreaks usually originate in China, Hong Kong, and other areas where people live in close proximity to pigs.

The medical benefits of many other commandments are well known, even if modern culture is not inclined to obey them. For example, avoiding adultery and fornication is the best way to protect oneself against sexually transmitted diseases (Ex 20:14; Pr 5); avoiding addictions will spare one from alcohol, drug, and tobacco-related diseases (Pr 20:1; 23:19-21,29-35); and prayer, meditation, and treating others fairly minimize the damaging effects of stress (Lv 19:13-18; Ps 23; 27:1-3; 91:3-7). Modern medicine shows that "living by the Book" brings many practical blessings, just as God promised (Ex 15:26), which makes it all the more reasonable to trust God regarding promised spiritual blessings.

Introduction to Numbers

AUTHOR

The book of Numbers is about faithfulness—portraying the faithfulness of God in dealing with a people who are often unfaithful. As a whole the book presents a challenge to the people of God to live holy and righteous lives according to the Word of God, and as a result enjoy the blessings and benefits of living in right relationship to Him.

The English title "Numbers" derives from the Septuagint name Arithmoi, based on the two censuses in chapters 1 and 26, as well as other references to the twelve tribes of Israel. The Hebrew title, B^e^midbar—"In the Wilderness," describes the geographical setting of much of the book. After deliverance from bondage and oppression in Egypt, Israel would experience God's faithfulness in the wilderness. There He provided for their needs and promised them a land of fullness and prosperity—"flowing with milk and honey" (Nm 14:8) The challenge for the people was to live faithful to God's revelation and to receive their inheritance of the land promised to Abraham and the patriarchs in the past, and to their descendants in the present and future.

Traditionally, Christian scholars have held that Moses was the author of the Pentateuch, except for the account of his death in Deuteronomy 34. In support of this view are several explicit comments which Moses personally wrote down the words of the covenant from God (Ex 24:4; Dt 31:9), the stages of the Israelite journey from Egypt to Moab (Nm 33:2), and the song of Israel's rebellion (Deuteronomy 31:19-22). In addition, hundreds of references are made to the Lord revealing Himself to Moses (from Ex 3:4 to Dt 34:4). The New Testament also ascribes the Pentateuch to Moses, usually in the context of Jesus' references to Pentateuch laws (Mt 8:4; 19:7-9; Mk 1:44; 7:10; Lk 5:14; 24:44; Jn 1:17,45). Several times references to the Scriptures are voiced in the phrase, "Moses and the prophets," in which Moses is equated with the pentateuchal Torah (Lk 16:31; 24:27,44; Ac 28:23).

Ascribing the Pentateuch to Moses would place the date of the book of Numbers in the late fifteenth century or late thirteenth century B.C. Based on ancient archaeological and historical evidence, several parallels to this era exist internally in the book of Numbers. The census lists in chapters 1 and 26 show parallels with those found in texts from Egyptian, Mari, Ugarit, and Alalakh of the second millennium B.C., and the organization of the Israelite tribal camps in a rectangular fashion around the central shrine is similar to the encampment of the armies of Ramses II of the thirteenth century B.C. G. Wenham notes several other second millennium parallels among the people of the ancient Near East, including (1) the Late Bronze Age (1550–1200 B.C.) design of the lampstand (Nm 8:4); (2) tasseled garments (Nm 15:38); (3) the positioning of the Levites as guardians of the tabernacle (Nm 1:50-51); (4) the bronze serpent (Nm 21:9) which is similar to one found in the excavation of a Midianite shrine at Timna'; (5) and the holy day calendar (Nm 28–29) which finds parallels at both Ugarit and Emar from the fifteenth to the fourteenth centuries B.C.

Most evangelical scholars suggest that the book of Numbers originated in the age of Moses and Joshua, with varying degrees of minor expansion and editing through the early kingdom periods. The prophets of the eighth through the sixth centuries B.C. exhibit great familiarity with the words of the law, and in fact most of their oracles of judgment are founded upon knowledge of the Pentateuch.

THE NUMBER OF ISRAELITES IN THE MILITARY

ne of the most controversial issues in the interpretation of the book of Numbers is the large numbers of Israelites reflected in the military censuses of Numbers 1–2 and 26. When taken literally the O numbers of the Israelite militia total 603,550 in the first census and 601,730 in the second census yielding a total population of four to five times the above figures, or 2 to 3 million or even more. Critical scholars challenged this interpretation based upon several external and internal issues. External to the text are the following: (1) the ability of the Sinai region to support that many people, (2) the need for at least a three to five square mile area to house such a group, (3) the lack of archaeological evidence for any sizeable population ever existing in any of the regions or sites listed in the Israelite itinerary, and (4) the lack of evidence of an immense burial and garbage disposal site anywhere in the region.

The first critique does not accept the supernatural way in which the texts of Exodus and Numbers describe God's provision of manna and meat for the people. The issue of space depends upon where one locates Mount Sinai. The traditional site of Jebel Musa in the southern Sinai peninsula may not have a broad enough single area, but other regions would have more ample space. The final two issues can be resolved through the understanding of the practices of nomadic peoples who leave relatively little trace of their material culture except in a culturally significant location, like a clan burial site.

The internal difficulties also present problems for the traditional literal approach. First, the 603,550 total male militia over 20 years of age (Nm 1:46; 2:32) would yield a total male population of perhaps a million. Dividing by the 22,273 firstborn males (Nm 3:43), one would come up with 40–50 males per family, far more than is realistic. Second, in the period of the Judges, the armies of Deborah and Barak only numbered 40,000 (Jdg 5:8), far less than the 301,000 counted in the second census for those six tribes. The same general number of 40,000 are said to have crossed the Jordan toward Jericho (Jos 4:13), and only 30,000 were deployed against Ai and Bethel in the second campaign in Joshua (Jos 8:3).

Such problems have led many scholars to propose other options for interpreting the large numbers: (1) The census represents a later period in Israel's history, such as the Davidic kingdom period. This view should be rejected since it assumes the unreliability of the numbers in their current context. (2) The numbers are hyperbolic, multiplied for rhetorical purposes perhaps by a factor of ten to highlight the providence of God in blessing Israel with an abundance of children. This view would only be acceptable if we assume the original readers understood the figurative nature of the numbers. (3) The Hebrew term 'eleph ("thousand") should be translated as "clan" or "military unit" (cp. Nm 1:16; 10:4; 1 Sm 10:19; 23:23; Mc 5:2). In this case, Numbers 1:20-43 would enumerate 598 clans comprising 5,550 men. However, the summation in Numbers 1:46 (cp. Ex 38:26; Nm 2:32) lists not 598 but six hundred 'eleph and three 'elaphim (and five hundred fifty). Also, in contexts of counting, the term seems to mean "thousand," especially in the census of Numbers 1–4 where the number of thousands is always followed by the number of hundreds (except for an even 22,000 in Nm 3:39).

Any proposed solution that reduces the large numbers runs into other difficulties. A small group of Israelites could scarcely have provided the huge quantities of precious materials (over 2,000 pounds of gold alone!) for the construction of the tabernacle (Ex 38:24-29). Archaeology informs us that Pharaoh Merneptah encountered Israel as a significant people about 1230 B.C. The number of soldiers needed to invade Canaan was surely more than a few thousand. Also, the assignment of a half shekel for each warrior in Exodus 38:26 seems to confirm the literal number of 603,550 (also the round number of 600,000 in Ex 12:37).

Furthermore, the internal difficulties can be explained. The 22,273 firstborn males are those who were born in approximately a year and a half between the exodus from Egypt and the time of the census. A population that included 603,550 males would have about 200,000 males from age 20 to 30, which might result in about 20,000 marriages per year. Allowing for the possibility of two gestation periods in some cases, that population could produce 22,273 firstborn males in 18 months. As for the smaller armies in the books of Joshua and Judges, first, Deborah and Barak's army of 40,000 (only 10,000 of which marched out) reflects Barak's inability to recruit and muster all available men. While Saul was physically and rhetorically imposing and recruited an immense army (1 Sm 9:2; 11:7-8), Barak was a wimp (Jdg 4:8). The fact that only 40,000 members of the Transjordan army crossed the Jordan may reflect their decision to hold back two thirds of their forces to protect their villages and homesteads, in spite of their promises to send them all (Nm 32:20-32). And the fact that Joshua only deployed 30,000 against Ai and Bethel simply reflects Joshua's decision to use only as much force as he deemed necessary to accomplish the objective. Some soldiers would have been protecting the main camp, while others may have been unavailable for reasons of health or ceremonial uncleanness.

In conclusion, rejecting the large numbers in the Pentateuch and book of Judges seems to create far more difficulties than accepting them. Nevertheless, the issues involved are complex, and no scholarly consensus has been reached. Whatever the interpretation of the numbers, the theological importance is clear: in spite of the faithlessness of the people of Israel, God was faithful to bless and increase them even during the difficult times encountered in their wilderness journey.

Numbers Study Notes

1:1 A key starting point for understanding the book of Nm is found in the first phrase of Nm in the Hebrew Bible—"in the Wilderness." God indeed revealed Himself to a prophet named Moses in the historical context of the Sinai wilderness. Some commentators have suggested that the book was a result of the work of priestly writers and editors nearly a thousand years after Moses, who composed a mythical historical background for the so-called "law of Moses," at the instigation of the Persian government during its political and religious reforms. For a discussion of the authorship of Numbers and the other four books of the Pentateuch, see the article, "Who Wrote the Pentateuch and When Was It Written?" (p. 158).

1:2 The instruction for Moses, Aaron, and the tribal leaders to carry out a census of the available militia took place 13 months after the exodus from Egypt, placing the context in about 1440 or 1275 B.C., depending upon the dating of the exodus event.

1:5-16 The names listed for the tribal leaders of Israel suggest the antiquity of the text, in that they reflect forms used in the second millennium B.C. rather than the second half of the first millennium B.C. This argues against the later dating of the material. The names are unknown in Israelite texts of the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, the period during which critical scholars claim the book was composed. Each tribe's clan leaders were responsible for carrying out the census.

1:17-45 The format of the Israelite military census parallels that of Assyrian military censuses of the eighth century B.C. Armies were assembled and counted before going into a major campaign. In the idiom of the period this was a literal head count; the Hebrew expression is "lifting up the skulls."

1:19 Note the summary statements here and in 1:54, that Moses and Aaron led the Israelites in doing just as the Lord commanded them. This statement appears several times in Ex and Lv to express the faithfulness of the people in following the instructions from God. The success of their future endeavors depended on their obedience.

1:20 The summary formula for each of the tribal military censuses is essentially the same, with occasional special notes. Each of the tribes was counted according to "their family records by their clans and their ancestral houses, counting one by one the names of every male 20 years old or more, everyone who could serve in the army." The descendants of Reuben appear first in the list, due to Rueben's being the firstborn of Jacob by Leah.

1:32 The tribe of Joseph is divided into two clans, each of which is counted as a tribe. The book of Genesis highlights the special consideration given to Joseph, the most faithful of Jacob's sons. The dual counting of Joseph's sons compensates for the exclusion of the Levites from the military census, preserving the number of 12 for the tribes in the full reckoning of the Israelite nation.

1:44-46 The total of 603,550 for the Israelite able-bodied militia would suggest a total population of 2 to 3 million people now preparing to leave Mount Sinai.

1:47-53 Because the Levites stood with Moses in the golden cow incident (Ex 32:26), they were ordained as the special representatives of the priests, as well as the guardians, transporters, and servants of the mobile sanctuary. Thus the Levites were non-combatants and were not to be counted as part of Israel's military.

1:51 The penalty for encroaching upon the sanctity of the tabernacle is death, as noted here for the first time in Nm. Limiting access to the holiest place was a serious matter, and violation of God's holiness carried grave consequences. The priests themselves were subject to death for violation of the ritual laws; even Aaron's sons Nadab and Abihu were struck down when they offered an unholy sacrificial fire in the tabernacle (Lv 10:1-3). Hence the Levites were to continue in their original role as the defenders of the holiness of God.

1:53 The Levites acted as the "lightning rod" for the wrath of God, so that the Israelite community might not suffer as a result of any violation of the holy place.

1:54 As noted in verse 19, Moses, Aaron, and the Israelites completed the census process just as the Lord commanded them (see comments at 1:19).

2:1-31 The subject of chapter 2 is the symmetrical organization of the tribes around the tabernacle. The priests and the three Levite clans formed the first circle of encampment around the rectangular sanctuary, and then three Israelite tribes were positioned on each of the four sides. This arrangement served several purposes. The priests were positioned at the entrance to the tabernacle, where they would receive people bringing sacrifices and special offerings. The priests and Levites together made up the first ring of protection for the sacred place against potential violation or contamination. This arrangement was a pattern for assigning property to the Levites on the immediate perimeter of certain key cities throughout the promised land (35:1-8). The symmetrical array of tribes also presents a unified picture of the Israelite people in this holy setting of the Sinai wilderness, a key theme of chapters 1–10. Beyond the 12-tribe encampment was the area to which the unclean, such as those with various diseases and impurities, were relegated. While not totally excluded from the community, they were placed outside the boundaries of the ritually pure encampment. Note the following arrangement of the camps.

2:9,16,24,31 Summary totals from the census of the three tribes of the Judah camp are given with totals consistent with those provided in chapter 1. Similar summaries are given in verses 16,24,31 for each of the four sides of the Israelite camps, with an aggregate total equal to that of 1:46 and Ex 38:26. The order of each of the sets of three tribes was to be their marching order on the journey from Sinai to the promised land.

2:17 The tent of meeting was located at the center of the Israelite community. It would be carried in the midst of the camps in accordance with the arrangements outlined in 3:5–4:49.

3:1 Aaron is named before Moses, a rare reversal in order. Recitation of a genealogy in the religious assembly was common practice in the Ancient Near East, as a way to connect worshipers with the heritage of their faith. The list of Aaron's descendants takes special note of the loss of his eldest sons, Nadab and Abihu, who were succeeded by the younger sons Eleazar and Ithamar. Even the firstborn son could be supplanted if he were unfaithful. Eleazar, the older remaining son, became the chief priest at the death of Aaron (20:22-29), and his son Phinehas would rise up as a defender of the faith in the time of Israel's idolatry at Baal of Peor (25:7-13). This passage would serve as a reminder of the awesome responsibility of the priests and Le-vites.

3:5–4:40 Some scholars assert that most of the material in the Pentateuch that relates to the duties of priests and Levites comes from a period after the return of the exiles from Babylonia (538 B.C.). Yet the job descriptions of the Levites in chapters 3–4 apply primarily to the period of the mobile sanctuary, prior to the eras of both the first (c. 962 B.C.) and second (c. 515 B.C.–70 A.D.) Jerusalem temples. Another reason given for rejecting the historical setting is the complexity of the priestly structure, which some critics claim must have developed over many centuries. But other Near Eastern peoples of the third and second millennia B.C., such as those of Sumer, Old Assyria and Old Babylonia, had priestly systems even more diverse and complex in structure, and more detailed in their prescribed rituals.

Seven times, the number of wholeness and completion, the Lord gives instruction to the Levites in chapters 3–4 (3:5,11,14,40; 4:1,17,21). The repetition of the comment that the people obeyed the Lord's instructions (3:16,42,51; 4:37,41,45,49) underscores thefaithful response of the Israelites under Moses' leadership.

3:10 For a second time, the Lord issued a warning about violating the holiness of the sanctuary (1:53). It was the responsibility of the priests and Levites to protect the holy site from encroachment by unconsecrated people.

3:11-13 These verses offer a reminder of the substitutionary role of the Levites. They stood in place of the firstborn sons of the families of Israel, whom the Lord had set aside in the exodus as a group dedicated to Him (Ex 13:2,11-16).

3:17-20 The sequence of the Levite clans here in Nm is consistent with the Levites' genealogical pattern in Ex 6:16-19, further evidence of the Pentateuch's cohesiveness.

3:21-39 The census of the tribes of Israel was for military purposes in preparation for the conquest of the promised land, but the Levites, as non-combatants, were not to be numbered. Their census is taken here, in recognition of their substitution for the Israelite firstborn and to outline the respective responsibilities of the three clans. Together the 7,500 Gershonites, 8,600 Kohathites, and 6,200 Merarites total 22,300, but verse 39 summarizes the total as 22,000. This discrepancy can be resolved in one of two ways. First, the number 22,000 can be understood as a round number, similar to the 600,000 Israelites (vs. the more precise sum in chap. 1 of 603,550) in Ex 12:37. One ancient edition of the Greek OT, known as the Lucianic, gives the total number of Kohathites as 8,300 (300 less), for an even total of 22,000 as in Nm 3:39. Several of the Hebrew Masoretic manuscripts have the same total for the Kohathites.

3:40-51 The firstborn males totaled 22,273. Taken as a portion of the 603,550 total in the military census, this would require the average Israelite woman to have 27 male children, a number unheard of in Israelite history thus far (Jacob having the most at 12, by several wives; but see comment at Ex 12:37). However, if the number is not taken literally the need for the special redemption price of five shekels each for the extra 273 Israelite males is superfluous. Five shekels was the standard price for a young slave in Late Bronze Age Egypt and Mesopotamia (1500–1200 B.C.), and is therefore consistent with the time period for the exodus event. See notes on the census numbers in the Introduction.

4:1-49 In a typical ancient Israelite literary pattern, the information is laid out in cyclical fashion proceeding from the general to the specific. Chapter 3 describes the general duties of each of the three clans of Levites, and numbers all Levites from one month old and above. Chapter 4 delineates the duties more precisely, in a census covering men 30 to 50 years of age—those who would actually perform the various security, transportation, and maintenance services. These awesome responsibilities were reserved for mature Levites, bringing greater skill to the exalted tasks assigned to these sovereignly chosen servants. This material does not come from a later secondary Priestly source from the time of Ezra or later, as some commentators assert. It is an original pattern, common in the Hebrew Bible, for laying out didactic material by means of narrative.

5:1-4 This section of community purification laws deals with diseases that render a person unclean, or unfit to take part in the worship of the holy community of faith. In some ancient cultures a person with these kinds of diseases could be relegated for life to a lower social class, limiting his or her associations with the upper classes or access to governmental resources and protection. Ancient Israel allowed no such class, or caste, system. While persons with various "skin diseases" were restricted from access to the sanctuary through the camp, this was for the purpose of preventing the contamination of the holy place. The unclean were not driven away from the community; they were quarantined on the perimeter of the camp, presumably close to the area in which their families were encamped. Leviticus 13–14 details the manner of dealing with these diseases and the process of purification whereby such individuals may be restored to the camp of the holy.

5:5-10 The second section of camp purity regulations addresses interpersonal relationships, in accordance with the 'asham (guilt offering) legislation of Lv 6:1-7. Damage to property, fraud, or false statements affect the well-being of the community of faith and must be dealt with forthrightly. Following the confession of the sinful individual, the value of whatever he had taken from another had to be restored to the owner, plus a 20 percent penalty. The restitution of value and the maintenance of human relationships were essential to the harmony and holiness of the community. The offender's relation to the Lord was also in view, signified in the guilt offering of a ram. If the judgment were enacted after the death of the wronged individual, and that person had no kinsman redeemer to receive it, the full amount of restitution was presented to the priests.

5:11-31 The third matter of community purity relates to the family and to potential marital fidelity, in the case of a wife suspected of unfaithfulness (sotah). If a woman were apprehended in the act of adultery, both she and her adulterous male partner were subject to the death penalty (Lv 20:10). The ritual outlined here put the matter of a suspected, but not apprehended, adulterer in the hands of God, the only reliable witness. These provisions ensured that a woman found to be innocent would be preserved from stoning by a mob. Throughout the book of Nm special attention is given to matters related to women, including women's property rights (27:1-11; 36:1-12) and women's vows (31:1-16;see note on 6:1-2).

5:19-22 The focal point of the section about the woman suspected of adultery is the oath of imprecation (cursing), which is framed by material that is somewhat repetitious. Some interpreters suggest the repetition is the result of combining material from multiple sources, but this type of repetitive structure is typical of Hebrew literary style. The oath takes place at the entrance to the sanctuary before God and the priest, who prepared the potion made of holy water, tabernacle dust, and the words of the curse. The husband presents a grain offering on behalf of his wife.

5:23-28 In the solemn ceremony, the woman drinks the potion and the results are left to God. Either the water-dust mixture becomes a purification offering if she is innocent, or it brings condemnation for her guilt that would lead to miscarriage or barrenness.

5:29-31 The summary statement, introduced by the phrase "this is the law [statute] regarding" (cp. Lv 16:29; Nm 6:21; 19:14) is typical in Hebrew literary style and not the result of combination of sources by a later editor.

6:1-2 In leading up to the directions for the dedication and purification of priests, the Lord gives instructions for the special Nazirite vow of the laity. Both males and females could enter into a prescribed period of special service dedicated to the Lord. As a kingdom of priests (Ex 19:6), Israel was to be God's representatives to the nations—even if only Aaronic priests were permitted to conduct the rites of the sanctuary. The instructions do not specify the activities of the Nazirite, but the ritual restrictions highlight the aspect of purity and provide for rededication if one who has taken the vow should become unclean. In the ancient world, people performed vows to God (or the "gods") out of a situation of need or distress. Such vows had specific conditions and stipulations, and involved a special ritual at the beginning and end of the period of dedication. Samson was dedicated as a Nazirite for the purpose of delivering Israel from Philistine oppression (Jdg 13:3-5). The mothers of Samson and Samuel took Nazirite vows during their time of barrenness before the birth of their sons.

6:3-4 The Nazirite vow involved total restriction from the vineyard and any of its products, not simply fermented grape juice. Priests, too, were forbidden to consume wine during their time of ritual service, but the Nazirite vow was more restrictive. The cultivation of vineyards required a settled lifestyle that tended to lose the sense of total devotion to the Lord that characterized Israel's nomadic life in the wilderness. Note the example of the Rechabites in Jr 35.

6:5-6 Those under the Nazirite vow were forbidden to use the razor on their heads, and were permitted no contamination through contact with a dead body. The length of hair would be an outward symbol to others of the Nazirite dedication. To refrain from approaching the body of a dead relative would be a reminder to the Nazirite's family, and others, of his or her total dedication to the Lord.

6:9-12 Proximity to death, to which a Nazirite could inadvertently be exposed while sleeping in a tent with an elderly relative, would bring instant contamination and require a process of re-purification, as outlined here. The other restrictions—those of the vineyard and the razor—were under the full control of the individual. If these restrictions were deliberately violated, the vow was automatically ended.

6:13-20 The ceremony when the period of the Nazirite vow was over involved one from each of the types of sacrificial offerings: (1) a sin offering (chatta'at) of a year-old female lamb for purification, (2) a burnt offering ('olah) of a year-old male lamb for consecration, and (3) a peace (fellowship) offering (sh^{e}lomim) of a ram for celebration.

6:21 See the note on 6:1-2.

6:22-27 The priestly blessing stems from an ancient period and is not, as some have claimed, an insertion into the narrative of a liturgical text from a later time. Evidence for its antiquity surfaced in Jerusalem in excavations at Ketef Hinnom, a burial complex overlooking the Valley of Hinnom south of the walls of the ancient city. One of the burial sites from the late seventh century or early sixth century B.C. (before the Jewish exile from Jerusalem) yielded a phylactery, or small container worn on the forehead (Dt 11:18). Within the phylactery were found two cigarette-sized silver scrolls upon which had been etched a copy of this priestly blessing. Similar blessings of peace and of the favor of divine regard (countenance, or "face") have been found in excavations at Ugarit (modern Ras Shamra, in Syria) and other sites from the second millennium B.C.

7:1-11 The time frame, after the construction of the tabernacle, is almost a year after the exodus from Egypt—that is, on the first day of the first month in the second year (Ex 40:17; Nm 9:15). This indicates that the first part of Nm is a theological presentation, rather than a chronological sequencing of events. This literary device is called "anticipatory explanation," a common feature of Hebrew narrative. The dedication ceremony recorded here took place one month prior to the military census of chap. 1. Chapters 7–10 are concerned with celebration and consecration, as the nation prepares for the journey from Mount Sinai to the promised land. This section provides information about the means (covered oxcarts) by which the Gershonites and Merarites (Levites) transported their respective portions of the tabernacle structure, as outlined in 4:24-28,31-33.

7:12-89 On successive days a representative of one of the 12 tribes presented, in turn, the items required in the Israelite celebration, including covered oxcarts, sacrificial implements, and sacrificial elements for each of the three types of offering—whole burnt, sin, and fellowship/peace offerings. The tedious (to us) repetition of identical sets of gifts underscores the participation of each tribe in providing for the needs of the sanctuary, with its various celebrations and commemorations. This was important to note, as a statement of the tribes' unity in the covenant with Yahweh. The collective tribes contributed equally to the support of the priesthood, a pattern that is broken in the Korah rebellion of chapters 16–17.

A people in communion with God was ready to worship in harmony, and to experience His abiding presence. If the leaders brought their gifts beginning on the day after the tabernacle construction (second day of Abib/Nisan), this celebration would have been completed just a day before the prescribed time for the Passover lamb sacrifice on the fourteenth day of the month, as prescribed in 9:1-15. The order of the tribes represents the journey sequence presented in 2:1-34, and accords with the arrangement of the Israelite encampment.

7:84-88 The tribal presentations conclude with a summary of all the gifts, beginning and ending with the phrase "this was the dedication gift . . . for the altar." Such a repetitive pattern is typical of the literary style of the Pentateuch.

7:89 Some scholars consider this verse an unrelated appendage to the account of the tabernacle gifts, while others see it as a blending of material from two traditions (called "Elohist" and "Priestly" in some modern scholarship). However, the incident is integral to this narrative, as it fulfills the promise of Ex 25:22. The tent of meeting, where Moses had sought revelation from God, was formerly outside the camp. But with the tabernacle construction completed it lay within, where the ark of the covenant was now housed. Moses could not enter the tent immediately after its construction, due to the smoke from the cloud of the Lord that had descended at that moment (Ex 40:34-38). But now, after the dedication of the tabernacle implements and sacrifices, he could once more seek counsel from God. This prepares the reader also for the matters concerning the Levites in the next chapter.

8:1-4 The seven-tiered menorah, mentioned among the transported items in 3:31 and 4:9, provided lighting for the actions of the priests within the tabernacle. The light also was a symbol of God's presence and glory. Instructions for its construction were given in Ex 25:31-40; 37:17-24.

8:5-26 The second phase of details regarding the Levites focuses (vv. 12-19) upon the purification rituals for their dedication in substitution for the firstborn males of the Israelite tribes. The dedication was a threefold process involving ritual cleansing, ceremonial sacrifices, and presentation to the Aaronic priesthood at the entrance to the tabernacle. Critics sometimes view this material as deriving from the supposed Priestly source, thought to have been compiled to enhance the status of the Levites in response to developments during the reign of Josiah (639–609 B.C.). Yet the responsibilities outlined in Nm would have had little place in the post-exilic second temple community of Jerusalem. The details are applicable to the time of the mobile sanctuary, that is, during the wilderness period as indicated by the text.

8:5-7 The process to remove any potential contamination entailed three steps: (1) sprinkling the Levites with special purification waters, (2) shaving their entire bodies as the Nazirite would do if the vow were broken (6:9,18), and (3) washing their clothes, as the high priest did on the Day of Atonement (Lv 16:4).

8:8-12 Two bulls were sacrificed in the ceremony, after the Levites laid their hands upon the heads of the two animals as a symbol of substitutionary identification in the atonement process. The order reflected in verse 12 follows the delineation in Leviticus, the first being a sin offering for purification and the second a burnt offering for consecration.

8:13-14 Following the sacrifices, the Levites presented themselves to the Aaronic priests and to the congregation of Israelites as a presentation offering for sanctuary service.

8:15-19 The Levites functioned as assistants to the Aaronic priests, as transporters and maintenance persons for sanctuary structures and implements, and as guardians against any encroachment upon the holiness of the sanctuary. The passage reiterates the Levites' role in substitution for the firstborn of Israel (3:46-49; Ex 13:11-16). The events of the exodus provide the historical precedent for these instructions.

8:20-22 The summary statement highlights the essential acts of Levite dedication, with an emphasis on how the collective community of the prophet Moses, the high priest Aaron, and the congregation of the Israelites faithfully did "as the LORD had commanded."

8:23-26 The addendum to the dedication of the Levites cites retirement age as 50 and the minimum age of service as 25 years, whereas 4:2 suggests a minimum age of 30. Some scholars claim that these texts stem from different pentateuchal sources, but others suggest that the Levites may have served a five-year apprenticeship. Perhaps the age limit was raised from 25 to a more mature 30 as a result of the deaths of the immature and presumptuous Nadab and Abihu (Lv 10:1-3). During the latter part of David's reign two separate censuses were taken of those 30 and above and those 20 and above(1 Ch 23:2-5 and 24-27 respectively). Later, in the reign of Hezekiah, another Levitical census was taken for those at least 20 years of age (2 Ch 31:17). Hence censuses of varying ages and kinds were taken for different purposes. Even the suggested retirement age of 50 was not totally restrictive, since the Levites were permitted to perform light duties in the tabernacle.

9:1-5 These verses introduce the setting of new Passover legislation regarding the matter of ritual purity, an issue of concern in chaps. 1–10. With the tabernacle dedicated and the gifts presented during the first two weeks of the second year after the exodus from Egypt, the prescribed time for Passover drew very near. The Passover sheep and goats were to be slaughtered as the evening approached beginning the fourteenth of Abib (Nisan in the Babylonian calendar), and the ceremonial meal of the paschal lamb, unleavened bread, and bitter herbs was to be consumed after sundown. The people acted in faithful accord, following the instructions "just as the LORD had commanded Moses."

9:6-7 Those celebrating the Passover must do so in a state of ritual purity. But several Israelites had become unclean due to death in their household. If they chose not to celebrate Passover, they were subject to banishment from the community. They approached Moses for a judgment regarding their case.

9:8-13 As was his usual recourse, Moses consulted the Lord for the answer. Critics have asserted that this issue arose as a result of the circumstances described in2 Ch 30:2, when a second-month Passover was celebrated during the reign of Hezekiah. However, the situation then was totally different. In Nm 9 the issue is the purity of the worshipers, but in 2 Ch 30 the issue is the purity of the priests and the lack of pilgrims in Jerusalem. The legislation of Nm 9 probably served as the historical precedent for the second-month Passover in the late eighth century B.C., since Nm 9:10 also cites the case of a person being on a distant journey and thus unable to keep the Passover at the prescribed time.

9:14 Israelite law gave considerable attention to the status of resident aliens who desired to identify with the worship of Yahweh. One and the same law applied to the native Israelite and the alien resident; no social, religious, or legal distinction was allowed. Note the cases in Ex 12:49 and Nm 15:14-16, among others.

9:15 The chronological sequence returns to that of 7:1 and Ex 40:17, the day when the tabernacle construction was completed.

9:17-23 This section was originally a song that was sung during the wilderness journey, as the people followed the Lord in the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. The song's refrain occurs in verse 18, perhaps to be translated "At the word of the Lord they set out, the children of Israel, and at the word of the Lord they camped; all the days that it dwelt, the cloud upon the tabernacle, then they camped." This "Song of the Journey" sets the stage for the departure from Mount Sinai in 10:11-36. The song also reiterates the theme of the faithfulness of the Israelites, who were to follow the Lord's leading in the movement of the cloud through the wilderness. The same sequence of marching and camping recurs in chap. 33. The NT also depicts God's presence in the imagery of the cloud, as in the Transfiguration of Jesus (Mk 9:7; Lk. 9:34), and at His ascension into heaven (Ac 1:9).

10:1-10 Another element in preparation for the march from Sinai to the promised land was the production of silver trumpets. Their purpose was to call the people to break camp and line up in their prescribed order to follow the leading of the Lord in the cloud. The trumpets would also serve to call the people to solemn assembly at the entrance to the tabernacle. As with much of the book of Nm, critics who refuse to accept the date cited in the following verses tend to relegate this material to the post-exilic Priestly source.

10:11-13 The historical setting for the second section of the book of Nm is the twentieth day of the second month of the second year after the exodus from Egypt, or about a month after the week-long Passover described in Nm 9:1-14 (Ex 13:6). Those Passover worshipers who had been unclean in the first month had been able to celebrate on the fourteenth of the second month (Nm 9:6-12). Less than two months had elapsed since the completion and dedication of the tabernacle. But after spending 11 months in the Wilderness of Sinai, the Israelites would now begin to follow the Lord's leading toward His intended destination for them, the promised land. These verses are an introductory summary of the first stages of the journey, as the Israelites followed the cloud of God from Mount Sinai to the Wilderness of Paran of the northwest Sinai region. Again the Israelites are described as faithfully following the Lord's command through Moses, in the language of the journey song of 9:17-23.

10:14-28 The orderly departure from Mount Sinai of the priests, Levites, and 12 tribes follows the pattern of the encampment detailed in 2:1–3:38. The text is internally consistent; the tribal leaders who assisted Moses and Aaron in taking the military census (1:5-15) are those leading their respective groups at the beginning of the victory march to the promised land. Order, harmony, and faithfulness mark the beginning of the wilderness journey.

10:29-32 Moses asked his brother-in-law Hobab to accompany them on the journey and experience the goodness of the blessing of God upon Israel. In the Hebrew text, Moses notes three times that the Lord intends "good(ness)" for Israel. Twice Moses promises Hobab that the goodness would be apportioned to him, as well, if he helped guide them through the wilderness. Two critical issues arise; who was Hobab son of Reuel, and was Moses lacking faith in the Lord's guidance in desiring his brother-in-law to be his eyes in the wilderness for camping sites?

Source critics suggest the dual names Reuel (Ex 2:18) and Jethro (Ex 3:1) are evidence of the combination of two pentateuchal traditions. Others suggest the reference to Hobab, whose name means "beloved friend," is a later scribal insertion, to give identity to a friend of Moses. Perhaps the patriarchal clan leader of this group of Midianites (called Kenites in Judges) was Reuel ("father" can also mean "grandfather") while the actual father-in-law of Moses was Jethro. But Jethro and Reuel could well be the same person, since dual names are often encountered in Bronze Age texts from Mesopotamia and the eastern Mediterranean region (see note on Ex 3:1). The Hebrew choten can mean "brother-in-law" (preferred here) or "father-in-law" (Ex 3:1). The blessing of God is fulfilled for Hobab and his Kenite clan in Jdg 1:16.

Did Moses lack faith in the Lord's ability to lead the people through this unfamiliar area? The text does not even hint at this possibility, focusing instead on Hobab as a potential recipient of the Israel's covenant blessings. Moses was the interpreter of God's direction, revealed through the cloud in the wilderness, but Hobab could provide valuable support in the desert setting native to the clans of the Midianites. The Lord was the provider of both forms of leadership.

10:33-34 Preceding the Battle Song of the Ark is a chronological marker for the first stage in the movement of the Lord's cloud. As the symbol of God's presence and leadership (Ex 40:38), the cloud would go ahead of the people at a distance over a journey of three days (about 35-45 miles), while still covering them for protection. The ark, symbolic throne of God in covenant relationship to Israel, would lead the way for the people. The three-day journey is reminiscent of Moses' request of Pharaoh to allow the Israelites to journey three days into the wilderness to worship their God. Some critical scholars believe these verses are a late insertion, though they are characteristic of the narrative style of the book of Nm.

10:35-36 Some critics also contend this song is a later insertion, yet throughout the OT major sections of narrative conclude with a poetic refrain. The reference to Israel as "the people" (Hb ha'am) for the first time in Nm is considered by some commentators to be an indicator of a supposed Yahwist-Elohist source (a combination of sources preferring the names Yahweh and Elohim for God). Yet the expression is used in Nm (5:21; 9:13; 27:14; 31:2) to refer to the people in texts these same critics ascribe to a hypothetical Priestly source.

11:1-34 Several times in the OT the expression is used of Israel in a derogatory sense, as here, where the rebelliousness of the people is in view. A theme in this narrative is the continuous rebellious grumbling of the people. This section stands in contrast to the previous context, in which Moses described God's intention to do "good" for Israel (10:32). Here the people are grumbling "evil" before the Lord.

11:1-3 These verses set forth the complaint pattern typical of subsequent narratives (chaps. 11–25), and found also in Ex 16:2-16. The structure consists of (1) complaint, (2) divine punishment, (3) naming the place of the event after some aspect of the event. Hence, the "fiery" judgment of God led to the place being named "blaze."

11:4-34 Advocates of source-criticism suggest this text is from the hypothetical Yahwist-Elohist source (see note on 10:35-36) that was incorporated into a supposed Priestly edition of the book of Nm, altering the perspective on the provision of food in Ex 16:1-36 and the matter of judges in Ex 18:13-27. However, these texts together reflect consistent themes in these two books of the Pentateuch: food supply from God and leadership on the human level. The two settings are different, and the response of the people to the Lord's action has deteriorated. When God supplied the needed food (Ex 16) the people gathered it gladly, but in Nm 11 they complain about His provision.

11:4-6 The people's needs are both physical and spiritual. The Hebrew nephesh refers to both body and soul, as in verse 6 ("our appetite is gone," lit. "our soul withers"). They complain that they are tired of the monotonous diet of manna, God's special provision, and crave the luxury of the produce of Egypt. To have that, they would return to slavery and oppression. Insatiable human craving leads to a life of bondage.

11:10-15 Though angry with the people, Moses approaches God with due respect, laying his burden on the Lord and asserting that he cannot bear the load alone. Moses is the focal leader in the first cycle of rebellion (chaps. 11–15); Aaron is the focal leader in the second cycle (chaps. 17–20); and in the third (chaps. 22–25), both men rebel, leaving God to raise up a new temporary spokesman, Balaam.

11:16-27 The work of the Spirit of God here is to enable the elders and officers to carry out the task of teaching, judging and leading the Israelites through the wilderness experiences. Moses gathers and appoints the 70 elders at the Lord's instruction, and then God ratifies those registered by sending His Spirit upon them—even the two who had remained in the camp. Later in Nm, Balaam also receives the spirit of prophecy from God (24:2).

11:16 God instructs Moses to bring 70 elders and officers to the entrance to the tabernacle for official appointment. The term for "officers" (Hb shoterim) also denotes scribes, perhaps responsible for the writing and collecting of documents that would eventually compose the book of Nm and the Pentateuch early in Israel's history—not centuries later as some critics would assert.

11:29 For the second time in this chapter, the Israelites are referred to as "the (LORD's) people," thought by some critics to reflect a conjectured Yahwist-Elohist source (see note on 10:35-36)

11:31 The geographical description of the quail migration corresponds to event that occurs today. Here the miracle involved a divinely ordained wind at the appropriate time, as at the parting of the Red Sea at the exodus, which brought the quail into the Israelite camp in astonishing abundance. Ancient and modern historical documentation provides evidence of the regular migration of birds from Europe and the Mediterranean region across the Sinai region toward central Africa. But the blessing turned to craving, and the craving to disease and death. Hence the location was called "Graves of Craving."

12:1-16 Aaron and Miriam were apparently challenging Moses' position as the primary recipient of revelation from God. Critical commentators have assigned this narrative to the Yahwish-Elohist source, as they do most narrative sections of the book of Nm, and claim it was inserted into its present context by the post-exilic (after 538 B.C.) "Priestly" compilers of the Pentateuch. These sources are simply hypothetical constructs based upon the assumption that the Pentateuch is a late composition, nearly a thousand years after Moses.

12:1 The supposed occasion for the complaint of Miriam (the instigator—Hb verb is feminine) was Moses' marriage to a Cushite woman, though the real reason was his positional authority as God's primary spokesman. Explanations for the Cushite identity include: (1) the woman was Moses' second wife, of Cushite origin (Nubian, i.e. modern Ethiopian or Sudanese), whom Moses perhaps had married while Zipporah was in Midian with her father Jethro; (2) Zipporah had died and Moses had recently remarried; or (3) Zipporah and the Cushite woman are one and the same, Cush being another name for the region she had come from.

12:2 The ethnic issue was a cover for the real issue, a challenge to Moses' position of leadership. Miriam and Aaron are both regarded as prophetic figures in the OT (Ex 4:16; 15:20-21; Mc 6:4).

12:7 Being called "My servant" by God and a "faithful" prophet put Moses in the category of Abraham (Gn 26:24) and the "servant" in the Servant Songs of Isaiah (Is 42–53). As "faithful" he was a trustworthy servant of the highest order.

12:8 Some translations have "face to face" (Hb peh 'el peh), but Moses could not look upon God's face (Ex 33:11,20-23). The expression is an anthropomorphism signifying that the will of God is communicated directly through the words of Moses.

12:9-13 Miriam's disease, described as a condition that turned her skin milky white like a dead baby's, suggests a variety of skin disorders ranging from skin cancer or psoriasis to Hansen's disease (the modern designation of leprosy). Any of these would render her unclean according to Levitical law (Lv 13–14). Both Aaron and Moses express their love and concern for their sister in their pleas on her behalf. Aaron, who has followed Miriam in rebellion, appeals rightly to Moses to plead the case of his sister to the Lord, and Moses responds.

12:14-15 The seven-day period of separation after Miriam's healing is consistent with the regulations of Lv 14:1-32.

12:16 Source critics call this verse a postscript by the Priestly compilers to reconcile a perceived discrepancy with 10:12, which states that the people journeyed from Sinai to the Wilderness of Paran. But 10:12 is a summary of the initial phase of the journey to the promised land, and the Wilderness of Paran is a broad area of northeast Sinai, bordered on the north-northeast by the Wilderness of Zin, site of Kadesh-barnea (cp. 33:15-37).

13:1–14:45 The first cycle of rebellions reaches its climax in the failure to take the promised land. The people were disheartened when the report of the 12 spies convinced most of them that overcoming the inhabitants of the land and their fortified cities would be impossible. The rejection of the land was a rejection of God and His blessing, suggesting a desire to return to the Egyptian bondage from which God had delivered them.

13:1-2 Numbers says the Lord instructed Moses to send out the spies, whereas Dt 1:22-23 suggests that Moses sent the scouts at the people's request. Some commentators claim that the post-exilic Priestly compilers adapted the earlier Deuteronomic account, which they speculate was written just before the exile of 586 B.C., to the format of the book of Nm. But with many OT historical events, the human and the divine go hand in hand. Pharaoh, for example, hardened his own heart while God was hardening it for His own purposes (see note on Ex 4:21). Deuteronomy is Moses' description of how he dealt with the people's rebellion in rejecting the land, whereas Nm tells the story from the standpoint of divine instruction. Source critics envision Nm 13–14 as a blending of the P (Priestly) source and theJ-E (Yahwist-Elohist) source, assigning material to each on the basis of its content. This is unnecessary; the text was artfully composed as a unified presentation of the potential blessing of God if the people followed His directive to occupy the land, but the ominous result of rejecting His directive.

13:3 Note the broad geographical designation of the Wilderness of Paran from which the scouts are sent out, and the specific notation of Kadesh (-barnea) in the Wilderness of Zin (33:36-37), the starting point for their exploration (v. 21). Critical commentators suggest a combination of sources, one of which placed Kadesh in the Wilderness of Zin and the other in the Wilderness of Paran. But the Wilderness of Zin is defined by the desert drainage basin of the Nahal (Wadi) Zin, and was a subsection of the larger regional designation of the Wilderness of Paran (viewed today as the northeast quadrant of the Sinai region and a southern extension of the Negev in Israel). In separating their conjectural sources, such critics posit a Yahwist-Elohist tradition that places the Israelites at Kadesh early in their wilderness experience (13:26), while the Priestly tradition places the arrival at Kadesh in the fortieth year (20:1). The narrative sequencing suggests a lengthy stay (more than 38 years) in the Kadesh vicinity and the Wilderness of Paran, toward the Red Sea Gulf of Aqaba (Dt 1:46–2:3).

13:4-14 Source criticism tends to assign lists of names to the posited Priestly source. Here, they note that the list contains a number of unusual names, rarely used in Numbers or the Hebrew Bible, with the exception of Joshua and Caleb. Many men's names in Numbers, however, are rarely used again in the Hebrew Bible, a fact that points to the antiquity of this material as opposed to a late, post-exilic origin.

13:17-20 Moses' instructions to the scouts may be summarized in the question, "Is the land good or bad?" The parenthetic note about the season of the first ripe grapes (probably early September) refers to the land's potential productivity, of which the yield of the vineyard would be an indication. A bountiful harvest would raise the people's expectations about the coming campaign to take the land. Critics unnecessarily divide verse 17 into two sources, the first statement from the Priestly compilation and the quotation of Moses from the Yahwist-Elohist tradition.

13:21 As an example of the arbitrary manner in which some critics subdivide the narrative flow of the text, commentators have suggested that the Priestly compilers inserted this single verse into the Yahwist-Elohist narrative of verses 17-24.

13:22 The text connects the building of Hebron with the time of the construction of Zoan, in Egypt. Several critics have called this chronological link an historical inaccuracy, based on limited data from earlier excavations in the eastern Nile delta and the misidentification of sites such as Tanis, Avaris, and Zoan. Subsequent research has called their conclusions into question.

13:25 The scouting mission extended all the way into southern Lebanon, a total of about 240 miles. The 40 day journey is a realistic time period for covering that distance. Kadesh is mentioned in the region of the Wilderness of Paran, which also contains the Wilderness of Zin.

13:26-27 The report begins with a positive assessment of the fruitfulness of the land, including a vivid demonstration in the huge cluster of grapes brought from the Valley of Eshcol.

13:28-29 Some commentators considered the list of peoples living in the land to be a later description of the population of Canaan, the Hittites being those living south of Hebron in the time of Ezekiel and the Amorites not residing in Canaan until after the time of David. They reached these conclusions because those peoples were not mentioned in other sources dating from the time of Israel's wilderness sojourn. Recent discoveries, however, confirm the biblical data, revealing that a mixture of ethnic groups occupied the land of Canaan during the Late Bronze (1550–1200 B.C.) and Iron I (1200–1000 B.C.) eras.

13:30-33 Some critics see in verse 32, which regards the land as foreboding, a contradiction of verse 27 with its description of a bountiful land. However, the point of the rebellion cycle narratives was to show the goodness of God in the gift of a fruitful land (10:29), as contrasted with the evil perspective of the rebellious people (11:1). The reference tying the Anakites to the Nephilim (Gn 6:4), giants who perished in the flood, is an exaggeration by the fearful spies.

14:1-4 The rebellion culminated in the Israelite congregation's refusal to take the land in favor of returning to Egypt, the land of their bondage. Source critics suggest this account is the blending of Priestly and Yahwist-Elohist sources, even to the point of dividing in half verse 1, which by its parallelism is clearly a continuity.

14:5-9 The seemingly redundant description "the whole assembly of the Israelite community" is not the result of the blending of sources. Rather, it heightens the tension in the narrative. Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and Caleb appeal to the goodness and providential protection of God against the perceived power of the enemy.

14:10 Some critical interpreters view God's dramatic intervention at crucial points in Israel's journey as the creation of the Priestly narrators. But here (as in Ex 14:19; Nm 12:5; 16:19; 17:7) the dynamic work of God is integral to the story. It affirms that God will, when necessary, intervene in history when the survival of His people is at stake.

14:14 Moses again intervenes on behalf of a rebellious nation (see note on 12:8).

14:18-19 The expression "bringing the consequences of the fathers' wrongdoing on the children" has been taken to imply that God was unjustly assigning the guilt of the rebellious generation to those who followed. But this usage incorporates several concepts:(1) Moses first appealed to God's longsuffering and forgiveness; (2) an individual's misdeed can affect his family through successive generations; and (3) sometimes the enactment of judgment is withheld for several generations, as in the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

14:20-38 The Lord spares the present generation from the immediate judgment it deserves for the sake of the next generation which would inherit the promised land. The entire generation of men of military age would die during the wilderness sojourn (those age 60 or above), with the exception of the faithful spies Caleb and Joshua. Source critics see Caleb's blessing as coming from the supposed Yahwist-Elohist tradition, and that of Joshua as derived from Priestly and Deuteronomic sources. Such an approach fragments the text and disrupts the flow of the Hebrew narrative.

Was God's judgment on the people too severe? The text emphasizes their repeated rebellion against God (10 times) to which He has now responded. In rejecting entry into the promised land, they were rejecting an essential part of their covenant with Yahweh, which was in turn founded in His covenant with Abraham (Gn 12:1-3,7; 13:14-18; 15:18-21; 17:7-8).

14:39-45 Critics conjecture that the Yahwist-Elohist source resumes here, because the context reflects a tradition of warfare in the attempt to take Canaan. But the point of the narrative flow is the direct correspondence between the people's rejection of the Lord's directive to seize the land and their failure to take it on their own; they cannot succeed without God's blessing, and cannot have His blessing without faithful obedience. The passage stands as a unified presentation, not a composite of sources.

15:1-21 The Lord's grace and providence are implicit in His promise that the people of the next generation will enter, inherit, and reap the produce of the land despite the rebellion of the first generation. Out of those blessings they will bring offerings in celebration of the Lord's goodness and miraculous works in history, to be commemorated in the appointed feasts: Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles. Grain, oil and wine, all of which the Lord promised to a faithful people, were to accompany the animal sacrifices. Numbers 15:1-21 complements Lv 1–3 with details regarding the amounts and proportions of grain, oil, and wine to supplement the regular offerings. Sacrificial requirements were the same for the native Israelite and the alien residents in the land.

15:22-31 Inadvertent sins included matters in which the individual or community (1) acted unknowingly in breaking commandments, (2) was unaware of the penalty involved, or (3) failed to perform certain ritual requirements. The priest sacrificed a male goat for a sin offering and a bull for a burnt offering on behalf of the full congregation—Israelite and foreign residents—for unintentional breaking of the covenant. An individual brought a year-old female goat for such offenses. However, blatant defiance of the law was punishable by permanent banishment from the community, in which the individual bears his guilt away from the community.

15:32-36 The Sabbath was a sign of the covenant between God and Israel. Violation of its sanctity was an especially heinous offense, punishable by execution at the hand of members of the community of faith. The penalty may seem inordinately severe by modern standards, especially in light of Jesus' teaching about the Sabbath in relationship to human well-being (Mk 2:27). But this is a pivotal occasion in Israel's history, during which the Lord is laying a foundation for Israel's understanding of itself as His faithful people. He could permit no doubt about the seriousness of His purpose.

15:37-41 The blue corded tassels attached to the corners of the Israelite's garment (Dt 22:12) were a reminder of each person's fidelity to the Lord's covenant. This practice was followed in the time of Jesus and continues among orthodox Jews today. Verse 41 reiterates the heart of Yahweh's covenant declaration—that He is bound to His people as their God. It echoes His introduction to the covenant in Ex 20:2, and His words to Moses in Ex 6:2-8 in calling him to deliver the people from their Egyptian slavery.

16:1–19:22 The second cycle of rebellion focuses on the challenge to the divinely ordained preeminence ofthe Aaronic priesthood. The insurrection resulted in the deaths of the 250 followers of Korah and an additional 14,700 from the plague that ensued (chaps. 16–17). Also in view is the violation of the sanctuary; hence the initial focus of chapter 18 is the role of the Aaronic priests in protecting the holy place (18:1-7). Provision for the priests and Levites, from the tithes and offerings, occupies 18:8-32. The cycle concludes with chapter 19, which presents material related to purification from uncleanness resulting from contact with or proximity to the dead—a matter of concern in view of the thousands who died in the Korah rebellion.

16:1-35 Though this narrative is chiefly concerned with the priesthood in the challenge to the preeminence of the Aaronic line, critics suggest the story of the rebellion of Korah and friends originated in the Yahwist-Elohist tradition. This hypothetical stratum is seen in vv. 1-2,12-15,25-34, in which Korah, Dathan, Abiram, and On are the leaders of the insurrection, with the remainder of the story being compiled from two Priestly sources. Those favoring this conjecture suggest that the main theme was the Reubenites' loss of their favored firstborn status. In ancient Near Eastern patriarchal tribal societies the firstborn son usually passed on the family's religious traditions to the succeeding generation. Since Dathan and Abiram are Reubenites, this issue may be in the background of this passage. But according to all later references to this event it was Korah, a Levite from the Kohathite clan, who instigated the rebellion. The Reubenites were encamped on the south side of the tabernacle with the Korahites (2:10-11; 3:29), and this proximity facilitated the relationship between the groups. Other critics call this story an etiology, or story of origins; on their view, it was meant to explain why deep canyons exist in the Reubenite territory on the east side of the Jordan.

16:1-11 The Hebrew text of verse 1 emphasizes the role of Korah by listing his extended lineage. Use of the verb "took" in the sentence structure emphasizes his attempt to "take control" of the priesthood (v. 10). The Kohathites enjoyed a favored position among the three clans of Levi in the assignment of responsibilities in 3:27-32 and 4:1-20, but Korah desired a higher status (vv. 8-10).

16:12-19 Dathan and Abiram drew back quickly when confronted by Moses, for fear of bodily harm. Moses issued the challenge of the censers, 250 from among the insurrectionists against the one of Aaron. As they stood at the place of presentation, the entry to the tabernacle, the glory of the Lord intervened with dramatic impact upon the entire congregation of Israel.

16:20-35 When Korah rallied the Israelites in support of the rebellion, the Lord instructed Moses and Aaron to distance themselves from the crowd because of the impending judgment. The narrative stresses Moses' role as mediator as he responds in a desperate plea for mercy upon the congregation, asking the Lord to judge only the instigators of the insurrection. The Lord accepts his intervention, and only the rebellious leaders carrying the censers were consumed.

16:36-40 Death can have both contaminating and cleansing effects. Touching and even being in proximity to the dead can render one unclean. Yet, in the conclusion to this section of Nm (chap. 19), impurity from exposure to the dead is cleansed with a mixture of holy water and the ashes of a burned red cow. The fiery death of the 250 collaborators brought purification to the bronze censers, so their raw materials could be used to make an additional bronze covering for the sacrificial altar. Critics suggest this story explains the origin of the original bronze covering for the altar of burnt offering (cp. Ex 27:1-8), a view that would place these events before the departure from Sinai. This second covering, fabricated (Hb tsippui) by hammering out the bronze of the 250 censers, differs from that described in Ex 27 and 38.

16:41-50 Further contention against Moses and Aaron resulted in a second threat of judgment as the glory of the Lord appeared. Again the leaders fall on their faces before God and the people, and Aaron graphically displays his role as mediator in making incense atonement for the people, standing literally in the gap between life and death.

17:1-13 In a miraculous demonstration of God's ordaining of the Aaronic priesthood, Aaron's wooden staff sprouted and formed buds. Critics have dubbed this incident "folklore" or "myth," based upon a similar theme in Greek literature (the budding of theclub of Heracles). Others have labeled the story anaetiology, a tale made up to explain the presence of a staff of almond wood in the Jerusalem temple of the second temple period (see Heb 9:4). The motive for this "explanation" is political self-justification by the late Aaronic priesthood. Such efforts to explain away accounts of the miraculous depend on a bias against supernaturalism in general and the historicity of the text in particular. The account of the Korah rebellion ends on an ominous note. The concluding rhetorical question will find its answer in the two following chapters.

18:1-7 In the aftermath of the Korah rebellion against the Aaronic priesthood, the sanctity of the holy place was viewed as a grave issue for the community of faith. The Aaronic priests and the three clans of the Levites were granted, through a special gift, the responsibility of protecting the sanctuary from defilement.

18:8-32 The priests and Levites would not be given territorial grants in the promised land like the other tribes, but were supported through the people's tithes and offerings. Even the priests and Levites were required to tithe their gifts to the Lord. This section complements similar allocations described in Lv 8–9 and Nm 3–4, 8, and 35.

19:1-22 The sacrifice of the red cow was originally mandated for purification from contamination resulting from exposure to death. The demise of thousands in the Korah rebellion necessitated a means of ritual purification from such contamination. A theme in chapter 18 is the responsibility of the priests and Levites to protect the sanctuary from encroachment by the people, who may have come into contact with the bodies of those who perished.

Though some critics acknowledge the widespread belief in the Ancient Near East that contact with death brought ritual contamination, they suggest that Israelites adopted this idea late in history. Thus they assign this chapter to the late Priestly source (post-exilic, after 538 B.C.), ignoring the evidence for similar ancient beliefs and the narrative context of chapters 16–19. Later on, the Jews broadened the application of these waters of purification to include a variety of cleansing procedures for sin and impurity. This is reflected in the Mishnah, a compendium of traditional Jewish teaching roughly contemporary with the NT. But the origins of these practices may go back to ancient Israel in the second millennium B.C. As is often the case in the Pentateuch, ritual practice emerges out of practical need.

19:1-4 In its original instructions the red heifer ritual was to be conducted under the auspices of Eleazar the priest (mentioned twice, 19:3,4) although his father Aaron was still living (his death is cited in 20:22-29). The sevenfold sprinkling of the blood of the slaughtered cow is consistent with other blood rituals in the Pentateuch (Lv 4:6,17; 8:19; 16:14,19).

19:6 Three additional purifying ingredients (aromatic cedar wood, hyssop, and crimson wool) are cast upon the fire in the burning of the entire cow, except for its life-symbol, the blood.

19:7-10 All three priests responsible for preparing the ashes for purification ritual are deemed unclean until evening. The ashes alone cause uncleanness, but when mixed with water they become a purifying agent. This seeming paradox is similar to that of blood, which is used for the ultimate purification of the holy place on the Day of Atonement, yet renders one manifestly unclean if improperly utilized or consumed.

19:11-22 Ritual impurity from the dead requires a "sin offering" (Hb chatta'at) for purification in the same manner as ethical or moral offenses. The symbolic cleansing on the third and seventh days was a strict requirement; breaking this covenant stipulation would result in banishment from the community. Contamination of death could result from (1) being in, or entering, a tent where someone had just died (applies to persons and objects); (2) contact with the dead in battle or by accidental proximity; or (3) contact with a grave or its human remains.

19:11-13 Summary statements here and in verses 21-22, considered by some to be later additions, are typical in pentateuchal legal presentations (see Lv 16:29-34).

19:14-20 Repetition is a hallmark of the structure of pentateuchal legislation. It is not evidence of later addition or editorial insertion.

20:1-13 Miriam's death may have significantly affected Moses and Aaron, for it immediately precedes their sin in striking the rock at Meribah. By the end of the chapter Aaron dies, but God will use Moses to give future direction to Joshua and Israel in the matters concerning life in the promised land. This direction is presented in chaps. 26–36 and the restatement of the covenant relationship in Dt.

20:1 The third rebellion cycle begins with the death of Miriam, beloved older sister of Moses and Aaron, followed by the sin of Moses. In the structure of Nm this verse establishes the historical setting of the narrative, which then moves from the lengthy sojourn in the Wilderness of Zin area through the Edomite region and into Transjordan, then to the plains of Moab across the Jordan from Jericho. There the Israelites will remain for several months as the Lord prepares them to cross the Jordan and begin the conquest of Canaan. The narrative from Nm 22 through Dt and up to Jos 4 is set in the plains of Moab.

20:2-13 Source critics have dissected the narrative into two strands due to observed doublets (v. 4 and v. 5, also v. 3a and 2b,3b). But such repetitious elements are typical in Hebrew narrative as well as that of other Near Eastern literary cultures. The name of the site Meribah, as with the site mentioned in Ex 17:7, comes from the events that occurred at these places. It is not due to confusion of stories from ancient Priestly and Yahwistic sources.

20:14-21 Repetitious negotiations are not an unknown feature of biblical narrative; such discussions may be seen in Abraham's plea for Sodom (Gn 18:22-33) and Balak's messages to Balaam (Nm 22:1-21). The repetitious elements in verses 17 and 19 do not represent separate historical traditions, Yahwist and Elohist, as some commentators propose. Some critics suggest the description of Edomite territory here reflects a later era when the Edomites had migrated into southern Palestine after the destruction of Jerusalem. But the concepts of nation, kingdom, or kingship as encountered in the pentateuchal record should not be governed by modern conditions. The Hebrew term melek is used to designate the leader of many kinds of ethnic groups of varying power and area of control. Ancient territorial boundaries were continually in flux, corresponding to the strength of the current leader who was usually designated a "king." This applies to large nations, such as Assyria or Persia, as well as to smaller groups such as the Phoenicians or Philistines. The Edomites are known to have migrated again into southern Judah during the ninth and eighth centuries B.C., causing Judean rulers to erect border fortresses against potential invasion in the frontier of Arad. In the present narrative, likewise, Edomite dominion is seen to extend well west of the Arabah in the western edge of the Nahal Zin basin. Israel circumnavigated the region, heading into Moab via the Wadi Zered, Edom's traditional northern limit.

20:22-29 Source critics assign this text to the Priestly compilers. Because it places Aaron's death at Mount Hor they view it as a contradiction of Dt 10:6, which places Aaron's death at Moserah, seven stages earlier according to the itinerary in Nm 33:30-41. However,Dt 10 is not an itinerary in the technical manner of Nm 33, but lists a variety of critical life issues for the Israelite community. Included in Dt 10:1-11 are the giving of the second set of law tablets and the setting aside of the Levites, both of which occurred earlier at Mount Sinai. Mount Hor is associated with Mount Madurah, 18 miles northeast of Kadesh (Josephus, however, places it at Jebel Nebi Harim in the middle of Edom).

21:1-3 Some scholars consider this text a creation of the Yahwist, who somehow included both loss and victory at Arad in the same account. This section complements 14:40-45, in which the people of Arad defeated Israel. Here, since the fulfillment of the promise of the death of the first generation (14:26-35) was nearly complete, a victory against their former conquerors was fitting. God's vow in response to Israel's vow would give them confidence in preparation for their entry into the promised land.

21:4-9 The way of the Red Sea refers to the road from Kadesh-barnea toward Elath, here the means of avoiding the Edomites while accessing the Wadi Zered.

Reverence for serpent images abounds in the ancient literature and archaeological artifacts from the Bronze Ages; a bronze serpent was excavated in the late Bronze Age Hathor temple complex in southern Israel at Timna, some 15 miles north of Elath. In this setting God uses a common tradition of that era in a miraculous manner to bring healing to His repentant people. Commentators unwilling to recognize God's supernatural activity compare this account to ancient Near Eastern magical rites, attested from Assyria and Babylon, in which the deity was believed to act through magical implements to effect healing or deliverance. The Philistines' presentation of five golden mice and five gold disease symbols to appease the wrath of the God of the Israelites (1 Sm 6:1-12) is a parallel to such magical practices.

21:10-20 The Moabite boundaries, like those of the Edomites, were fluid during this period, but their territory was generally located in the arable zone between the Wadi Zered and the Arnon River. In times of expansion the Moabite borders extended north beyond Heshbon and to the northeast corner of the Dead Sea, along the southernmost line of the Jordan River. Critics ascribe this text to the proposed Yahwist-Elohist source, including the two ancient songs from the real source, the Book of the LORD's Wars. This ancient Hebrew source was lost in antiquity, but was one of many sources mentioned in the OT that were incorporated into the Hebrew Bible.

21:21-32 As with Edom, the Israelites' attempt at diplomacy to gain safe passage to the banks of the Jordan River through the Amorite kingdom of Sihon was met with forceful opposition. In the region north of the Arnon River and south of the Jabbok, Israel defeated Sihon and took possession of it. Critics had denied the authenticity of this account since nothing from earlier than the Iron I era was uncovered in the excavation of Tel Hesban. However, as with the city of Arad in southern Judah, city names were considered to designate the capitals of local regions, and several sites such as nearby Tel el-Umeiri and Tel Jalul contain Late Bronze materials that could be associated with the Amorite kingdom of Sihon.

21:27-31 The "Song of Heshbon" contains satirical lyrics about the Amorites' victory over Moab. The Israelites adapted it from the Amorites to express their claim to the land and the superiority of Israel's God to the Moabite patron deity Chemosh. Critics suggest the song was composed by Israel during the battles with Moab in the ninth century B.C. This view must discount or ignore the internal evidence of the song in reference to Sihon, the Amorite king.

21:32-35 To protect their northern flank, Israel moved North to defeat the city of Jazer and then Og of Bashan, as they took control of the territory in the Golan as far north as Mount Hermon (Dt 3:1-11). The Transjordan region was the first to be settled by the Israelites (Nm 32).

22:1–24:25 The Book of Balaam contains the story of the renowned pagan divination expert. Hired to pronounce a curse upon Israel, he pronounced a blessing instead upon God's chosen. As one seeking Israel's demise at the bidding of the Moabite king Balak, Balaam was the very antithesis of Moses; yet God used him in a way similar to Moses to pronounce the future blessing of the Lord upon His people. Moses is curiously absent from the story because of his sin of rebellion and irreverence at Meribah (20:2-13). God demonstrated that He can use whatever means necessary to bring blessing to His people. Even the person most adamantly opposed to His will can become an instrument of His purpose.

According to some scholars these chapters are a later insertion into the book of Nm by a seventh century B.C. Israelite editor. Supposedly this editor combined material from the Yahwist-Elohist traditions with the later eighth century B.C. stories of Balaam, integrating them into the story of Israel's wilderness sojourn in order to justify Israel's claim over the region. This approach ignores the story's structural integrity, evident in the threefold grouping of its elements (e.g., three times the donkey tries to avoid the Angel of the Lord). It also ignores the story's external context; it fits better into the Late Bronze Age period for this region than the late Iron II period. These will be detailed below.

Balaam is from the Mesopotamian town of Pethor of the land of Ammaw. Pethor is identified with Pitru, known from Assyrian records to be about 12 miles south of Carchemish. Scholars identify the land of Ammaw with a region mentioned in a fifteenth century B.C. inscription from Alalakh in northern Syria.

22:1 During the events narrated here, Israel is on the eastern side of the Jordan River opposite the soon-to-be-conquered city of Jericho, in a region generically referred to as the plains of Moab. Israel is a passive participant in the story of three chapters, in which the leading characters are Balak and Balaam. They are situated in the hills of Transjordan, at a distance overlooking the Israelite encampment from the southeast.

22:2-14 King Balak of Moab fears his overthrow by the mighty Israelites, who have just defeated his oppressors the Amorites. He sends a diplomatic envoy to Balaam ben Beor of Pethor in upper Mesopotamia to secure his prophetic services. While some critics would place this story hundreds of years later than its setting in the Pentateuch, textual evidence of prophetic activity in such cities as Mari and Babylon during the Late Bronze Age coincides with what is predicated of Balaam in these chapters. Placing or removing of curses, pronouncing blessings, and providing counsel to individuals were services they customarily offered. Their techniques included divination, incantation, animal sacrifice, and reading of natural omens. These prophets were known as "seers of the gods" and were said to be skilled at manipulating the deities to bring about the results desired by the person who hired them. Balak's men offer the standard fees to procure Balaam's services, but during the night the God of Israel counsels Balaam not to accept their offer.

22:15-21 A second attempt by Balak's emissaries meets with Balaam's guarded response—that he could do only what the Lord tells him. His words indicate that he would now become God's spokesman.

22:22-40 The story takes an ironic turn, as God is displeased with Balaam on the journey to Moab. Critics question why God would be angry with Balaam for listening to Him. This story type fits into the category of faith-challenges similar to Jacob's wrestling with the angel at Peniel on his return to the promised land (Gn 32:24-32) or Moses' encounter with the Lord upon his return to Egypt (Ex 4:24-26). These accounts are reminders that a holy God demands complete obedience of His servants; on the journey to Moab Balaam's female donkey was more sensitive to God's moving than was this renowned prophet.

Critics call the communication by the donkey fanciful story telling. But, as with Balaam himself, God will use whatever means necessary to accomplish His purpose. The donkey could see what the seer could not, and she brayed in such a manner as to convey to Balaam a distinct message of anger and resentment. She communicated in such a way that only her owner could understand the meaning of her intonation. Similarly, in Jn 12:28-30, what some thought was thunder or the voice of an angel was God speaking. When Jesus appeared to Saul on the road to Damascus, only Saul could understand his words, while those around him "stood speechless" (Ac 9:7), i.e. unable to make out the meaning of what they heard.

22:41–23:10 Elaborate ritual precedes the first oracle. The preference for performing seven rituals was widespread in the ancient Near East. The sacrificing of seven bulls and seven rams on seven altars parallels a well-known Babylonian text in which Ea, Shamash, and Marduk are worshiped with the ritual libation of the blood of seven sheep poured out on seven altars which are accompanied by seven incense censers containing cypress wood. Hoping for a favorable location for carrying out his hired duty, Balaam and Balak enacted the ritual on Bamoth-Baal, a worship center dedicated to the patron deity of several northwest Semitic peoples, such as those of Ugarit and Canaan.

Balaam becomes God's prophetic instrument in a manner similar to Moses and reveals to Balak the message of blessing upon Israel. God's hand is upon Israel and she cannot be cursed. To be numbered among her multitude is enviable even to Balaam (23:10).

23:11-13 Balak protests Balaam's proclamation, and in response the prophet reiterates the necessity of speaking exactly what God has spoken.

23:14-26 From another outpost overlooking the northeast corner of the Dead Sea and the plains of Moab where Israel is encamped, Balaam and Balak repeat the ritual sacrifices of the first encounter. In the oracle Balaam reminds Balak that God is unchangeable; if His intent is to bless Israel, His word will be accomplished without fail and without deviation. Nothing Balaam could muster via sorcery or incantation could bring violence or destruction upon God's people.

23:27–24:14 After two failed attempts, Balaam and Balak resort to a third center of religious rites, in the heights above Peor overlooking Jeshimon; from there they can now view the entire Israelite encampment. The sevenfold ritual is again repeated, without resort to divination as previously.

The Spirit of God descends upon Balaam; and in an ecstatic visionary encounter his eyes are fully opened to a vision of God Almighty, his ears are fully open to the revelation, and he falls upon his face in reverent servitude. The utterance forecasts the Lord's blessing upon the land with abundance of water rendering it highly productive, and with a powerful kingship surpassing the might of Agag the Amalekite. But the strength of Israel was in the strength of her God. God's blessing is so powerful and irrevocable that even the most sought-after divination expert of the day could not counter its effectiveness.

24:10-14 Balak is incensed and orders Balaam to return home unrewarded. Balaam retorts that he has only done what he stated was possible from the beginning, that he could only speak what God spoke. He would begin his return, but not before uttering several more oracles about the future of Israel and her enemies.

24:15-19 In a visionary encounter similar to that of the third oracle, Balaam utters predictive prophecy about the more distant future of Israel. The parallel references to "star" and "scepter" are symbols of a glorious and powerful kingship that would subdue Israel's enemies, typified as Moab and Edom. In the early Israelite monarchy David would fulfill this prophecy in defeating and subjugating both Moab and Edom (2 Sm 8:1-12). But when later Israelite kings failed to obey God's instructions, and oppression and exile followed, this passage would be interpreted messianically to refer to a coming glorious King. This is evident in the literature of the Dead Sea Scrolls. This community whose life was dedicated to preparing for the coming messianic kingdom included Nm 24:17 in a collection of verses they considered messianic. The model of the just and righteous king was brought to ultimate fulfillment in Jesus' establishment of the kingdom of God.

24:20-24 Three brief oracles concerning the destiny of other nations conclude the Book of Balaam. Critics ascribe these texts to late authors or sources, based upon their brevity and language difficulties. Yet their collective theme is the same: God will subdue all peoples who, like Moab, oppose His will and His people. The Amalekites would be subdued under Saul, Samuel, and David. The Kenites would be subdued by their neighbors, the Sinai tribe of Asshur (Gn 25:3,18—not to be confused with the later Assyrians). These Asshurites would be conquered in turn by the Kittim, a reference to Mediterranean peoples such as the Philistines. These, too, would see their demise. In the eschatological climax of history, all rebellious nations will bow to the judgment of God.

24:25 Balaam began his trek homeward, but as 31:8 suggests, he was killed in the Midianite campaign, having been instrumental in instigating the idolatrous enticement of Israel related in chapter 25.

25:1-18 Critics have arbitrarily divided the Baal-peor incident of idolatry into two sources: a Yahwist-Elohist source in verses 1-5, rooted in the ideology of defending the faith of Yahweh, and a Priestly source in verses 6-18, based on the involvement of the priest Phinehas, Aaron's grandson. This unnecessary fragmentation destroys the narrative and literary cohesiveness of the material, especially in verses 1-9. Note the following outline revealing its chiastic structure:

A. Setting of Immorality: Worship of Baal of Peor (vv. 1-3)
B. Yahweh Instructs Moses: Execute Offenders and Allay God's Wrath (v. 4)
C. Moses Instructs Leaders to Execute Offenders (v. 5)
C'. Phinehas Follows Moses' Instruction: Kills Offenders (vv. 6-8a)
B'. Yahweh's Wrath is Allayed: Plague Halted(v. 8b)
A'. Result of Immorality: 24,000 Die in Plague (v. 9)

Critics would suggest the punishment was too severe, but see comment at 15:32-36. The nation is about to be reconstituted in preparation for receiving its inheritance in the promised land.

26:1-65 Source critics tend to ascribe genealogical records and census totals to the conjectured Priestly source of the late pre-exilic (621–586 B.C.) or post-exilic period (post-538 B.C.), even though this census is taken to assess the capability of Israel's militia. Though the recitation of one's genealogy was a religious rite in the Ancient Near East, especially at the dedication of a firstborn son, the biblical genealogies preserve early, rather than late, records of how God has blessed His people throughout their generations. Eleazar now assists Moses in taking the military conscription census, as did his father Aaron in the first census (chap. 1). At the end of this census record the reader is reminded that God's judgment upon a rebellious people resulted in the death of all but two of the original conscripts, Caleb and Joshua (26:65).

26:4 Important, in the resumption of the theme of faithfulness in Nm, is the statement that the census was taken as the Lord had commanded when they were first preparing for the victory march to the promised land.

26:5-51 With a new generation about to inherit the Lord's gift of the land, the militia is delineated according to the tribal clans among which the land would be apportioned, according to the instructions in 26:52-56 (reiterated in 33:53-54). Clan names are more important at this stage of the Nm narrative than they would have been in the census of chap. 1, as those counted in that first census would have died in the wilderness and not be inheriting the land.

26:5-11 The enumeration inserts a note about the Reubenites, Dathan, and Abiram, who died in the Korah rebellion. Overall, the Reubenite fighters had decreased by 2770, from 46,500 to 43,730.

26:12-14 The census of the five Simeonite clans reflects the most significant decrease from the first census, a loss of 37,100—more than 60 percent fewer men of military age and capability.

26:15-18 The Gadite militia decreased by 12 percent; their seven clans would be granted a territorial inheritance in Gilead, this side (east) of the Jordan (32:1-38). (Technically, Canaan comprised both sides of the Jordan; the area to the east is known as Transjordan, while that to the west—usually known as Canaan proper, or Palestine—is sometimes called Cisjordan in scholarly literature.)

26:16-19 In the cohesive narrative structure of the book of Nm, these verses forecast the Midianite campaign of chapter 31 which would stand as a model of Israelite holy war in the conquest of Canaan.

26:19-22 The militia from the four Judahite clans experienced a slight increase of 900. The notation regarding the loss of Er and Onan because of their disobedience is a reminder of God's judgment upon the unfaithful.

26:23-25 The four clans of Issachar's militia increased a significant 18 percent during the wilderness sojourn.

26:26-27 Zebulun's three clans increased by about 5 percent from 57,400 to 60,500.

26:28-34 The dramatic increase of 63 percent in the militia of Manasseh and its six clans—from 32,200 to 52,700—would motivate their request for additional territory on the east side of the Jordan River. The Machirite clan followed the lead of the Reubenites and Gadites and requested territory in Gilead for their inheritance, and Moses granted their request once they had pledged their support of the Cisjordan tribes in the conquest of Canaan.

26:35-37 The three Ephraimite clans decreased by 8000 (20 percent) from the original census of 40,500.

26:38-41 The six Benjamite clans showed a significant increase of 28.8 percent from 35,400 to 45,600. Later, the Benjamites would become Israel's smallest tribal group, almost to the point of extinction (Jdg 20–21).

26:42-43 Only the Shuhamite clan of the tribe of Dan is noted, with a slight increase of 1700 (2.7 percent). The text mentions the "clans" (pl.) of the Shuhamites, but they were not listed as were the subclans of Manasseh and Asher. The size of the Danite militia is second only to that of Judah, yet the Danites could not control their territory because of the power of the Philistines; eventually they migrated northward (Jdg 18:1-31).

26:44-47 The Asherites grew significantly during the wilderness period, increasing their military capability by nearly 22 percent to 53,400. The allusion to Asher's daughter Serah remains a mystery, unless she received an allocation in the manner of Zelophehad's daughters. By the time of the Chronicler's work at the end of the kingdom period, the Asherites were calculated to be only 26,000, a number that may reflect upon the size of the army in the reign of King David.

26:48-50 The four clans of Naphtali experience a moderate loss of 15 percent to 45,400. The Greek Septuagint version records an even greater 44 percent loss, down to 30,300.

26:51 The overall figure of 601,730 was witness to the providence of God in preserving the population of the Israelites during the 40 year wilderness sojourn. Though a whole generation of Israelite military would die, except for Joshua and Caleb, God would raise up a complete new generation to inherit the land originally promised. On the size of the population and the view of critics, see the Introduction.

26:52-56 The instructions are to divide the land proportionally and also to distribute it by lot. Critics have viewed these as mutually exclusive and incompatible procedures, yet both are mentioned in several contexts. Numbers 33:53-54 emphasizes the proportional aspect, while Jos 15–19 focuses on the distribution by lot. Eleazar could have used lots, such as the Urim and Thummim, to determine the general region of the allocation and then Moses determined the actual extent of territory with the tribal proportions in view.

26:57-62 As in the first census, the Levites were not numbered among the militia, but were counted in the manner of 3:43 for the purpose of redeeming the firstborn sons of the twelve tribes, beginning at the age of one month (3:40-51). The Levites showed a net increase of about a thousand over the previous count. The genealogy of Aaron's sons always includes Nadab and Abihu, although they died as a result of profaning the sanctuary with an unholy fire offering. This serves as a reminder that God shows no partiality in judgment.

26:63-65 Assisting Moses in recording the census of Israel's army was Aaron's third son Eleazar, who became high priest following the death of his father (20:22-29). The record showed no survivors of the original 603,550 soldiers 20 years of age and older, except the two faithful spies Joshua and Caleb.

27:1-11 The census of the Manassite families (26:29-33) specifically mentions Zelophehad, who had no sons to inherit property. That note sets the stage for this section dealing with the issue of a daughter's right of inheritance, a theme that brackets the entire discussion of land inheritance (chaps. 27–36), returning in the final chapter of the book of Nm. The presentation of a case of women's property rights, an exceptional scenario in a patriarchal culture, would ensure that proper justice be meted out in all property inheritance cases in the land. The case did not originate in the post-exilic era, as some critics believe. The names of two of Zelophehad's daughters, Hoglah and Noah, are preserved as the names of districts or towns in the region of Samaria (within the territory of Manasseh) in the Samaria ostraca (inscribed pottery fragments). These come from the eighth century B.C., at least 200 years before the exile of Judah. Commentators who date this material in the time of Ezra associate this case with the potential appropriation of property gained through marriage with foreign women. The legal setting in Ezra, however, differs from the present context and applies only to the geographical setting of post-exilic Judah, not the territory of Manasseh. The decision in the case of Zelophehad's daughters, set forth in the days of Moses in the second millennium B.C. and fulfilled in the land distribution under Joshua (Jos 17:3-6) would still be in force more than 500 years later.

27:12-23 Because the high priest Eleazar is involved in the ceremony transferring leadership from Moses to Joshua, some scholars assign it to the conjectured Priestly source. They assign the parallel passage in Dt 31:1-8,14-29 to the hypothetical Yahwist-Elohist source. But the two passages complement one another. Numbers highlights the formal transfer of leadership, which in the ancient Near Eastern cultural setting would always be overseen by a priest. Religious oversight of political events reflects practices as early as the third millennium B.C. just as it does those of the late first millennium B.C. Deuteronomy emphasizes the commissioning of Joshua to lead a people with a history of rebellion against God; in that context Moses challenges him to keep the commands of the Lord faithfully, and to lead the people with courage and strength from the Lord. Moses follows the Lord's instruction (Nm 27:22-23) and commissions Joshua publicly through the laying on of hands in the solemn assembly.

28:1–29:39 Two chapters are devoted to the prescribed sacrificial elements for the daily, weekly, monthly, and annual memorial and festival offerings. The order closely follows the sequence in Lv 23, which stresses the participation of the worshipers and the offerings particular to a given holy day. Thus Nm supplements material presented in Ex 12:1–13:10; 23:12-19; Lv 23; and Dt 16:1-17. Source critics ascribe Nm 28–29 to a supposed post-exilic Priestly compiler, declining to recognize it as a record of early Israelite practice from the time of Moses. In the larger context of the book of Nm this section complements 15:1-21, which highlights the grace of God in His future blessing of Israel in the land they have just rejected (chaps. 13–14). God promised He would bless the people abundantly so that they might present to Him their offerings from flocks and fields. Now the Lord delineates examples of those offerings in the sacrificial system's memorial calendar.

28:1-8 Daily offerings began early in the day with a whole burnt offering and concluded with the same at twilight. This passage complements the instructions for daily offerings in Ex 29:38-45. The high priest represented the community in the substitutionary identification ritual, placing his hand on the head of the lamb. After slaughtering the animal he extracted its blood, which he poured out to the Lord on the sides of the altar. Then the priest burned the offering completely on the altar, as a consecration ritual on behalf of the entire community (Lv 1:10-13). The animal offering was supplemented by the offering of grain with oil and the libation, or offering of strong drink (shekar, "fermented beverage"). Only the highest quality, unblemished animals could be presented to the Lord.

28:9-10 The daily burnt offerings of lamb, grain, and liquid libation were doubled on the Sabbath.

28:11-15 On the first day of the month, the new moon, additional burnt offerings of consecration included two young bulls (for the priests), one ram (for the leaders), seven male lambs (for the people), and their proportional grain-oil and libation offerings, plus a male goat for a sin offering.

28:16-25 The essential Passover elements, according to Ex 12:8, were the Passover lamb, unleavened bread and bitter herbs. Here several elements are added to the celebration: (1) Sabbath designation (hence no work) for the first and final days of the Festival of Unleavened Bread, with a congregational assembly at the sanctuary; (2) additional sacrifices equivalent to those offered on the new moon (two bulls, one ram, seven lambs, plus grain and libation offerings).

28:26-31 The first day of the Festival of Weeks (Shavuoth, Pentecost) is deemed a Sabbath, with burnt and sin offerings essentially the same as the new moon sacrifices. The ritual practices for the day included the firstfruit offering of the grain harvest. These offerings were in addition to the prescribed offering of two loaves of leavened bread (Lv 23:17), given in thanksgiving for the abundance of God's blessing.

29:1-6 The seventh month was the commencement of the annual ritual calendar. It began with the holy assembly on the day of jubilation, also referred to as the "day of trumpet blasts" and later as "New Year's Day" (rosh hashanah, lit. "head of the year"). Since this day also commemorates the new moon, the normal sacrifices of the day are doubled and offered in addition to the two daily burnt offerings.

29:7-11 These instructions call for a day of "sacred assembly," self-denial, and Sabbath work restriction. The directives correspond to the Day of Atonement prescribed in Lv 16:1-34, though the day is not named here and the instructions of Lv do not mention the assembly. Some critics suggest an alternate Priestly source for Lv 16. However, there the focus is upon the unique rituals for the purification of the holy place, and upon the Azazel (scapegoat) that symbolically carries the sins of the people from the camp into the wilderness. Verse 11 highlights two sin offerings. One parallels the sin offering at the new moon festival; the other is sacrificed on behalf of the people, and its blood is then used to purify the holy place (Lv 16:15-20). The directives in Nm complement those of Lv.

29:12-39 The longest section of these two chapters is devoted to the delineation of the daily offerings of the Festival of Booths (Sukkoth). On successive days of other pilgrimage assemblies the numbers of sacrifices are the same, but in the fall festival of ingathering (Ex 23:16) the number of bulls sacrificed begins with 13, with one fewer per day being offered during the week-long celebration. Seven bulls are offered on the seventh day, and a single bull on the appended eighth day. On each of those days the bull offerings are accompanied by equal numbers of rams (2), male lambs (14), and the usual amount of grain-oil and libation offerings prescribed for the new moon celebration. The first day of the festival (fifteenth of Tishri) and the appended eighth day are deemed Sabbaths for sacred assembly and cessation from work.

29:39 In summary, the offerings outlined in these two chapters were to be presented to the Lord at their appointed times, in addition to those brought by individuals and groups of Israelites in the ordinary course of life. Both Ex and Lv provide instructions for these voluntary and thanksgiving offerings, plus those offered in connection with vows and oaths.

29:40 This verse functions as a hinge (colophon) transitioning between the material in the two chapters it connects. The concluding statement that Moses did as the Lord commanded in instructing the Israelites regarding the festival offerings echoes the theme of faithfulness that is prevalent in chaps. 1–10, 15, 19, and throughout.

30:1-16 This section sets out the legal force of vows and oaths, for both men and women. The force of a younger or married woman's vow is limited only if her male guardian—either her father or her husband—should actively nullify the vow. If the man is passive or assenting, the vow of the woman has the same legal force as that of a man. The vow of a widow or a divorced woman is also binding. The terminology of "binding" the making of an oath or vow often meant to endorse it in written form. In the context of chaps. 26–36, this issue may have been of particular concern with respect to women's property rights, as in the case of Zelophehad's daughters (27:1-11; 36:1-12). This statute would also apply to a woman taking a Nazirite vow (see note on 6:1-2).

31:1-54 Following Israel's attack on the Midianites, Phinehas and his father, the high priest Eleazar, were involved in receiving the spoils of the war and the purification of the returning fighters. For this reason, source critics unnecessarily ascribe this section to the alleged Priestly source. The separation of priestly activity in any event from other forms of leadership—here Moses, Joshua and the leaders of Israel—is an artificial division of society not characteristic of the ancient Near Eastern world. Religion was an integral part of every aspect of life, from warfare to economics to family life. Separation of the religious and the political (as in "church and state") is a modern development. The book of Nm stresses the integral role of the priests and Levites in spheres of activity well beyond their divine service. This section sets out the model for Israelite holy war, in preparation for the conquest of Canaan. With this chapter begins the final cycle of Nm.

31:1-2 The Midianites had instigated the idolatrous activity at Baal-peor (chap. 25) with the council of Balaam who was killed in the campaign. Here, the Lord gives instruction for the subjugation of the Midianites. The sequel repeats the model "refrain" signifying Israelite faithfulness to the Lord, in the fourfold occurrence of the phrase "they did as the Lord commanded" (vv. 7,31,41,47).

31:3-5 Each of the seven cycles of material in the book of Nm begins with a reference to the unity of the 12 tribes (or disunity, in the case of the Korah rebellion, chaps. 16–17). Here a thousand fighting men from each of the tribes are conscripted for battle.

31:6-12 The model for holy war has the priest Phinehas accompanying the army of 12,000 into battle, taking the sanctuary vessels for purification rites and the trumpets for sounding the battle alerts (10:1-10). Centuries later, the Dead Sea scroll document, styled "The War of the Sons of Light and the Sons of Darkness," replicates this model. The passage presents a terse summary of the battle in typical OT narrative fashion with expansion of detail regarding the proper disposition of spoils of war.

The section emphasizes how the purity of the congregation is maintained and how the goods are distributed proportionately among the 12 tribes and the priests and Levites.

31:8 The prophetic soothsayer Balaam had been executed together with certain Midianite kings (presumably of different clans from that of Moses' in-laws Jethro and Hobab). Though God had used the pagan prophet significantly as his spokesman to bless Israel, Balaam continued his original role after the events of chaps. 22–24. Intending to return home to upper Mesopotamia (24:25), he had counseled the Moabites and Midianites to lead Israel into idolatry at Baal-peor; thus he was subject to the judgment of holy war. Note also that the Midianite king Zur was the father of Cozbi, the woman executed by Phinehas along with her paramour Zimri ben Salu (25:14-18).

31:13-24 The purpose of holy war was the eradication of impure elements, whether persons or property, from a given geographic region. This passage harks back to the idolatrous activity of Baal-peor (chap. 25), and sets the stage for the instructions in 33:50-56 for occupying the promised land by dispossessing the Canaanites and eradicating the marks of their false religion. Hence it is integral to the main theme developed in the book of Nm: the dangers of rebellion and idolatry. Critics who suggest this holy-war mentality was a crude feature of ancient cultures and not in keeping with God's purpose for humanity have ignored the fact that these instructions were applicable at this critical point in the formation of the theocracy of Israel. Their very survival as the holy community of faith was at stake. Chapter 31 is consistent with the directives given in other pentateuchal passages, including Dt 7:5,24-25; 12:1-12; and 20:16-20 (purging of idolatry) and Dt 21:10-14 (female captives). However, the law of Christ, the law of love, supersedes the instructions for Israel in the era of Moses and Joshua. While God still abhors every kind of evil in society, and the people of God must diligently oppose its every expression, "holy war" of the kind recorded here is not the proper response.

31:48-53 The gifts of gold offered for the victory over the Midianites far exceeded the minimum of half a shekel per person, indicating that the leaders gave sacrificially in the spirit of thanksgiving to God.

32:1-42 Critics ascribe this chapter to the hypothetical Yahwist-Elohist history upon which the Priestly editor drew in fashioning the narrative. The conjecture is superfluous, for the narrative is an integral part of the development of the theme of the land in chapters 26–36—which source critics tend to assign to the Priestly compilers. The chapter poses several questions about the legitimacy of the Transjordan tribal territories, as the area is outside the boundaries delineated in 34:1-15.

32:1-5 The Reubenites and Gadites bring their request for territorial allocation east of the Jordan River according to protocol, presenting themselves as servants seeking favor before Moses, Eleazar, and the princes of the congregation (cp. 31:13). This chapter has all the hallmarks of ancient treaty negotiations, including a ratification of the stipulations before the high priest (vv. 28-32). The tribes claimed that, since the Lord had given victory over the Amorites and others and the land offered ample pasturage for their animals, they could be allowed to take full possession of it for themselves. Narrative tension is created when they add the stipulation that they not be required to cross the Jordan—they did not want to go to war.

32:6-15 Moses confronts their true reason for wanting to settle the Transjordan highlands: their reluctance to go to war, which is tantamount to rebellion against God's plan for the nation. The promised land was across the Jordan to the west, not on its eastern side. Moses saw that the possible outcome had all the hallmarks of the great rebellion in which Israel rejected God's gift of the land. These hallmarks were disunity among the tribes, discouragement to the others, and the potential destruction of the people in another wilderness experience.

32:16-19 The Reubenites and Gadites pledge their full support for the conquest of the land west of the Jordan, provided that Moses will let them have their inheritance in Transjordan and allow them to leave their families in the safekeeping of the local towns. The issue of disunity remains in their words, "we will not have an inheritance with them across the Jordan."

32:20-24 Moses consents to their request, citing the consequences should these tribes fail to honor their commitment. If they fully support the conquest of the promised land through its completion, they would have their requested inheritance in Transjordan. But failure to do what they had promised would constitute sin against God, leading to the judgment noted in vv. 13-15.

32:25-27 The Gadites and Reubenites ratified the agreement.

32:28-30 Some interpreters call this a Priestly insertion, since the context mentions Eleazar. But all treaty arrangements in the ancient Near East were ratified in the context of a religious assembly and ratified in rituals overseen by priests. The pledge of the Gadites and Reubenites in vv. 31-32 probably echoes their oath of obedience in that covenant ratification ceremony.

32:33-38 Moses' official grant outlines, in some detail, the lands and towns assigned the Gadites and Reubenites. This region was that formerly controlled by Sihon and the Amorites, defeated by the Israelites in 21:21-32.

32:39-42 The Machirite clan of the tribe of Manasseh apparently joined in the quest for territory in Transjordan, based upon their conquest of it. The language here closely parallels that of 21:32 ("captured . . . and drove out"), the model terminology for the conquest of the land. The Israelites, as directed in 33:50-56, were to take control of the given territory and drive out the inhabitants; further, they were to destroy all centers of the local false religion lest they remain to tempt the Israelites to the idolatry that could lead to their own destruction.

33:1-2 This chapter explicitly attests to its Mosaic authorship; Moses wrote down the starting point for each stage of the journey from Egypt to the plains of Moab (cp. pentateuchal references to written documents in Ex 24:12; 32:15; Dt 4:13; 5:22; 9:10; 10:2-4; 17:18; 27:3 and elsewhere).

33:3-49 The journey stages are listed in a literary composition similar in form to records of victory marches by Egyptian rulers (e.g. Thutmose III, Seti I, Ramses II). Against the view of source critics who claim this text combines four or more strands, the text constitutes a cohesive literary composition organized into six stages of seven locations each. In typical Hebrew style, the account highlights historic events such as the exodus. This text was meant to be recited in the Israelite assembly, as it recalled the stages through which God led the people from Egyptian oppression to the threshold of conquest in Canaan. The list is not, nor does it purport to be, an exhaustive one; it is, rather, a styled literary composition from the hand of Moses. It fails to mention some prominent places, including Mount Sinai, yet it refers to others not cited elsewhere in Nm or in Ex (e.g., Nm 33:18-25). The unwritten seventh cycleof the journey lay ahead in the occupation of Canaan, for which vv. 50-56 establish the challenge.

33:50-56 Commentators who ascribe this section to a Priestly editor, who allegedly combined Deuteronomic material with the Yahwist-Elohist traditions and appended vv. 50-51, have ignored the unified literary structure of this section. This passage sets forth the challenge to the Israelite community to claim its inheritance in the land. Faithfulness to the Lord's intention involves a threefold process: drive out (dispossess) the sinful Canaanites, destroy their centers of idolatry, and divide the land proportionately among their ancestral tribes.

33:55-56 These words evidence the literary and thematic cohesiveness of the Pentateuch. They echo, in summary, the message of judgment in Lv 26:14-33 and Dt 28:45-68. How the story of the victory march from Egypt to the promised land would be completed was in the hands of the people.

34:1-15 After reciting Israel's progress from Egypt to the doorstep of the promised land (chap. 33), Moses receives from the Lord the specific territorial boundaries within the land. The section concludes with the reminder about the territorial inheritance of Gad, Reuben and half-tribe of Manasseh on the east side of the Jordan, notably a region outside the boundaries delineated in 34:3-12.

34:3-12 The borders represent the limits of the land of Canaan during the Late Bronze Age (1550–1200 B.C.), and were the ideal for the national boundaries. Critics suggest these borders represent a later extent of Israel's dominion. Even under David and Solomon, however, these limits were not fully realized, even though such regions as Tyre and Sidon (in Lebanon) were allied with Israel through trade agreements. After the tenth century B.C. the extent of Israelite territory never approached the ideal.

34:16-29 It is typical of source critics to assign lists of names to the conjectured Priestly source from the post-exilic period (538–400 B.C.). In this case, the claim is that the names are based on the later book of Joshua, supposedly compiled at the end of the period of the Israelite kingdoms. Yet most of these names, with the exception of Caleb, never reappear in later Israelite history; they reflect archaic forms from the Late Bronze Age rather than Persian period.

35:1-8 The Levites do not receive a distinct territorial allocation like the other 12 tribes. They are to be dispersed in cities throughout the land to carry out their responsibilities on behalf of the entire nation of Israel. In Jos 21, these 42 cities are listed, with six additional cities of refuge. This allocation provided the Levites with pasturage for the flocks and herds they acquired through the tithes and offerings of local Israelites (Nm 18:21-32). They, and the priests, were available in all parts of the land to teach the laws of God to the people, most of whom did not read (Lv 10:11).

35:4-5 Commentators have noted the seeming incongruity of the dimensions given here, which would require the cities to be of minimal size to meet both distance parameters. The figures delineate a territory extending out 1000 cubits (1500 feet) from the city walls, with a total of 2000 cubits (3000 feet) on a side. Most walled cities were 3–5 acres in size, so the figure of 2000 cubits per side does not allow a distance of 1500 feet from any side of the city. Several writers have suggested that the 3000-foot dimension represents the view from outside the city, making the walled city the epicenter of a 3000 foot square Levitical territory. Others suggest the outer distances are meant to be taken as 3000 feet plus the city area.

35:9-34 The promised land was to be a holy land, free from the heinous impurity of shed blood. The six cities of refuge (Jos 20) established a place where someone who committed accidental manslaughter (unintentional, as in Nm 15:22-29) could find protection from a vengeful member of the slain person's family. In another sense, the city of refuge was a place of banishment for the offender. City elders assessed each case individually to determine the nature and cause of the victim's death. The killer's guilt was atoned only through the death of the high priest, so the killer was obliged to remain inside the city until the high priest died. The law did not apply to willful murders; if the local city congregation determined that the death of the victim had been the result of premeditation or intent to harm, they were to execute the slayer.

35:15 As in other pentateuchal legislation, the same principles of law applied to Israelite and non-Israelites in the land (cp. 9:14; 15:14-16; Ex 12:49).

35:30-31 The death penalty could not be carried out on the basis of a single witness, but only on the basis of multiple attestations. If the case was determined to be murder, the city of refuge offered no protection for the perpetrator.

35:32-24 The promised land was the dual inheritance of the Lord and the people, and thus the Lord could not tolerate pollution from bloodshed. His presence among the people demanded justice. In the case of murder, the purification was the removal of the offending agent from the land.

36:1-2 This section supplies further clarification of property inheritance issues in the case of Zelophehad's daughters (27:1-11), whose husbands had been part of the tribe of Manasseh.

36:3-4 The Machirites feared that the laws for the Year of Jubilee (Lv 25:13-55) might be applied in such a way that property of the tribe of Manasseh would fall to another tribe if Zelophehad's daughters married men from other tribes. Territorial integrity was uppermost in their concern at this pivotal point, when Israel would soon be distributing property proportionately (Nm 26:52-56; 33:54; 34:16).

36:5-12 Some modern critics contend that the resultant law restricted the rights of women. In actuality it provided a balance between two areas of concern: the integrity of tribal territory and a woman's right of marriage. Women could marry whom they pleased and their property rights would be retained, as were the men's, within the boundaries of the tribe so long as they married within the clans of the tribe. They could marry outside the tribe, but in that case they would forfeit their property rights. The conclusion upholds Zelophehad's daughters as examples of faithfulness to the Lord's instruction; when they married they "did as the LORD commanded."

36:13 The concluding verse of this book summarizes its content, and in particular, the last section in which the geographical setting is the plains of Moab on the east side of the Jordan River, opposite Jericho (26:3; 33:50; 35:1; cp.22:1). Moses' role as God's appointed prophetic spokesman is reiterated in the use of the phrase "through Moses" (lit. "which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses to the children of Israel"). There, on the threshold of the promised land, the nation was positioned both geographically and spiritually—they had recently done as the Lord commanded—to claim their divine inheritance.

Deuteronomy Articles

Has Christianity Had a Bad Influence on History?

by Alvin J. Schmidt

No, Christianity hasn't had a bad influence on history. Christian beliefs and practices—that is, those consistent with Christ's teachings—have produced countless positive by-products in history. This is true even though evil actions of erring Christians, especially prominent leaders (some probably not even truly Christian), are regularly recorded in history books, leading many to believe that Christianity's influence has been mostly harmful. Commonly cited examples are the Crusades, the Spanish Inquisition, the medieval witch persecutions, the executions of Hus and Savonarola, and the Roman Catholic Church's silencing of Galileo. These acts were sinful and morally wrong—highly inconsistent with Christ's teachings.

Christianity has had numerous positive influences on history. Largely unknown in today's world, even to countless Christians, it elevated the sanctity of human life. In ancient Rome and other pagan societies, human life was cheap and expendable. The early Christians, motivated by the gospel, opposed abortion, infanticide, child abandonment, suicide, and gladiatorial contests—all legal and widely practiced in the Roman era. Fifty years after the legalization of Christianity in A.D. 313, the now-Christianized Roman emperors outlawed these inhuman acts. Infanticide and child abandonment are still illegal in most Western countries, and while abortion has unfortunately made a comeback in the West, nobody has yet suggested that gladiators be brought back for popular entertainment.

In the fourth century Christianity introduced hospitals to the world. Greeks and Romans had no such institutions of compassion. Christians, moved by Christ's words "I was sick and you looked after me" (Mt 25:36), built hospices as early as 325 and hospitals in 369—first in the East and then in the West. The names of numerous hospitals still reflect this Christian origin: St. John's Hospital, Lutheran Hospital, Presbyterian Hospital, etc.

Before Christianity appeared, women were practically slaves, having little or no freedom and dignity. Not so in the Christian church! Women were baptized and instructed along with men and took communion along with men. Adultery was no longer defined in terms of a woman's marital status; a married man having sex with a single woman now was also guilty of adultery. Christianity permitted a woman to reject a male suitor and inherit property. She no longer had to worship her husband's pagan gods.

Here are other positive effects:

• Countries where Christianity has had the greatest presence were the first to abolish slavery. By contrast, slavery is still present in many Islamic countries.

• The principle that no man is above the law originated with St. Ambrose. In 390 he demanded that Emperor Theodosius repent for wantonly killing 7,000 people. He told the emperor he wasn't above the law. In 1215 the Magna Carta expanded this Christian concept of liberty and justice.

• Christian teachings resulted in economic, political, and religious freedom.

• Universities grew out of the church's medieval monasteries.

• Christian theology, not pagan pantheism, motivated early scientists to explore God's natural world.

• Christianity inspired the invention of the musical scale and great musical compositions.

Finally, Christianity's influence is present in many of the West's social institutions and in its nomenclature, literature, and education, shaping much in the daily lives of people—both Christians and non-Christians.

Does the Bible Affirm That Animals Have Rights?

by Steve W. Lemke

No, Scripture never specifically grants rights to animals. The Bible doesn't assume that animals have intrinsic rights, even the right to life. Unlike humans, animals were not created in the image of God. God made humans the pinnacle of His creation, with inherent worth and greater capacities than animals. He appointed humans to subdue and rule over all animals (Gn 1:20-31). God specifically approved the use of animals as food for humans (Gn 9:1-3; Lv 11:2-3). Since animals have lesser value than humans, they shouldn't be given the rights accorded to human beings, and human life should never be sacrificed to save animal life.

Yes, the Bible affirms that humans have a moral obligation to treat animals humanely. Although animals are clearly not equal in worth to human beings, they have value since God created them as "good" (Gn 1:20-25). So, as part of our God-given stewardship, we shouldn't abuse or pointlessly harm animals. Scripture uses the same word to describe the animating force that God gave animals (nephesh, Gn 1:20-21,24,30) as it does in describing how He breathed a living soul into persons (Gn 2:7). Unlike animals, human souls have unique capacities: self-awareness, abstract reasoning, an orientation toward the future, freedom, moral responsibility, and the capacity to have a relationship with God. Animal sacrifices presuppose that animals have value (Lv 4-6; Heb 9:11-28). Animal pain is a matter for moral concern because God cares for animals (Gn 7:2-4; Ps 104:10-30; 147:7-9; 148:7-10; Mt 6:26; Lk 12:6-7,24).

Although God gave people permission to eat animals after the flood (Gn 9:1-3), this may have been a concession to human sinfulness. Vegetarianism practiced in the Garden of Eden (Gn 1:29-30; 2:16), and the prophecy that natural predators will live together peacefully in the future (Is 11:6-8), suggest that the eating of animal flesh isn't God's ideal.

Scripture calls upon humans to treat animals humanely. The Mosaic law forbade the heartless treatment of birds, promising long life to those who don't abuse animals (Dt 22:6-7). Other regulations were given for the welfare of farm animals (Dt 22:1-4,10; 25:4). Humane treatment of animals is a characteristic of godly living (Pr 12:10).

Introduction to Deuteronomy

AUTHOR

Deuteronomy is the last of the five books of the Pentateuch, a collection known to Jewish tradition as the Torah. Until the rise of eighteenth-century rationalism (or the Enlightenment), the Pentateuch was ascribed to Moses and thus to a period long in advance of the Hebrew monarchy. Over the past 250 years, though, critical scholarship has concluded that Moses had little or nothing to do with the composition of the Pentateuch and that in fact it is a compilation of four major source documents dating from the tenth to the fifth centuries B.C. This is known as the "Documentary" or "JEDP" hypothesis. (See the article titled "Who Wrote the Pentateuch and When Was It Written?" p. 158.) Central to this hypothesis is the assumption that Deuteronomy (a source labeled D) was the document discovered in the course of Josiah's reformation in 622 B.C. (see 2 Kg 22:8), that it had been written only shortly before its discovery, and that it either presupposed certain other sources (J = Yahwist, and E = Elohist) or anticipated the last of the four (P = Priestly).

Ancient Jewish and Christian tradition is unanimous in attributing Deuteronomy to Moses. The book itself makes this claim (Dt 1:1; 4:44; 31:9,22; 33:4), as does the rest of the Old Testament (Jos 1:7,13; 8:31-32; Jdg 3:4; 1 Kg 2:3; 8:56; 2 Kg 14:6; 23:25; 1 Ch 15:15; 22:13; 2 Ch 25:4; Ezr 3:2; 6:18; Neh 1:7; Dn 9:11,13; Mal 4:4), the New Testament (Mt 19:7-8; Mk 7:10; Lk 2:22; 16:29; Jn 1:17; 7:19; Ac 13:39; 15:1,5;
1 Co 9:9; 2 Co 3:15; Heb 10:28), and writings of the Jewish rabbis (e.g., Baba Bathra 14b-15a). Careful study of the book against the historical, geographical, and cultural background of the Late Bronze Age (c. 1550–1200 B.C.) shows it to be very much at home in that context. On the other hand, there is little in it that fits comfortably in a seventh century B.C. or later period. In short, there are no objective reasons to deny Moses' authorship. Only the need to serve a hypothesis that itself is without either internal or external proof can justify claims of non-Mosaic authorship.

BACKGROUND AND SETTING

The Old Testament itself provides precise information as to the composition of Deuteronomy provided one accepts two major premises: (1) Mosaic authorship, and (2) an "early" exodus date. The former has just been addressed. As to the latter, the only record of the exodus is in the Bible, and there are only two texts that address its dating. The first is 1 Kings 6:1, which states that the exodus occurred 480 years before Solomon laid the foundations of the temple. That took place in 966 B.C., a date hardly in dispute. The exodus, then, occurred in 1446. The other text is Judges 11:26, where Jephthah, a judge whose tenure commenced around 1100 B.C., states that the Israelites had lived in the Transjordan for three hundred years. This dates their settlement to 1400, or about 40 years after the exodus. This is in line with the fact that Israel wandered in the Sinai for 40 years after the exodus (Dt 1:3; 29:5). A date of around 1400 B.C. for the writing of Deuteronomy is clearly compatible with all this evidence.

The setting of Deuteronomy is the countryside east of the Jordan River opposite Jericho. The riverbank there ascends gradually from the river to the lower foothills and then to the high plateau of the Transjordan. From the Dead Sea to the north is an expanse of 20 miles or more before the river becomes constricted between steep banks on either side. Within the 100 square miles formed by these natural boundaries, the tribes of Israel camped prior to their crossing the Jordan into Canaan. During those months Moses addressed the people, probably on numerous occasions. Those addresses, together with other oral and written materials, came to constitute the Pentateuch. How or in what order this was done cannot be known, but the fact that Deuteronomy records Moses' death suggests that it was the last part of the Pentateuch to be written (Dt 34:1-8; cp. 31:16; 32:48-52; 33:1).

The book consists of several kinds of literary genres and a great number of individual sections. No doubt at one time these sections existed independently of each other and were at last edited together into the present composition. This in no way undermines against Moses as author, for it could well have been he who was responsible not only for the original parts but also for their assembly into the form as we know it. That is, he was both author and editor.

THE RELIABILITY OF DEUTERONOMY

In addition to issues of authorship, dating, and place of origin for this biblical book, other issues command the attention of scholars. The first of these has to do with the form and structure of Deuteronomy as a covenant document.

Since the 1950s, comparisons have been noted between Deuteronomy and certain treaty texts from ancient Hittite archives. Though they share virtually nothing in terms of content, the structures of these respective documents are remarkably similar. Since the Hittite examples originated in the Late Bronze Age (c. 1400–1200 B.C.), Deuteronomy seems also to have come from this period.

However, other treaty texts have also surfaced, especially from seventh-century B.C. Assyria. These, too, resemble Deuteronomy in form and style except in two major respects. (1) They for the most part lack historical prologues. (2) They contain no blessing section. Both of these sections occur in Deuteronomy as well as in the Hittite models, thus providing further evidence for Deuteronomy's antiquity. The burden of proof for a seventh century B.C. Deuteronomy clearly rests on the adherents to that view and not on those who accept the traditional dating.

The only other important issue of apologetics relative to the book is the alleged anachronisms. For example, in Deuteronomy 1:1 Moses and Israel are said to be "across the Jordan" (be'er hayyarden). At first glance this might seem to suggest that the narrator was in Canaan proper, to the west, and was looking toward the Transjordan. This would appear to rule out Moses as the author. However, to this day Transjordan is a term used to describe the land east of the Jordan, even by people who live there.

Another example occurs in Deuteronomy 2:12. There the author says that the descendants of Esau had destroyed the native Horites and settled in their land just as the Israelites had dealt with the peoples they dispossessed. The vantage point seems to be post-conquest and thus long after Moses' time. A careful reading of the narratives of the Transjordanian conquests puts an end to this argument, however, for Moses and his armies did indeed defeat and dispossess the Amorite kings Sihon and Og before this statement was recorded (Dt 2:26–3:11).

The most famous case is the account of Moses' death at the end of the book (Dt 34:5-12). How could Moses write a text that describes the details of his own death and burial? It is possible, of course, that he was prophetically inspired to do so, but ancient Jewish tradition (Baba Bathra 14b-15a) and common sense suggest a better alternative—that the book was completed by someone else, most likely Joshua. This slight concession in no way undermines the position that Deuteronomy as a whole is Mosaic and from the late fifteenth century B.C.

Deuteronomy Study Notes

1:1 The location of Moses "beyond the Jordan" does not mean the author's viewpoint was from the region west of the Jordan (Canaan proper, known in scholarship as Cisjordan), and that hence he was not Moses. The term "beyond the Jordan" is equivalent to Transjordan, a name still in use (see Introduction).

1:5 Deuteronomy is in the form of a sermon by Moses, a sort of "farewell address," in which he undertakes to "explain this law" to the people who, under different leadership, will be occupying the promised land. It harks back, of course, to the laws given at Sinai a generation earlier, but differs from them in that—as might be expected when "preaching" the law—Moses frequently inserts a reminder of the proper motivation for keeping the Lord's instructions.

1:6 Horeb, the name of the sacred mountain in Dt, is an alternative designation of Sinai. Moses uses the name Horeb throughout Dt (except in 33:2) and both Sinai and Horeb elsewhere (Ex 16:1; 19:1,11,18,20; and 3:1; 17:6; 33:6 respectively).

1:10 "As the stars of the sky" is not to be taken literally but as hyperbole, an exaggerated comparison. This literary device emphasizes the amazing blessing of God upon the people of Israel. It anticipates the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham (Gn 15:5; 22:17).

1:28 The description of the Amorites' cities as "fortified to the heavens" is a hyperbole expressing the fear of the ten spies, intended to dissuade Moses from attempting to attack them.

1:30 The idea of God's fighting for Israel has to be understood against the backdrop of the conquest of Canaan, in which the Lord would annihilate the hopelessly unrepentant and irredeemable Canaanite nations so as to open the land to Israelite possession. This language of "holy war" does not contradict the idea that God loves all peoples and desires all to repent. Even the NT speaks of Jesus, God's love incarnate, coming in bloody wrath and judgment in the last days (Rv 19:11-16). God's love and grace never compromise His holiness and justice.

1:37 God's severe treatment of Moses for what seems a minor incident (cp. Nm 20:12) does not expose Him to a charge of unfairness or of capricious administration of His judgment. Moses was the most privileged of men. As such he bore the greatest responsibility for his sin of failed leadership. His punishment was in direct proportion to what God had rightfully expected of him.

2:12 The land the Lord had already given Israel was not the land of Canaan west of the Jordan, but the land of the Amorite kings whom Moses had already defeated and whose territories Israel already occupied (2:26–3:10; cp. Nm 21:21-35). This historical note is not, therefore, from a later hand; it was well within Moses' experience and ability to record.

2:21 God's destruction of various peoples was neither capricious nor without purpose. As an all-knowing One, He knew the various Canaanite and other neighboring peoples to be beyond repentance (2:30).

2:30 King Sihon's hardness of heart (or spirit) was indeed brought about by the Lord, but it must be understood as a divine result of a process already begun by Sihon himself. The pharaoh of the exodus illustrates the same process. He first hardened himself against the Lord (Ex 7:13,22; 8:15,19) then, when all hope of changing his mind was gone, the Lord hardened him for His own purpose (Ex 9:12; 10:1,27; cp. Rm 1:24,26,28).

2:34 The complete destruction of men, women, and children underscores the idea of corporate solidarity. All members of a community, or even of a family, are blessed or judged together (Nm 16:1-35; Jos 7:22-26). Yet, within that framework, each individual is ultimately responsible to God for his or her own destiny (Jr 31:29-30; Ezk 18:2,4). Moreover, were these nations to survive, Israel would be drawn away into idolatry (Dt 7:1-4).

3:11 Og's large bed (approximately 14 feet by 6 feet) was probably a sarcophagus, the outer casing of a casket. Its extra-large size was necessary to accommodate him as a gigantic man but it also testified to his power and greatness as a king.

3:14 The phrase "as it is today" suggests a time somewhat later than the setting of the narrative and therefore an author or editor besides Moses. There are a number of such instances in Dt (34:6) but taken altogether they hardly undermine the case for Mosaic authorship of the book as a whole. Such incidental explanations are the product of divine inspiration.

3:26 The Lord's refusal to permit Moses to enter the land of promise was not pettiness on His part nor had Moses committed an unpardonable sin. Rather, his punishment was severe because he had dishonored the Lord in the presence of the people (Nm 20:12). The principle is that to whom much is given, much is required (Lk 12:48). In any event, Moses did appear in the promised land in the company of the transfigured Jesus (Mt 17:3).

4:2 This statement supports the common biblical idea that all Scripture is inspired by God and none of it is of human origin only (12:32; Jr 36:28,32; 2 Tm 3:16-17; 2 Pt 1:20-21). No one, therefore, can add to or delete from it.

4:11 The burning of the mountain was likely associated with volcanic eruption, or it could be a supernatural manifestation of the presence of the Lord who is often seen in connection with clouds or fire (Ex 3:2; 13:21; 19:18).

4:19 The sun, moon, and stars were not created to be objects of worship. They were set in the heavens to benefit all peoples with their light and heat, and to regulate units of time (Gn 1:14-19).

4:20 The reference to iron is not out of keeping with an early (fifteenth century) date for Dt. Though the Iron Age proper did not begin in the Middle East until 1200 B.C., iron smelting was known much earlier.

4:24 God is jealous in the sense that he tolerates no rival claims to deity and sovereignty. He alone is God, and all else is His creation. To worship the creature, rather than the Creator, is to rob God of His uniqueness and incomparability (vv. 35,39; Ac 17:22-28; Rm 1:25). The Hebrew word translated "jealous" (qanna') also means "zealous." God's jealousy is an expression of His intense love and care for His people and His demand that they honor His unique and incomparable nature.

4:26 On heaven and earth as witnesses, see note on 30:19.

4:28 Mention of other gods by no means certifies that they indeed exist; the reference is to idols ("gods of wood and stone"). Yet the worship of idols can open a person to Satan's demonic influence, and the NT takes this possibility seriously (1 Co 10:20; 1 Jn 5:21). Idols represented the supposed qualities of their corresponding deities. Israel would worship these idols when in exile; even though the gods behind them were only figments of a depraved pagan imagination (cp. Is 40:18-20; 44:9-11; Jr 10:14-16).

4:34 God's selection of Israel as a special people to the exclusion of all others can be explained only on the basis of His grace and hidden purposes. There was nothing in Israel, or even the nation's founding ancestor Abraham, that commended them to the Lord.

Merit or deserving qualities have nothing to do with God's sovereign choice of nations and individuals, out of all the options available to Him (7:6-9; cp. Ex 19:5-6). The vessel has no right to ask the potter why he has shaped him thus (Rm 9:14-26).

4:41 "Across the Jordan to the east" is a technical geographical term referring to what is now known as the kingdom of Jordan, or traditionally Transjordan (see 1:1).

5:2 On the name Horeb, see the Introduction and note on 1:6.

5:9 These words reflect the OT concept of the corporate nature of community and family life. All members are implicated in the blessing and judgment of even one member (2:34). It is well known that the sins of one generation have repercussions for generations to come (Ex 20:5). The impact of David's sin on his children is a classic case in point (2 Sm 12:10; 13:28). Also see note on 4:24.

5:14 The male and female servants mentioned here are not slaves in the sense of personal property. They were either hired persons or, more likely, bond-servants who had come under the control of a fellow Israelite to whom they owed a certain amount of service in exchange for a loan that rescued them from financial difficulty (Ex 21:1-6; Dt 15:12-18).

5:22 The subject of this statement is the Lord and not Moses. Elsewhere the OT speaks of God's writing the Ten Commandments with His own finger—an obvious figure of speech—underscoring the fact that God is the ultimate author of Scripture (Ex 32:15-16; 34:1). This wording is unique, however, for ordinarily God is said to write or speak through human beings (2 Pt 1:20-21).

6:4 The claim that the Lord alone is God is sometimes used as evidence for the composition of Dt at a time long after that of Moses. OT monotheism, the argument runs, was a late development in the history of Israel's religion, perhaps as late as Amos (eighth century) and other writing prophets. This claim assumes an evolutionary view of how religions developed. This assumption runs counter to the biblical view that holds that idolatry and polytheism are corruptions of authentic worship of God (Rm 1:18-23). In addition, historical evidence can be brought to bear that runs counter to evolutionary accounts of how religions develop. There is no reason to deny monotheism to the Mosaic period, which was foundational for Israelite faith.

6:7 The expectation here is not that Scripture should be taught to children in every waking moment, to the exclusion of anything else. By means of a figure of speech Moses uses opposites—sitting and walking, lying down and rising up—to suggest that any time is appropriate for instruction in the ways of the Lord.

6:10-11 This information about what lies ahead in Canaan is not at variance with other instruction about destroying the cultures and peoples of that land. Those instructions avoid any reference to material facilities, such as houses and walls (7:1-5). The cities, cisterns and other features could be left standing to facilitate Israel's occupation.

6:15 On God's jealousy, see note on 4:24.

6:16 The words do not mean to test the Lord in the sense of tempting Him to do evil. The Hebrew verb(na-sâ) means to put to the test or challenge. This was what the Israelites had done in the desert (Ex 17:7) in their exasperation over lack of food and water. To test God is to manifest a lack of faith.

7:2 This is a directive for so-called "holy war," a conflict led by the Lord against hostile and irredeemable foes who have an implacable resistance to God and His people (1:30).

7:6 God, in His sovereign grace, makes decisions based upon His omniscient wisdom in line with plans and purposes known, and knowable, only to Him. What seems arbitrary and even unfair to us must be understood as the best possible action for God to take. This was true of His election (choice) of Israel, but one people out of the myriads from which He could have chosen. To impose human "standards" of fairness on a righteous and all wise God is the height of arrogance. He is answerable to no man (Rm 9:20; see Ex 19:5-6; Dt 4:34; 14:2; 26:18.)

7:7 In a covenant context such as this, love does not refer to the emotional or providential aspect of God's character. In those senses, He loves all people equally (cp. Mt 5:45; Jn 3:16). Here the term is synonymous with choice. The Lord is saying that He chose Israel simply because He chose her; His "love" is His loyalty to the covenant He has granted. This sheds light on the difficult statement "I loved Jacob, but I hated Esau" (Mal 1:2-3; cp. Rm 9:13). "Love" and "hate" do not signify emotions of attraction or revulsion, but are expressions of the presence or absence of a special bond of loyalty (cp. Lk 14:26).

7:16 In fulfillment of God's directive for holy war (v. 2) the Israelites must destroy the Canaanite peoples. The reason for such severe action is made clear when the command to destroy the wicked is followed immediately by the prohibition from worshiping their gods. To allow the Canaanites to survive would be to leave Israel vulnerable to idolatry (2:34).

7:20 The ability of hornets to drive away whole armies is understandable, given the devastation of Egypt wrought by plagues of gnats, flies, and locusts. On the other hand, hornets (Hb tsir'a) might more accurately be translated "panic" as suggested by Ex 23:27-28.

8:3 The assumption that all Israel had to eat for 40 years was manna is unfounded. On special occasions they ate quail (Nm 11:31-34) and since they were a pastoral people they obviously maintained and consumed sheep, cattle and other domesticated animals. We today have no idea of the nourishment value, or even the taste, of manna (but see Nm 11:7), and it may not have been as undesirable as some believe. The real issue, of course, is whether or not God could provide for His people in such a miraculous manner; that question is a matter not of science but of faith (cp. Jn 6:31).

8:15 Though, to this day, springs issuing pure and refreshing water from rocky crevices may be found in Sinai and the Negev, the reference here is clearly to a supernatural supply (cp. Ex 17:6; Nm 20:11). Like the manna (vv. 3,16), the provision of water is declared to be outside the normal course of nature.

8:19 If one worships another "false" god or an imaginary one, the result is the same: a departure from faith in the true and living God (4:28).

9:1 It is possible that the total population of the seven Canaanite nations, plus that of neighboring nations, exceeded that of Israel, despite the fact that Israel counted more than 600,000 men alone (Nm 2:32). On the other hand, the statement that the nations were greater and more numerous (Hb ^{c}atsum) than the Israelites could be either a reflection of the misguided perception of the Israelites themselves (Nm 13:28,33), or Moses' use of dramatic exaggeration to emphasize the challenge they faced.

9:8 On the name Horeb, see note on 1:6.

9:10 The reference to the finger of God is an obvious anthropomorphism, or use of a human comparison to describe a divine activity. "God is Spirit" (Jn 4:24) and has no bodily parts. The figure is used to make the point that the Ten Commandments, at least, were composed by the Lord Himself and not by Moses (Dt 4:13; 5:22).

9:14 The Lord's threat to destroy wicked Israel appears to contradict His promise to the patriarchs that their descendants would endure forever (Gn 17:19). However, as one of those descendants Moses was qualified to be the Lord's instrument in establishing a new Israel if need be. It is clear from the passage that the Lord is testing Moses and would not, in fact, carry out the threat (Dt 9:25-29).

9:18 Moses' statement that he neither ate nor drank for 40 days presupposes supernatural sustenance, of the kind Jesus received when he, too, fasted 40 days in the Judean desert (Mt 4:1-11; cp. Dt 8:3). Those to whom God is a living reality do not find such claims impossible, but receive them by faith.

10:4 The Lord wrote the same words on the second set of tablets as on the first. This action attests the truth of "verbal plenary inspiration," the understanding that "the Scripture cannot be broken" (Jn 10:35)—its very words are inspired and inviolable in the original. It was not sufficient to replicate the ideas in the first tables of commandments. Their exact words mustbe repeated and faithfully recorded (see Jr 36:28, 32).

10:6 Numbers 20:28 implies that Aaron was buried on Mount Hor, though it does not explicitly say so. This passage locates the burial place at Moserah, but since the modern site has not been identified it is impossible to prove a contradiction. Quite likely Hor was located in a region called Moserah.

10:15 See notes on 4:34 and 7:6.

10:22 To describe Israel as being as numerous as the stars when its population was little more than 2 million is to employ hyperbole, a deliberate exaggeration designed to glorify God and affirm His faithfulness to His promises (Gn 15:5).

11:6 History records many instances of chasms opening up in the surface of the earth as a result of earthquakes, floods or other natural disasters. That such a thing could occur in the Sinai in Moses' time is not beyond belief. But the timing and precise location of the event are what is significant in the biblical record. If one believes in the God of the Bible there is nothing inherently problematic about the incident recorded of Dathan and Abiram (Nm 16:31-33).

11:9 Anyone who has traveled to the Holy Land might take issue with the description of it as "flowing with milk and honey," but that response overlooks the land's complete agricultural history. The term is a stock phrase that combines products derived from agriculture (milk) and those that are natural, that is, obtained apart from human labor (honey). As such, it illustrates the land's fruitfulness. Compared to the arid and bare deserts of the Sinai, Canaan was a virtual Eden. Archaeological research has revealed that the region was more cultivated and forested in ancient times than in recent centuries, due to elaborate systems of water retention and irrigation. Under Turkish occupation the land was stripped for lumber and became more arid, but reforestation by the Israelis has brought back much of the country's original character.

11:19 Taken literally, this passage would suggest that nothing was to occur in family life except the verbal communication of the law. But Moses' intention here is to impress upon parents that their very lifestyle as well as their words is to be instructive for their children (see 6:7).

11:24 To tread the foot on the land symbolized its domination and occupation. The meaning is not that Israelite territory would be limited to those areas in which the people actually walked. Rather, their claim to any part of it was sufficient to assert ownership of the whole (Gn 13:17; Jos 1:3).

11:26 The curse in view here is certainly not the use of profanity or anything of the kind but is the technical language of covenant relationship. Blessing comes by obedience and cursing by disobedience. Disobedience resulted in such things as illness, lack of rain, loss of harvest, deportation, or even death. Curses are not arbitrary and capricious acts of God but the penalty for violating a pledge made by the people themselves (cp. Ex 19:8; 24:3,7; Dt 28:1-68).

11:30 Though the term "across the Jordan" is normally a technical way of referring to the Transjordan (1:1; 4:41), here it refers to Canaan which lies on the other side of the river from the speaker's point of view. The mention of the mountains Gerizim and Ebal makes this clear. The expression also verifies that Moses is in the Transjordan at the time he issues these instructions.

12:2-3 Moses reiterates the Lord's directive to destroy all non-Israelite places of worship. To modern ears such words are neither "politically correct" nor in the spirit of ecumenism. The elimination of pagan sanctuaries, however, was the logical and essential consequence of acknowledging Yahweh as the one and only God—One who spoke of Himself as a "jealous" God who would tolerate no rivals (5:4-5; 6:15).

12:5 The command to worship God in only one place seems to be at variance with Ex 20:24-26, which permits altars at many places, and with later practice in which prophets who were loyal to God offered sacrifice at authorized high places (e.g. 1 Sm 9:11-14; 1 Kg 18:30). What this passage mandates, however, is community worship, especially in connection with the annual festivals. It does not address the matter of local worship in Israel's towns and villages.

12:10 To move across the Jordan suggests a westerly direction from Moses' location, which in turn supports the view that Dt was composed in the Transjordan. This accords with the Mosaic authorship and early date of Dt but would be inconsistent with a late date and Palestinian setting for the book (1:1; 4:41).

12:16 The prohibition against eating blood is not merely a ritual or dietary taboo. Blood stands for life in the OT (cp. Gn 9:4-6; Lv 17:10-16; Dt 12:23), and life, whether animal or human, is sacred. As such, it belongs to the Lord and must be poured out upon the altar or the ground as a sign of its being returned to Him (Lv 3:2; Dt 12:24).

12:29 See Nm 31:13-24; Dt 1:30; 2:21; 7:16.

13:2 False prophets occasionally uttered prophecies that came to pass, as this instruction recognizes. This does not contradict the test of a true prophet propounded in 18:20-22. That test is a negative one; it states that if what a prophet predicts does not occur, Israel need not fear him. More importantly, this directive refers to prophets who would entice Israel to the worship of false gods. That, in any case, is the sign of a false prophet regardless of whether or not he is able to predict future events. Often mere common sense allows one accurately to gauge the outcome of current trends; it is no sure sign that a person is an authentic prophet of the Lord. The two passages dealing with criteria concerning false prophets are not inconsistent with one another.

13:5 The death penalty for these false prophets who arise from within Israel seems unduly harsh until we recognize that they are guilty of nothing less than high treason when they encourage the people to defect from the Lord and embrace other gods. Such measures cannot be entertained today, of course, but they were quite appropriate to the OT theocratic community.

13:15 To destroy a whole city because of the idolatry of a few may seem unfair and a miscarriage of justice. However, the modern dichotomy between the individual and his community was unknown in the world of ancient Israel. The sin of the few became the responsibility of all (Gn 18:22-33; Jos 7:10-26). Presumably the citizens of the city in question here had done nothing to expose or punish the sin of the idolatrous offenders.

14:18 Inclusion of the bat in the list of unclean birds, though not technically correct according to modern speciation or taxonomy, is consistent with the intent of the passage: to forbid the eating of large flying creatures. Establishing a second category with only one representative would have been unnecessary and confusing in a culture in which biological distinctions followed rules different from those of the modern world.

14:21 The permission given to foreigners to eat meat prohibited to Israelites was not because of a superior attitude on the part of the Israelites but because they were not allowed to come in contact with a corpse (Nm 9:6; 19:11-22). Foreigners, not governed by such restrictions, were free to eat.

15:3-4 In matters of loans and repayment, Israelites and foreigners were governed by different laws. If an Israelite were in debt to a fellow Israelite, he could work off his debt and at the end of seven years it would be declared paid in full, whether or not the amount of the loan had actually been compensated. A foreigner, however, would receive no such grace and must pay the creditor all that he owed him.

15:4 This is not a prophecy that there would be no poor, for elsewhere it is made very clear that there would always be poor people among them (v. 11; Mk 14:7). The idea is that there need not be any poor if the members of the community practiced the mutual charity that was their obligation under the Lord's covenant.

15:12 The only way a Hebrew was "sold" to another Hebrew was through his or her own volition. This passage has nothing to do with slavery or the ownership by one person of another. The law permitted one who had become financially destitute to work off his indebtedness by placing himself into an indentured position whereby his labor for the creditor paid off his financial obligations.

15:17 This treatment, painful as it must have been, was entirely voluntary on the part of the person submitting to it. Furthermore, it displays a level of commitment to service to the master that would not be undertaken lightly. In any event, the practice does not contradict prohibitions elsewhere regarding mutilation (cp. Lv 19:28; 1 Kg 18:28) since all those instances related to pagan ritual.

16:3,8 The contradiction relative to the number of days on which unleavened bread must be eaten (seven and six respectively) is only apparent. Clearly v. 8 refers to the six days leading up to the solemn assembly on the seventh, when unleavened bread also could not be eaten. This equals the seven days of v. 3.

16:16 The absence of reference to females does not mean they were disqualified from attending the festivals; it only indicates that they were not required to do so. In the patriarchal era of the OT, headship of the family was vested in the father. On festive occasions and other major community assemblies, fathers and other adult males represented their families (vv. 11,14).

16:22 The prohibition against setting up sacred stone pillars has to be understood in its context. Here these objects are associated with the rituals of pagan worship (v. 21). The pentateuchal narrative includes instances when such monuments were erected as memorials, and even as elements in Israel's worship of the Lord (Gn 28:18; 31:13,45; Ex 24:4). As with many apparent contradictions or discrepancies is Scripture, this one ceases to be such when its context is taken into consideration.

17:5 A pluralistic, inclusivist culture finds the religious intolerance exhibited here repulsive. It goes against the idea that each person should be permitted to worship any god he wishes (or none at all), and in any way he wishes. Israel's covenant community, however, recognized only one God and He was jealous (or zealous) about His uniqueness and His claim to exclusive worship (4:24; 5:9). To a holy God, the worship of other "gods" was a defiant act of rebellion that could not be tolerated (13:5).

17:15 Israel was commanded to permit itself no foreign rulers. This is a token of the fact that Israel was a people set apart by the Lord to be—through both declaration and example—His unique representative among the nations. To be ruled by a foreign king would open the door to contamination of Israel's faith through the influence of pagan religion. Ultimately it would lead to the dissipation of God's purpose in bringing salvation to all nations through a pure and separated people.

17:16-17 The command to avoid the amassing of horses and wives was clearly disobeyed by all the kings of Israel, beginning with David and epitomized by Solomon (1 Kg 4:26; 10:26-29; 11:3-4). This is not an example of contradiction in the Bible. It illustrates the discrepancy between God's ideal standards and the human incapacity or unwillingness to obey them. Scripture upholds no one as a perfect exemplar of obedience to God's command, except Jesus Christ (2 Co 5:21; Heb 4:14; 1 Pt 2:22).

18:2 The lack of inheritance for the Levites might be thought inconsistent with the provision granting them 48 cities throughout the land (Nm 35:1-8). The inheritance in view here, however, is that of territory. The Levites were not allocated a contiguous block of land, as were the other tribes. Their towns included only a limited agricultural perimeter (Nm 35:3-5), so they were almost totally dependent on the gifts of the people.

18:9 It is unfair to characterize Israel as narrow-minded for calling the religious practices of the Canaanites detestable. Both the Bible and archaeological evidence attest to the depravity of Canaanite worship, which incorporated temple prostitution, child sacrifice, mutilation and other inhumane features. But it was detestable chiefly because it pandered to nonexistent gods, in defiance of the one true God who reveals Himself through His word and actions, not through ritualistic practice.

18:15-19 Moses relates the Lord's promise that He would raise up a (true) prophet like him. This is not arrogant self-promotion. One hallmark of the inspiration of Scripture is the fact that authors sometimes speak favorably of themselves, something they would not be likely to do unless compelled by God's Spirit (cp. Nm 12:3,7; Dt 34:10). Considering the hardships and opposition Moses had endured, and his foundational role in establishing Israel's covenantal faith, it is understandable that the Lord would hold him up as a model for future occupants of the prophetic office.

18:20 See note on 13:5.

18:22 The test of fulfilled prophecy must obviously be effective only for a prediction made in the near future, during the lifetime of the prophet himself and those who heard him. Not one long-range OT prophecy has ever been shown not to have been fulfilled, even if the fulfillment took a form that was unexpected (e.g., the prophecies of Messiah that were fulfilled in the crucified, risen and ascended Christ, and not in the appearance of a political or military leader).

19:1 The Lord's destruction of the nations of Canaan and Israel's appropriation of their properties might appear arbitrary and unfair. But these nations were living in the land previously promised to the descendants of Abraham (Gn 12:1; 13:17; 15:18-21), and their possession of it was illegitimate according to the plan of God. Secondly, the Canaanites were a people who had placed themselves beyond redemption through their implacable defiance of God, persisting in their abominable social and religious practices (see notes on Dt 1:30; 2:21,34; 7:2; Rm 1:22-28).

19:6 Under the system of blood vengeance, a family member of a person whose life was taken by another could pursue and execute the murderer. This was not the random act of a vigilante, for the community had procedures by which it regulated the process (vv. 15-20). Underlying this system was the sense of corporate solidarity, in which every member of a family was considered to be part of the body. That which injures one member injures all. In the modern Western world, in which the individual has come to be regarded as sovereign, the concept of community solidarity is not well appreciated.

19:9-10 The addition of three cities of refuge to the original six attests to the mercy and justice of the Lord, Who ensures that an accused felon would have reasonable access to one of them. Again, it must be noted that the avenger had to follow due process. One unable to flee the avenger quickly must not suffer vengeance without an opportunity for a fair hearing before the court (v. 15).

19:13 Lack of pity, in this instruction, does not mean lack of human compassion and sensitivity. The idea is that the criminal should not be allowed to evade justice because of the sympathy of the community. Painful as it may be, the punishment must fit the crime and be fully carried out.

19:21 The measure-for-measure justice this directive advocates, known as lex talionis, need not be taken to mean, for example, that if a person should blind another person his or her eye should be blinded in turn. The principle is that a punishment must always be commensurate with a crime. It should neither exceed, nor be less than, the gravity of the offense (Lv 24:19-20). In the context of surrounding cultures where vengeance had no limits, lex talionis, was a standard far more just.

20:1 The Lord's presence with his people in their warfare does not mean He sanctions every war or takes an active role in it. The passage is describing "holy war" (sometimes called "Yahweh war"), a conflict initiated by the Lord, empowered by Him, and resulting in His appropriation of its spoils. Such warfare was undertaken to destroy peoples who were irretrievably beyond redemption and who were likely to contaminate Israel's faith with their idolatrous practices (see 1:30; 7:2,16; 19:1).

20:5-8 These various exemptions from military service may seem unfair to other fighters, but they are in the interest of the whole army. Any soldier distracted by thoughts of home, occupation and family is unable to give full attention to his military duties, and can become more of a liability than an asset to the cause. The mention of houses and fields is an indication that the complete conquest of Canaan would not be instantaneous, but would occupy a period of time during which some Israelites would be able to establish themselves in the land; the book of Joshua reveals this to be the case. It is interesting that these exemptions are similar to the excuses offered by those who, in Jesus' parable, did not come to the master's banquet (Lk 14:18-20), with the implication that receiving the kingdom of God was a parallel to the conquest of the promised land.

20:11 Cities outside Canaan were granted a certain leniency because they were not among the nations under God's "ban" (mandate of total destruction). Apparently, unlike the Canaanites proper, they were not considered irredeemably hardened against the Lord and his people. If they surrendered they would not be exterminated but would become vassals (subservient peoples) of Israel. This was a way of asserting the Lord's proper and deserved sovereignty as God of all the earth (cp. Jos 9:22-27).

20:16-17 The destiny of the various Canaanite peoples was complete annihilation. They were to be placed under the ban (Hb cherem), the wrath of God enacted against persons beyond redemption (see 1:30; 12:2).

20:19 The anomaly of trees being spared while human beings were slaughtered lies precisely in the fact that human beings sin and therefore are culpable whereas trees, not being sentient, are "innocent." This underscores the awfulness of sin and explains God's abhorrence of it and need to punish it.

21:3-4 This means of addressing the crime of homicide operates on the basis of circumstantial evidence. When a perpetrator is not known, the assumption is that he is from the town nearest to the scene of the crime. The whole town is therefore implicated and its presumed guilt must be atoned for by appropriate sacrifices (v. 6). No sin is guiltless before God, and it must be dealt with even in anonymous cases. Again, the principle of corporate solidarity is at work (see notes on 5:9; 19:6).

21:11-14 In warfare against non-Canaanite nations, the Israelites could take prisoners (cp. 20:11), including young women as wives. This is not a requirement of the Law, or an action the Lord necessarily endorsed; it was a permission granted to make more tolerable a practice common at the time. A captive wife would surely live under conditions more favorable than those for a woman not so chosen. If her captor later rejected her as wife, she could not be made a slave.

21:15 Polygamy, while tolerated by the Law, was certainly never prescribed nor sanctioned. Monogamy is the standard to which God's people were to conform. This is clear in both the OT (Gn 2:24) and NT (Mt 19:4-6). As is often the case, the instruction was designed not to prescribe a cultural norm but to regulate existing practice in a more humane way.

21:16 The wife who is "hated" (Hb text) is not the object of her husband's loathing disdain. The verb expresses the idea of being secondary in his affections. Jacob's preference for Rachel over Leah (Gn 29:18,30) and Elkanah's favor toward Hannah rather than Peninnah(1 Sm 1:5) are examples. (On the meaning of "hate" in this sense, see note on Dt 7:7.)

21:17 The child of the less-loved but first wife must be granted the double portion that fell to the first-born son. This is a prime example of the principle of fair treatment in human relationships that distinguishes Israel's social practice from that of surrounding cultures. Israel's faith raised its family and community life to a higher plane than that of its neighbors.

21:21 The execution of a wayward and incorrigible son is inconceivable in modern secular society, which lacks the standards of a theocratic (ruled by God) community. The possibility described here dramatizes the heavy responsibility borne by Israelite parents to see that their offspring held to the standards demanded of the people of God. Parents were expected to be God's agents of authority and discipline at the family level, ensuring that no dysfunctional and destructive influences entered the community of faith on their account.

21:23 The hanging on a tree here was not crucifixion, nor was it even the cause of death (v. 22). Its purpose was to put to shame a person who had committed a capital offense, both because of the heinousness of his crime and to serve as a deterrent to others. Such an individual was the special object of God's curse, the focus of His wrath that otherwise would be poured out on the community as a whole (cp. 2 Sm 4:12; 21:9; Gl 3:13).

22:1-4 The elevated level of OT law and ethics, as compared to that of the ancient Near East in general, abhors not only aggressive wrongdoing but also passive indifference in the face of opportunities to do good. This is in line with James' injunction that "for the person who knows to do good and doesn't do it, it is a sin" (Jms 4:17).

22:5 Cross dressing, considered by some of little consequence today, was strictly forbidden in Israel because it obliterated the lines of distinction inherent in God's creation of man and woman.

22:9-11 The purpose of this passage as a whole is to establish the principle of separation, in light of the possibility that Israel might permit a mixture of Canaanite religious and cultural practice to assimilate with the faith of Yahweh. Subsequent biblical history records that Israel failed to keep itself from such corruption, and so came under judgment. Paul cites this text in his argument against a Christian's marriage with unbelievers (2 Co 6:14).

22:21 Loss of virginity was tantamount to adultery in the case of betrothal, implied here. It was considered nothing short of harlotry, a sin that brought disrepute upon the whole community. Physical whoredom was analogous to spiritual unfaithfulness to the Lord, and was therefore deemed deserving of death (Hs 4:1-19)—as severe as this sanction may appear by today's "standards."

22:25-27 This situation well illustrates the common-sense approach of biblical law. A woman raped outside a settlement is presumed innocent of consensual sex, as presumably she had protested the assault but was too far away for her cries to be heard. Of course, she could have gone voluntarily to the field to effect a liaison; but in Israelite culture the penalty for such a prearranged encounter, if found out, would normally deter such a plan (v. 21).

22:30 The father's wife, in this case, would be the subject's foster mother and not his own, considering that incest is covered elsewhere in the Law (Lv 18:7). The stated reason for the prohibition is that, in committing this act, the man is "uncovering his father's skirt." That is, he is intruding into an area reserved for his father alone. The law thus protects the authority of the father and teaches filial respect for him.

23:1 This apparent discrimination is based on theprinciple that a physical defect is analogous to spiritual imperfection (cp. Lv 21:16-23). The defect, in this instance, has to do with reproductive capacity, the lack of which was considered to be a curse. Jesus spoke of "eunuchs who have made themselves that way because of the kingdom of heaven" (Mt 19:12), removing the traditional religious stigma from those who lack reproductive capability or who refrain from utilizing it (depending on whether or not one takes His expression in the literal sense). Christianity's first recorded non-Jewish convert was such a person (Ac 8:26-38).

23:2 The exclusion of an illegitimate child from the assembly is related to the previous instructions having to do with irregular sexual matters. The denial of full fellowship has nothing to do with the personal spirituality of the individual; it is the community as a whole that is in view. The prohibition illustrates the uncompromising standards of the Lord affecting how, and under what conditions, persons may enter His presence. Physical traits reflecting what is normal and proper are symbolic of the required spiritual state.

23:3 Ammonites and Moabites were barred from the assembly of the Lord because they had failed to provide Israel needed supplies en route to Canaan, and had also tried to curse Israel. Their refusal was especially odious because Ammon and Moab were related to Abraham through Lot (cp. Gn 19:30-38). Additionally, they were children of incest and so fell into the category of the previous verse. The case of Ruth, a Moabite, raises an issue, especially since she became the great-grandmother of King David and an ancestor of Jesus. God sovereignly allows for exceptions to general principles, much as Rahab was an exception in the destruction of Jericho (Jos 6:25). But the exclusion in Dt 23:3 is from "the LORD'S assembly," not the community in general, and there is no record that Ruth attended any of the annual festival gatherings.

23:7-8 Edomites and Egyptians, because of their brotherhood with Israel and hospitality respectively, could enter the assembly but only after the second generation. The point here and in v. 3 is that, though redemption is at the Lord's initiative and by His grace, privileges such as access to the assembly were determined by how one related to the Lord and to His people.

23:13 The proper disposal of excrement and other impurities (vv. 10-11), especially in the context of holy war (as here), relates to the notion of ritual purity and not hygiene in general. Since God is holy—that is, pure—anyone or anything in His presence, indeed the entire camp, must be rendered holy by following proper procedure. This instruction is a reminder that spiritual "refuse" has no place within the community of faith.

23:15 The OT never explicitly condemns slavery, but neither does it sanction or justify it. Nevertheless, this directive ameliorates the slave's condition in a manner unknown elsewhere in the ancient Near East. He must not be returned to his master but can remain with whoever has found him, and must be treated well.

23:17 This is not a blanket condemnation of prostitution or homosexuality (though such prohibitions are found elsewhere; cp. Lv 18:22; 20:13) but a prohibition of the kinds of perverse sexual activities that were common in Canaanite religious rites.

23:20 The law clearly allows for treating Israelites differently from foreigners in financial matters. Israelites may not exact interest on loans from their fellow Israelites, but may levy it against others. Discrimination of this kind illustrates at least two themes: (1) Members of the covenant community must not profit from one another's distress. (2) Being a member of that community entails certain privileges.

23:24-25 Lack of a governmental welfare system made it necessary for the poor to have access to essentials for survival. Thus, they might help themselves freely to a neighbor's crops as they casually walked through their fields. Here it is clear that being poor was not the only qualification for helping one's self; anyone could pluck grain or grapes as he wished. Under the covenantal principle of corporate solidarity, the community cannot view itself as a mere collection of independent individuals. What one has is, within limits, the property of all.

24:1-4 Divorce is never authorized in the OT, though it is permitted (as here). The ideal was for one man to marry one woman for life (cp. 21:15; Gn 2:24). Moses allowed divorce, Jesus said, because of the hardness of people's hearts (Mt 19:8). As so often in the OT law, the practice of divorce was to be strictly regulated, and remarriage—the real issue here—even more so. To take back a former wife who had married another in the interim would, in effect, make her an adulteress.

24:6 This law manifests a humane quality seldom found in secular law codes of the ancient Near East. To take and keep a millstone as collateral on a loan was todeprive the borrower of what he needed in the preparation of his meals—in other words, for his day-to-day survival.

24:9 The harsh treatment of Miriam was a reminder to her, and others, that rebellion against divinely authorized spiritual leadership is, in effect, rebellion against God Himself.

24:16 This verse teaches personal responsibility for one's own sin and its consequences. This seems to contradict passages elsewhere that suggest that the sins of parents have repercussions for many generations to come (cp. 2:34; 5:9). There is a difference, however, between the transmission of guilt and accountability on the one hand, and the aftereffects of sin on the other. For example, David's children were not held responsible for his adultery and murder, but they paid the price as members of the dysfunctional family his sin produced (2 Sm 12:10).

24:19-22 These examples of the care and generosity to be extended to the poor illustrate the elevated ethic of the OT as compared to that of surrounding nations. Those who try to make a case for a "sub-Christian" social attitude in the Law are ignoring texts such as these.

25:2 Physical punishment and public humiliation may appear barbaric to the modern "enlightened" mind, but their deterrent effect can hardly be denied. With prisons unavailable, especially for a people on the move, incarceration for crime was virtually non-existent in ancient Israel. This left few options for the application of justice. The criminal who was beaten would not be kept at public expense, and would be able to continue to work to provide for his family.

25:3 The leavening of justice with mercy is witness to an OT concern even for persons deserving of punishment. In the ancient world this attitude is virtually unique to the OT. Later Jewish custom restricted the blows to 39, as insurance against miscounting and accidentally administering more than the permitted 40 (2 Co 11:24).

25:4 The significance of this apparently trivial instruction is not simply to call attention to the need for humane treatment of animals. It is also an analogy to the human scene. If an ox is to be treated with such consideration, allowed to benefit from the results of its labor, how much more should human beings be so treated. That is certainly the way the apostle Paul took this instruction (1 Co 9:9; 1 Tm 5:18).

25:5 The custom described here (the so-called "levirate marriage") must be understood in terms of a number of qualifications. First, the marriage to a widow was expected but not mandatory (v. 7; Ru 4:5-6). Then, since monogamy was the only sanctioned form of marriage, the surviving brothers must not be married in order to fulfill the obligation. Finally, the purpose was to preserve the deceased brother's name and by this means to guarantee his ongoing identity (Dt 25:6) in a culture which had, as yet, no view of the resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees (who also had no such belief) tried to trip Jesus up on this question with a fictitious example of the "levirate marriage," but He saw through their ploy (Mt 22:23-32).

25:9 To spit in the face may strike one as repulsive behavior, yet each society has its gestures that would seem crude to people of other cultures. This act of disdain or refusal was (and is) common in Middle Eastern societies and must be judged, as to its propriety, against that cultural environment. The loosening of the sandal suggests that the reluctant brother is abandoning all claim to the widow's property (cp. Nm 12:14; Ru 4:7-8).

25:12 The woman's harsh punishment is due to the fact that her impetuous act might result in the man's emasculation, depriving him of the ability to procreate. The result would be the same as that envisioned in vv. 5-10—he would die without progeny, and his name would forever be lost in Israel. As is often the case in OT law, the instruction's ramifications extend beyond the surface reading of the text.

25:16 Even modern moral relativism has not erased the public's disgust with duplicity or cheating in business practice (vv. 13-15). Dishonest dealings are an abomination to the Lord, as well. Such behavior is not just an abuse of another individual; it impacts the ethical equilibrium of the whole community. To rob one's neighbor is, in a sense, to rob God, for He is the One who dispenses economic blessing as He sees fit.

25:17 The injunction to forgive and forget, while clearly a biblical principle, does not apply in cases where God's honor or that of His people has been violated without subsequent remorse and repentance. The attack of the Amalekites against the weakest of the Israelites was an attack on the Lord, who cares for just such people (v. 18). Saul's later failure to carry out the mandate for Amalek's complete annihilation resulted in the termination of his dynasty (1 Sm 15:26).

26:1-11 This section about the presentation of the firstfruits illustrates the biblical pattern of worship, which incorporates the narrative of what God has done for His people. The recitation in Christian worship of the Apostles' Creed, which is at heart the story of God's action in Christ, is based on this OT pattern.

26:5 The father referred to here is not Abraham, a native of Ur, but Jacob. He was an Aramean in the sense that he had lived in Aram (Syria) for 20 years, gained a family there, and left for Egypt shortly after he had returned to Canaan.

26:9 See note on 11:9.

26:12 The law here is not in conflict with the law that asserts that the tithes are to be given to the Lord (cp. Lv 27:30). That was the general principle, but every third year a tithe must also be given to support the Levites and other dependents. When God's people give to others they are thereby giving to the Lord as well, a point Jesus made (Mt 10:42).

26:19 See notes on 4:34; 7:6.

27:2 See note on 1:1.

27:3 The instruction to write upon one monument "all the words of this law" has seemed impossible to many critics. However, the size of the stele (inscribed monument) is not mentioned, nor is "law" clearly defined. It is unlikely that the entire Torah is in view, but perhaps the reference is to more than the Ten Commandments. "This law" refers to Dt, Moses' summary of the Sinai covenant. Though lengthy, it is not much longer than the Code of Hammurabi whose prologue, epilogue, and 282 laws are all inscribed on one stone monument.

27:4 The Samaritan Pentateuch (version of the Torah used by the Samaritan sect) reads Gerizim rather than Ebal, and thereby locates the monument at the place where the Samaritans eventually built a temple. It was there when Jesus spoke to the woman at the well, and it was to Gerizim that the woman pointed when she spoke of her place of worship (Jn 4:20). The Hebrew text preserves the original reading, which the Samaritans altered to justify their practice. Jesus pointed beyond both geographical locations, the Samaritan Gerizim and the Jewish Jerusalem, to the true worship of the Father (Jn 4:21-24).

27:5 The command to build an altar of unhewn stones is not at variance with the instructions Moses received about the altar of the tabernacle fashioned of wood and bronze (Ex 27:1-8). That was the altar of the central sanctuary (cp. Dt 12:5), whereas this is an altar of a local shrine. Contrasting with the masonry of Canaanite altars, local Israelite altars were to be built of field stones which preserved the manner in which the Lord, Himself, had shaped them (Ex 20:25; cp. 1 Kg 18:31-32).

27:9 The assembly became the people of the Lord that very day, in the sense that they had assembled in order to reaffirm their commitment to Him. This was not their initial relationship with Him, for that had taken place at Sinai (Ex 24:3-8). By renewing the covenant they became the Lord's people in a new and fresh way; as though they themselves had been present at the original events.

27:12-13 Though the mountains are large it is doubtful that all the people of Israel could stand on them at one time. Probably tribal leaders did so on their behalf.

27:15-26 The solemn, ceremonial pronouncement of a curse upon those who would disregard the principles of God's Law is part of Israel's covenant structure, and illustrates the power of the spoken word in the biblical world view. The curse will take effect, should the instruction be abrogated through unfaithful behavior. It does not require a special act of God to bring about its effect; the disobedient deeds themselves will incur their consequences. The NT also includes some instances of the pronouncement of curse (1 Co 16:22; Gl 1:8-9; cp. Rv 22:18-19).

27:16 In the Lord's structure of authority the parent stood in God's place; lack of respect for the parent was tantamount to lack of respect for God (see 5:16).

27:17 All properties in the promised land were God's and were allocated to tribes, clans, and families as best suited Him. To encroach on a neighbor's property is to reveal dissatisfaction with one's own share, and thus to question the Lord's wisdom and sovereignty over all of life. It is also comparable to a business deception (25:16). Such self-serving actions violate a person's solidarity with others who share in the Lord's covenant, and thus come under the curse.

27:20 See note on 22:30.

27:21 Besides being intuitively abhorrent, sexual relations with an animal (bestiality) breaks down the division between two of God's creatures, one of which (mankind) was to rule the other (animals). Such an act (perturbatio naturarum) upsets the creative order and thus evidences dissatisfaction with, and lack of respect for, God's perfect plan of governance for what He has brought into being.

28:1 This verse appears to suggest that Israel's place of preeminence in God's program depends on obedience to Him, whereas other texts (cp. 4:34; 7:6; 10:15) make it unconditional. The apparent discrepancy disappears when it is recognized that, though the Lord's choice of Israel as His covenant partner was an act of His love and grace alone (7:7-8; cp. Hs 11:1), but her ability to be blessed and to prosper in that relationship depended on loyal obedience.

28:12 The promise that Israel will lend but not borrow is not in the form of a commandment or prohibition; it is a promise of Israel's future prosperity through obedience to God, whose blessing will make Israel the envy of the nations of the world.

28:15-68 Moses returns to the curse element of the covenant declaration, which is considerably longer than the blessing section. Israel's obedience was a critical matter, and the consequences of disloyalty to the Lord needed to be clearly spelled out.

28:19 The coming in and going out is a figure of speech suggesting the fullness of activity and life. The curse for covenant disobedience will be so severe and comprehensive that it will negatively impact all aspects of national life.

28:20 The perishing of Israel must be understood in terms of her removal from the land (as is clear from v. 21), not a final and ultimate annihilation. That would contradict God's covenant promises elsewhere (Gn 17:7, 13; Ps 105:9-10).

28:23 The bronze and iron are metaphors describing the lack of rain and the consequent hardness of the soil respectively. Such figures should not be taken as evidence that the OT as a whole speaks in figurative language. A passage's context always contains clues that make it clear when figures are being employed.

28:26 The curses listed here and in the following verses are stated in graphic and, no doubt, hyperbolic terms to emphasize the enormity of Israel's sin and the punishment that must ensue, should she prove unfaithful. These punishments did not all take place, nor did they occur at all times, though the Bible records many examples of their fulfillment. They are representative of the kinds of judgments Israel could expect if she were to be disobedient to God's covenant.

28:30 These curses are, in part, the reversal of what would befall the corrupt Canaanites in Israel's occupation of the land (30:19). That curses such as these would befall the guilty by no means justifies their propriety, morally or legally. These are not reflections of the character of God, but reveal what can occur when He permits such human actions as instruments of His judgment.

28:36 The reference to a king does not prove that Dt was written in the period of the monarchy, as the critical view holds. It affirms prophetically what God had already promised to the patriarchs, that a line of kings would issue from them (Gn 17:6,16).

28:46 An everlasting curse on Israel would appear contrary to the promise elsewhere that Israel would enjoy unending blessing (cp. Gn 17:7,13; Ps 105:9-10). The Hebrew phrase A.D. 'olam, however, need not be understood to mean "forever" in the cosmic sense. It can be understood as a "rhetorical Hebraism," with the sense of "a long period of time."

28:53 The allegation that resorting to cannibalism reflects a primitive ethic not worthy of a "high religion" or a "cultured people" fails to understand that this gruesome practice is hardly being sanctioned here. The point is exactly the opposite; consuming one's offspring is so out of keeping with civilized behavior that it provides a shocking example of the result of covenant disobedience. In the reign of Jehoram, a faithless king of Israel, an incident of this kind did occur during a famine brought about by siege (2 Kg 6:25-29).

28:56 As in the previous examples of horrible cursings, this one is no indicator of ancient Israelite practice. Rather, it underscores the desperation of people when pushed beyond the limits of endurance.

28:62 The threat that disobedient Israel will be left few in number does not contradict verses 61 and 63 which appear to teach that the nation will suffer total destruction. The language is that of hyperbole, intentional overstatement designed to drive home a point. The end of verse 63 makes clear that the destruction is removal from the land into exile.

28:64 "From one end of the earth to the other" must not be understood in modern terms, that is, worldwide. The idea has to be seen in the historical and geographical context of the time of the text when the known world was essentially the eastern Mediterranean, northern Egypt, and Mesopotamia. Moreover, the Hebrew word 'erets more properly means "land," not the "earth" (the globe). In these terms, the curse was fulfilled in the Assyrian and Babylonian exiles.

28:68 There is no historical record of Israelites going back to Egypt on a mass scale. The passage is referring to the future exiles, a reverse exodus as it were, that would place God's people in bondage once more—this time to the Assyrians and Babylonians.

29:1 This is a clear statement attesting to Moses' authorship of Dt.

29:4 The apparent contradiction between this verse, which says the people could not see, and verse 3, which says they did see is easily resolved by recognizing that v. 3 is speaking of physical sight and verse 4 of spiritual insight. It is possible to look without seeing, to hear without listening (cp. Is 6:10; Jn 9:40-41).

29:7 King Sihon and King Og did not both encounter Israel in the plains of Moab. In fact, Og did battle with them at Edrei, near the Sea of Galilee (Nm 21:33). "This place," then, refers to the Transjordan as a whole, an area embracing the territories of both Sihon and Og.

29:13 To be established as the people of the Lord, on this occasion, does not mean that Moses purports to be presiding over the initial establishment of the covenant. That had been undertaken 40 years earlier at Sinai (Ex 19:4-8). Deuteronomy as a whole is a covenant renewal document, so what is being done here is a reaffirmation of that relationship.

29:15 The ones not there were not absentees from the ceremony but the unborn generations yet to come. The covenant could be made with them, in the sense that Israel as a covenant community consisted of both its ancestors and its descendants. Future generations, as it were, already lived in the loins of Moses' generation (cp. Heb 7:10). The covenant is not with an aggregate of individuals at any given time, but with an ongoing historical community. The Christian concept of the "communion of saints" reflects this idea.

29:20 The reason for the harshness of God's judgment here is to be found in the nature of the offense being punished, idolatry (v. 18). Such an act was not only intrinsically evil because of the depravity of pagan religions. In the context of the covenant with Yahweh it was nothing short of high treason, the worst of all possible offenses. To worship other "gods" is to deny God His very existence and His sovereignty.

29:28 "Where they are today" refers to a future time when Israel would be in exile, not to the time of the speaking or writing of the text. Moses is quoting what people would say later on if Israel abandoned the covenant. These words cannot therefore be used in support of a case for a late date of the book.

30:6 Skeptics sometimes consider such ideas as circumcising the heart absurd, since they fail to understand the use of figurative language in religious or theological contexts. The idea here is that, just as physical circumcision identified one as belonging to the Abrahamic covenant, spiritual circumcision would be the hallmark of membership in the new covenant (Gn 17:13-14; cp. Rm 2:28-29).

30:19 To call heaven and earth as witnesses is not to suggest that they somehow represent living and sentient beings. This is a literary device (an "apostrophe") the purpose of which is to provide an element in covenant making, namely, witnesses to the mutual pledges made by each party. God is here swearing to act upon the decisions Israel is required to make. In treaties outside Israel, the "gods" of the partners are invoked as witnesses. Since there is only one true God, He invokes His creation ("the heavens and the earth," Gn 2:1) as His two witnesses.

31:2 Those who question Moses' life span of 120 years do so on the grounds that such an age is virtually unheard of in modern times. However, one should never gauge the past by the present. God had specially blessed and preserved Moses so that he could accomplish the tasks to which he had been called.

31:2 It appears unfair for the Lord to deny Moses access to the promised land for one intemperate outburst (1:37; cp. Nm 20:12). But Moses, the recipient of special privilege, was also charged with special responsibility. To fail to execute his responsibility completely was to cast both himself and his God in a bad light. For that reason, he could not enter the land with the new generation.

31:9 This verse clearly attests to the Mosaic authorship of at least Dt, if not the entire Pentateuch. Those who argue that late pre-exilic or even exilic editors inserted statements like this, in order to give a late composition Mosaic authority, do so only on the base of a previous assumption that Moses could not have written these texts. Such unwarranted assumptions may arise from a desire to divest the Pentateuch, and the Bible as a whole, of any moral credibility.

31:11 Some have objected that the public reading of the Law would require more time than an assembled crowd could endure. Deuteronomy alone is in view here, and an unhurried reading of this book could be easily done in two and a half hours. Later biblical history records that Ezra "read out of the book of the law of God" to the people in its entirety, over an eight-day period (Neh 8:18). People can do difficult things when they consider them important.

31:15 The fact that the Lord appeared in a pillar of cloud does not contradict the idea that no one has seen God at any time (Jn 1:18). The pillar of cloud represents the presence of God (Ex 13:21-22; 14:19,24; 33:9-10), though His presence is not the "shape" of His person. In that sense whoever saw the cloud saw God Himself. The same is true of the pillar of fire, the burning bush, and other "theophanies" or appearances of the Lord.

31:24 Like v. 9, this provides evidence of the Mosaic authorship of the book of Dt. In fact, the reading literally is, "until their completion," that is, until all the words of the book had been written. There can be no doubt that the intent of the statement is to assert single authorship of the whole.

31:28 See note on 30:19.

32:1 Here begins a poetic passage sometimes called the "Song of Moses." On heaven and earth as witnesses, see note on 30:19.

32:8 Of a variety of readings it seems best to translate "people of Israel" here. Were the passage a human creation by an Israelite writer alone, its tone would indeed be arrogant. However, the centrality of Israel in the God's program of world redemption is part of His own plan; Israel's role is one not of her making but of comes at God's initiative (Ex 19:4-6; Dt 7:6-11).

32:10 This poetic text is not intended to reproduce the actual course of history. God had, in fact, brought His son Israel out of Egypt into the wilderness and had not first found him there (cp. Ex 4:22-23; Hs 11:1). The point is that Israel was helpless in the desert and would surely have perished without divine intervention. The nation was found to be in a needy condition and thus dependent on God's grace.

32:12 The reference to a foreign god is not a tacit admission that such gods exist. Rather, it reflects the pagan viewpoint that their gods had something to do with Israel's safety in the desert, a misapprehension that Moses is quick to correct.

32:13 Neither honey nor oil (olive oil, the kind in view here) comes from rock. Poetry is rich in figures of speech that must be appreciated for what they are. Bees nest in the crevices of cliffs and, as is well known, olive trees grow in stony soils on terraced hillsides. But the figure is not based totally on these facts; it is a symbolic statement of the Lord's provision for His people in a barren area.

32:16 See note on 4:24.

32:22 The description of anger this intense raises questions in the minds of some as to the nature of God. How can He be a God of love, mercy, and grace and yet pour out His wrath in such harsh and devastating ways? The answer lies in a full understanding of the character of God, central to which is His holiness. For God to tolerate wickedness would contradict His separation from all that is profane, degenerate and unjust. It would, therefore, cheapen His other attributes, such as dependability and compassion, that are more palatable to the modern mind.

32:26-27 What appears to be a petty and self-serving reaction by the Lord to the taunts and misunderstandings of His enemies must be seen against a human backdrop in which His people Israel take center stage. For God to destroy His covenant nation would open Him and Israel to the charge that He was unreliable. It was His people, not He, that would suffer the brunt of ridicule should it appear that He had abandoned them. Out of concern for them the Lord must keep His word.

32:30 This is hyperbole, a deliberate exaggeration designed to show that Israel's defeat at the hands of much less powerful foes can be explained only as an act of judgment by the Lord because of Israel's sins. It harks back to the curses of 28:15-68.

32:37 The reference to other "gods" is a piece of sarcasm, not an admission that they are real. They are real only to those who imagine they worship them, even apostate Israel. Verse 39 proclaims the truth: there is only one God, the God of Israel (cp. 6:4-5; 32:16).

32:40 For God to take an oath is a way of declaring, with a human analogy, that Israel could rely on Him to be true to His word. The ancient gesture of oath taking, still in use today, was to lift the hand. The imagery of the Lord's raising His hand to pledge His fidelity would be a powerful expression of His reliability (cp. 31:28; 32:1).

32:44 The reference to Joshua as Hoshea (Hb text) by no means suggests multiple sources in the composition of Dt. Both names derive from a verb meaning "to save" (Hb yashah) and are used interchangeably (cp. Nm 13:8,16). Hoshea/Joshua was a common biblical name in is, in fact, equivalent to Jesus in the NT.

32:51 Why did God punish Moses so severely for what seems to be a minor offence, his striking the rock at Meribah (Nm 20:11-12)? That incident can be understood two ways. God told Moses to "speak to the rock" (Nm 20:8); instead, he struck it with Aaron's rod. Alternatively, the words "speak to the rock" can be taken to mean "address the rock," using the rod (the Hb verb dabar can have that sense); but instead of beating it vigorously Moses only tapped it twice. In either case, Moses had been given an awesome responsibility as God's chosen leader, and his obedience had to be total. Perhaps this incident is background for Jesus' statement that "much will be required of everyone who has been given much" (Lk 12:48), and James' admonition, "Not many should become teachers, my brothers, knowing that we will receive a stricter judgment" (Jms 3:1).

33:1 The reference to Moses' death has raised questions about his authorship of at least this passage. It is possible that someone else (Joshua has often been suggested) inserted this verse, but this need not imply different authorship for the rest of the chapter. Since Moses had just been told again that he would soon die (32:48-50), it would not be surprising if he made reference to that fact even as he introduced his final address.

33:2 Again Moses speaks poetically in what is sometimes called the "Blessing of Moses," and one need not expect places and events to conform to normal chronological and geographical sequence. Sinai, Seir, and Paran were places where the Lord manifested His power and glory (Nm 10:12; 13:3,26). In this context of holy war what matters is not a strict adherence to an itinerary but attention to God's mighty acts on behalf of His people.

33:6 Historically Reuben disappeared as a tribal entity, though no doubt it was absorbed into other Transjordanian peoples and continued to live through them. On the other hand, these are blessings and not necessarily solid promises. The hope is that Reuben, despite the curse pronounced on him by his father Jacob (Gn 49:2-4), might survive after all even if only few in number.

33:9 What seems like insensitivity toward other Israelites on the part of the tribe of Levi is only so in comparison to the Levites' zeal for the Lord (cp. Ex 32:27-29) and the worship of the sanctuary. Moses' expression has nothing to do with ordinary and expected behavior of an individual toward his or her loved ones. The same thought occurs in Jesus' teaching that unless one leaves his family for the sake of the gospel, he is an unworthy disciple (Mt 10:37-38).

33:16 On how God "appeared" in the bush, see note on 31:15.

33:17 The figures here ("ten thousands" and "thousands") is not a population estimate or a claim that Ephraim was 10 times greater than Manasseh. Hebrew poetry employs parallelism, a device in which the second line of a couplet (as here) matches the first, or at least approximates it. Since there is no synonym for "ten thousands," the word for "thousands" was chosen to parallel it. The same parallel appears in the victory song of the women of Israel, crediting Saul with thousands and David with tens of thousands (1 Sm 18:7-8), but the jealous Saul chose to take it in the wrong way.

33:19 Critics have noted that the promise that Zebulun and Issachar would offer sacrifices on a certain mountain appears to contradict the clear commandment of 12:5 and elsewhere that worship be carried out in only one place, namely, where the Lord placed His holy name. However, the latter pertains to worship by the nation as a whole. Worship at local shrines by villages and even individuals was allowed (cp. 1 Sm 9:11-14;1 Kg 18:30).

33:21 When the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and part of Manasseh asked Moses for permission to settle in the Transjordan (Nm 32:1-5) they did so because they found the land there to be most suitable to their pastoral lifestyle. That the Gadites wanted the best for themselves is not sanctioned here, but neither is it condemned. The Bible often records events or actions simply because they occurred, even where those things might cast aspersions on the people involved. This realistic recording of events is a token of the Bible's reliability as a historical record.

33:26-27 Jeshurun is a fond name for Israel. God's command to destroy the enemy does not reflect a sub-Christian and primitive ethic, as some assert. In the OT context of holy war, as well as in the NT picture of the vindication of God's people in the final outworking of God's purpose (esp. the Revelation to John), it is essential that God's holiness (and that of His people) be upheld in the face of whatever would detract from it. Those who will not repent and believe in the one true God must expect nothing but certain destruction (cp. Ps 9:16-17).

33:29 To tread on the back of an enemy is figurative language to express his complete and total submission (Hab 3:19). While this is not always to be taken literally, there are examples in the OT of a conqueror placing his foot on the neck of a defeated foe (Jos 10:24).

34:1-2 The reference to the territory of Dan and the other tribes appears to be anachronistic for the time of Moses and therefore indicative of a later time of composition. The place name Dan may be a later editor's substitution for the city's original name (perhaps Laish; cp. Gn 14:14; Jdg 18:29), but this is by no means is evidence that someone other than Moses composed the greater part of this narrative.

34:5-12 The common critical view that Moses could not have written Dt because it records his own death carries no weight, except in the case of the last eight verses of the book. Someone else (Joshua, according to the Talmud) could have appended the account of Moses' death without undermining the tradition of Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. If one accepts the biblical role of the prophet as including the gift to discern events to come, Moses could even have composed his own obituary.

34:6 The phrase "to this day" suggests a reflection back on an event from a later perspective. As with the account of Moses' death in general, there is good reason to believe that Joshua or someone else wrote these words, perhaps as much as 40 or 50 years later.

34:7 The great age of Moses at his death has been a problem for critics who think in uniformitarian terms; that is that phenomena we observe today are as they have always been. How is it that his lifespan should exceed that of others of his generation (if that is the case), and how likely is it that it was divided into three segments of 40 years each (cp. 31:2; Ac 7:23,30)? Were life and history governed solely by chance or by human machination, such things would be incredible. But if God's activity is brought into the equation, nothing remains beyond belief.

34:10 Like the phrase "to this day" in verse 6, the statement that "no prophet has arisen again in Israel like Moses" suggests, to some, a post-Mosaic source—indeed, one from a considerably later time. Incidental glosses (editorial adjustments and insertions), such as this might be, do not overthrow the ancient tradition of Moses as the inspired composer of the Torah. The phrase in question, in fact, is a biblical idiom for something of great significance; to say that a person or event is unlike anything before or after it is a way of stressing their gravity (cp. Ex 10:14; Ezk 16:16; Mt 24:21). Use of the expression here need not be an indication of a later perspective. But Moses, indeed, has no equal in later biblical history except for Jesus Christ, who was more than a prophet. Of all figures in Scripture, it is Moses who is mentioned together with Christ in the worship of the Revelation to John, "The song of God's servant Moses, and the song of the Lamb" (Rv 15:3).

4:10 To know God face to face is not in conflict with the idea that no one can look on the Lord's face and live (Ex 33:20). This is an idiomatic expression of intimate relationship, having nothing to do with the physical face (cp. Nm 12:8).

Joshua Articles

What Did Jesus Have to Do with Violence?

by Mark Durie

The conquest of Canaan, as described in the Bible, was a bloody one. Some cities like Jericho were put to the sword. Isn't it dangerous to have such material in the Bible? Might not these stories incite Christians to acts of bloodshed or even genocide against others? The answer to this question is a very emphatic "No!"

There are a number of reasons why the conquest of Canaan and other stories of conflict in the Bible do not incite Christians into violent acts of insurrection, murder and genocide.

One is that the account of the conquest of Canaan was entirely situation-specific. Yes, there is a divine instruction reported in the Bible to take the land by force and occupy it, driving out the inhabitants (Nm 33:52). However, this was not an eternal permission to believers to wage war. It was for a specific time and place. According to the Bible, the Canaanites had come under divine judgment because of their religious practices, above all child sacrifice (Dt 18:10-12; see note on Gn 15:16).

The sacrificing of firstborn children by immolating them before an idol was a persistent trait of Canaanite religion. The Phoenicians were Canaanites, and as late as the second century B.C. the people of Carthage, a Phoenician colony, were sacrificing children to their goddess Tanit. Archeologists have found charred remains of tens of thousands of newborn infants and fetuses buried in Carthage. The practice of child sacrifice made the Romans despise the Carthaginians.

The Bible's stories of the use of force against the Canaanites are more than balanced by the accounts of the destruction of Israel and Judah by foreign armies. These violent invasions are also described as being God's judgment, now turned against the Israelites because they did not distance themselves from Canaanite religious practices. Even the kings of Israel and Judah are charged with practicing child sacrifice (2 Kg 17:17; 21:6, Ezk 16:21).

Although the OT does condone the use of force to purge a land of violence and injustice, the Bible's attitude to such violence is not that it is sacred or holy. On the contrary, King David, who fought many wars with God's active support and guidance, was not allowed to be the one to build God's temple in Jerusalem, because there was so much blood on his hands (1 Ch 28:3).

Violence is regarded by the Bible as an inherently evil symptom of the corruption of the whole earth after the fall: "the earth was filled with violence" (Gn 6:11). In contrast, the prophet Isaiah looked forward to the day when the days of violence would be no more. Isaiah describes the Lord's anointed as unacquainted with violence: "They made His grave with the wicked, and with a rich man at His death, although He had done no violence and had not spoken deceitfully" (Is 53:9).

In this way the OT sets the scene for the revelation of Jesus Christ. The key question for Christians is "What did Jesus have to do with violence?" When we turn to consider Jesus and His followers, we find a systematic rejection of religious violence. Jesus' message was that His kingdom would be spiritual and not political. Jesus explicitly and repeatedly condemns the use of force to achieve His goals: "Put your sword back in place because all who take up a sword will perish by a sword" (Mt 26:52)

As Jesus went to the cross, He renounced force, even at the cost of His own life: "My kingdom is not of this world . . . If My kingdom were of this world, My servants would fight, so that I wouldn't be handed over to the Jews. As it is, My kingdom does not have its origin here" (Jn 18:36).

At one point Christ said, "Don't assume that I came to bring peace on the earth. I did not come to bring peace, but a sword." (Mt 10:34) This is sometimes cited by anti-Christian apologists as evidence for Jesus' militancy, but the statement occurs in an extended passage where Jesus is advising His disciples on the inevitability of persecution. The sword He refers to is the one which will be raised against them.

Jesus' take on violence was reinforced by the apostles Paul and Peter, who urged Christians to show consideration to their enemies, renounce retaliation, live peaceably, return cursing with blessing, and show humility to others (Rm 12:14-21;
Ti 3:1-2; 1 Pt 2:20-24). They also allowed that the (most likely pagan) civil authorities would need to use force to keep the peace and this role should be respected (Rm 13:1-7; 1 Pt 2:13-17). This was an extension of the earlier Jewish position that Jews should submit to the rule of law in whichever country they find themselves, even if the king was a pagan (Jr 29:4-7).

The NT supports the just use of force as a proper function of the state, whatever its religious identity. Thus it is not a specifically religious or sacred act to go to war or to use force to implement justice. It is just a matter of public duty, one aspect of the ordering of society which God has established for the common good. Fighting may be considered just, not because it is advancing any one faith over another, but because it is warranted and conducted according to principles of justice applicable to all people.

If only Christians had maintained this NT position down the centuries, the world would have been a better place. The invention of "Christendom" in the fourth Christian century, and the later influence of a centuries-long struggle against the Islamic jihad, ultimately led Christians to develop aberrant theologies that regarded warfare against non-Christians as "holy," and soldiers who died fighting in such wars were regarded as "martyrs." Thankfully, this view of warfare has been universally denounced in the modern era as incompatible with the gospel of Christ.

Is the Old Testament Trustworthy?

by Walter C. Kaiser Jr.

What is a modern reader of the Old Testament to do with a book that teaches animal sacrifice, male circumcision, strange dietary codes, and festivals based on an agricultural cycle? Its contents appear to be so ancient and so removed from our day that some dismiss it as "primitive religion."

Contrary to such a premature judgment, seven affirmations show that the OT is at once relevant and altogether trustworthy.

1. In every part of the Old Testament the writers claim the divine origin of their writings. One such inspired utterance comes from the core of the OT: the Ten Commandments. "Stone tablets inscribed by the finger of God" (Ex 31:18; Dt 5:22). More regularly, however, "the Spirit of the LORD spoke through [His prophets], His word was on [their] tongue[s]" (2 Sm 23:2). Indeed, Nathan the prophet knew that he had spoken his own words, which were not the same as the words from divine revelation. When he spoke God's message, he prefaced it, as did the OT prophets repeatedly, with "This is what the LORD says"
(2 Sm 7:5). Even in the wisdom books of the OT, Agur introduced himself as deficient and ignorant. He complained, "I am the least intelligent of men, and I lack man's ability to understand. I have not gained wisdom, and I have no knowledge of the Holy One" (Pr 30:2-3). How, then, would he know how or what to write about God? He asked the same questions in verse 4. But by verses 5-6 he had the answer: "Every word of God is pure . . . Don't add to His words, or He will rebuke you, and you will be proved a liar." The first part of verse 5 is a quote from Psalm 18:30, while verse 6 is a quote from Deuteronomy 4:2.

2. The 39 books of the Old Testament were immediately received as authoritative and canonical (belonging to Scripture). One of the most popular misconceptions is that a group of scholars held a rabbinical council in Jamnia in A.D. 90 to decide which books they would regard as authoritative for composing the OT. But this is incorrect: for (1) the council's decisions had no binding authority; (2) the discussions at that council were merely about the correct interpretations of the Ecclesiastes and Song of Songs; and (3) the list of books they regarded as canonical were already treated as the same 39 books in our current OT. Instead, the books of the OT were progressively recognized by those closest to the writers of the OT as being indeed revelation from God. Daniel, writing about 75 years after the prophet Jeremiah, regarded his prophecy about the 70-year captivity (Jr 25:11-12) as "the word of the LORD" (Dn 9:2). In fact, he placed the book of Jeremiah among "the books," that is, in the group of books called the Scriptures.

3. The text of the Old Testament books was uniquely preserved when compared with other ancient writings. Prior to the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls in 1947, we were limited to the Greek text of the Septuagint, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the Hebrew text of the Nash Papyrus dating from around A.D. 1000 for checking on the accuracy of the preservation of the OT text. That has all changed. In the 800 exemplars of OT biblical texts in the Dead Sea Scrolls, we now possess texts from 250 B.C. to A.D. 50. Moreover, the earliest example of an OT text is Numbers 6:24-26 from the mid-seventh century B.C. in the Ketef Hinnom Plaques. So carefully preserved are these texts that when scholars studied the Dead Sea Scroll of Isaiah, only three minor spelling changes (comparable to the difference between spelling "Saviour" and "Savior") were found in a text that covers about 100 pages in many English translations. That is an outstanding record of preserving the text of the Bible, which represents over a thousand years of copying the text.

4. The historical chronology found in the histories of the kings of Israel and Judah is completely verified and trustworthy. If chronology is the backbone of history, then it was necessary for someone to untangle the dates and systems of correlation between the kings of northern Israel and Judah if any confidence, much less sense, was to come out of these scores of numbers in the books of Kings and Chronicles. But that is what Edwin Thiele did as his doctoral dissertation for the University of Chicago. He first established as an absolute date (on our Julian calendar) June 15, 763 B.C., from the astronomical citations on the Assyrian Eponym, or Man of the Year, lists. These annual lists also made allusions to several of the Hebrew kings, thereby providing excellent synchronisms. From there he was able to show how some 500 numbers (all except one, which was later solved) were easily reconciled and totally trustworthy in every detail.

5. Archaeology has helped to show that the culture, persons, and events of the Old Testament are trustworthy. Archaeology has done much to further the cause of showing the reliability of the OT. Where there were alleged missing persons mentioned in the OT, but not known from external sources, such as King Sargon in Isaiah 20:1, or Governor Sanballat of Samaria (Neh 2:10), or kings David, Ahab, Jehu, and Hezekiah, Menahem, and even a prophet, Balaam, in each case spectacular finds have vindicated the claims of the OT. In like manner, where the OT claimed there were peoples such as the Hittites or the Horites, later finds vindicated the presence of these as well as other allegedly missing peoples. A similar list of allegedly missing places could be gathered, such as the land of Ophir or the sites along the Transjordanian route of the wilderness wanderings. But once again archaeology has given great help. This is not to say that all of those people and places alleged to have been created by the OT have been fully identified. For example, we still cannot find external validation for Darius the Mede (Dn 5:31). But the success of archaeology in the twentieth century alone is startling in its extent and in the depth of its influence.

6. The present literary form of the books comes to us from ancient times and in the final shape in which we presently possess them. No section of the OT has received more critical dissecting than the first five books of Moses, the Pentateuch. It was alleged that the books did not come by divine inspiration to Moses around 1400 B.C. but rather came from the hands of at least four main compilers (called J, E, D, and P) ranging from the eighth century B.C., with the final hand and the final re-editing coming in 400 B.C.! At the heart of this theory was the book of Deuteronomy, which critical scholars claimed was first written in 621 B.C., when King Josiah found the Book of the Law. But Deuteronomy exhibits the literary format that is unique to the middle of the second millennium B.C. Hittite suzerainty treaties (c. 1200–1400 B.C.), the same six sections of those treaties being found in the book of Deuteronomy. Had Deuteronomy been compiled in the first millennium (621 B.C.), as the critics claim, it would resemble instead the Assyrian treaties that had by that time deleted two of the six sections. Thus, according to the literary forms and criteria of the critics themselves, the key book in the disputed first five books must be placed in the days when Moses lived (i.e., around 1400 B.C.).

7. The writers of the Old Testament were aware that they were writing not only for their generation but also for those who would come later. The most convenient way to demonstrate this is to go to 1 Peter 1:12, where Peter stated, "It was revealed to [the prophets of the OT] that they were not serving themselves but you [people of Peter's generation and us]."

Introduction to Joshua

AUTHOR

The book of Joshua immediately follows the Pentateuch (Gn—Dt). In the arrangement of books in the Hebrew Bible, Joshua begins the section known as the Former Prophets. In the English Bible arrangement, it begins the section known as the Historical Books.

The book records the Israelite conquest of the land of Canaan under the leadership of Moses' successor, Joshua son of Nun. The Israelite conquest was the fulfillment of the promise to the patriarch Abraham that his descendants would possess the land of Canaan (Gn 12:6-9). The book of Joshua continues where the Pentateuch leaves off, narrating events and placing them in a theological perspective. The book is named for its principal character, Joshua son of Nun. Joshua's name means "Yahweh is salvation." The name "Jesus" is a derivative of Joshua from the Greek OT (LXX). Joshua was first mentioned in Exodus 17:9 where he was commissioned by Moses to lead the battle against the Amalekites. In Exodus 24:13 and Numbers 11:28 he was referred to as Moses' assistant (cp. Dt 1:38). In the list of spies whom Moses sent to survey the land of Canaan, he was identified as Hoshea son of Nun (Nm 13:8) but at some point Moses had renamed him Joshua (Nm 13:16). Joshua became Moses' successor in leading Israel to the land of Canaan (Nm 27:15-23; Dt 3:28; 31:23).

Though the best view of the authorship of the book of Joshua is that it is anonymous in its final form, it is clear from Joshua 24:26 that Joshua wrote certain portions of it. Critical scholars have typically asserted that the book was written later in history during the seventh and sixth centuries B.C. However, the Talmud and some rabbis attributed authorship of the book to Joshua. The book derived its contents from eyewitness accounts of the events that took place during the time of Joshua; therefore, it is reasonable to infer that these events were recorded during the time of Joshua and preserved by subsequent generations (Jos 4:9; 5:9; 6:25; 7:26; 8:28-29; 9:27; 13:13; 14:14; 15:63; 16:10). Precisely when the book of Joshua came to exist in its present form is unknown.

THE CONQUEST

The Israelite conquest of the land is to be understood as a grant from the Lord. It is clear from every story in the book that Yahweh was sovereign and exercised control of all events on behalf of the Israelites. Israel could not take credit for the many victories it won against nations that were larger and stronger. The clear theological message is that Yahweh fought for Israel and that explains the victories. (See the article, "Is the Old Testament Ethical?" page 116.)

These victories were won against nations whom the Lord had already determined to remove from the land of Canaan when their sinfulness would reach its developed and complete degeneracy (Gn 15:16). Though modern readers may question the morality of the Canaanite wars, they were divinely commanded precisely for a moral purpose. The inhabitants of Canaan had defiled the land with a sinfulness against Yahweh that would also contaminate His people (Lv 18:24-25; Dt 20:18), and hence, ultimately His ultimate saving purpose for the world. Archaeology has revealed something of the decadent nature of Canaanite religion. One of its principal goddesses, Anath, was referred to as the "holy one," yet she was a prostitute who savored carnage and sadism. Herein lies the divine justification for the dispossession of the Canaanites from the land.

THE RELIABILITY OF JOSHUA

The events recorded in the book of Joshua took place during the second millennium B.C. in the period immediately following the forty years of Israelite wilderness wanderings and the death of the entire adult generation of the exodus (except Joshua and Caleb). The date of the exodus has been the subject of much scholarly debate. Joshua apparently supports an early date for the exodus. The book refers to places and peoples best situated in the middle of the second millennium B.C. (e.g., the mention in Jos 13:6 of the Sidonians rather than the later more powerful people of Tyre). If the early date for the exodus (c. mid fifteenth century B.C.) is correct, then the events of Joshua occurred approximately in the late fifteenth century B.C.

Critics often cite the book's three dramatic miracles (the stopping of the Jordan River in 3:15-17; the collapse of Jericho's wall in 6:20; and Joshua's long day 10:12-14) as evidence of its legendary (i.e., fictional) character. But the Bible records miracles in many places, thus Joshua is not unusual in this respect. An anti-supernatural worldview may render miracles untenable to the critic, but anti-supernaturalism is a philosophical assumption, not a demonstrable scientific or historical fact. Most people today and historically have accepted the possibility of the supernatural because they have believed in a reality beyond nature. And this is certainly true of those who have personally come to know the God of the Bible through Jesus Christ.

It is important to note, however, that biblical narratives do not portray an indiscriminately saturated world of miracles. That is, the Bible does not read like the pagan mythologies of antiquity in which gods are constantly interrupting and disrupting ordinary human affairs. Biblical supernaturalism stands out in contrast because its miracles are not commonplace. The relative infrequency of biblical miracles may be seen in the fact that they constitute a small, albeit important, part of the narratives spanning approximately two millennia from the time of Abraham through the apostolic era. Moreover, certain critical turning points in biblical history are marked by more intense spiritual warfare and miracle. The life and ministry of Jesus Christ is the most obvious of these periods, and the exodus of Israel from Egypt with the subsequent conquest of Canaan represents another. The book of Joshua records the events at the close of this strategic era, and its three major miracles reveal Yahweh's sovereign work to install Israel in the land of promise.

In addition, many critical scholars have proposed that the Israelite conquest of Canaan portrayed in Joshua is not factual. The three major critical explanations for how the Israelites came to possess the land are: (1) the conquest model, which views the entrance of Israel into the land of Canaan as a massive hostile invasion resulting in destruction of cities and towns; (2) the peaceful infiltration model, which views the entrance of Israel into the land as a peaceful settlement among the Canaanites; and (3) the peasant revolt model, which views the situation as an internal political upheaval of peasants who revolted and toppled the existing Canaanite political system. The conquest model comes closest to the biblical account by acknowledging the invasion of Canaan by an external Israelite force. But critical assessments of this view typically overemphasize the violent destruction of cities and towns. The biblical account records that the only cities destroyed were Jericho, Ai, and Hazor (6:24; 8:28; 11:11,13). But the peaceful infiltration and peasant revolt models do not reflect the biblical account at all. Both are skeptical of the biblical account, reflecting an anti-supernatural bias in their attempt to offer alternative explanations for Israelite possession of Canaan. Yet neither model accounts for the biblical data. In the Bible, divine sovereignty is demonstrated in the victories of Israel. The Israelites entered the land of Canaan and took possession of it by the divine purpose and power of Yahweh who had already promised to give it to them (1:2-5).

Joshua Study Notes

1:1 The events of the book of Joshua continue the account of the history of Israel after the death of Moses (Dt 34). Joshua was Moses' divinely appointed successor (Nm 27:15-23).

1:2 The Lord instructed Joshua to lead the Israelites across the Jordan River to possess the land of Canaan. The basis for the Israelite conquest of Canaan wasthe Lord's promise to Abraham that He would give the land of Canaan to his descendants (Gn 12:7; 15:7-21; Dt 1:7-8).

1:3-5 The Lord promised Joshua great success; His divine presence would ensure victory. The territorialextent of the conquest was from the desert on the south to Lebanon on the north, and from the River Euphrates on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west (cp. Nm 13:17-25; 34:3-12).

1:6-9 The Lord exhorted Joshua to be strong and courageous in his leadership, based on His promise to Abraham and the certainty of victory. The success of Joshua's leadership hinged upon his obedience to the Book of the Law of Moses; he was to meditate upon the words of the Law continually.

1:10-11 Joshua gave orders to the officers to prepare the people to undertake the occupation of Canaan. Joshua's authority to lead came from his commissioning by Moses, at the Lord's direction (Nm 27:20-21).

1:12-18 Joshua ordered the Transjordanian tribes (Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh) to send their best warriors ahead to help with the conquest. This was in accordance with the command Moses had given these tribes in Dt 3:12-20. The theme of "rest" is prominent in the narrative. "Rest" is equivalent to possession of the land; the Transjordanian tribes would not "rest" in their land until the ten tribes possessed the land of Canaan.

2:1 Joshua initiated a reconnaissance mission, secretly dispatching two spies to Jericho. The narrative gives few details about the mission itself; it focuses on how the spies spent the night in the house of a harlot named Rahab. Some commentators read sexual innuendo into the text. The narrative, however, is careful to avoid any suggestion of a sexual encounter between the spies and Rahab by using terminology applicable to lodging rather than sex. The phrase "came to the house" indicates that the spies entered her house, not that they "went to bed with her," the description of sexual relations (e.g. Jdg 16:1). Rahab, in addition to being a prostitute, was probably an innkeeper.

2:2-7 Rahab hid the spies and misled the representatives of the king of Jericho when they came in search of them. She admitted the spies had entered her house but then sent the king's search party on a false pursuit outside the city. In so doing, Rahab assumed great personal risk to herself and her family; if they had discovered her deception the consequences would have been severe.

Scripture does not condone Rahab's lie; the Bible makes it clear that such deception is wrong. Nevertheless the NT celebrates Rahab's action (Heb 11:31) as a demonstration of her faith in the God of Israel and rejection of the Canaanites. Had she told the truth to the king's representatives, the spies would have been executed. The biblical narrator reports what actually happened, and does not speculate about what alternative Rahab might have had in her intent to protect the spies. On the question of lying for a good purpose, see also Ex 1:19.

2:8-14 The main point of this passage is Rahab's confession of faith in the Lord. She acknowledged (1) His divine providence in Israel's possession of Canaan,(2) His presence in Israel's exodus and migration through the wilderness, and (3) the Lord's sovereignty over the universe.

2:15-24 With Rahab's help the spies escaped Jericho and returned to Joshua with a positive report: the Lord had indeed given the land of Canaan to the Israelites.

3:1-6 Joshua instructed the people to follow the priests who would carry the ark of the covenant across the river ahead of them. The ark symbolized the Lord's presence with His people. The time had arrived for the fulfillment of the promise to Abraham (Gn 15:13-21).

3:7-8 The account makes it clear that Lord supervised the entire event through His instructions to Joshua.

3:9-13 The stoppage of the waters of the Jordan River would affirm that the living God was in the midst of Israel, and leading the people forward to dispossess the inhabitants of Canaan.

3:10 Seven people groups are named. Similar lists are found in 9:1; 11:3; 12:8 and 24:11. According to Dt 7:1-11 the Lord would remove the inhabitants of Canaan and settle the Israelites in the land, fulfilling His covenant with Abraham (Gn 15:7-8,18; 17:8). Various peoples, including the seven listed here, had occupied the land for generations. Their idolatrous religious practices and their potential corruption of the Israelites were the principal justifications for their dispossession. Yahweh, the God of Israel and the universe, would not forever tolerate the idolatry of the Canaanite peoples. Through the generations He had given them opportunity to repent, to reject the false gods and place their faith in Him as the living God. Their sin had "reached its full measure" (Gn 15:16), and time had run out.

3:14-17 When the priests carrying the ark of the covenant stepped into the Jordan River the waters "stood still, rising up" and the people crossed over on dry ground. The fact that the Jordan River was at flood stage heightens the wonder of the miracle; even the downstream waters ceased to flow toward the Dead Sea. Not since the exodus (cp. Ex 14:21-22) had Israel experienced such an awe-inspiring event of divine intervention. The similarity between this event and Israel's crossing of the Red Sea could not have been lost upon the people, as a reminder of the Lord's presence with, and purpose for, Israel.

4:4-9 The memorial stones were to commemorate the Lord's miraculous intervention in the crossing of the Jordan River. They would be a testimony to future generations that would ask what they signified.

4:9 "The stones are there to this day" is the first instance of aetiology, or the explanation of origins, in the book of Joshua. Etiologies often contain the phrase "to this day," referring to the time when the biblical writer was composing or compiling the narrative. Many critical scholars reject the authenticity of these etiologies, assuming that later editors inserted them. Recent scholarship, however, has shown that these etiologies should be taken seriously as preserving authentic reasons for the existence of particular situations, customs, place-names, settlement arrangements and the like. The aetiological use of the phrase "to this day" is found elsewhere in the book of Joshua at 5:9; 6:25; 7:26 (twice); 8:28-29; 9:27; 10:27; 13:13; 14:14; 15:63; 16:10. The stones were set up at Gilgal (v. 20), a name derived from the Hebrew word for "roll"; the name may reflect the method by which the large memorial stones taken from the Jordan were put in place.

4:18 Once the priests carrying the ark came up out of the Jordan River the waters resumed their course at flood stage.

5:1 The Bible occasionally employs the terms Amorite and Canaanite as all-inclusive designations for the ethnic groups inhabiting Canaan (see Gn 12:6; 15:16; 50:11; Ex 13:11; Jos 24:15; Jdg 1:1; Neh 9:24).

5:2-12 The Israelites were circumcised because the new generation had not undergone this rite during the 40 years in the wilderness. Circumcision was the sign of the Lord's covenant with Abraham (see Gn 17:10-14) and signified faith in Him. Through the ritual of circumcision the nation renewed its fidelity to the covenant. The celebration of the Passover commemorated the exodus. It marked a new chapter in the history of Israel, for with it the people began to live on the produce of the land of Canaan and no longer on the manna which the Lord provided in the wilderness.

5:13-15 As he approached Jericho, Joshua encountered the "commander of the LORD's army." This must be understood as an appearance of the Lord through His angelic messenger. In such appearances, Scripture usually makes no distinction between the Angel of the Lord and the God Himself (see Gn 16:9-14; 18:1-33). Joshua's act of prostration "in worship" (the Hb word for "worship" means to bow, or lie prostrate) is not reverence for a lesser being than God Himself. The encounter reminded Joshua that it was the Lord who would lead the battle against Jericho and insure victory for the Israelites. The looming battle with Jericho required spiritual, not military, preparation.

6:1 The security measures taken by the Jericho authorities recall 5:1, which recounts that the Amorite and Canaanite monarchs lost courage when news of the miraculous crossing of the Jordan River reached them. The city of Jericho was in a state of high alert.

6:2-15 The Lord's instructions to Joshua and the Israelites had more to do with worship and ceremony than military strategy. The Israelites marched around the city of Jericho once a day for six days. On the seventh day they marched around the city seven times. In the Bible, the number "seven" usually has ceremonial significance, as indicative of the covenant. The Sabbath, or seventh day, was a sign of the covenant, and the Hebrew verb "to swear" (i.e., take an oath of fidelity to a covenant), nishba', is based on the word for "seven."

6:16-19 On the seventh time around Jericho the priests sounded their trumpets. Joshua's orders may be summarized as follows. (1) "Shout! For the LORD has given you the city." (2) Everything and everyone is to be devoted to the Lord for destruction. (3) Only Rahab and her family members with her are to be spared. (4) Do not take for yourself anything that is devoted to the Lord for destruction. (5) All silver, gold, bronze and iron must go into the Lord's treasury.

6:17 The words "set apart" translate the Hebrew cherem, which refers to "devoted things" belonging exclusively to the Lord (often called the "ban"). Jericho was the first city the Israelites took in their conquest of Canaan. As such, it and all its inhabitants were cherem to the Lord. Everyone except Rahab and her family were to be slain, and everything in the city was to be destroyed except the gold, silver, and articles of bronze and iron.

The concept of cherem can be difficult to understand today. How can the destruction of a city and the killing of all its inhabitants be justified, and how can one believe it was the Lord who specifically ordered these things? Part of the answer lies in recognizing the holiness of God and the sinfulness of the Canaanites. God is holy, and He created Israel to be a people totally consecrated to Him (Ex 20:3; Lv 18:1-5; 19:1-2). The persistent sins of the Canaanites, which were an affront to the holiness of God, finally demanded that His judgment be executed through their complete removal from the land (Lv 18:24-28; 20:22-24). God would bless those who loved Him and kept His commands but He would punish those who hated Him (Dt 7:9-10).

The sins of the Canaanites are catalogued in Lv 18:1–20:27, and Dt 9:1-6 gives the theological rationale for their extermination. The Canaanites were arrogant and proud because of their strength, and the Lord had determined to bring about their destruction, driving them out ahead of Israel (Dt 9:2-5). The concept of cherem demonstrates the utter seriousness of sin and its consequences —and points to the ultimate need for a Savior to rescue the human race.

6:20-21 When the people followed Joshua's instructions the Lord caused the wall of Jericho to collapse, leaving the city vulnerable to invasion. The city fell through "spiritual warfare"—ceremonial marching, trumpet blasts and the victory shout that was a feature of Israel's celebration of Yahweh's dominion (cp. Ps 47:5)—and not through traditional military maneuvers. The archaeological evidence for Jericho's being inhabited during this period has been difficult to interpret, and some scholars have questioned the veracity of the biblical account of its fall to the Israelites. Archaeologists who have no previous bias against the biblical record, however, have not found sufficient reason to question this account.

6:22-25 Rahab and her family were spared from the cherem in keeping with the promise Joshua's spies made to her. Her faith saved her and her family from certain death. The statement at the end of verse 25, "and she lives in Israel to this day," refers to the continuation of her family line. Rahab, the Canaanite prostitute, is included in the genealogy of the Savior, Jesus Christ (Mt 1:5), thereby participating in the Lord's ultimate triumph of grace.

6:26-27 Joshua pronounced a curse upon anyone who would undertake to rebuild the city of Jericho. Jericho was cherem to the Lord and would be rebuilt at great cost to the builder. (See 1 Kg 16:34 for the fulfillment of this prophecy). News of the defeat and destruction of Jericho spread throughout the Near East, and Joshua became famous.

7:1 The success of Israel at Jericho was marred by unfaithfulness with respect to the cherem on the part of Achan, who took items for himself from the spoils. The Lord held the entire nation responsible for the action of one person who violated His command. This demonstrates the biblical principle of corporate solidarity (cp. Dt 2:34; 5:9; 13:12-18). Sin is not merely an individual matter, but affects the entire community of which the individual is a member.

7:2-5 The spies Joshua sent underestimated the enemy at Ai. As a result of the hidden sin of Achan and the miscalculation of enemy strength, the fighters of Ai routed the Israelite invaders. This surprising defeat, following so closely upon their amazing victory at Jericho, caused panic among the Israelites. It was all the more shocking because Ai was no longer a large, highly fortified city (its name means "ruin").

7:6-9 Joshua and the elders of Israel prostrated themselves before the Lord with traditional gestures of lament over their defeat. Joshua's prayer appealed to the Lord to uphold His own reputation with the pagan nations.

7:10-15 The Lord responded by revealing that sin had been committed regarding the cherem. The perpetrator was to be identified and held accountable.

7:16-23 When Joshua began the process of investigation, the Lord identified Achan as the culprit. He brought the stolen items of the cherem before Joshua and the Lord.

7:24-26 Achan, his entire family, and all his possessions were destroyed—God's judgment for violating the cherem.

8:1-29 The Israelites mounted a second assault against Ai, and this time conquered it. The Israelites executed the king of Ai and all its inhabitants. Israel was permitted to keep the plunder and the livestock.

9:1-2 Upon learning of Israel's victories at Jericho and Ai, a group of Canaanite kings formed a defense alliance against Israel.

9:3-27 The Gibeonites devised a plan to protect themselves from annihilation by pretending to be from outside of Canaan. Joshua made a treaty with them without consulting the Lord. When Joshua and the Israelites found they had been deceived, they could not go back on their oath; the Gibeonites were permitted to live, though relegated to permanent servitude. This incident illustrates the force of the oath, and the spoken word, in Israelite culture. It also illustrates the problems that arise when the Lord's counsel isn't sought.

10:1-11 Five Amorite kings, led by Adoni-zedek of Jerusalem, formed another coalition against Israel. They attacked Gibeon in reprisal for making peace with Israel. Joshua and the Israelite army had to come to Gibeon's aid because of their oath. The Lord reassured Joshua that He would fight on Israel's behalf and gain the victory.

10:10 "The LORD threw them into confusion before Israel." This indicates that God was miraculously fighting on behalf of Israel. This was the only way a small nation of twelve tribes could defeat a coalition of well-established cities and their defenders.

10:11 "The LORD threw large hailstones on them from the sky . . . and they died." This is another instance of God's intervention on behalf of Israel. God slew more of the Amorite fighters than did the Israelites.

10:12-15 In one of the most remarkable occurrences recorded in biblical history, God responded to Joshua's prayer by causing the sun and the moon to stop their movement. Time came to a standstill for nearly an entire day. This text is more than a record of astronomical events; it also makes a theological point. The supposed gods of the sun and moon were prominent in Canaanite religion; Yahweh's greater power now divests these bodies of their religious significance and puts them to the service of His people. The Genesis account of creation offers a similar perspective; the sun and moon—the "two great lights" (Gn 1:16)—do not appear till the fourth day; they are not identified with the light of God's first creative act (Gn 1:3), but serve as regulators of earthly time.

Interpreters have proposed four major explanations of this passage: (1) the earth stopped its rotation, (2) a solar eclipse occurred, (3) an astrological omen took place, or (4) the passage is figurative, not literal. The second option is not plausible because the text does not state that the sun and moon darkened; they continued to shine but stopped moving (the verbal root dmm is best translated "to cease"). The third option suggests that Joshua employed a pagan form of prayer based upon the practice, found in other ancient Near Eastern cultures, of reading omens in the movement of heavenly bodies. This option is inconsistent with Joshua's faithfulness to the Lord. The fourth option is not credible because vv. 13-14 state clearly that the sun and moon stopped their motion. The best way to understand these events is to accept the first option, according to the plain reading of the text. Through alteration of the earth's rotation the apparent movement of the sun and moon across the sky was halted. The urban legend that Princeton scientists or NASA computers have "discovered" Joshua's long day has circulated for more than a half century. Though baseless, this fictitious "scientific" explanation is still widely promoted.

The event was the act of a sovereign and omnipotent God who governs His creation. The emphasis of the passage is how, on that particular day, God listened to the prayer of Joshua in a way that had never been witnessed. The event was clear evidence that the Lord was fighting for Israel. The quote from the Book of Jashar probably encompasses vv. 13b-15, since v. 16 continues the narrative from vv. 10-11.

10:16-27 The five Amorite kings were found hiding at Makkedah. They were brought out to Joshua and executed.

10:28-43 Joshua completed the conquest of southern Canaan. Verse 43 indicates that the Lord was fighting these battles and that He secured the victories. All the inhabitants of these cities were executed. On the justification for their extermination, see note on 6:17.

11:1-15 Jabin, king of Hazor, formed an alliance of northern kings. They assembled a large army with assets that included horses and chariots. The Lord gave Israel a complete victory over this coalition, and its military assets were destroyed. In reprisal for Jabin's instigation of the alliance, Hazor received the most severe punishment. Joshua executed Jabin and all Hazor's inhabitants and burned the city. Verses 12-15 are a summary of the accomplishments of Joshua's northern campaign and restate his obedience in all that the Lord had commanded through Moses.

11:16-23 The conquest of northern Canaan was complete; this passage summarizes Joshua's achievements. Verses 18-20 state the historical and theological justification for the conquest: the Canaanites (with the exception of the Gibeonites) had refused to make peace with Israel, for God had hardened their hearts so that he might destroy them without mercy. (On the justification for their extermination, see note on 6:17.) It is noteworthy that in 11:22 no mention is made of the Philistines, who had not yet migrated to Gaza, Gath and Ashdod. This is an incidental indicator of the age of the narrative, refuting contemporary critical theories that date the book much later.

12:1-6 The list of the conquered kings and territories of Transjordan (the region east of the Jordan River) consists of Sihon king of the Amorites and Og king of Bashan. These victories occurred during the time of Moses, before Joshua became Israel's leader (Nm 21:10-35; Dt 1:4; 2:24–3:11). They are mentioned here to provide a historical survey of all that had been accomplished in the drive toward the occupation of the promised land, through the grace of God toward the nation. Moses had allotted the lands of Transjordan to the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh as their inheritance (Nm 32:1-5). The statement "the land had rest from war" (Jos 11:23) marks the end of the initial narrative of conquest.

12:7-24 The list of the conquered kings and territories of Cisjordan (the region west of the Jordan River) consists of a geographical summary in vv. 7-8 and a list of 31 kings, with the cities they ruled, in vv. 9-24. After the first two cities (Jericho and Ai) the list can be divided into cities in the south and those in the north. This list not only records the conquest of Canaanite cities, but also represents the accomplishment of God's purpose. In giving them into the hands of Israel, He fulfilled His promise to Abraham that his descendants would occupy the land (Gn 12:6-7; 15:18).

13:1-7 This chapter begins a new section in the book of Joshua. Israel is transitioning from conquest to settlement in Canaan. Three major geographical areas remain to be conquered: (1) Philistia, including the five major cities of the Philistines: Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Gath and Ekron (vv. 2-3); (2) the Phoenician coast (v. 4); and (3) the Lebanon mountain range (v. 5). By this time Joshua has aged and is nearing the end of his life.

13:15-32 This section details the geographical extent of land allocated to the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh (Nm 32:1-5).

14:1-5 This section introduces the allocation of the land to the remaining tribes. It was to be determined by casting lots (perhaps the Urim and Thummim of the high priest, Lv 8:8) for which parcel of land each tribe should inherit. This was according to the Lord's directive for the allotment of the land (Nm 26:55-56; 33:54). Use of the lot by Eleazar, the high priest, was not a matter of chance; it was a matter of obedience to the Lord's instruction (Nm 26:55-56). God was responsible for the outcome of the casting of the lot (cp. Jos 18:6-10; Pr 16:33). Discerning the will of God, is never a matter of chance. The Levites did not receive an inheritance but were given cities in which to live (Nm 35:1-8; Jos 21:1-41).

14:6-15 The tribal allotment to Judah began with Caleb's inheritance. Caleb had been a leader in Israel (Nm 13:6). He was one of two spies who had brought a positive report to Moses at Kadesh-barnea (Nm 13:30). Together with a delegation of the men of Judah, he presented his claim to Joshua, who gave him the hill country of Hebron as an inheritance.

14:6 The first distribution of the land began from Gilgal, Joshua's location at the time. Gilgal, site of the memorial stones from the Jordan, appears to have been the central encampment for Joshua and the priests at this stage.

15:1-62 Judah was the first tribe to receive an inheritance west of the Jordan because of its prominence among the tribes of Israel (see Gn 49:8-12). The description of Judah's allotment (Jos 15:1-12) is more detailed than are those for the other tribes. Verses 13-19 contain an account of Caleb's success in expelling the Canaanites from the region of Hebron, his inheritance. Verses 20-62 detail the allotments to the various clans of Judah.

15:63 The tribe of Judah could not completely remove the Jebusites from Jerusalem. This is the first mention of a tribe's inability to expel the Canaanite inhabitants. Jerusalem remained in Jebusite hands until the time of David (2 Sm 5:6-7).

16:1–17:18 This section details the inheritance of the descendants of Joseph. It includes the boundaries of the allotment to the descendants of Joseph (16:1-4),the inheritances allotted to the tribe of Ephraimand the half-tribe of Manasseh (16:5–17:13), and therequest for additional land from those tribes (17:14-18).

16:10 The Ephraimites were unsuccessful in driving out the Canaanites who lived in Gezer.

17:3-6 The Lord, through Moses, had granted the five daughters of Zelophehad their inheritance (Nm 27:7-8). They approached Joshua and Eleazar the priest to claim their inheritance. The issue of a daughter's right of inheritance had been settled many years earlier (Nm 36:1-10) and Joshua faithfully acted upon their reminder.

17:12-13 The Canaanites of this region were too entrenched to dislodge. The Manassites, however, eventually became strong enough to subject them to forced labor.

18:1–19:48 This section surveys the distribution of land to the remaining tribes of Benjamin, Simeon, Zebulun, Issachar, Asher, Naphtali and Dan. The Levites did not receive an inheritance of land because of their special role as priests.

18:1 The central encampment of Joshua, the priests, and the whole assembly moved from Gilgal to Shiloh. This is the first mention of the tent of meeting (i.e., the tabernacle) in the book of Joshua. It was the place where the presence of the Lord dwelt and where the people came to meet with God. The account of its origins is found in Ex 25–27. The reference to the tent of meeting here and in Jos 19:51 indicates that all was done according to the Lord's directives.

18:2 Although the land had been subdued (18:1) the other seven Cisjordan tribes (after Judah and the Joseph tribes) had not taken possession of it or apportioned their inheritance.

18:3 The men of Judah, including Caleb, had approached Joshua about their allotment of land (14:6). Here Joshua had to confront the remaining seven tribes about completing the allotment of the land.

18:4 Twenty-one surveyors, appointed from among the seven tribes, were to conduct an official survey of the rest of the land so that Joshua could distribute it.

18:6 "I will cast lots for you here in the presence of the LORD our God." Joshua would cast lots before the Lord so the Lord would determine the allotment of each tribe. The casting of lots (see 14:1-5) was the means the Lord had directed for this purpose (Nm 26:55-56). His presence would determine the extent of the tribal allotments.

18:11–19:48 This section lists the remaining tribal allotments. The account of each tribal apportionment includes a description of its boundaries and a catalog of the cities included.

18:11-28 The description of Benjamin's apportionment is the most detailed among those of the remaining tribes. Benjamin's territory, though the smallest in extent, was centrally located and included the site of Jerusalem.

19:1,9 Simeon was allotted territory within the boundaries of Judah because Judah had a surplus of land.

19:47 The tribe of Dan found it difficult to remove the Canaanites from their allotted inheritance, so the tribe migrated to the city of Leshem (Laish), which they renamed Dan, at the northern extremity of Canaan. Further details of the circumstances of Dan's migration are given in Jdg 1:34; 18:1-31.

19:49-50 After the other tribal apportionments were completed, the tribes obeyed the Lord by granting Joshua an inheritance in the hill country of Ephraim.

19:51 This summary verse concludes the account of the division of the land by tribal allotment.

20:1-9 Six cities of refuge were established to provide asylum for people who had committed manslaughter (unintentional killing) (cp. Ex 21:13; Dt 4:41-43). The Lord issued detailed instructions to Moses about how these cities were to function (see Nm 35:9-34). The offender could seek refuge in them from the "avenger of blood" (i.e., the near relative who would take the perpetrator's life in reprisal) until his case could be decided by an equitable trial (Jos 20:6). The system of cities of refuge allowed justice to prevail in the land while preventing blood vengeance of a "vigilante" sort.

20:3,5,9 The "avenger of blood" was, typically, a near relative of the murder victim (or some other designated person) who was responsible for exacting legal vengeance against the murderer (see Gn 9:5-6; Ex 21:23-24). While vengeance was the domain of God alone (Dt 32:35; Ps 94:23; Pr 20:22), He also recognized it as part of ancient Israel's justice system. Vengeance was never to be a private or personal matter, but was strictly regulated by the Law of Moses. For further discussion of the system of blood vengeance and the cities of refuge, see Nm 35:9-34; Dt 19:1-13.

21:1-3 The leaders of the Levites approached Eleazar, Joshua and the tribal heads about fulfilling the Lord's command to Moses to give towns for them to live in and pasturelands for their flocks from within the other tribal allotments (Nm 35:1-8; Lv 25:32).

21:3,8 Verses 3 and 8 form a literary bracket around verses 4-7 showing that the Israelites obeyed the will of the Lord.

21:4-7 Joshua and Eleazar distributed the cities among the Levitical clans by the method of casting lots. Three major clans are listed: the Kohathites, the Gershonites, and the Merarites. The Kohathites were further divided into two groups, those who were descendants of Aaron and those who were not (vv. 4-5).

21:9-42 Although 13:14 notes that the Levites received no inheritance, they were allotted 48 towns, with their pasturelands, within the territories of the other tribes (Nm 35:6-7). This passage catalogs those cities.

21:43-45 With the distribution and settlement of the land of Canaan the Lord's promise to the patriarchs was fulfilled (Gn 12:7; 15:7, 18-21). Although Canaanites continued to reside among the Israelites in some places, the land as a whole was firmly under their control. Several passages assert total triumph over the Canaanites (e.g., Jos 10:40-42; 11:16-23; 12:7-24; 18:1; 23:1), while others note that their removal was incomplete (13:2-6; 15:63; 16:10; 17:12-13,16-18; 23:4-5,7,12-13). These statements are not mutually contradictory; rather, the narrative gives a realistic picture of the conditions of the occupation. The conquest of Canaan did not require that every individual Canaanite be removed or annihilated; displacement of the Canaanites was a process that went on over a period of time (23:4-5). It was still the case that God had faithfully fulfilled His promise to Israel.

22:9-34 While returning to their homes in the Trans-jordan the men of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh provoked a crisis by erecting an altar at Geliloth. Their altar was a replica (v. 28) of the one at the tabernacle, intended as a witness to future generations of the legitimacy of their share in the inheritance. This was an innocent act on their part, as they did not intend the altar to be used for sacrifices. The Cisjordan tribes, however, viewed such an altar as a threat to the unity of Israel as a whole. The western tribes sent a delegation, headed by Phinehas son of Eleazar, to investigate the matter. The eastern tribes explained their purpose in erecting the altar to the satisfaction of the rest (vv. 21-31), and the crisis was resolved.

22:10 "A large, impressive altar" indicates that it would be seen by anyone who passed by.

22:12 The assembly of the Cisjordan tribes at Shiloh was preparing to go to war against the Transjordan tribes in order to correct what they thought was a breach of the covenant with the Lord.

22:16-18 The Phinehas delegation expressed its concern in the strongest terms. The word translated "treachery" is used twice in verse 16 and refers to an act of rebellion; the same word was used with reference to Achan's deed at Jericho (7:1). The delegation recalled the incident at Peor (Nm 25) as an example of the consequences of idolatry. The Phinehas delegation was concerned that an act of spiritual unfaithfulness on the part of the tribes east of the Jordan would endanger all Israel.

22:33-34 The incident ended peaceably. The Transjordan tribes named the altar in accordance with its purpose: it was to be a witness for future generations to the sovereignty of the Lord and the unity of all the tribes of Israel.

23:1-2 Israel had come to a point of "rest" from her enemies. Major conquest operations were completed and Israel controlled the region as a whole. Joshua, now advanced in age, summoned the leaders of Israel and gave his farewell address. The reference to Joshua's old age confirms that the conquest took a long time.

23:3-11 The theological justification for the conquest was the declaration that it was the Lord's doing, not Israel's. The Israelites had not subdued the Canaanites merely to satisfy an agenda of aggression. The Lord had determined to remove them from the land and give it to Israel. Joshua admonished the people to remain faithful to the Mosaic covenant and to avoid committing idolatry with the gods of the Canaanites who remained in the land. Joshua's speech echoes the words of Moses in Dt 7:1-5.

23:14 Joshua acknowledged that his time on earth was about to expire. The Lord had been faithful in fulfilling all His promises to Israel.

23:15-16 Reminiscent of the curse ceremony of Dt 28, Joshua warned the people that disobedience would bring disaster and dispossession for Israel. The Lord was faithful to bless obedience and curse disobedience. If Israel repeated the Canaanites' sins of idolatry, she would experience the same consequence: removal from the land. The entire section of Jos 23:1–24:24 parallels the book of Deuteronomy, Moses' "farewell address," as a ceremony of the renewal of the covenant. It contains the same elements: a rehearsal of the Lord's deeds in delivering His people (24:2-13); the people's pledge of loyalty (24:14-26); the reference to witnesses (24:22, 27); mention of the laws of the covenant, "a statute and ordinance" (24:25); and the sanction of judgment to come if Israel abrogates the covenant (23:12-16). The order differs, but all the components are present.

24:1 Joshua summoned a final assembly of all Israel at Shechem and gave his farewell speech.

24:2-13 Joshua began his farewell speech with a review of the salvation history of Israel from Terah the father of Abraham down to that present time. He recounted the mighty acts of the Lord on behalf of His people in liberating them from Egyptian enslavement, guiding them through the wilderness, and subduing their opponents. Joshua reminded them that it was not by their own power that these great deeds were accomplished. This "historical recital" is one of the elements of covenant renewal, seen in brief form in the introduction to the Ten Commandments (Ex 20:2; Dt 5:6).

24:14 After his the review of salvation history Joshua challenged the people, by means of three imperatives, to be faithful to the Lord. The people were to "fear" and "worship" the Lord and "get rid of" all idols. Worship of Yahweh alone was the fundamental stipulation of His covenant with them (Ex 20:3; Dt 5:7).

24:15 "As for me and my family, we will worship the Lord." Joshua and his family were committed to the Lord regardless of the decision of the people. Joshua spoke as the head of his household and the spiritual leader of his family. His words reflected an undivided devotion to the Lord that served as an example of faithfulness for all the people and an incentive for them to reaffirm their loyalty to the covenant. His undivided devotion is a source of encouragement for Christian believers today.

24:16-18 The response from the people was overwhelmingly in favor of serving the Lord. However their commitment would be short-lived (Jdg 1–2).

24:19-28 Joshua expresses doubt concerning the sincerity of commitment on the part of the people, but the people insist that they will be faithful in worshiping the Lord alone to the exclusion other gods. Whether Joshua really meant to question their sincerity on this occasion, or whether his words demanding recertification of their loyalty were a formal part of the ceremony, is open to interpretation. In either case, halfhearted commitment is worthless.

24:29-33 The book of Joshua ends with the record of the death of Joshua and Eleazar the priest. Israel was faithful to the Lord during Joshua's lifetime and the lives of the leaders of his generation (24:31). However, after the passing of that generation—the group that had known Moses' leadership in the wilderness and had followed Joshua in the conquest of Canaan—fell once again into idolatry.

Judges Articles

How Should We Handle Unresolved Questions About the Bible?

by Paul Copan

Because God is truthful, we can expect His written self-revelation (in the original manuscripts) to be truthful in what it affirms. But not everything in Scripture is perfectly clear. The Apostle Peter admitted that Paul's writings are hard to understand in places (2 Pt 3:15-16). Besides sophisticated theological material, historical distance and cultural differences exist between the biblical world and our own. What was apparent to Israel and the early church may appear less clear to us today. Yet lack of clarity doesn't equal discrepancy.

Some critics cite numerous "contradictions" that actually turn out to be resolvable upon examination. Because the Bible is both divinely inspired and a human work, we can expect (1) differing writing styles and personalities to be expressed in it, and (2) the use of earlier records or documents and material from writers outside the Bible (cp. Jos 10:13; 1 and 2 Ch; Lk 1:1-4). We shouldn't require that biblical writers cite OT passages verbatim; they could generalize or summarize without being exact (e.g., what was said at Jesus' baptism, Peter's confession of Jesus, the placard on Jesus' cross). And we don't have the exact words Jesus spoke (which were mainly Aramaic, not Greek), though His voice does come through. These aren't truly unresolved questions.

When discovering more challenging passages, though, how should we proceed?

• Clarify a passage by examining its context or by using clear passages to examine the unclear. Context reveals that "justify" and "works" in James 2 mean something different than they do in Romans 3. Also, the teaching of the NT letters can help us distinguish between historical descriptions in Acts and what's normative for church life.

• Absence of evidence isn't evidence of absence. Skeptics may mention biblical cities that haven't been discovered (though lots have been!), concluding that Scripture is unreliable. But earlier absence-of-evidence accusations regarding Abraham's camels, the Hittite people, or the Davidic dynasty have been overturned by later archaeological discoveries, confirming Scripture.

• Be charitable toward the author. Let's take an example here. Proverbs 26:4-5 advises (1) not to answer a fool according to his folly and then (2) to answer him! The skeptic's charge of "stupidity" or "contradiction" is unrealistic. Surely we should give the benefit of the doubt to the wise compiler of Proverbs: he recognized that sometimes answering a fool is appropriate and that at other times silence is the best choice.

• What the Bible describes is often different from what it prescribes. Another example: while Scripture mentions Jephthah's rash vow (Jdg 11), such a vow is not endorsed by God.

• The author may be using a literary strategy, making a particular theological point, or just observing; journalistic precision isn't always his concern. Matthew 8 and 9 intentionally cluster miracles together; it's not chronological. Matthew highlights Peter's importance, thus downplaying his blunders included in other Gospels. The two "great lights" of Genesis 1, namely the sun and moon, are relatively small luminaries compared to other bodies we now know about in the universe, but the Bible's reference is observational, not scientific (cp. "sunset," not "earthturn").

• We'll have to be content to live with unanswered questions. Although there are many fine evangelical commentaries and scholars dealing with questions we may have, much will be hazy. We see through a glass darkly.

Why Does God Hide Himself?

by Kenneth T. Magnuson

The question "Why does God hide Himself?" is asked at times, not only by the atheist or agnostic seeking to cast doubt on God's existence, but also by believers seeking a personal experience of God. It is therefore related to further questions. The doubter or skeptic may ask, "Is there a God?" or "If God exists, how can we know that He exists, and why doesn't He reveal Himself more clearly?" The anxious seeker may ask, "Is God in control of the universe?" and "Is God concerned about my life and problems?" In times of trouble many wonder if God is there and if He cares. And finally the doubter, seeker, and follower alike may ask, "How can I know God?"

A biblical perspective on God's hiddenness encourages us not to become overly anxious. God does, in fact, reveal Himself but perhaps not in the way some demand. In one sense God is indeed hidden because He is Spirit and cannot be seen physically (Jn 4:24). The demand for certain types of physical evidence of God will leave us wanting, and may be misplaced, as it diminishes the need for faith. Further, God may deliberately hide Himself in order to expose people's hearts, drawing closer those who believe, while turning away from those who turn from Him (Dt 31:17; Is 59:2).

Yet the Bible encourages us with the promise that if we seek God faithfully, we will find Him (Jr 29:13). While God is hidden in some sense, yet He is knowable, so we may ask God to show Himself to us (Pr 8:17; Jr 29:13; Mt 7:7-8). We may also look for and acknowledge the ways that God has already chosen to reveal Himself. First, God has revealed Himself to us in His Word (Ex 3:14; Heb 1:1; cp. Lk 24:27). Second, God has revealed Himself decisively in His Son, Jesus Christ (Jn 1:1,14; 14:8-9; Col 2:9; Heb 1:1-3). Third, God has revealed Himself and His power through creation (Ps 19:1-2; Rm 1:20). Fourth, God reveals Himself through the power and the indwelling of His Spirit (Jn 14:16-17; 1 Jn 5:6-12). Finally, God reveals Himself through the witness of believers (Ac 1:8; 2:1-4; 1 Jn 1:1-4).

Introduction to Judges

AUTHOR

The books of Judges and Ruth are treated together because the events of the book of Ruth took place during the time of the judges (Ru 1:1). Both books face challenges to their authenticity regarding matters of authorship, the dating of their writings, the possible addition of non-original material by later authors, and the purposes for their having been written.

Although neither book identifies its author, Jewish tradition (Baba Bathra 14b-15a) declares the prophet Samuel to have authored both books. Challenges to this view are at least threefold. (1) The books refer to the times of the judges as having taken place in distant memory (Jdg 17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25; Ru 1:1; 4:17,22). (2) The books take the time to explain past customs or events (Jdg 11:39; 14:10; 20:27-28; Ru 4:7). (3) The text says, "In those days there was no king in Israel," seemingly writing from the perspective of a time when Israel had a king, and Samuel died before David reigned as king (Jdg 21:25; 1 Sm 25:1). Those who reject the traditional view of Samuel as author typically favor as the author either King Solomon or an anonymous person who wrote the books during David's reign.

Counterarguments to the three above, supporting Samuel as the author, include the following: (1) The time of the judges technically ceased with the ascension to the throne of Saul, who was anointed king by Samuel (1 Sm 10:1; 11:14-15). Thus Samuel could easily have written these books after the time of the judges. (2) Sufficient time had passed between the actual events or customs and the recording of those events or customs for memories to have faded and certain customs to have fallen out of vogue; hence, the need for explanations for later generations of readers. (3) The references to a king in general in the book of Judges (17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25), and the references to David in particular in the book of Ruth (Ru 4:17,22), fit acceptably within Samuel's life span since he saw the coronation of Saul and later anointed David as king.

Whichever view of authorship is correct (i.e., Samuel, Solomon, or an anonymous author), each easily accounts for any concern regarding the possible addition of materials at the end of either book.

THE RELIABILITY OF JUDGES AND RUTH

Controversy surrounds the books of Judges and Ruth. Even a cursory reading of these books causes many to question the validity of their inclusion in the Scripture, the content being deemed by some as unworthy of God or of little or no value to twenty-first-century readers. These books include: (1) graphic depictions of violence (such as the slaughter of seemingly innocent people by the command of God, maiming, human sacrifice, and gloating over the deaths of one's enemies);

(2) heroes who are anything but role models (while seemingly under the control of the Holy Spirit, they engage in deceit, lies, mockery, and self-centered behavior);

(3) illicit sex and sexual innuendo; (4) a degrading depiction of women; and (5) a writing style that seemingly includes exaggeration or fabrication.

The inclusion of certain statements at the end of each of the books dramatically alters how we are to understand the purpose of each book. In Judges the author declared that in the times about which he was writing "there was no king in Israel" (17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25). In Ruth, the author presented genealogical records that include the name of King David, a king who lived during the post-judges era (Ru 4:17,22). Thus, rather than being merely guidelines for how to live during difficult times, both books appear to be defending one of two views: (1) living during the present age of the kings was better than living in the previous age of the judges (cp. the book of Judges); or (2) despite coming from an insignificant, non-royal family (cp. 1 Sm 16:1,13; 18:18), David had an excellent heritage, arising from godly grandparents of a family in the messianic line.

Regarding the controversial matters of the content, a closer reading of the text reveals that, by being written as straightforward accounts, the books display a higher degree of credibility than if they presented sanitized histories. Neither book attempts to gloss over any of the sins, foolishness, or errors of the people described in them. Despite conclusions skeptics might draw from a cursory assessment of the texts, the books themselves never place blame for sin, foolishness, or error on God. God was not guilty and the so-called innocent were, in fact, not innocent at all. Instead they deserved judgment.

The events and customs fit precisely into the story lines of their respective books and align well with what is known from ancient sources of information outside the Bible. The stories may not make us feel comfortable, but these books were not designed to comfort. These two books together present hard-hitting truth designed to disturb, to inform, and to challenge.

Judges Study Notes

1:1-4 How could a loving and merciful God condone, encourage, and even participate in war? God is not only loving, but also a holy and just God who brings wise judgment upon the guilty. Although Canaanites had been increasing in wickedness for more than 400 years, God exhibited His grace to them during that time (Gn 15:16). The time for judgment, however, had now come. God used this war both to punish the guilty and to protect His people from the corrupting influences of idolatry and moral depravity as practiced by the people of the land (Nm 33:55).

1:2-3 Although Judah and Simeon, the sons of Jacob, were long dead, the author used the device of personification to refer to their respective tribes. Since God had not yet revealed personal resurrection from the dead, a man was considered to live on through his name, borne by his descendants.

1:7 Assuming that Adoni-bezek was not exaggerating his military prowess, he would most likely have defeated those kings over a period of time. Thus 70 different kingdoms need not have existed in Palestine at the same time. Furthermore, the term translated "king" (melek) could refer to local rulers who, today, might be styled princes, governors or mayors.

1:11-15 In ancient cultures, marriages were often arranged by parents to achieve certain purposes. Caleb was simply exercising his prerogative as father. His method of finding a worthy son for his daughter was, to say the least, imaginative. By establishing this criterion Caleb guaranteed his daughter would marry a courageous man who trusted the Lord and truly desired her as his wife. The Bible depicts women in a variety of situations, sometimes in charge of their own lives and sometimes not. The authors of Scripture, however, did not advocate that women be degraded or treated as of lesser importance than men (13:2-24).

1:19 Judah's defeat by a nation that possessed iron chariots (when "[t]he LORD was with Judah") did not mean that God was not all-powerful. God was capable of defeating iron chariots when He chose to do so (4:13-15). Chapter 2, furthermore, reveals that disobedience to God was the true reason the tribes lost their battles (2:1-3,18-22).

1:21,27-30 God did not deliver all parts of Canaan to the Israelites, but left some of the previous inhabitants in place. There are two reasons for this. (1) Leaving the land occupied, even by Canaanites, kept it from being overrun by wild animals before Israel could settle in it (Ex 23:30; Dt 7:22). (2) Israel's enemies would be the instruments of God's judgment if Israel proved unfaithful to Him and adopted their idolatrous worship (Nm 33:55-56; Jos 23:12-13).

2:1 Who brought the Israelites out of Egypt: the Lord (Ex 13:9; Dt 16:1) or the Angel of the Lord? Scripture sometimes uses the terms interchangeably (cp. Jos 5:13-15), although the phrase "an Angel of the LORD" suggests a created being, rather than God Himself. Some have identified the "angel" as (1) an angelic being who uniquely represented God with a special commission (e.g., Gn 16:7; Dn 6:22; Lk 1:26); (2) God the Father manifesting Himself in a humanlike form (Gn 18; 22:24-25, though the term "angel" is not used in these instances); or (3) God the Son who, before becoming incarnate as Jesus Christ, was made visible for a temporary purpose. The context here, with its reference to God's covenant with His people, would indicate that the one who led Israel out of Egypt was either God the Father or the preincarnate God the Son. But sometimes it is wise not to press such distinctions too far, as this can be intruding into "hidden things" that are beyond human comprehension (Dt 29:29).

2:6-9 How could Joshua be dead in 1:1, alive in 2:6, then die and be buried in verses 8-9? Writing to make their theological point, the authors of Scripture did not always compose their historical accounts in chronological order. The author of the book of Judges used the flashback technique here, repeating Jos 24:28-31 (cp. Jdg 17–21). This technique occurs elsewhere in Scripture (e.g., Is 36:1–38:8 repeats 2 Kg 18:13–20:11; Ezr 1:1-3 repeats 2 Ch 36:22-23).

2:11-23 This passage presents the scheme, or "philosophy," of the narrative of the book of Judges and, to a degree, that of OT history in general. Events unfold in a pattern of oscillation between times when Israel is faithful to the Lord, receiving His blessing, and then turns away from Him and must undergo His judgments. Only the total obedience of Jesus Christ (2 Co 5:21; Heb 4:15; 1 Pt 2:22; 1 Jn 3:5) breaks that pattern for Israel.

2:14 Did God encourage, even practice, slavery, when He "sold" His people into the hands of their enemies? The word translated "sold" conveyed either a literal or figurative sense. It could mean to engage in the sale of something, either a product or service, with an exchange of money of payment in kind (cp. Gn 25:31; 37:28; Lv 25:29), or it could be figurative, to give something entirely into the power of someone else (cp. Jdg 3:8; 4:2; 10:7). The latter is the case here.

2:17 God considered Israel's defection to other gods the equivalent of spiritual prostitution (cp. 8:27).

2:22 That God tested the Israelites "to see whether they would keep the LORD's way" did not mean He did not know the future. The test was for Israel's benefit, not God's, because their obedience would strengthen their faith.

3:1-5 The fact that God did not drive out the enemies of His people did not indicate that He was incapable of doing so, or that He had broken his promises to His people. God's promises to Israel were, at times, unconditional; that is, He would act in certain ways no matter what His people did. At other times they were conditional; that is, He would act in a specific way if they first acted in a given way (cp. Mt 13:58 with Mk 6:5).

3:5-7 The issue here was not interracial marriage but interfaith marriage. God did not want His people to marry unbelievers (Dt 7:1-5). Nowhere in Scripture does God issue an outright condemnation of, or even express reservation about, either interracial or international marriages. He said nothing against Moses' marriage to a Cushite woman and, in fact, defended it against the protest of religious leaders in Israel (Nm 12:1-9). In Jesus' lineage there were several international and perhaps interracial marriages, e.g., Salmon's marriage to Rahab (a Canaanite), Boaz's marriage to Ruth (a Moabitess), and David's marriage to Bathsheba (quite probably a Hittite; cp. Mt 1:4-6).

3:8 Anger is acceptable to God when people appropriately direct it against sin or injustice (cp. Jos 23:16; Ps 106:32-40; Ezk 22:23-31; Am 5:11-15). Anger that displeases God is the expression of rage that seeks to benefit self, rather than another, or that extends beyond its appropriate time. Both types of anger ultimately work against the individual who expresses that emotion (cp. Eph 4:26; Jms 1:19-20).

3:10 To have the Spirit come upon one, or to be filled by the Spirit, meant that, the individual was guided or empowered by God to perform His will in a special way. In ancient Israel, the Spirit of the Lord came upon certain individuals (cp. 6:34; 11:29; 14:6,19; 15:14; 1 Sm 10:10; 11:6; 19:20,23; 1 Ch 12:18; 2 Ch 20:14), or filled them (cp. Ex 31:3; 35:31; Dt 34:9; Mc 3:8), to perform specific tasks—such as designing the temple, prophesying, leading Israel to victory in battle.

3:12-22 Why did God destroy Eglon, whom He originally commissioned to bring judgment against His own people (vv. 12-13,20-21)? As the "carved images" in his territory (v. 26) indicated, Eglon did not acknowledge God's role in empowering him to defeat and rule Israel, but still worshiped idols. Moreover, Eglon's rule was not benevolent but harsh, as the cry of God's people for deliverance suggests (v. 15).

3:20 Ehud was not being deceptive when he declared he had "a word from God" for Eglon and then killed him. God's messages were not always messages of well being or hope; they were, at times, messages of judgment and death. Nor were they always verbal; the Hebrew term for "word" (dabar) can mean "matter" or "thing."

3:29-31 How accurate are biblical numbers, such as the 10,000 Moabites killed by the Israelites (v. 29), the 80 years of peace, (v. 30), or the 600 Philistines killed by Shamgar (v. 31)? Numbers in Scripture function in various ways. Some are intended to be precise and are recorded as such (see Ezr 2). Other figures that may appear to be precise are to be understood as approximations, and are often designated as such by the use of the modifier "about"; an example is the number of Israelites killed at the battle of Ai: "about 36" (Jos 7:5). Some figures, intended as approximations, lack the modifier "about." The 600 Philistines killed by Shamgar (Jdg 3:31) may be such an approximation since it is unlikely that someone counted each person he killed. Some numbers may not be numbers at all, but have another meaning. The number "thousand" can mean a military unit (Nm 31:5; 1 Sm 10:19). Other numbers, whether exact or not, are theologically significant; the number "seven" (related to the Hb word for swearing an oath, ša-ba') can be an indicator that the Lord's covenant is what is in view in a passage (Jos 6:2-15; Rv 15:6–16:1).

4:2 On God's selling the Israelites to another nation, see note on 2:14.

4:3 Although God allowed His people to suffer severely for long periods of time (cp. 3:8,14; 6:1; 10:8; 13:1), He was not unaware of their need, uncaring about their suffering, or incapable of helping them. Scripture teaches that God knows all things (Jb 34:21; Lk 12:30; 1 Jn 3:20), that He is all-powerful (Ps 115:3; Heb 1:3; Rv 4:11), and that He is compassionate (Dt 4:25-31; Is 30:18-22). He allowed His people to suffer because He desired them to repent of their evil ways and to turn back to Him (Lv 26:14-45).

4:6-9 Deborah declared, at first, that the Lord said He would give Sisera into Barak's hands (v. 7), but later stated that the Lord would give him into the hands of a woman (v. 9). This is not a discrepancy. As a prophetess Deborah spoke for the Lord; if her prophecy did not come true, she would not have been considered a true prophet (Dt 18:18-22). Second, the circumstances changed. Barak did not immediately respond to God's call. Had he acted in faith he would have received the honor of defeating Sisera; because of hesitancy, which manifested his doubt, God gave the honor to a woman.

4:11 On the name of Moses' father-in-law, see note on Ex 3:1. Hobab means "loving, embracing one" and may have been a name of endearment given him by the Israelites.

4:15-16 If every man in the Sisera's army died in battle, how was Sisera still alive afterward (vv. 17-21)? All of his men (that is, the foot soldiers as distinguished from generals) could have been slain. Or "not a single man was left" who remained on the battlefield because some fled the battle and escaped—a not uncommon occurrence in modern, as well as ancient, warfare. (Compare Saul's statement to Samuel, 1 Sm 15:20, in which he claimed to have utterly destroyed the Amalekites; yet David later had to fight the same Amalekites—1 Sm 27; 30; 2 Sm 1.) Finally, the author of Judges did not mean to assert that every soldier in the Canaanite army died. He states that Jabin ruled from Hazor, but Sisera was from another town (Jdg 4:2,13) and organized his army from there. Some of the Canaanite forces would have remained at Hazor as Jabin's personal guard.

5:1 Deborah's and Barak's song of delight over the destruction of their enemies may strike one as a perversion of God's love for all people. Such a reaction would be superficial. God had directed that the Canaanites be exterminated because of their perversion. Their slaughter was both justified, because God had sentenced them to death, and praiseworthy, because Israel had fought the battle in obedience to God's command. Furthermore, Deborah and Barak gave credit to the Lord for the victory.

5:8 By choosing "new gods," Israel had rejected the one true God and thus deserved His judgment. The consequence was 20 years of oppression (4:1-3).

5:8 If there were no shields or spears among 40,000 in Israel, how could Israel have defeated a trained army mounting 900 iron chariots (4:12)? It was the Lord who fought for Israel and overcame the Canaanite weaponry. The narrative notes that God brought confusion among the ranks of the Canaanite army (4:15), which forgot its training and discipline and fled in the face of an enemy it did not understand. Furthermore, once the first group of Canaanites had been defeated their weapons were available for Israel's use (4:16).

5:20 Scripture clearly condemns all forms of astrology, divination, sorcery, and witchcraft (Lv 19:26; Dt 18:9-12,14; Is 47:12-15; Jr 27:9-10). Yet Deborah and Barak sing that "the stars fought from the heavens" against Sisera. Their words may be taken in several ways. First, they are a metaphorical reference to either angelic involvement, under God's guidance, or God's direct involvement in the battle (Rv 1:20; 22:16). Second they may allude to some natural or supernatural event in the skies such as the falling of a meteorite, an eclipse or some other phenomenon (Jos 10:11-13). Or the expression may hark back to the renewal of the covenant under Moses, in which "heaven and earth" are invoked as witnesses to the alliance between the Lord and His people (Dt 4:26; 30:19).

6:5 How could there have been Midianites "without number" when, according to Nm 31:7, Moses had killed every Midianite male? First, Midian was not a nation under God's full edict of destruction, whereby every person was to have been destroyed (Dt 20:16-18). When Moses "killed every male" he would have killed only those who had fought in battle against Israel. Sufficient time had passed since Moses' day for the people of Midian to repopulate their army. Second, in the heat of battle there was no way to record of the exact size of the invading army, so they, with their assets, were "without number." Third, the phrase may be a conventional literary expression indicating a large force of enemy soldiers and camels; it does not mean that it was literally impossible to count them.

6:8-9 Ancient Israelite thinking linked individuals with all of their ancestors and descendants. Thus, in the mind of the Israelites of Gideon's day, because their ancestors had been rescued from the hand of Pharaoh in Egypt they themselves had, in effect, also been delivered "from the power of Egypt."

6:12 God called Gideon a "mighty warrior" not because of his experience, but because of his potential—and, undoubtedly, because of what God planned to accomplish through him.

6:17 God uses signs in Scripture for many purposes: to declare His faithfulness (Ex 31:13); to confirm His will (Is 38:7); to encourage a person weak in faith (Jdg 6:36-40); to test His people's readiness to follow Him rather than false prophets (Dt 13:1-5; 2 Th 2:8-12); to confirm a person as his spokesperson (Ex 4:8-9); to announce His own coming or presence (Mt 24:30); and to confirm that God is, in fact, the speaker of a message or the source behind it (Ex 10:2; Jr 44:29). That signs sometimes occurred, however, did not mean that God expected people to ask for them. To seek a sign was no guarantee that God would provide one (Mt 12:38-39), and receiving one was no assurance that it came from God (Mt 24:24). Moreover, there was no guarantee that the individual receiving a sign would believe it or act in accordance with it (cp. Ex 10:1-2; Neh 9:10). God was not always pleased with those who asked for signs (Mt 12:38; 16:1,4; Lk 11:16; 1 Co 1:22-23).

6:22-23 According to Ex 33:20, anyone who sees God will die; this was Gideon's fear, though he was not struck dead. But the Angel of the Lord, while truly a manifestation of God (Jdg 6:23; cp. 2:1), was not a revelation of His fullness (Ex 33:18-20). Or perhaps God displayed His mercy toward Gideon by choosing not to kill him (13:22-23). On the Angel of the Lord, see notes on Jos 5:13-15; Jdg 2:1.

6:25 "Asherah" (singular form of 'asheroth, 3:7) was a Canaanite name for one of their female deities, the goddess of happiness and fortune. The Phoenicians called a similar female deity "Ashtaroth" (2:13).

6:36-40 Gideon's desire for a second fleece sign evidenced his less than complete trust in God (cp. "Don't be angry with me"; v. 39). He wanted to make certain that the first fleece sign was not merely a coincidence or the result of the natural absorption properties of a fleece.

7:5 God chose those who lapped like a dog, not those who knelt to drink. Some have suggested that those who lapped maintained a state of alertness; whereas those who knelt had to use their cupped hands to bring up the water, thereby letting down their guard. Whatever the case, the story makes it clear that God wanted only a small band of soldiers in Gideon's army so that when they were victorious none could say, "I did it myself" (v. 2). The victory would be perceived as the Lord's doing alone.

7:9 God's statement that He had given the camp of the Midianites into Gideon's hand was a declaration both of what God had done and of what He expected of Gideon. While God had guaranteed victory, Gideon still had to trust Him for what had not yet happened. He needed to demonstrate his faith in God by actually going to war and securing the outcome God had promised.

7:10 The clause "if you are afraid to go to the camp" did not mean that God was ignorant of Gideon's thoughts (cp. 2:22; 4:3). Scripture clearly declares that God knows all things, even the hearts of humans (1 Kg 8:39; 2 Ch 6:30; Ps 44:21; Lk 9:47; Ac 15:8; 1 Jn 3:20). The statement was made for Gideon's benefit. Knowing that Gideon was afraid, God had already given one of the Midianites a dream that would be the means to encourage him (Jdg 7:13-15).

7:12 The phrase "as innumerable as the sand on the seashore" was a hyperbole (exaggeration), and was not intended to indicate the exact number of camels (cp. 3:29-31; 6:5).

7:21-22 The narrative relates that an experienced army of over 120,000 men panicked at the sight of Gideon's 300 men. Several points make clear that this was no exaggeration. The Midianite soldier's interpretation of the dream revealed that the enemy army was already experiencing a heightened level of fear (vv. 13-14). The attack took place "at the beginning of the middle watch" (midnight, v. 19), a time when the soldiers would have been asleep; upon being awakened abruptly they would have felt confused or vulnerable. Furthermore, the feeling of being surrounded in a life and death situation—not really knowing the size of the army that surrounded them—would account for much of the panic that ensued and for their lashing out in the dark at anybody who blocked their escape. The massive number of men in a confined area would have added to the level of panic. Finally, God was active in ensuring both the confused frenzy of the soldiers and their ultimate destruction.

8:1-3 God did not judge Gideon for his exaggerated praise of the Ephraimites' role in the battle, but this does not imply that he approved of such flattery. Scripture, when describing events and conversations, records lies or exaggerations when they occur without suggesting that God condones or encourages such speech. Contrast Jephthah's actions toward Ephraim in a similar situation (12:1-4).

8:5-9 Since God said: "Vengeance belongs to Me; I will repay" (Dt 32:35; Rm 12:19; Heb 10:30), shouldn't Gideon have just "forgiven and forgotten" the slights by the men of Succoth and Penuel? Gideon may have been out of God's will in threatening the people; the narrative simply records his words, faulty though his motives might be, without passing judgment on them. Or, since Gideon was God's duly appointed leader, the men deserved Gideon's retribution as the instrument of divine vengeance against the rebellious (Jdg 8:13-17).

8:10 On how Gideon, with only 300 men, could defeat an army of 15,000, see note on 7:21-22.

8:26 Apparently both the kings of Midian and their camels (v. 21) wore the crescent ornaments that were symbols of the goddess Astarte. The kings' horses, also, would have been decorated with ornamentation. Religious ornamentation was often worn as a supposedly protective talisman, and these Midianites made extensive use of it.

8:27 What did the author mean when he wrote that "all Israel prostituted themselves with it [the ephod]"? The Bible speaks of prostitutes (Jos 2:1; 6:17,25; Heb 11:31; Jms 2:25) and of people acting as literal prostitutes (Gn 38:13-19; Jdg 19:22), but when Scripture declares that the people of Israel "prostituted themselves," the reference is to forsaking its loyalty to the one true God. Veneration of religious objects such as this "ephod," worship of false gods (i.e., idols), occult practices, or spiritism (Lv 20:1-6) are forms of spiritual adultery. Within the framework of His covenant with Israel, the Lord places Himself, in effect, in the position of a husband (Jr 31:32).

8:30-31 Was Gideon sinning in having more than one wife (v. 30) and a concubine (v. 31)? Even though scripture nowhere directly forbids polygamy, i.e., there are no "Do not" statements against it, it is clear that monogamy is the preferred, or God's ideal, for marriage. Having more than one spouse simultaneously would complicate the "one flesh" understanding of marriage expressed in several passages (Gn 2:24; Mt 19:5-6; Mk 10:7-8; 1 Co 7:2; Eph 5:31). Usually, when Scripture describes a polygamous situation, either the husband is having problems with, or because of, his wives (Gn 30:1; 1 Kg 11:4) or the wives are creating problems between themselves (Gn 30:14-16; 1 Sm 1:1-6). Additionally, believers today would not consider a multiple marriage because it would be in violation of the laws of the government under which they live (Ti 3:1). A man with more than one wife would be barred from serving as an elder or deacon (1 Tm 3:2,12; Ti 1:6).

9:5 Did Gideon (Jerubbaal) have 70 sons (8:30) or 71—70 killed and one left alive? Here the author used a common literary device of his day, the one-number-more or one-number-less style, or exception clause. This is similar to "everybody had a good time at the party, except so and so" (cp. Nm 26:64-65; 1 Sm 30:17; Pr 30:15,18). This device emphasizes the completeness of the destruction while recording what, in fact, occurred: all 70 were killed except Jotham, who escaped death.

9:13 Scripture, in several instances, issues a warning about the consumption of wine or describes the unhappy results of its use (e.g., Pr 20:1; 23:31-35; Is 28:7). In Jotham's tale the vine claims that its product cheers "both God and man." This is part of an allegorical story Jotham tells to mock Abimelech's false kingship; it is not intended as a prescription for human conduct. The Bible does not issue a general condemnation of the drinking of wine (cp. Jn 2:1-11; 1 Tm 5:23), but only of the excessive use of alcoholic beverages (Eph 5:18;1 Pet 4:3).

9:23 What is this evil spirit that God sends? The Hebrew word translated "evil" has a range of meanings, including the concepts of moral or ethical wickedness, misery, distress, trouble, and injury. God indeed oversees the actions of all beings and can control the activities of evil spirits (i.e., fallen angels). But in this instance He caused a hostile attitude to develop between Abimelech and the men of Shechem so that they would turn against each other.

9:35-41 The author did not directly indicate God's reaction (approval or disapproval) to Zebul's lie. The Scripture elsewhere, however, indicates God Himself does not lie (Nm 23:19) and that He disapproves of lying (Ex 20:16; Lv 19:11; Pr 6:16-19; Rm 3:7-8; Col 3:9). Merely because a venture turns out successfully does not guarantee that God approved of either the means or the ends.

9:56-57 Scripture has much to say about "cursing." (1) Curses generally appear to be uttered in the expectation that they will be fulfilled, yet not all curses come to pass (Pr 26:2). (2) God sometimes placed a curse (judgment) upon people and identified situations in which people could expect to experience His curse (Lv 26:14-39; Dt 11:26-28; 27:15-26; 28:15-68; Pr 28:27; Jr 11:3; 48:10). This is especially true of the curses that were pronounced in the renewal of the Lord's covenant with Israel; the declaration of these sanctions was a normal part of such ceremonies (Dt 30:19). (3) At times, curses were placed on embodiments of evil (Gn 3:14), inanimate objects (Gn 3:17), or concepts (Jb 3:1; Jr 20:14). (4) God established guidelines for what He allowed to be cursed (2 Sm 16:10; 2 Kg 2:24) and what He prohibited from being cursed (Ex 21:17; Lv 19:14; 24:15; Nm 22:12; Rm 12:14). (5) Some curses revealed thefoolishness of the one cursing (1 Sm 14:24-30); other curses revealed that the one who employed a curse had not considered all its implications (Jdg 21:16-18; Ec 10:20). (6) Scripture provides guidelines for how people are to respond to those who curse them (Lk 6:28). (7) The NT also declares that through the work of Christ on the cross, who took upon Himself the curse inherent in the covenant law (Gl 3:10), believers have been freed from its curse pronouncements (3:13). God's people will not be eternally under its curse (Rv 22:3). The curse is the opposite of the blessing, and the effect of each depends on the authority of the person uttering them. The functioning of both blessing and curse in biblical cultures illustrates the power of the spoken word, and how seriously God takes the use of speech (Mt 12:37; Jms 3:5-10).

10:7 To ascribe anger to the Lord, as the OT often does, is not to compare His attitude with sinful human passions. The Bible identifies at least two kinds of anger: that which is sinful and that which is righteous (Pr 14:29; 16:32; Eph 4:26; Jms 1:19). The former may be self-serving (Gn 4:5; Nm 24:10; 2 Sm 6:8) or that which lashes out at others (2 Ch 16:10). The latter is that which seeks either God's good (e.g., an outrage against sin) or God's will (Dt 4:21). The anger of the Lord, at times, remains within the Lord, i.e., does not initiate action (Ps 86:15). In Scripture, "slow to anger" means keeping one's anger in check for a long period of time, allowing it to subside or to be expressed, as appropriate. At other times, God's anger is expressed by His words (Hs 8:5) or by His judgment, a judgment that may withhold privileges (Ps 95:11) or invoke punitive measures (Nm 12:9-10; Dt 11:17; Jdg 2:14) that can even lead to the death of the guilty (Dt 6:15; 2 Sm 6:7).

10:7 On God's selling the Israelites to another nation, see note on 2:14.

10:10-16 Scripture declares that God does not change (1 Sm 15:29; Ps 15:4; Mal 3:6; Jms 1:17). Here the Lord declares that He will not deliver His people again. Yet, in Jdg 10:16, He is moved by the suffering of His people, and 11:32 records that He delivered them once again. God has established general principles by which He operates, one being that He judges those who sin but reconciles sinners to Himself upon their sincere repentance (Dt 29:17–30:10; 2 Ch 7:13-14). God had graciously delivered Israel (Jdg 10:1-5), but Israel turned away from the Lord to serve other gods (v. 6), incurring His judgment (vv. 7-9). When they then cried out to the Lord, expecting Him to deliver them on the basis of their acknowledgment of disloyalty (v. 10), He declined (v. 13). In this He appears to have violated His principle of reconciliation in response to repentance, but vv. 14-16 reveals that the Israelites' repentance was not sincere, for idols remained in their midst. When they finally removed their foreign "gods" to worship the Lord alone, He responded by reconciling them to Himself and delivering them from their enemies (v. 16; 11:32). God changed neither His mind nor His forgiving character (e.g., Ex 34:6-7; Ps 51:1), but operated in accordance with His character (Jdg 2:11-23).

11:1-6 Scripture condemns prostitution as displeasing to God (Lv 21:9); the law decreed that offspring of an illegitimate relationship were to be barred from entering the assembly of the Lord to the tenth generation (Dt 23:2). Nevertheless Jephthah, born illegitimately of a prostitute, was asked by the elders of Gilead to be their leader. Three considerations apply here. First, the irregular circumstances of one's birth, or having been driven from one's home, did not render a person unable to serve the Lord (Jdg 11:11) or to be guided by God in accomplishing great things (v. 29). Second, the messianic line (i.e., the line of Jesus) includes at least three people who had been born under questionable conditions. Perez was born of an illegitimate relationship (Gn 38; Mt 1:3); Boaz's mother had previously been a prostitute (Mt 1:5; Heb 11:31); and Solomon was born to parents who had committed adultery—his father having even arranged for the murder of his wife's first husband (2 Sm 11:1–12:25; Mt 1:6). Third, during the time of the judges, "everyone did whatever he wanted" (Jdg 17:6; 21:25); the Gileadite's choice of Jephthah was not necessarily God's idea. Still, God did not reject Jephthah but worked with him to accomplish His purpose (11:29-32).

11:24 Jephthah's appeal to the Ammonites' belief in Chemosh does not indicate that he believed their deity was a real god on a level with the Lord God of Israel. It was, if not a sarcastic reference (see Dt 32:37), a use of their beliefs to argue his point—the Israelites owned the land because the God of Israel was stronger than the god of Ammon, as shown by His previous defeat of that god (11:13-23). In biblical times, people considered battles to be fought primarily between gods; the nation winning in battle was thought to have the stronger god. Jephthah was laying out the issue in terms the Ammonites could understand. The authors of Scripture clearly taught that there was, and is, only one true God (2 Ch 15:3; Jr 10:10; Jn 17:3; 1 Th 1:9).

11:29-31 How could Jephthah make such a rash vow if the Spirit of the Lord had come upon him? Even though the Holy Spirit may guide an individual, that person retains the freedom to follow or reject the Spirit's leading. Jephthah apparently chose to act on his own in this case and, in his exuberance, uttered an unwise vow (Pr 20:25; Ec 5:2-4). The Spirit's guidance may have related solely to Jephthah's activities as a judge (e.g., leading God's people into battle; Jdg 11:29-33) and not to his private life (vv. 30-31). Other Israelites (e.g., Samson, Saul, and David) experienced the anointing of the Holy Spirit to be leaders of God's people (13:25; 14:6,19; 15:14; 1 Sam 10:10; 11:6; 16:13), but failed in various aspects of their personal lives (Jdg 14:1-3; 16:1; 1 Sm 13:9-13; 2 Sm 11:2-4).

11:34-39 According to vv. 30-31, Jephthah paid his vow to the Lord. He offered Him the first thing that came out of his house to greet him after the battle—his beloved daughter. Did Jephthah literally sacrifice his daughter as a burnt offering to the Lord, or did he dedicate her to temple service? Until the Middle Ages, interpreters generally held to the first possibility. Subsequently both views have had their advocates. A difficulty with the former view is that God abhors human sacrifice (Jr 32:35); as for the latter view, there is no direct biblical evidence of a group committed to lifelong virginity serving the Lord at the temple in Shiloh. The plain reading of the text supports the conclusion that Jephthah did, in fact, offer his daughter as a burnt offering to the Lord, as great an abomination as that would have been. This did not mean that the Lord accepted or approved of that offering (Is 1:10-15; Am 5:22).

12:6 Since the Ephraimites and the Gileadites were similar in their ethnic backgrounds, the Gileadites devised a pronunciation test whereby they could identify their enemies. Once the identification was made, the Gileadites killed the Ephraimites not because of their speech but because the Ephraimites had made themselves enemies of the Gileadites (v. 1). Considering that the Ephraimites were panicked with no easy escape routes, and considering that huge lopsided losses were not unheard of in biblical times, the figure of 42,000 is not an implausible number of deaths. The author did not state specifically, however, that the Gileadites administered the pronunciation test to all 42,000 people. The word "shibboleth" became proverbial, in English as a term referring to a test of acceptable practice and belief, much as the term "litmus test" has come to be used.

13:1 The author linked the concept of doing evil to both the rejection of the true God and the worship of false gods (2:11; 3:17; 10:6; cp. Dt 12:29-31).

13:2-5 The fact the author mentions Samson's father's name (Manoah) 18 times but does not mention his mother's name even once is no indication that the Bible considers women to be less important than men (cp. 1:11-15). Lineage in ancient Israel was established through the male side of the family, not the female side. The mention of Samson's mother in these verses, however, is not a detail incidental to the story but integral to it; her role is as significant as that of her husband. The Angel of the Lord appeared to her twice (13:3,9) before encountering her husband for the first time (v. 11), and performed the same number of miracles for both of them (13:19-20). The author, moreover, depicts Samson's mother as demonstrating better reasoning skills than her husband (vv. 22-23). This theme—the barren wife who, through the Lord's intervention, bears a son who plays a significant role in the history of the people of God—occurs several times in Scripture; Sarah (Gn 17:19), Hannah (1 Sm 1:19-20) and Elizabeth (Lk 1:13) are notable.

13:4 Manoah's wife was told that her son must not use wine or other alcoholic beverages. The Lord is not condemning the drinking of wine altogether (cp. 9:13); the prohibition was part of the Nazirite vow (Nm 6:1-20). This instance of the Nazirite vow is unique, in that the Lord established it for a human being before that person was born (Jdg 13:5), and required the mother to participate in certain aspects of the injunctions of that vow while the child was in her womb.

13:5 The Apostle Paul (1 Co 11:14) established the general principle that men's hair was to be kept shorter than women's. The Nazirite vow prohibited the cutting of hair, but this was a temporary practice for the purpose of exhibiting a certain devotion to the Lord. The varying directives are no indication that God was contradicting Himself.

13:22 Despite seeing God ("the Angel of the LORD"), Samson's parents did not die; God allowed them to live in order to produce and raise a special child who would "begin to save Israel from the power of the Philistines" (v. 5). On the Angel of the Lord, see notes on Jos 5:13-15; Jdg 2:1; 6:22-23.

13:24 God blessed the young Samson, though when grown he failed to live a righteous life. God's blessing of an individual is based on His grace, as suits His purposes, and is not a direct consequence of the individual's behavior. He can bless anyone at any time, irrespective of a person's actions. However, God's blessing of Samson appears to be limited to his earlier years; it is not mentioned as being extended to him later on, when he committed the various sins ascribed to him.

14:1-4 Did the Lord approve of Samson's marriage to the Philistine woman of Timnah? Samson's desire to marry "was from the LORD," the text indicates, despite the fact that He had expressly forbidden His people to intermarry with the other inhabitants of Canaan because of their false religions (Ex 34:12-16; Dt 7:1-5). Scripture suggests that God can turn human wrongdoing to his praise (Ps 76:10), and to a degree Samson's career illustrates of this truth. To the very end of his life (Jdg 16:28), he consistently acted on the basis his own physical desires, with little regard for what the Lord wanted. Scripture does not condemn attraction to a beautiful person of the opposite sex under normal conditions (Gn 12:11,14; 26:7; 29:17-18; Dt 21:10-13). But if that person is already married (2 Sm 11:2) or, as with the Philistine woman, that person does not serve the one true God(2 Co 6:14), such attraction must be resisted.

14:5-6 Under conditions of extreme anxiety or terror, people have been known to exhibit what might be called superhuman strength (e.g., being able to lift an automobile off an injured person). Samson may have been terrified by the lion, but the passage implies he experienced more than a rush of adrenaline; the Lord empowered him to overcome the attacking animal.

14:12-13 Just because God used Samson's desires and actions to accomplish His ends did not mean He approved of all Samson's actions, including his "gambling" over the Philistine garments. The casting of lots to determine the will of God in a given matter (Jos 18:6-10; Pr 16:33) is not gambling in the usual sense; no exchange of money or items of value is involved. The lot was cast "before the Lord" to determine the right course of action in situations not covered by scriptural guidelines or where human wisdom lacked sufficient insight. There is no record of the casting of lots for such a purpose after Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit came to indwell the people of God. Biblical references to the casting of lots for one's personal gain (Jb 6:27; Ps 22:18; Jl 3:3; Nah 3:10; Mt 27:35) present the practice in a less than positive light.

14:19 The Philistines Samson slew in a seemingly wanton slaughter had already been condemned to death by God (Ex 23:31-32; Dt 7:1-2). Samson was simply God's enforcer of justice, apparently without his even realizing it (Jdg 15:3; see note on 5:1).

15:1-2 That a father would give away and take back his daughters at whim (14:20) does not align itself with today's widely accepted sense of justice. Samson's reactions reveal he, too, regarded his father-in-law's actions as unjust. The narrator records the father's actions without approving them. But the father's responsibility for arranging his daughter's marriage did not, from the biblical viewpoint, imply a degradation of the status of women (1:11-15).

15:3-8 Whatever Samson did, he did it in a big way. He killed 30 men to get their clothes, traveling 50 miles round trip to do so (14:19). He used 300 foxes to burn the Philistine fields and vineyards (15:4-5). He overwhelmed the Philistines with a great slaughter (v. 8). He killed a thousand Philistines with the jawbone of a donkey (v. 15). But his career is, in general, an example of the squandering of God's endowment of strength on self-centered pursuits.

15:10 On the coming of the Spirit of the Lord upon a person, see note on 3:10.

15:19 God may have miraculously created water here, or He may have used a naturally occurring water source to provide for Samson.

16:1 The narrative does not imply that Samson was moved by the Spirit of the Lord in the action recorded here. Clearly he was not, for God expressly condemns prostitution (Pr 7:24-27; 1 Co 6:15-20; cp. Jdg 3:10; 11:29-31).

16:3 The author did not record Samson's motivation for ripping out the gates of the city and carrying them 40 miles from Gaza to Hebron. Neither did he mention the Lord in connection with this incident, suggesting that Samson acted on his own initiative.

16:6-20 Samson had numerous failed interpersonal relationships because he paid no attention to God's guidelines, especially those involving the opposite sex. Samson chose intimate relations with unbelievers (14:3) or with those to whom he was not married (16:1). He also lied and deceived (16:7,11,13).

16:17-20 Samson's strength came from the Lord, not from his hair. He was in a covenant relationship with the Lord based on his Nazirite vow (13:7). Despite his sins he, up to this point, had apparently not broken the requirements of that vow (Nm 6:1-21). By allowing his hair to be cut Samson disregarded his vow and thus severed his covenant with God. As a consequence, God finally withdrew his superhuman strength.

16:27-30 Ancient Philistine temples were of two types. One was a closed building which only a select few were permitted to enter. The other was a significantly larger building with an open center courtyard; people gathered on the roof could observe the worship practices being conducted. An example of such an open-style temple was excavated at Tel Beth Shean (similar temples were found at Tel Qasile and Tel Migne). Approximately one-third of the courtyard was covered by a ceiling supported by two wooden pillars set on stone bases. Pulling down those pillars would have greatly damaged the entire temple, killing or injuring anyone who happened to be on the roof at the time. Samson's feat is entirely in accord with archaeological evidence, but betrays the fact that he already knew (since he had been blinded) about the structure of a pagan place of worship.

17:2 In ancient times, people considered curses to be inviolable and unalterable. Micah's mother must have been terrified to find that she had unknowingly placed a curse on her own son. Her only recourse was to pronounce an equally binding blessing on him to counteract the curse. Clearly, neither Micah nor his mother was acting in accordance with God's law. Regarding curses, see note on 9:56-57.

17:3 Despite dedicating the silver to the Lord (17:3), Micah sinned in fashioning an idol to Him, since God strictly forbade the making or worshiping of such images (Ex 20:4; Lv 19:4; 26:1; Dt 5:8; 27:15; 32:21). Micah and his mother discovered that their sincerity was no guarantee that God was pleased with their supposed acts of worship. God had established His guidelines for worship, and expected Israel to follow those guidelines wholeheartedly (Is 29:13-14).

17:6 This statement, repeated at the end of the book, is the "motto" of the book of Judges. The absence of recognized spiritual authority leads to social chaos; the narrative of Judges lays out the consequence when a people ignores its responsibility to honor, and observe, the Lord's directives for the conduct of human life.

18:1 The first 16 chapters of the book of Judges generally follow a chronological order. Chapters 17–21, however, present events that occurred during the early part of the time of the judges. These concluding chapters appear to have been intentionally placed out of chronological sequence to reveal the extent of Israel's degradation and to emphasize the justification for a monarchy to rule God's people (17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25). Thus, 18:1 does not contradict 2:6 in declaring that the Danites had not been allotted an inheritance among the tribes of Israel.

18:5-6 Despite what the priest had concluded, there was no certainty he had truly ascertained the Lord's will. This priest had been functioning outside of the Lord's revealed will. His quick response to the Danites suggests he had not even thought to consult the Lord (cp. 2 Sm 7:1-7).

18:30 Some translations identify the priest as Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh. Other translations, however, indicate that the priest was Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Moses; thus, the idolatrous priest was none other than the grandson of Moses. Some scholars believe that the original Hebrew was altered by later scribes to protect Moses' reputation so that his name would not be linked in any way with the idolatry of the tribe of Dan. According to those scholars, the Hebrew text was changed from "Moses" to "Manasseh" (the name of an apostate king of Judah) by the insertion of the Hebrew letter "nun" ("n," in English) as a superscription above the other consonants.

19:1 Scripture offers certain guidelines regarding whom priests were allowed to marry (Lv 21:14-15), but says nothing about priests having concubines. On concubines, see note on Jdg 8:30-31.

19:2-30 This passage, with its gory outcome, reveals the degraded condition into which Israelite life had fallen during this period. The Levite's speaking tenderly to his concubine might suggest that he truly cared for her, but his actions belied his words. First, he waited four months after her abrupt departure before he sought to bring her home (vv. 2-3). Second, he delivered her to the sexual ravages of a mob to protect himself and others (v. 25). Third, the morning after the rape when he found her lying at the doorstep of the house, he treated her without compassion, demanding she rise and leave with him. The narrator does not gloss over the horror of these events, but records them as they happened and does not try to reconcile the attitudes and actions of the people about whom he wrote. The inspiration of Scripture does not require that only comforting and edifying material be presented in historical narrative; inspiration requires that the true picture be laid out, even when events are disgusting.

20:16 In biblical times, slings for hurling stones were not the Y-shaped slingshots typically used today, which usually depend on some elastic material. The sling was a patch of leather to which strings were attached; by twirling the sling and skillfully releasing a string, a warrior could hurl the stone with great speed and accuracy. A practiced warrior could sling a stone at upwards of 150 miles per hour. The stones that were used were approximately the size of a small fist, so the degree of accuracy did not need to be as great as it would have been had the stone been merely the size of a small pebble. The significance of Benjamin's left-handed slingers lies in the fact the ramp up to a city gate typically sloped to the right, as one faces the gate from outside. A left-handed warrior could hurl his shot while advancing up the ramp close to the wall, risking less exposure to the defenders on the ramparts above him.

20:21,25,39 At least three reasons may be advanced for God's allowing more than 40,000 of the nation's forces to be killed (vv. 21,25,39). First, the nation as a whole, and not merely the tribe of Benjamin, had to be judged for its sins (21:25; "everyone did whatever he wanted"). Second, the nation as a whole needed to learn to trust God fully, even in the midst of defeat, so they would learn not to trust in superiority of numbers or of battle skills (20:2,10,15-17). Third, God did not promise victory to the nation of Israel before either of the first two battles. Only before the third battle did He actually guarantee success (v. 28).

20:46-48 Initially, only a few Benjaminites deserved to be punished for the despicable gang rape and murder of the Levite's concubine (19:22-28). The entire tribe of Benjamin became guilty of complicity, however, when they refused to hand over the perpetrators to the rest of the Israelites (20:13).

21:1-24 Having decimated the tribe of Benjamin because of its immoral behavior, the Israelites realized that one of the 12 tribes was in danger of extinction (v. 3). Only 600 warriors remained; all other men, women and children had been lost in the destruction of the Benjaminite towns. The number 12 needed to be preserved because it represented the fullness of the covenant with the Lord (hence Jesus chose 12 apostles, emblematic of the renewal of Israel). In their anger, however, the other tribes vowed not to permit their daughters to marry into the tribe of Benjamin (vv. 1,7). The "solution" was to let the Benjaminites seize wives from Jabesh-gilead, which had not participated in the battle against them. All the people of Jabesh-gilead were slain except the 400 virgins allocated to the men of Benjamin. Israel justified the slaughter on the grounds that Jabesh-gilead had tacitly agreed with the Benjaminites' sinful actions (vv. 8-12). It was the worst of times in Israel (17:6; 21:25).

Introduction to Ruth

AUTHOR

The books of Judges and Ruth are treated together because the events of the book of Ruth took place during the time of the judges (Ru 1:1). Both books face challenges to their authenticity regarding matters of authorship, the dating of their writings, the possible addition of non-original material by later authors, and the purposes for their having been written.

Although neither book identifies its author, Jewish tradition (Baba Bathra 14b-15a) declares the prophet Samuel to have authored both books. Challenges to this view are at least threefold. (1) The books refer to the times of the judges as having taken place in distant memory (Jdg 17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25; Ru 1:1; 4:17,22). (2) The books take the time to explain past customs or events (Jdg 11:39; 14:10; 20:27-28; Ru 4:7). (3) The text says, "In those days there was no king in Israel," seemingly writing from the perspective of a time when Israel had a king, and Samuel died before David reigned as king (Jdg 21:25; 1 Sm 25:1). Those who reject the traditional view of Samuel as author typically favor as the author either King Solomon or an anonymous person who wrote the books during David's reign.

Counterarguments to the three above, supporting Samuel as the author, include the following: (1) The time of the judges technically ceased with the ascension to the throne of Saul, who was anointed king by Samuel (1 Sm 10:1; 11:14-15). Thus Samuel could easily have written these books after the time of the judges. (2) Sufficient time had passed between the actual events or customs and the recording of those events or customs for memories to have faded and certain customs to have fallen out of vogue; hence, the need for explanations for later generations of readers. (3) The references to a king in general in the book of Judges (17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25), and the references to David in particular in the book of Ruth (Ru 4:17,22), fit acceptably within Samuel's life span since he saw the coronation of Saul and later anointed David as king.

Whichever view of authorship is correct (i.e., Samuel, Solomon, or an anonymous author), each easily accounts for any concern regarding the possible addition of materials at the end of either book.

THE RELIABILITY OF JUDGES AND RUTH

Controversy surrounds the books of Judges and Ruth. Even a cursory reading of these books causes many to question the validity of their inclusion in the Scripture, the content being deemed by some as unworthy of God or of little or no value to twenty-first-century readers. These books include: (1) graphic depictions of violence (such as the slaughter of seemingly innocent people by the command of God, maiming, human sacrifice, and gloating over the deaths of one's enemies);

(2) heroes who are anything but role models (while seemingly under the control of the Holy Spirit, they engage in deceit, lies, mockery, and self-centered behavior);

(3) illicit sex and sexual innuendo; (4) a degrading depiction of women; and (5) a writing style that seemingly includes exaggeration or fabrication.

The inclusion of certain statements at the end of each of the books dramatically alters how we are to understand the purpose of each book. In Judges the author declared that in the times about which he was writing "there was no king in Israel" (17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25). In Ruth, the author presented genealogical records that include the name of King David, a king who lived during the post-judges era (Ru 4:17,22). Thus, rather than being merely guidelines for how to live during difficult times, both books appear to be defending one of two views: (1) living during the present age of the kings was better than living in the previous age of the judges (cp. the book of Judges); or (2) despite coming from an insignificant, non-royal family (cp. 1 Sm 16:1,13; 18:18), David had an excellent heritage, arising from godly grandparents of a family in the messianic line.

Regarding the controversial matters of the content, a closer reading of the text reveals that, by being written as straightforward accounts, the books display a higher degree of credibility than if they presented sanitized histories. Neither book attempts to gloss over any of the sins, foolishness, or errors of the people described in them. Despite conclusions skeptics might draw from a cursory assessment of the texts, the books themselves never place blame for sin, foolishness, or error on God. God was not guilty and the so-called innocent were, in fact, not innocent at all. Instead they deserved judgment.

The events and customs fit precisely into the story lines of their respective books and align well with what is known from ancient sources of information outside the Bible. The stories may not make us feel comfortable, but these books were not designed to comfort. These two books together present hard-hitting truth designed to disturb, to inform, and to challenge.

Ruth Study Notes

1:1-2 Moses decreed that Moabites were not permitted, for a period of ten generations, even to enter the Lord's assembly (Dt 23:3-6), yet Mahlon and Chilion married Moabite women. Naomi's comment (Ru 1:15) suggests that Ruth and Orpah had been participants in the idol worship of their people. The author merely recorded the fact of the marriages, without indicating that Mahlon and Chilion had acted wisely. Two factors, however, mitigate what appears to be their disregard for Moses' ordinance. First, a "generation" need not be 100 years (Gn 15:13,16), requiring a 1000-year period before the expiration of Moses' prohibition, which had been uttered only some 300 years previously. A generation could refer simply to the time between a person's birth and the birth of that person's child. Second, Moses' prohibition applies to Moabites' entering the Lord's assembly (the worship gathering); it did not specifically prohibit marriage with a Moabite woman, since the assembly was predominantly made up of men (cp. Dt 16:16). Moses provided for the possibility that an Israelite might take a woman from another ethnic group as a wife (Dt 21:10-13).

1:20-21 Naomi correctly recognized that God did not necessarily bring only good situations into one's life but that He, at times, brought difficulties (cp. Jb 1:21; 2:10). Elsewhere in Scripture such difficulties areunderstood to be for the purpose of testing or discipline (e.g., Pr 3:11-12; Heb 12:7-11), but Naomi has not attained that insight at this stage.

2:10 Ruth was not wrong in bowing down before Boaz. Falling down or bowing before another person was a common ancient gesture of honor, respect, gratitude or submission. The Bible condemns the offering of worship to any being (whether human or angelic) other than God (Lv 26:1; Dt 6:13-15; Jos 23:7; 2 Kg 17:35-36; Rv 19:10; 22:8-9; cp. Ac 14:11-15), but gestures of respect in normal interpersonal relations are not "worship" in the usual sense.

3:1-4 It is not clear whether Naomi was following a marriage custom of her time when she told Ruth to lie down secretly at Boaz's feet in the middle of the night. She does, however, appear to be applying a variation of the law by which a surviving brother was to marry his deceased brother's wife who had no children, in order to beget a son to continue his deceased brother's family's line (Dt 25:5-10). Naomi's tactics were morally questionable, since the term "his feet" could have been understood as a euphemism for Boaz's private parts (cp. 1 Sm 24:3, where the Hb is lit. "cover his feet"; also Is 6:2). Despite the risky situation, Ruth and Boaz acted in an upright manner.

3:9 When Ruth told Boaz to spread his cloak (lit. "wings") over her, she was not asking him to have sexual relations with her, since nowhere in Scripture do those words indicate sexual intercourse (Ezk 16:8, in fact, would suggest the opposite).

3:13 Why did Boaz tell Ruth to remain with him that night, potentially compromising her virtue, rather than sending her home immediately? In view of the general lawlessness and social disruption that characterized the period of the judges (cp. Jdg 21:25), sending Ruth home alone late at night would have placed her life in danger. The term translated "stay [here]" is never used in Scripture in the context of a sexual situation.

4:10 Boaz's giving of money to Naomi to "acquire" Ruth was not the purchase of a slave but the payment of a bride price. Such a payment was a protection for the bride; the bride's family held the money, which would be given to her in the event of her being divorced or widowed.

4:13 Regarding an Israelite marrying a Moabite, see Jdg 3:5-7 and Ru 1:1-4. Ruth had become a believer in the true God (1:16-17), so Boaz was not marrying the adherent of a false religion, which would have been prohibited (cp. Jdg 14:1-4).

4:17-22 This passage is significant in the larger scope of the biblical narrative; it presents the ancestry of David, which became also the earthly ancestry of Jesus Christ (Mt 1:5-6; Lk 3:31-32; cp. Rm 1:3; Rv 22:16).

1 Samuel Articles

Is Psychology Biblical?

by John Coe

The answer is yes and no, depending upon four different ways we can interpret this controversial question. But before we get to those four ways, let's consider definitions of the term psychology.

Definitions: (1) As a task, psychology has to do with observing and reflecting on persons and their complex situations with the goal of understanding human nature and its components, growth, dysfunction, and wisdom for living. (2) As a product, psychology is the more or less systematic body of information resulting from a mind engaged in understanding human nature, change, etc. (e.g., Freud's psychology). (3) As an intervention, psychology or psychotherapy is a relationship between therapist and persons that consists of empathic listening, understanding, loving care, and, when appropriate, verbal interpretations of dysfunction in order to facilitate healthy relationships, awareness, wisdom, and growth.

(1) Is there a psychology contained in the Bible? Understanding our original question in this sense, the answer is clearly yes. Theologians for centuries have talked about OT anthropology or psychology, NT psychology, Pauline psychology, etc. The biblical authors, under inspiration of the Holy Spirit, provided numerous observations and reflections on the nature of the human soul (Gn 2:7; Lv 24:17), spirit (Is 29:24), body (Is 31:3), mind (Php 2:3), heart (Ps 90:12), dysfunction (Jms 1:8), flourishing (Eph 3:16-19), process of change (Rm 12:1-2), and wisdom for living (Pr). Clearly God, as Creator of mankind, has an exhaustive and systematic psychology of persons and has communicated many of these crucial insights through the reflections of the inspired biblical authors.

(2) Are psychologies formed apart from the Bible biblical? Obviously the psychological reflections of Sigmund Freud and Carl Rogers are unbiblical in the sense that their musings are not included in the Bible. However, whether their views are biblical in the sense of being consistent with or reflected in the Bible is a more complex matter. For example, we can find correlation between Freud's view of the "unconscious" and "repression" and the biblical understanding of the "hidden heart" that insists there is always more going on deep within a person than on the surface (Pr 14:13), often due to the heart's deceptive nature (Jr 17:9; Rm 1:18). Though Freud had some true and wise things to say about the nature of the hidden motives of the heart, his worldly view of the "unconscious" and his causally deterministic explanation of mental functioning are clearly unbiblical. Thus psychologies based on observations and reflections from outside the Bible are a mixed bag that must be critiqued idea by idea.

The benefit of investigating these extrabiblical psychologies is twofold: (1) They may provide concrete examples that exemplify biblical truths. (2) They may further elucidate elements that the biblical writers only touch upon (e.g., addictions and anger).

(3) Is it biblical to engage in the task of psychology that involves not only the Bible but also extrabiblical observation and reflection? Contemporary Christians disagree on this point. Some adherents of the biblical counseling position deny any biblical warrant for this, while some integrationists maintain that there is biblical precedent for this task of doing psychology.

The writers of Proverbs were OT wise men who had the unique role of instructing Israel to live well in all areas of life under God on the basis of their wisdom and experience (Pr 1:1-6,8-9; 4:1; 6:20). The essence of this wisdom involves having a right relationship with God (Pr 1:7), who is the ultimate source of all wisdom (Pr 2:6) and revelation, which is central to the mental health of a people (Pr 29:18). However, the wise men also insisted that there is an important extrabiblical source of wisdom for living, discernible by observing and reflecting upon the natural world (Pr 6:6, 30:24-28) and especially persons and their complex situations (Pr 24:30-34). God created the world by wisdom (Pr 3:19-20) such that His wisdom is imprinted onto creation as the natural order of things (Pr 8:22-31). By observing these wisdom laws in nature and human life, one can discover a set of wise principles of sowing and reaping to avoid folly and live a good life under God in accordance with the created way of human nature (Pr 8:32-36).

Consequently, the OT wise men provide biblical precedent and justification for the science of psychology. In the case of biblical proverbs, God worked through the wise men's experiences to produce inspired observations and principles for living. While the wisdom collected in Scripture has a divine sanction and authority, the church's ongoing work in psychology is subject to scrutiny from the Scriptures, reason, and observation. Though unbelievers can discover wisdom for living through psychology, only the believer can know and live out these principles as one ought in relation to God.

(4) Is psychotherapy biblical? Certainly the intervention of psychotherapy is biblical in the sense that Scripture encourages empathy, truthful understanding, and caring relationships between persons. This is evident in the admonition regarding "speaking the truth in love" (Eph 4:15), in the "one another" injunctions (Eph 4:32; Col 3:12-14; 1 Th 5:11,14), in the gifts of the church (Rm 12:4-8), and in the reflections and counsel for wise living found in Proverbs (4:1-5). However, the content of what psychotherapy passes on as wisdom is to be judged by Scripture (Pr 21:30), truth (Pr 8:7), and its appropriateness to the situation (Pr 25:11).

What Is the Occult?

by Leonard G. Goss

The English word "occult" comes from the Latin "occultus," which means things that are hidden, esoteric, concealed, or mysterious. For occult practitioners, the occult represents interference with physical nature by using hidden knowledge (gnosis), such as non-conventional practices including reciting formulas, making gestures, mixing incompatible elements, performing healing spells, or performing secret ceremonies attempting to alter physical nature. What is the hidden knowledge? According to occultists, it is the force at the base of the universe, and it is obtained only through secret communication with that force. Is this hidden force God? Or the devil? Or the soul of the universe? That depends a good deal on what particular source their gnosis has tapped into, but one thing the force is not: It is not the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

For those dabbling in the occult, such activities are considered harmless and fascinating—a real source of spiritual knowledge. For Christians, however, the wide range of practices making up the occult is destructive and spirit-threatening. Christians view as deeply evil things like alchemy, astrology, casting runes, crystals and crystal balls, divination, dowsing, ESP, fortune-telling, horoscopes, the I Ching, levitation, Ouija boards, paganism, palm reading, the paranormal, pendulum divination, psychic phenomena, reading Tarot Cards, ritual abuse, satanism, seances, secret societies, sorcery, spiritualism, talking to dead spirits, Wicca (so-called White Witchcraft) and Witchcraft (Black Magic). The extent of occult involvement is universal. Spiritual warfare is all around us, and if Satan cannot keep us from knowing Christ he will try containing us by drawing us into deception. The Enemy is a deceiver, liar, tempter, and devourer of human souls.

Why the interest in the occult? First, many churches have "watered down" the gospel of Christ, rejecting the church's central teaching of Christ's divinity and other essential truths. When this happens, a spiritual vacuum invites people to go to the occult to be satisfied, swinging the door to occultist practices wide open. Second, there is a certain mystery about the occult which appeals to our curiosity. Many, thinking the occult is harmless, go deeper and deeper until they can't get out without any bad effects. Third, we all want ultimate answers to life's basic questions, and the occult offers a sort of "reality" by providing these answers. Actually, occultist practices are a counterfeit of God's power, and as such they do reveal some amazing things—but these things are not the ultimate truth. Fourth, an increase in demonic activity is to be expected as a sign of the end times (see Mk 13:22; 1 Tm 4:1).

Often, there is deliberate faking in the lucrative field of the occult. There is money to be made. There is also inaccurate reporting. When some people find a theory fascinating, they often care less about the facts. In addition, there is self manipulation. When it suits their wishes, some believe anything they want. There is, however, true demonic deception. The Bible teaches that there is a deceptive, dangerous spirit world which distorts reality and ruins human lives. Despite outright fraud, all Christians need to know that the occult or paranormal is real. The Bible is clear it is real, as Saul discovered upon meeting the medium of Endor (1 Sm 28), and we must not dismiss it. If God is real, his chief adversary is also real.

First John 3:8 says, "The one who commits sin is of the Devil, for the Devil has sinned from the beginning. The Son of God was revealed for this purpose: to destroy the Devil's works." Involvement in the occult is involvement in the devil's works, and as it can lead to very serious outcomes spiritually and psychologically, we must remember that the Bible denounces all occultic practices (see Dt 18:9-14; Ac 13:6-12).

The road to the occult is broad and always destructive. The way of Christ is narrow but always leads to eternal life.

Introduction to 1 Samuel

AUTHOR

The Bible does not say who wrote 1 and 2 Samuel. Many Bible students think Samuel along with Nathan and Gad had major input, pointing to 1 Ch 29:29 as evidence. Others think the books had a long history of composition with various narratives or narrative sources being composed from the time of the events until the time of the exile, when the "Former Prophets" were gathered into one collection. Such individual narratives would include: Shiloh (1 Sm 1–3), the ark (1 Sm 4:1–7:1), the rise of kingship (1 Sm 9:1–11:15), battles of Saul (1 Sm 13–15), the history of David's rise to power (1 Sm 16:14—2 Sm 5:25), David's reign (2 Sm 9–20), and the succession to the throne of David (1 Kg 1–2). An early scroll of 1 and 2 Samuel may well have been part of the book depository in Solomon's temple when it was completed.

A PIVOTAL PERIOD IN ISRAEL'S HISTORY

First and 2 Samuel play a pivotal role in the Bible for both historical and theological reasons. Historically, these books document the monumental transition that occurred in OT Israel as it moved from being a collection of 12 tribes with no national government to being a unified nation with a centralized government under the control of a king. Furthermore, these books provide a detailed description of the last leaders during the period of the judges, the career of Israel's first king, and the exploits and accomplishments of Israel's most famous king, David.

The books also document the historical fulfillment of promises made by God in the Torah. The law of Moses had predicted the rise of kingship as an institution in Israel (Gn 17:16; 35:11; 36:31; Dt 17:15); the events recorded in the books of Samuel show that the kingship became a historical reality. The Torah predicted that a member of the tribe of Judah would rule over Israel (Gn 49:10); this was borne out by the narratives in 1 and 2 Samuel with the ascent of David, of the tribe of Judah, to the throne. Furthermore, the promises that Israel would defeat Moab, Edom, and the Amalekites (Nm 24:17-20) were also shown to have been carried out. Finally, prophecies regarding the establishment of "a covenant of perpetual priesthood" for the family line of Eleazar the priest (Nm 25:13) were also moved toward fulfillment with the judgment enacted against the family line of Eli.

The books of Samuel also provide concrete historical examples that confirm the theological teachings of the Torah. One of the primary precepts of the Torah is that obedience to God brings blessings, while disobedience brings divine judgment. The contrasts between Eli and Samuel, as well as Saul and David, certainly bear this out. Disaster came to Eli and Saul as a result of their sins, but blessings came to Samuel and David as they followed the Lord. The life of David further demonstrates the sobering truth that God will bring judgment. Illustrations of the disastrous consequences that can result from failing to honor one's father (as Absalom did with his father David), as well as committing acts of murder and adultery (as David did with Uriah and Bathsheba) are all provided in vivid detail.

RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 SAMUEL

Perhaps the most serious question raised by recent skeptics regarding 1 and 2 Samuel relates to the historical trustworthiness of the narratives contained in these books. Some scholars dismiss the accounts as fanciful tales with no more historical value than the legends of King Arthur. This highly negative view of the historical reliability of these books is unjustified, however.

Though it is impossible to "prove" many of the details found in 1 and 2 Samuel (e.g., the exact words spoken in conversations, the daily whereabouts and activities of the participants in the narratives, the outcome of a minor military skirmish), it is possible to provide scientific confirmation of the general claims of the biblical texts. Archaeological investigation has confirmed, for example, that Philistines lived in the regions and at the times when the books of Samuel indicated they did. It has also proven that the family line of David (lit., the "house of David") served as kings over Israel; evidence for this is found in the form of two inscriptions coming from the ninth century B.C., the Tell Dan inscription and the Mesha Stele. The existence of a strong centralized government that developed following a period of destruction has been confirmed in such cities as Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer; this agrees well with the Bible's claims regarding the Israelite conquest of Canaan and the development of a national government during the kingship period.

The books of Samuel are especially valuable for Christians because they lay the foundation for the all-important doctrine of the Messiah, the ultimate descendant of David who would sit on an everlasting throne ruling over God's people and bring deliverance and justice. The promises God made to David in 2 Samuel 7 created hopes and expectations that the NT writers understood to have been fulfilled by Jesus. The Lord promised David that He would establish the kingdom of one of David's descendants (2 Sm 7:12); in the NT Jesus was identified as that descendant of David (Mt 1:20; 21:9) who brought the kingdom of God to humanity (Mt 12:28; Lk 11:20). God said David's descendant would build a house for God's name (2 Sm 7:13); the NT writers portrayed Jesus as one who built the ultimate temple of God in three days (Mt 26:61; Jn 2:19). God promised David that one of his descendants would have a throne that would last forever (2 Sm 7:13); the NT declares that Jesus had just that (Heb 1:8). God said that one of David's descendants would be a "son to Me" (2 Sm 7:14); Jesus came as the ultimate Son of God (Mt 16:16; Mk 1:1; Lk 1:35).

1 Samuel Study Notes

1:1 Was Elkanah an Ephraimite or a Levite? Genealogically he was a Levite, a descendant of Jacob's son Levi (1 Ch 6:33-38), coming from the family line passing through Kohath and Izhar. The names of Elkanah's forebears in the Chronicles genealogy agree with those found in this verse, despite differences in spelling (Elihu vs. Eliel, Tohu vs. Toah) that may be dialectic in origin. Elkanah's status as a member of the priestly tribe helps to explain why his son Samuel wore an Ephod (1 Sm 2:18), was permitted to sleep in the temple compound at Shiloh (3:1-15), and was authorized, later on, to perform ritual sacrifices before the Lord (7:9; 10:8).

Geographically Elkanah was an Ephraimite. The Lord did not allot regional territory to the Levites in the division of the promised land, but assigned them cities throughout the other tribes' regions (Nm 35:2-8). Even though Ramathaim-zophim was not listed among the 4 cities set aside within Ephraim for the Levites (Jos 21:20-22), it seems reasonable to assume that Levites settled there over time, or that it was a local name for one of the assigned cities.

Taken in combination with the Chronicles genealogy, this opening verse of 1 Sm creates another interpretive option. Elkanah's ancestor Zuph may have been an Ephraimite adopted into the family line of Levi. In this case, Elkanah would have genealogical links to both Levi and Ephraim.

1:2 Having more than one wife is permitted in the Bible (Ex 21:10), but represents a concession that departs from the divine ideal. God's original plan for the family—still His ideal—is to have one man married to one woman. Biblical evidence for this is found in the fact that God created one woman, Eve, as a uniquely suitable helper for one man, Adam (Gn 2:18-24; Mt 19:4-6). He did this before sin had entered the world and corrupted the divine plan, and this ideal has never changed. With Adam and Eve's sin, however, came death, disease and other distortions of God's original plan. Sometimes women, who through childbirth were supposed to enable a couple to be fruitful and multiply, were barren. In such cases, ancient western Asian custom permitted men to take a second wife for the purpose of producing an heir (Gn 16:1-3; 30:1-4).

Elkanah, like Abraham and Jacob, was a good man who made a troublesome choice to solve his family problem. By taking a second wife he introduced much unneeded conflict into the home (1 Sm 1:6). In the end his efforts made little difference, since God gave him many children through his once-barren wife Hannah (1:20; 2:21).

1:5 Did Elkanah give Hannah two portions of meat or only one? The Hebrew phrase translated "double portion" literally means "a portion of two nostrils," an obscure expression that forces translators to derive its meaning from the context. While most translators emphasize Elkanah's kindness—and therefore opt for "double portion"—others focus on the stigma of Hannah's childlessness and render the phrase "only one portion."

1:9 On whether Israel's worship center was located at Shiloh or Shechem, see note on 3:21.

1:11 Hannah's vow appears to be bargaining with God; was this appropriate? It is clear throughout Scripture that God wants people to have an authentic, personal relationship with Him—one that involves the expression of true feelings in a spirit of "give and take." If one can ask certain things of the Lord in faith (Mt 21:22) one can also promise Him something. Hannah was a pious woman who profoundly believed that God was powerful and good. She had suffered humiliation and insult for years due to her childlessness, and waspleading desperately with God to give her a child. Her offer was far superior to that of pagans in the region, who might offer to sacrifice a child as a macabre gift to their deity (2 Kg 17:17). Hannah offered to give the son she requested as a living sacrifice, dedicating his lifelong services to the Lord. The Lord was not obligated to respond to her vow, but He had the right to accept her offer. And accept it He did.

1:24 Two ancient textual traditions exist regarding the number of sacrificial bulls that Hannah brought to Shiloh as a gift to the Lord. The Hebrew text reads "three," while the Septuagint and Syriac (followed by HCSB) read "son of three," i.e. one bull three years old. (Age, in Hebrew, is expressed by the idiom "son [or daughter] of" whichever number.) The Hebrew reading may be preferable, since the accompanying gift of flour is the proper amount for three bull sacrifices (Nm 15:9). Though the leather bag (HCSB "jar") of wine contained an indeterminate amount of liquid, it was probably much more than the half gallon required for a single bull sacrifice (Nm 15:10).

2:1-10 How could Hannah speak of a king and messiah ("anointed," 2:10) before the days when Israel had a king? She could have been referring to the office of kingship mentioned in the law of Moses (see Gn 17:16; 35:11; 36:31; Dt 17:15) or local Israelite rulers (Jdg 9:6). In the larger scope of biblical history, however, one can see that Hannah was speaking prophetically of the day when Israel would have anointed kings—the first two, in fact, would be anointed as such by her son Samuel. Or her words can even extend to the coming of Jesus Christ. Hannah's prayer is a model for the Virgin Mary's expression of praise (Lk 1:46-55) after learning that both she and her formerly childless relative Elizabeth would bear a child. The circumstances were similar; it was the Lord, in each case, who had enabled the pregnancy despite unlikely human situations. If Hannah was speaking as a prophetess, she would join the ranks of other OT prophetesses, including Miriam (Ex 15:20), Deborah (Jdg 4:4), Huldah (2 Kg 22:14), and Isaiah's wife (Is 8:3).

2:23-24 Did Eli correct his sons or didn't he (3:13)? Although Eli did criticize his sons for their outrageous conduct while serving as priests (vv. 12-17, 22), 3:13 states that he made no serious efforts to put an end to their misbehavior. These two passages are complementary, not contradictory. A possible explanation for Eli's unwillingness to restrain his sons from taking unauthorized portions from the people's sacrifices is seen in 2:29 and 4:18. These verses suggest that Eli was benefiting from his sons offenses against the Lord: they took the meat and he ate it.

2:25 Did God prevent Hophni and Phinehas from repenting in order to do away with them? It was the wickedinclinations of these two sons of Eli that kept them from repenting. Their obstinacy required that the Lord, who hates and punishes sin, would bring fatal retribution upon them. The Hebrew phrase translated as "the LORD intended" literally means "the LORD was pleased." While the Lord takes no pleasure in the death of those who sin (see Ezk 18:32; 33:11; 2 Pt 3:9), at the same time He delights in bringing justice to the order of human society. Justice is a central trait in God's character (Ex 34:7; Ps 33:5), and its implementation brings satisfaction to him. Some of the same considerations that apply to the Lord's hardening of Pharaoh's heart (Ex 4:21) apply here.

3:21 Was Israel's worship center located at Shiloh or Shechem? The Bible indicates that both Shechem and Shiloh were used as places to worship the Lord in early Israelite history. In the days of Joshua a sanctuary had been built at Shechem (Jos 24:1,25). But Shiloh was considered an even more sacred site, since it was there the Israelites set up the tabernacle (see Jos 18:1). Only later, when the Lord chose Jerusalem as the only authorized worship center (see Dt 12:5-14; 1 Kg 8:29), would Israel be limited to one authorized place for worship.

4:1 The use of the name Ebenezer here is an anachronism, since it is only in 7:12 that Samuel gives a name to this location. But this should not be seen as a problem. Samuel, who is considered the author of this section of the Bible, simply used the site name which was most familiar to his audience when he recorded this event for his and future generations. The use of updated names is not an error, but an aid to communication.

4:3 On the location of Israel's worship center during this period, see note on 3:21.

4:8 The Philistines, ignorant of the true details of Israel's history, spoke of "gods that slaughtered the Egyptians with all kinds of plagues in the wilderness." The biblical narrator simply quotes their error without affirming the accuracy of their words; the Philistines were far from divine truth.

5:6 How could the ark of the covenant's presence in a city cause an outbreak of tumors? The Bible does not tell us how God did this miracle, only that He did it. The Philistine diviners' mention of mice in 6:4-5, as well as the Septuagint's reading for this verse, implies that God may have brought this about by working through nature, using mice to spread a devastating plague at just the right time and location. Through the centuries rodents have often been responsible for the spread of disease among humans. The incident demonstrated the Lord's superiority over both the Philistines and their "god," and revealed that the Philistines' victory on the battlefield was not the result of the Lord's weakness. Instead, it was a judgment against Israel's disobedience to God. Ultimately it would result in His further glorification.

6:6 On God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart, see note on Ex 4:21.

6:19 Why should people have to die for just looking into the ark? The people died because they disobeyed a solemn command of the Lord that promised death to anyone who violated it (see Nm 4:15). Since most of the people who died were from Beth-shemesh, many of those who died were probably descendants of Israel's first high priest Aaron (see Jos 21:13-16), a family group in the priestly tribe of Levi responsible for overseeing all aspects of the Israelite religion (Nm 4:16). Very specific instructions had been given to the priests regarding the proper handling of the ark of the covenant; whenever it was outside of the tabernacle it was to be covered with three layers of cloth and leather; it was never to be seen or touched by anyone (Nm 4:5-6,15). For the priests, God's primary representatives on earth, to leave it uncovered and then permit the Israelites to look inside it represented a flagrant disregard for God's holiness which demanded immediate punishment. The sanctity of God's holy throne (see 2 Sm 6:2) must never be violated.

6:19 Did 70 men or 50,070 men die? English versions reflect a scholarly uncertainty regarding the correct number in this verse; KJV, NKJV and NASB use the larger number; many other versions accept the smaller one. The Masoretic (Hb) Text and Septuagint (Gk) both give the larger number; Josephus, a first-century Jewish historian, quoted the smaller number.

The fact that the biblical writer characterizes the deaths as "a great slaughter" suggests that the larger number is the one originally supplied. However, most modern versions prefer the smaller total and, in many cases, deal creatively with the Hebrew text at this point. Translations that opt for the smaller number probably do so because the larger one does not seem credible; archaeological evidence available at the present time suggests that nowhere near 50,000 men lived in the region of Beth-shemesh during the period of this narrative, some 3,000 years ago.

7:10 How could thunder confuse the Philistines and cause them to run away from Israel? When the Philistines heard the thunder, they interpreted it to mean that Israel's God was riding into battle on a storm cloud (see Ps 18:10-14), sending thunderbolts against them and their gods. They believed their army could not prevail against the Israelites unless their gods prevailed against the Israelites' God. When it became apparent that the Lord was aggressively advancing against their forces, and their gods as well, their only option was flight from the battlefield.

7:12 On the name Ebenezer, which means "stone of help," see note on 4:1.

7:13 During the period of Samuel's active tenure as a judge of Israel there are no more recorded conflicts between Israel and the Philistines. That is the context for this statement, although the Philistines and Israelites fought against each other many times after the days of Samuel (13:5; 14:11-14; 17:1; 23:1,27; 28:1; 31:1; 2 Sm 5:17-20; 2 Kg 18:8). There is no contradiction in the record on this point.

7:15 The phrase "throughout his life" (lit. "all the days of his life") means that Samuel served as Israel's judge during the rest of his career—that is, from this time in his life until his retirement in old age. He is not called a judge up to this point in the narrative; when he grew old he appointed his sons as judges (8:1), effectively transferring his responsibilities to the next generation. When the nation rejected Joel and Abijah as judges, the elderly statesmen helped Israel to eliminate the role of "judge" altogether, installing a king to lead Israel instead (12:2). It is worth noting that the term "judge" in the Bible carries a broad range of meanings. The earlier judges operated more as local military leaders or heroes; Samuel, on the other hand, functioned in a more magisterial capacity for Israel as a whole.

8:2 Was Samuel's firstborn son Joel or Vashni? According to the Hebrew text of 1 Ch 6:28 (KJV), Samuel's oldest son was named Vashni. Both names probably refer to the same person, since 1 Ch 6:33 states that Joel was Samuel's son. That second reference in 1 Ch 6 agrees with the current verse in 1 Sm. Calling a person by more than one name was common in the ancient Near East, corresponding somewhat to our culture's tendency to give people nicknames. (On individuals and places in the Bible having more than one name, see note on Ex 3:1; 19:11.) It is also possible that the Hebrew text in 1 Ch 6:28 has been damaged, and the original reading lost.

8:5-7 In the law of Moses, God had spoken of a time when the Israelites would have an earthly king (Dt 17:14-20), even though the Lord was already their King (Nm 23:21; Dt 33:5; Jdg 8:23) and would remain so in Israel's worship (e.g., Ps 47:2; 89:18; 95:3; 99:4; Is 33:22). The structure of Israel's covenant was that of a king making a treaty with subordinates. The Lord made provision for the earthly office of king in Israel, but this was a concession to human weakness and not His ideal for the nation. The instructions of Dt 17 set limits on Israel's kingship, and did not give it a blanket endorsement.

In this section of 1 Sm, the people were asking for the right to be "the same as all the other nations"—that is, like the pagans, who did not have the Lord as their King. They wanted to rely upon a strong military leader, and not on God and His leadership alone, for help in dealing with enemies. What was offensive to God, and to Samuel His spokesman, was the people's yearning to look for help in another direction.

8:21 God knows and hears everything, yet Samuel took pains to tell God what he had heard the people saying. The Bible makes it clear that God is all-knowing(1 Kg 8:39; 1 Ch 28:9; Jb 34:21; 36:4; 42:2; Ps 33:13-15; 139:1-24; 147:5; Pr 5:21; 15:3; 24:12; Is 46:10; 48:5; Ezk 11:5; Dn 2:22; Mt 6:8; 10:29; Ac 15:18; Heb 4:13; 1 Jn 3:20) and has no need that we tell Him anything. But He wants His people to communicate with Him about whatever is on our hearts (Ps 55:22; Php 4:6), as a loving parent enjoys talking with his child although he already knows what the child is telling him. Samuel was making use of the privilege of communicating in a natural way with his heavenly Father. It was a way in which Samuel could honor the Lord and express his loyalty to Him.

9:1 Was Kish the son of Abiel, or of Ner? This verse (see 14:51) appears to be contradicted by 1 Ch 8:33 and 9:39 where Ner is Kish's father. Abiel and Ner may simply be two names for the same person (see note on 8:2). Another possibility is that, since biblical genealogies sometimes skip over generations, either Abiel or Ner was not Kish's father but a grandfather or another ancestor. A third possibility is that a copying error by an ancient scribe is responsible for the discrepancy.

9:15-17 Why did the Lord choose Saul in the first place, if he would later regret the choice (15:11,35)? Matters of both divine will and human freedom need to be considered in addressing this question. God's intention, in making Saul king, was to use him to lead Israel to victory against the Philistines (10:1,24), which he did (14:31,47). But when it came to submitting his life wholeheartedly to the Lord's will, Saul was still free to make a choice. Sadly, in two key matters he gravely disappointed God by going his own way: he disobeyed direct military orders (15:18-24) and consulted a medium for guidance (1 Ch 10:13).

God knows the end from the beginning (Is 46:10), and was not surprised at Saul's actions. For reasons known only to God, He has chosen to work His divine will through sinful human beings. While the Lord's purposes can never be broken, His heart can be.

9:17–10:8 The narrative of 1 Sm includes three complementary accounts of Saul's being chosen first king of Israel. The first (9:17–10:8) describes a private meeting between Saul and the prophet Samuel on the outskirts of the village of Ramah. There Samuel first informed Saul of God's decision to make him Israel's leader, ceremonially anointing him and confirming his action with prophetic signs. This first meeting was preparatory, helping to ready Saul both psychologically and spiritually for the public event that would soon change his life so radically.

The second account (10:17-25) focuses on the public identification of Saul as the Lord's chosen. This event was primarily for the benefit of the people of Israel, confirming that God had fulfilled their request (8:5) for a king. The final account (11:14-15) describes Saul's formal public installation as king over the land, at Gilgal. These two public occasions are roughly equivalent to American political events: an election-night victory celebration followed by the official inauguration of a person into the office to which they have been elected. Gilgal, with Joshua's memorial stones, was the site where the Israelites had first encamped in their occupation of Canaan (Jos 4:19-20) and was a fitting backdrop for Saul's formal installation.

10:5 Was Saul supposed to go to Gibeath-elohim or the Hill of God? According to one version of the Bible, Saul was told to go to a village named Gibeath-elohim, yet other versions state that he was told to go to a hill. Isn't this a contradiction? No. "Gibeath-elohim" is actually the Hebrew phrase which means "Hill of God." Some scholars believe that Samuel was referring to an otherwise unknown village by that name, while others think he was merely referring to a geographical feature.

10:8 After anointing Saul, Samuel told him to wait seven days at Gilgal until the prophet would come to him. Their later meeting at Gilgal is recorded in 13:8-10.But the events recorded in 10:9–13:7 could not have occurred within a week's time. In that section Saul was publicly recognized as Israel's first king, mustered a fighting force of 330,000 men, led them to Jabesh-gilead, fought and defeated the Ammonites, returned to Gilgal to be publicly inaugurated as king, and prepared to fight the Philistines at Michmash. Based on the wording of 13:1, some interpreters posit a two-year gap between 10:8 and 13:1.

Perhaps the best explanation is to be found in the wording of verses 7-8: Saul was to do whatever was required to bring deliverance for Israel from the Ammonites. Then when that task was done—and it would probably take a long time—he was to go to Gilgal. The seven-day waiting period for Samuel would not begin until Saul arrived at Gilgal.

10:11 The narrative of 1 Sm relates two incidents that explain the origin of the saying, "Is Saul also among the prophets?" In the first incident, recorded here, Saul fell in with a group of prophets coming down from Gibeah and began to prophesy among them. This was the initial occasion for the popular saying. The second incident (19:23-24) recounts another surprising instance when Saul again prophesied among prophets, in this case "before Samuel." The second incident reinforced the old saying, and it passed into the Israelites' proverbial memory of their first king. The two accounts are complementary.

10:17-25 On why there are three accounts of Saul's being chosen king, see note on 9:17–10:8.

10:19 On why the Israelites were accused of rejecting the Lord by requesting a king, whereas God had already given instructions about the kingship, see note on8:5-7.

10:25 Did Samuel write on a scroll or in a book? Many versions of the Bible state that Samuel wrote words in a book, but others say he wrote on a scroll. This difference arises from word selection by translators. What we know as "books" were written on scrolls during the OT period; the codex, more like the modern book, was not yet in use. Therefore "scroll" is the most accurate rendering of the Hebrew sepher.

10:27 Some versions add an extra paragraph to the Bible at this point. An ancient partial manuscript of 1 Sm found at Qumran (4QSam[a]), as well as the first-century historian Josephus (Antiquities 6.5.1), include this information in their accounts of Saul's war with the Ammonites. Some translators have chosen to place this material in the text in the belief that it was wrongly omitted from the MT and Septuagint. Since those standard texts omit it, this paragraph is most likely an explanatory note inserted by an ancient scribe. The material is irrelevant to the central purpose of the account, and may introduce a chronological problem into the narrative flow (see note on 10:8; 13:8-14).

11:8 Did Saul's fighting force in the battle against Nahash the Ammonite number a few thousand men, 330,000, or 670,000? Many recent scholars argue that Israel's population at the time was too small to support an army of more than a few thousand men. The Septuagint, the Greek version of the OT that dates to the pre-Christian era, states that a total of 670,000 men were mustered for the conflict. The Hebrew text provides the number 330,000. This is about half the total of men counted in the military census Moses had taken 400 years earlier (see Nm 1:46), and probably represents the one supplied by the original writer.

11:14 On why there are three accounts of Saul's being chosen king, see note on 9:17–10:8.

12:2 On the length of Samuel's tenure as judge, see note on 7:15.

12:11 Did the Lord send Barak or Bedan to deliver the Israelites from their enemies? The MT and many English versions have the name Bedan, mentioned nowhere else in the Bible although this name is included in a list of well-known leaders from the period of the judges. The Septuagint reads Barak (see Jdg 4:6-16) for Bedan, and most recent versions have followed its lead. Bedan could be a secondary name for Barak; alternatively, Bedan was an otherwise unknown ancient Israelite leader. The most likely explanation is a scribal error, substituting incorrect Hebrew letters; in the more usual Hebrew script "d" (daleth) resembles "r" (resh) and final "n" (nun) resembles final "k" (kaph). (The vowels involved are not written as letters in Hebrew.) The Masoretic scribes of the earlier centuries A.D. were strict about preserving the text as they found it, even where they may have suspected an errant reading.

12:17-18 How could a harvest-time thunderstorm convince the Israelites that they had done a great evil? The land of Israel has two seasons in its year, the rainyseason (October–March) and the dry season (April–September). Wheat harvest occurred during the dry season at a time when clouds, to say nothing of rain, were absent from the sky. Interruptions in the normal weather pattern, especially those that could seriously damage the nation's food supply, were taken as signs of divine anger (see Lv 26:20; Dt 28:18).

13:1 How old was Saul when he became king? The Hebrew text indicates that Saul was "one year old when he became king," clearly evidence of a damaged text. A few copies of the Septuagint supply the figure 30, while some copies omit the verse altogether. Since no other passages in the Bible provide definitive information on Saul's age at the time he assumed the kingship, it seems best to recognize that the original number dropped out of the text in the process of transmission, perhaps even before the Greek version was produced around 300 B.C.

13:1 How long did Saul serve as Israel's king? According to the MT he reigned for two years (lit. "and two years"). In Ac 13:21, however, the Apostle Paul states that Saul ruled for 40 years. In view of Saul's achievements in battling Israel's enemies, the number in Ac is either the correct one or a rounding from 42. Apparently a copyist's error caused the original figure to drop out of this verse.

13:5 Ancient manuscripts provide different figures as to the number of chariots the Philistines brought to the battlefield. Most translations follow the Hebrew text and the majority of Septuagint (Gk) texts, which give the number as 30,000. The Syriac (Aramaic) version and one Greek tradition read 3,000, a figure accepted by some recent translations because it seems more credible. Elsewhere in Scripture the largest number of chariots used in a war was 1,700 (see 2 Sm 8:4), and even Solomon possessed only 1,400 (1 Kg 10:26). An ancient copyist error may be responsible for the confusion. Another way to approach the issue is to take "thousand" as a term for a military unit; in that case, the Philistines brought 30 chariot units, of indeterminate strength, to the battlefield.

13:8-14 Why was Samuel angry with Saul, since it was Samuel who missed the appointment? Samuel did not miss his appointment; he was supposed to arrive on the seventh day, and he did. Saul apparently panicked because Samuel did not appear at sunrise, when the morning sacrifice could be offered, but a short time later. By this time the impatient king had offered the sacrifices on his own, doing the work reserved for priests. Samuel, a priest as well as a prophet, was understandably angry about this. Saul's impetuous behavior, and his reckless disregard for God's order that separated kingship (military leadership) from priesthood (service at the altar), were among the reasons why the rule of Israel passed into the hands of another family, that of David.

13:13-14 In Gn 49:10, Jacob prophesied that a member of the tribe of Judah would rule over Israel; yet Samuel suggests that Saul —a member of the tribe of Benjamin—might have seen his family "permanently established" in the monarchy had he not been disobedient. Some have suggested that Samuel was lying to Saul, but this need not be the case. The territories of Judah and Benjamin were sometimes treated as the land of one tribe (1 Kg 11:36), so that promises made to Judah were applicable to Benjamin as well. Alternatively, God foresaw that in a later era Israel would have two kings, one in the north (Israel proper) and one in the south (Judah). During that time both the house of David and the house of Saul could have had enduring dynasties. In either case, Samuel was truthful with Saul, especially in confronting his foolishness.

14:3 On who was high priest at this time, see note on 21:1.

14:15 English versions of the Bible differ on the translation of this verse; did a terror from God spread, or was there a very great trembling of the earth? The issue is how to fit an ambiguous Hebrew sentence—"And she/it was to fear/trembling of God"—into the narrative flow. Some translators connect it with the Philistines' terror mentioned at the beginning of the verse, while others associate it with the shaking of the earth mentioned in the previous sentence. Both are reasonable possibilities. The Hebrew word elohim is usually translated "god," but has the basic meaning of "strength, might"; the phrase "quaking of god" could be translated "a powerful trembling."

14:49 How many sons did Saul have, and who were they? The three sons listed in this verse are not the same as those in 31:2, which omits Ishvi but adds Abinadab. Also, there is the question of Ish-bosheth (2 Sm 2:8,10,12)—was he a fifth son? The genealogical information in1 Ch 8:33 and 9:39 does much to clear up these matters. The writer indicates that Saul had four sons, but substitutes the name Esh-baal for Ishvi. Scholars understand Ish-bosheth to be an alternate form of Esh-baal, substituted in order to avoid pronouncing the title of a pagan god as part of the name. Thus Ishvi was known by two other names in the OT, Esh-baal and Ish-bosheth.

14:51 On the ancestry of Kish, see note on 9:1.

15:3 Why were the Israelites supposed to kill the Amalekites' women, children, and infants? This passage is one of a handful in the OT where God explicitly ordered the Israelites to eliminate an entire population (see also Dt 7:2; 13:15; 20:16-17; 25:19). For many people today these passages are the most troubling ones in the Bible. How could a loving God order His people to slaughter women and babies? The answer lies in the nature of God and His plans to rescue humanity. Being a perfectly just God, the Lord cannot let sin go unpunished. Individuals who sin will die for their sins (see Ezk 18:4; Rm 6:23), though that death need not come about immediately following a sinful act, and may be averted altogether if the sinner turn from sin in time (Ezk 18:20-21). What is true of individuals is also true of groups that commit sinful acts (see Jnh 3:9-10; Jl 2:13-14). The problem with the few groups of individuals whom God ordered to be completely destroyed was that they had incorporated grave sins into the very fabric of their society and continued in their sins over a considerable period of time. The Amalekites, for example, had created a culture that had no qualms about killing frail Israelites and kidnapping children for the sake of material gain (Dt 25:17-18; see also Jdg 6:3-6; 1 Sm 14:48; 30:1-3). Likewise, to be a Canaanite entailed being a supporter of a polytheistic religion that practiced child sacrifice, prostitution, bestiality, and homosexuality. These cultures had become spiritually gangrenous and had been that way for hundreds of years (see Gn 15:16; Dt 25:17-18). Since they refused to change, the only way to keep their deadly influences from spreading to other societies was through the complete elimination of every object (Ex 23:24; 34:13; Dt 7:5; 12:3; Jdg 2:2) and person (Dt 7:2; Dt 13:15; 20:16-17) associated with them.

In summary, God ordered the violent elimination of the Amalekites and certain other social groups for two main reasons: as punishment for the accumulated sins of those societies (see Gn 15:16; Lv 18:24-25; Dt 9:5; 12:31) and the elimination of their influence on other societies (Ex 23:33; Dt 7:4; 12:30-31; 20:17-18).

For a discussion of God ordering the Israelites to go to war see the article, "Does the Bible Support a Just War?" (p. 995).

15:3 Why were the Israelites to kill the Amalekites' animals? In a land without money or banks (these did not exist during the days of Saul), livestock—oxen, sheep, goats, camels, and donkeys—was a major form of wealth. But God did not want the Israelites to go to war in order to enrich themselves at their enemies' expense. This solemn task was to be done to carry out a divine death sentence, not for personal gain.

15:7-8 If Saul destroyed all of the Amalekites (except Agag), why did Israel have to fight them later on (see 27:8; 30:1,16-17; 2 Sm 1:8,13; 1 Ch 4:43)? In the context of Israelite history as a whole, it is clear that Saul killed all the Amalekites he found, not all those that existed. Many Amalekites would have abandoned their homes and become temporary war refugees in surrounding regions. Those who escaped prior to the battle lived to fight another day. David later did the same thing, going into temporary exile (1 Sm 21:10) to avoid Saul's army.

15:8 An oracle uttered by Balaam in Nm 24:7 indicated that Israel's king would be "greater than Agag"; in the present passage Saul captured Agag, apparently fulfilling this prophecy. The term Agag could either be a personal name or a title (compare with the Bible's use of "Pharaoh"). If Agag is a person, Balaam foresaw his defeat at the hands of Saul; Agag did not live during the time of Moses. If Agag is a title, Balaam spoke of the superiority of Israel's kings to Amalekite kings.

15:11 God chose Saul to be Israel's king (9:15-16), then according to this verse regretted His action, and afterward chose David in his place (15:28; 16:12). Yet the prophet Samuel told Saul that God does not change His mind (15:29). While this may appear contradictory, Scripture elsewhere supports Samuel's statement (Ps 15:4; Mal 3:6; Jms 1:17). God's will and purpose remain the same, but the free response of people to His commands may lead to a modification of His actions on the human scene (see Jr 18:8; Ezk 18:24; Jnh 3:10). At least from the human perspective, His relationships with people are authentic and personal, not pre-programmed.

15:18 On why God would order the killing of women, children, and infants, see first note on 15:3.

15:22 God gladly accepted the sacrifices of His worshipers during the OT era, as long as their gifts were accompanied by a proper attitude of the heart. People had offered sacrifices since the days of Cain and Abel, and God received them (Gn 4:3-4). In the law given at Mount Sinai, the Lord required the Israelites to bring burnt offerings and a variety of sacrifices to Him as part of their regular worship. But, as Cain learned (Gn 4:5-6), a sacrifice that was not matched with a life in submission to God was not acceptable (see Is 1:11-17; Ps 51:16-17; Pr 21:27; Jr 6:19-20; Am 5:21-24; Mc 6:6-8). Samuel, in the present verse, gives voice to that truth.

15:29 Does God lie, or not? Samuel's statement that God does not lie seems to contradict the account in 1 Kg 22:19-23, where God put a lying spirit in the mouths of Ahab's false prophets (see also Jr 4:10; Ezk 14:2-11; 2 Th 2:11). The Bible teaches that God is the ultimate truth and speaks only the truth (Ps 119:160; Jn 1:14; 17:17). Jesus, the incarnate second person of the trinity, spoke the truth even when it produced personal pain and suffering (Mt 26:63-66; Jn 8:40-59). On three occasions in Scripture the Holy Spirit is called the Spirit of truth (Jn 14:17; 15:26; 16:13). King Ahab had hired so-called prophets to spread lies that supported his personal ambitions; these men creatively proclaimed messages in the Lord's name that agreed with the king's hopes. The Lord put a lying spirit in the mouths of Ahab's prophets in the sense that He gave these professional liars the energy and opportunity to do what they were determined to do, to provide the king with the lie he wanted to hear.

15:35 Didn't Samuel see Saul again before he died? In the Hebrew text and some English versions of the Bible an apparent contradiction exists between this verse and 19:24, where Saul went to Samuel and spent the day prophesying before him. The HCSB translation, however, preserves the intent of the Hebrew phrase, which states literally "Samuel did not again to see." Samuel never again sought out Saul, though Saul would go to see him.

16:2 If God hates lying, why did He tell Samuel to lie? God is truthful (15:29), hates lying (Pr 6:16-17; Zch 8:16-17), and expects people to tell the truth (Ex 20:16; Lv 19:11; Eph 4:25; Col 3:9; Rv 22:15). He commanded Samuel to offer a sacrifice, and the prophet was to tell that to anyone who asked without revealing the Lord's fuller intentions. To disclose them would only help Saul and his supporters carry out their murderous plans against an innocent man. They were not owed the full truth, and they did not get it.

16:6-11 How many sons did Jesse have? In 1 Sm, Jesse had eight sons (see also 17:12); however, in 1 Ch 2:13-15 only seven are mentioned. It is possible that one of David's older brothers died early in life and was therefore not counted in the writer's reckoning. Differences in the Bible regarding the names of Jesse's sons amount to normal variations, roughly equivalent to nicknames today—Eliab = Elihu (1 Ch 27:18); Shammah = Shimea (1 Ch 2:13). These could be dialectical variants, as well.

16:14 Scripture passages such as this seem to indicate that God sometimes behaves in demonic or evil ways (Jdg 9:23; 1 Kg 22:23; Jb 12:16; Ps 18:26; Is 45:7; Ezk 14:9; Mt 6:13; Lk 11:4; 2 Th 2:11). Such passages must be understood within the overall framework of the Bible's teachings about God. Scripture affirms that God is completely righteous (Jdg 5:11; Ezr 9:15; Ps 7:9; 48:10; 71:19; 111:3; 112:4; 116:5; 119:137,142; 145:17; Is 51:8; Jr 9:24; Dn 9:7; Hs 14:9; Jn 17:25; Rm 1:17; Rv 16:5), hates evil (Zch 8:17), and never does anything unjust (Rm 9:14). At the same time, God created a universe with built-in rewards and punishments that reinforce divine moral law. For example, when people disregard His moral order and abuse theirbodies through the misuse of food, alcohol or sex, they will predictably experience health problems. Such problems can be interpreted as warning signs motivating us to give up bad behavior and do what is right.

Saul had lived a life of chronic disobedience to God, and therefore had opened himself to demonic oppression. While it was a form of punishment, because of Saul's disregard for God's moral order, it was also intended to drive him to repent and turn back to the Lord. God, Who is Master of all the created order, will use even demons, against their will, for redemptive purposes.

16:21-23 On whether Saul knew David well before David killed Goliath, see note on 17:55-58.

16:23 How could David's harp playing drive away an evil spirit from Saul? The Bible does not indicate how it happened, although the general effect of music on the emotions is well known. David was considered Israel's favorite singer (2 Sm 23:1) and in the OT was credited with writing 73 psalms. David's music combined with the Word of God in the presence of the demon drove it away (see Ps 119:50; Heb 4:12).

17:4 How tall was Goliath? The ancient texts disagree on this matter: the Hebrew text states that Goliath was "six cubits and a span" (= 9 ft. 9 in.) in height, while the Septuagint, a Qumran manuscript, and Josephus indicate he was "four cubits and a span" (= 6 ft. 9 in.). The tallest known human being in modern times was Robert Wadlow, who attained a height of 8 feet, 11.1 inches before his death in 1940. In view of the excessive weight of Goliath's armor and weapons, the biblical author evidently understood the Philistine to be awesome in size; the MT's figure is therefore probably the original. The Bible does not state whether Goliath's height included his shoes and helmet, though it would not be improper to have included these in the overall figure.

17:12 On how many sons Jesse had, see note on 16:6-11.

17:50 Who killed Goliath, David or Elhanan? This dramatic account of David's killing of Goliath seems to be contradicted by 2 Sm 21:19, where Elhanan is said to have performed the deed. The issue is complicated by the fact that 1 Ch 20:5 mentions that Elhanan killed Lahmi, the brother of Goliath—not Goliath himself.

Attempting to resolve these discrepancies, some scholars suggest that a pre-Christian-era copyist introduced an error into 2 Sm 21:19 that created the mistaken impression that Elhanan killed Goliath; the correct reading of the original, in this case, would be preserved in 1 Ch 20:5. Another approach suggests that the contradiction between 1 Sm 17:50 and 2 Sm 21:19 is only apparent. Ancient rabbis suggested that Elhanan is another name for David (which in Hb means "beloved one" and could be a nickname). "Goliath" could be a title and not a name, so there may have been two fighters from Gath named Goliath.

17:54 Jerusalem was not under Israelite control at the time of this incident, but it was a city of great military interest to David's tribe of Judah. The tribe had fought against the city (Jos 15:63) and had taken a war trophy there previously after temporarily conquering it (Jdg 1:8). Jerusalem was a city of great interest to David as well, the first city he set out to conquer when he became king of all Israel (2 Sm 5:6-9). Perhaps David took Goliath's head there to intimidate Jerusalem's Jebusite residents, letting them know that Israel was a nation to be feared. Alternatively, this verse may refer to an event that took place a few years later, after David had conquered the city.

17:55-58 This passage seems to contradict 16:19-23, which shows Saul not only inviting David to come and work for him (16:19), but declares that he loved him greatly. However, this text does not indicate that Saul did not know who David was, only that he did not know the name of his father (see vv. 55-58). Saul's was seeking the information he needed to issue the decree of tax exemption promised for David's family (see v. 25).

18:1-4 The Bible indicates that Jonathan and David loved each other deeply (19:1; 20:17; 2 Sm 1:26) and made a covenant with each other (1 Sm 20:8,16; 22:8; 23:18), but there is no indication of their having a homosexual relationship. Scripture teaches that God disapproves of homosexual activity (Lv 18:22; 20:13; Rm 1:24-27; Jd 7; see also the article "What Does the Bible Teach about Homosexuality?" p. 1716). Jonathan and David were men who were careful to obey God in all matters (1 Sm 23:16; 1 Kg 11:4), with the notable exception of David's sin with Bathsheba. It is reasonable to conclude that these two men obeyed God in this matter as well.

In the ancient Near East, as in conservative Islamic societies today, adult men and women were not permitted to have friendships, casual or otherwise, with one another. Because social roles assigned to males and females differed greatly, men could not usually have close friendships, based on mutual interests, even with their wives. Women were excluded from many activities common to men; they could not take part in military affairs, and were generally excluded from religious rites as well. Men, in like fashion, were not expected to engage in most activities associated with women. Men had to cultivate their friendships with other men, while reserving sexual activity for their wives (or prostitutes). Sometimes such friendships could be intense, but they did not have a sexual component. Jonathan and David were great friends, fellow soldiers, brothers-in-law, and brothers in the faith, but they were not homosexual "lovers."

18:10 On God's sending an evil spirit to torment Saul, see note on 16:14.

18:10 Did Saul prophesy, or rave like a madman? Some English versions of the Bible state that Saul was prophesying here, but others say that he was raving. The difference arises from how translators choose to render the same Hebrew word. What was regarded as "prophesying," in the ancient Near East, could take the form of frenzied and even self-destructive activity (cp the prophets of Baal, 1 Kg 18:28-29). Pagan cultures often regarded such bizarre behavior as proof that a god had come upon someone, and even associated prophetic activity with altered states of consciousness, insanity, or even epilepsy. This differed from the usual Israelite expression of prophetic activity, which involved a prophet's speaking or chanting (1 Ch 25:1-3) coherently to an individual or group in the name of the Lord.

Because Saul's act of "prophesying" was connected with an irrational attempt to murder David, his most valuable soldier and assistant, he was behaving more like a pagan prophet than an Israelite prophet. Accordingly, many Bible versions translate Saul's activity as "raving."

18:12 Once God the Father gives the Holy Spirit to a person, does the Spirit remain with that person or can He depart? At least three other OT passages in addition to the present verse suggest that the Holy Spirit could be taken away from people who persisted in living in disobedience toward God (Jdg 16:20; 1 Sm 28:15; Ps 51:11). On the other hand, Jn 14:16 indicates the Holy Spirit will abide forever with people who receive Him.

The NT teaches that the death and resurrection of Jesus fundamentally changed certain aspects of humanity's relationship with God. The old covenant at Sinai was replaced with the covenant of Christ's body and blood (1 Co 11:25; Heb 8:13), and with this change the Holy Spirit began operating differently in the lives of God's people. The NT speaks of the Holy Spirit as a gift to believers in Jesus Christ (Ac 2:38; 10:45) and a seal on their hearts, a guarantee of eternal life (2 Co 1:22; Eph 1:13). Besides being given to women and Gentiles (there are no examples of either of these receiving the Spirit in the OT), the Holy Spirit is a permanently indwelling presence in the lives of all Christians. The NT provides no instance of the Holy Spirit departing from a Christian; this suggests that what happened to Saul cannot happen to a believer in Christ.

18:19 On who was married to Adriel the Meholathite, see note on 25:44.

18:27 How many Philistines did David kill to gain the right to marry Saul's daughter Michal? The ancient texts disagree: the Hebrew text gives 200 but the Septuagint only 100. Even though Saul had only required David to kill 100, the larger number is probably correct. David was a zealous fighter for the Lord (v. 17) and his king (vv. 25-26), and this figure convincingly reflects David's high level of commitment to both.

19:1 On whether Jonathan and David had a homosexual relationship, see note on 18:1-4.

19:9 On God's sending an evil spirit to torment Saul, see note on 16:14.

19:13-17 Was Michal right to deceive and lie? God hates lying (Pr 6:16-17; Zch 8:16-17) and expects people to tell the truth (Ex 20:16; Lv 19:11; Eph 4:25; Col 3:9; Rv 22:15). On the other hand, Saul's intentions were to kill an innocent man; Michal was not obligated to give him information that would help him carry out this wicked act. If Michal did not hide David's escape and then lie about her cover-up, both she and David would probably have died.

Michal's example does not give Christians, or anyone else, permission to lie for the sake of personal convenience, or to hide wrongdoing. But Michal's actions demonstrate that, within an environment where human sin abounds, it is not always possible to choose between pure good and pure evil (see note on Ex 1:19).

19:19-24 On Saul's prophetic activity, see note on 18:10.

19:23-24 On why there are two different accounts of the origin of this saying, see note on 10:11.

19:24 On whether this contradicts Samuel's previous statement that he would never again see Saul, see note on 15:35.

20:6 David's actions—skipping a required engagement and asking Jonathan to lie about the reason—seem to have violated God's command to tell the truth (see Ex 20:16; Eph 4:25), as well as his duty to the king. Normally his actions would have been wrong, but in these circumstances they were justifiable. David had good reason to believe that Saul intended to kill him, though he had done nothing worthy of death (see 1 Sm 18:11,17,25; 19:1,10-11,15,20-21,23-24). David had the right to protect himself. His plan prevented the king from committing a crime, and preserved an innocent human life. Furthermore, it did not involve the use of physical force against someone, or the destruction of property, see 19:13-17.

20:17 On whether Jonathan and David had a homosexual relationship, see note on 18:1-4.

20:28-29 For a discussion of whether it was right for Jonathan to lie to his father, see note on 20:6.

21:1 Who was the high priest at this time—Ahimelech, Ahijah, Abiathar, or Abimelech? In the present verse Ahimelech is seemingly the highest-ranking priest, since he had the authority to give David access to Goliath's sword and to give him some of the food normally reserved for priests. Interestingly, when Jesus referred to this same event during a discussion with some Pharisees (Mk 2:26), He declared that Abiathar, not Ahimelech, was the high priest who supplied David with food.

The situation becomes even more complicated when one considers 1 Sm 14:3. There Ahijah was the priest who wore an ephod, a linen garment reserved for officiating priests (see Ex 29:5; Lv 8:7). Being with the king at that time, he was presumably the highest-ranking priest. Furthermore, 1 Ch 18:16 lists Abimelech as the son of Abiathar as priest, though its parallel passage in 2 Sm 8:17 gives his name as Ahimelech.

In attempting to harmonize these passages, it is worth noting that there is no evidence that the Pharisees accused Jesus of error when he named Abiathar as the high priest that helped David, a circumstance lending tacit support to the identification. Further, Abiathar was the name of both Ahimelech's father(2 Sm 8:17; 1 Ch 24:6), though Abiathar was also known as Ahitub (1 Sm 22:20), and his son (1 Sm 22:20; 23:6). The Abiathar to whom Jesus referred could have been Ahimelech's still-living father, who because of his seniority would have been considered the high priest (cp. the joint priestly roles of Caiaphas and his father-in-law Annas during the arrest and trial of Jesus, e.g., Jn 18:13). Alternatively, Jesus could have referred to Ahimelech's son Abiathar, who became high priest after the death of 85 priests at Nob (1 Sm 22:18).

Another possibility is that Ahijah, Ahimelech, Abiathar and Abimelech are different names for the same person. Finally, though textual evidence is lacking, a careless copyist might have substituted the name Abiathar for Ahimelech in the Mark manuscript, creating a conflict that did not exist in the original text. Or the name Abimelech for Ahimelech in 1 Ch 18:16 could be a pre-Christian scribal error; both 'ahi- and 'abi- were common elements in Hebrew names.

21:2 Did David lie to Ahimelech in order to obtain food? David stated that "the king" had given him a mission that required secrecy. Ahimelech did not ask the identity of the king, and David did not clarify to whom he was referring (see also v. 8). Since God is King (Nm 23:21; Ps 10:16; 47:2; 98:6; 1 Tm 1:17) and David was arguably following God's orders in this matter, he was telling the truth.

If David's words to Ahimelech still seem misleading, it should be borne in mind that he was attempting to defend himself against a man who would wrongly take his life. He told the truth in a guarded fashion; to have told Ahimelech more would have brought the priest into the deadly struggle between David and the king. Sadly, David's best efforts failed (1 Sm 22:17) and this occurred anyway, due to the presence of a treacherous observer (1 Sm 21:7).

21:12-15 The narrative of 1 Sm presents two differing pictures of Achish's relationship with David (cp. 29:6-9).Here David is afraid of Achish, who considers him a madman. In the later passage, David is Achish's trusted ally and bodyguard (27:12; 28:2; 29:6-9).

These accounts are not at odds with one another; evidently Achish changed his opinion of David over time. During David's earlier career, Achish knew him only as a dangerous enemy of the Philistines and loyal servant of Saul. Later he learned that David had become Saul's most feared enemy, which made him potentially a valued partner with the Philistines. Achish gladly modified his stance toward David, and accepted him as a comrade-in-arms.

22:18 How many priests did Doeg kill? Ancient authorities provide three figures for the death toll in the slaughter at Nob: the Hebrew text gives 85, the Septuagint 305, and Josephus 385. The differences suggest that a scribal error affected one or more ancient textual traditions. The weight of tradition stands in favor of the Hebrew reading in the MTs.

22:20 Was Abiathar the son of Ahimelech, or Ahimelech the son of Abiathar (see 2 Sm 8:17)? Both are true: Ahimelech's father was named Abiathar, and Ahimelech named his son Abiathar. As in many American families today, families in Bible cultures sometimes reused the names of respected elders from previous generations (see Jesus' genealogy, Mt 1:1-16).

23:1 On whether this verse contradicts an earlier statement regarding the Philistines fighting against Israel, see note on 7:13.

23:13 According to 22:2, David had 400 men in his militia, but this verse states he had 600. These numbers reflect changing circumstances in the nation of Israel; no contradiction is involved. Saul's unpopular actions in slaying the priestly families at Nob (22:18-19), combined with David's military success at Keilah (23:5), had brought hundreds of men over to David's side in hopes of bringing about a change in Israel's leadership.

24:5 David was upset after he cut the corner off of Saul's robe. Though he had not physically injured the king, he had sinned. Saul was still God's chosen and anointed leader for Israel, and the king's robe was a symbol of his divinely appointed office. David's act could be taken as rebellion against God Himself. Furthermore, the law of Moses required all robes to have tassels at their corners to remind people of God's laws (Nm 15:37-40). For David to remove this reminder from Saul's clothing was to hinder the king's relationship with the Lord. Any act that makes it harder for another to serve God is sinful (cp. Lk 17:1-2).

24:21-22 If David took an oath not to cut off Saul's descendants, why did he later allow the Gibeonites to kill seven of them? David's agreement was that he would not wipe out Saul's descendants as a way of "cleaning house" when he took over the kingship of Israel. That was the normal practice in the ancient Near East when a ruler established a new dynasty (that is, a ruler of a different family line from the previous king); it was done to eliminate other potential claimants to the throne (see 1 Kg 15:29; 16:11; 2 Kg 11:1; 25:7). David not only kept his agreement, he invited a member of Saul's family line to eat at the royal table and restored a generous inheritance to him (2 Sm 9:1-13).

Saul, in attempting to exterminate the Gibeonites, had brought great guilt on himself by violating the centuries-old agreement in which the Israelites had allowed them to live in the land (Jos 9:3-15; 2 Sm 21:2). Because Saul, as leader, represented all Israel (for discussions on corporate solidarity, see notes on Dt 2:30; 5:9; 19:6), his guilt led to the spread of famine (2 Sm 21:1). To bring an end to God's judgment, David agreed to let the Gibeonites take limited revenge on the house of Saul. As a remedy for Saul's homicidal actions, this "life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth" principle (Dt 19:21; cp. Ex 21:24; Lv 24:20) was effective; God lifted His punishment from Israel (2 Sm 21:14).

25:1 Did David go to the Wilderness of Paran or the Wilderness of Maon to avoid Saul? Modern Bible translations disagree, reflecting variant readings in ancient manuscripts. The NIV and NLT follow the Greek tradition, while the HCSB and other versions accept the Hebrew text. There is no compelling reason to depart from the Hebrew tradition, as the Greek reading may be due to a copyist's error.

25:37-38 How did Nabal die? English Bible versions differ based on the translators' decisions about how far to pursue a medical diagnosis based on the Hebrew description. The MT in verse 37 reads, lit., "His heart died in his midst, and he became stone." This could be taken to mean that Nabal experienced a heart attack, became dispirited, had a seizure, or suffered a stroke. Temporary loss of consciousness, paralysis or coma could have followed. Since the Hebrew provides only a description of symptoms, not a diagnosis, most modern versions opt for a reading that closely follows the Masoretic Text.

25:43 Throughout his lifetime David acquired at least eight wives (2 Sm 3:2-5,14-16; 1 Ch 3:1-5) and 10 concubines (2 Sm 15:16), in addition to Saul's harem (2 Sm 12:8). The Lord did not approve of David's departure from His plan for marriage. It would have destructive consequences later, when deadly rivalries developed between the women (see 1 Kg 1:1-4; 2:17-25) and families (2 Sm 13:1-32; 1 Kg 2:24-25) within David's harem. God's ideal plan for people from the beginning was for one man to marry one woman, and for the couple to remain in an exclusive sexual relationship for as long as both partners were alive. (On the Bible's view of polygamy, see notes on Ex 21:10; Jdg 8:30-31.)

25:44 Who became Michal's next husband after David? The text here states that Saul gave Michal to Palti (also known as Paltiel, 2 Sm 3:15); however, in 2 Sm 21:8 many English versions state that Michal's husband was Adriel. This textual tension apparently arises from an ancient scribal error in 2 Sm 21:8, where the MT links Michal with Adriel. On the other hand, the Septuagint, Syriac, and even some Hebrew manuscripts state in that same verse that Merab, not Michal, was Adriel's wife. Especially in the light of 1 Sm 18:19 and 2 Sm 6:23, it seems the Septuagint and Syriac preserve the correct reading.

27:7 Ancient manuscripts disagree as to how long Da-vid was in Philistine territory. The MT states that David was among the Philistines a year and four months, while the Septuagint indicates that the time was only four months. Especially in light of Achish's statement in 1 Sm 29:3, the Hebrew reading should be accepted.

27:8 On whether this reference to the Amalekites contradicts an earlier passage in 1 Sm, see note on 15:7-8.

27:9 David took even the women's lives when he attacked the Geshurites, Girzites, and Amalekites. David's actions described here were aimed at finishing the work that Joshua and later generations of Israelites had left undone, that of ridding Canaan of its pagan cultures. (For further discussion of this question, see notes on Nm 31:13-24; Dt 1:30; 2:21; 7:16; 1 Sm 15:3.) The people groups against which David fought were residual populations that had not yet been dealt with.

27:10 Was it right for David to deceive Achish? In response to the pagan king's inquiry David gave a direct and geographically accurate answer, though not the entire truth. He did not tell which people groups he had been fighting, for to do so was to risk forcing more than 1,000 Israelites—David, his men, and their families—back into a deadly confrontation with Saul. Needless bloodshed would have ensued. (For further discussion of lying, see notes on Ex 1:19; 1 Sm 19:13-17.)

27:12 On whether Achish's relationship with David in this passage contradicts the earlier description of their relationship in 1 Sm, see note on 21:12-15.

28:1 On whether this verse contradicts an earlier statement regarding the Philistines fighting against Israel, see note on 7:13.

28:6 Why didn't the Lord answer Saul's plea for help? The Bible teaches that people who consistently reject God's leadership in their lives, and refuse to follow the guidance He has already provided, should not expect Him to deliver them from trouble resulting from their poor choices (Jb 27:9; 35:12; Pr 1:23-28; Is 1:15; Jr 11:11; 14:12; Ezk 8:18; Mc 3:4; Zch 7:13; Jms 4:3). Saul had consistently disobeyed God (1 Sm 13:13-14; 15:11-23),even going so far as to kill the Lord's priests (22:17-19).He had created vast problems for himself and his nation. The Lord was not going to promise the king supernatural deliverance from those problems, even though Saul earnestly sought His help. Instead, God would use the Philistines as the instrument of judgment against Saul.

28:6 This passage says that Saul inquired of the Lord, while 1 Ch 10:14 says he did not. The contradiction is apparent only in English translations. In this verse Saul "asked" (Hb da-raš; "inquired of") the Lord to provide guidance, but the Lord did not answer him. In1 Ch 10:13-14 Saul "asked" (Hb da-raš; "consulted") a medium for guidance but did not "seek" (Hb darash; "inquire of") the Lord. The point is that Saul died because he committed a capital offense in consulting a medium (see Lv 20:27) rather than seeking to obey God.

28:8-22 Did the medium of Endor really conjure up the dead prophet Samuel? Though scholars disagree on this question, the Bible suggests that she did. The law of Moses sternly forbids consultation of mediums (Lv 20:27; Dt 18:10-12) but never says that communicating with dead people is impossible. Saul was seemingly able to speak with a figure that not only accurately repeated key themes from Samuel's previous private conversations with Saul, but also correctly predicted the deaths of Saul and his sons. This suggests that the king was indeed speaking with Samuel.

28:19 Does this passage suggest that all people go to the same place at death, whereas Lk 16:23 and Ac 1:25 indicate that they go to different places? Along with other passages (see Ec 3:20-21; Dn 12:2,13), this verse refers to an intermediate state between physical death and one's final destiny (Samuel had died only recently, 25:1). Samuel's words to Saul here merely indicate that within a day's time Saul and three of his sons would be dead.

29:6-9 On whether Achish's relationship with David in this passage contradicts the earlier description of their relationship in 1 Sm, see note on 21:12-15.

31:3-5 The Bible provides three complementary accounts of Saul's receiving mortal wounds leading to his death. According to verse 3, Saul was severely wounded by a Philistine arrow. Then, to avoid being sadistically executed by the vengeance-seeking Philistines (17:51; 18:27), Saul fell on his own sword (v. 4), receiving a second grave wound that in time would have killed him (2 Sm 1:9). His armor-bearer, seeing that the king was now dead, then fell upon his sword and perished, as well (1 Sm 31:5). Later, an Amalekite—probably on the battlefield to steal personal possessions from the corpses—tried to take credit for dealing Saul's final death blow (2 Sam 1:6-10); whether or not he was telling the truth, it was a foolish move on his part. Though this sequence of events as the Bible relates it is complicated, it is certainly plausible.

31:4-5 Suicide involves the unauthorized taking of a human life, and as such violates the sixth commandment (Ex 20:13); God does not sanction it. The Apostle Paul prevented the Philippian jailer from taking his own life (Ac 16:27-28). But, as with all other sins (with the exception of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, Mt 12:31), suicide is not a sin that automatically excludes a person from heaven.

The biblical narrative records examples of several individuals who took their own lives. In each case the circumstances of the suicide were inglorious and regrettable. Samson, tortured and humiliated by the Philistines, took his own life with theirs after a ruinous career of disregard for the Lord (Jdg 16:30). Ahithophel committed suicide after being publicly humiliated by having his advice rejected, and in order to avoid being executed for treason (2 Sm 17:23). Zimri, after murdering an Israelite king, ended his life to avoid being killed by his pursuers (1 Kg 16:18). Judas committed suicide after his betrayal of Jesus (Mt 27:5). Saul's attempted suicide was carried out to avoid the humiliation and torture the approaching Philistines would certainly have inflicted on him. There are no biblical examples of honorable suicide. An examination of the Bible's accounts of these lives and deaths suggest two primary scriptural observations about suicide: first, it is an option that some deeply troubled people will choose when facing desperate circumstances; and second, it is a pathetic and tragic end to a human life.

2 Samuel Articles

Has the Bible Been Accurately Copied Down Through the Centuries?

by Norman L. Geisler

The Bible is the most accurately transmitted book from the ancient world. No other ancient book has as many, as early, or more accurately copied manuscripts.

Old Testament

Old Testament manuscript reliability is based on three factors: their abundance, dating, and accuracy. Most works from antiquity survive on only a handful of manuscripts: only 7 for Plato, 8 for Thucydides, 8 for Herodotus, 10 for Caesar's Gallic Wars, and 20 for Tacitus. Only the works of Demosthenes and Homer number into the hundreds. Yet even before 1890 a scholar named Giovanni de Rossi published 731 OT manuscripts. Since that time some 10,000 OT manuscripts were found in the Cairo Geniza, and in 1947 the Dead Sea caves at Qumran produced over 600 OT manuscripts.

Further, the Dead Sea Scrolls, containing at least fragments of all OT books except Esther, all date from before the end of the first century A.D. and some to the third century B.C. The Nash Papyrus is dated between the second century B.C. and the first century A.D.

The manuscripts' accuracy is known from internal and external evidence. (1) It is well known that Jewish scribal reverence for Scripture led to its careful transmission. (2) Examination of duplicate passages (e.g., Pss 14 and 53) show parallel transmission. (3) The early Greek translation of the OT, the Septuagint, substantially agrees with the Hebrew manuscripts. (4) Comparison of the Samaritan Pentateuch with the same biblical books preserved within the Jewish tradition shows close similarity. (5) The Dead Sea Scrolls provide manuscripts dating a thousand years earlier than most used to establish the Hebrew text.

Comparative studies reveal word-for-word identity in 95 percent of the text. Minor variants consist mostly of slips of the pen or spelling. Only 13 small changes were discovered in the entire Dead Sea Scrolls copy of Isaiah, eight of which were known from other ancient sources. After 1,000 years of copying, there were no changes in meaning and almost no changes in wording!

New Testament

The reliability of the NT is established because the number, date, and accuracy of its manuscripts enable reconstruction of the original text with more precision than any other ancient text. The number of NT manuscripts is overwhelming (almost 5,700 Greek manuscripts) compared with the typical book from antiquity (about 7 to 10 manuscripts; Homer's Iliad has the most at 643 manuscripts). The NT is simply the best textually supported book from the ancient world.

The earliest undisputed NT manuscript is the John Rylands Papyrus, dated between A.D. 117 and 138. Whole books (e.g., those contained in the Bodmer Papyri) are available from around the year 200. And most of the NT, including all the Gospels, is available in the Chester Beatty Papyri manuscripts, dating to about 250. Noted British manuscript scholar Sir Frederick Kenyon wrote, "The interval then between the dates or original composition and the earliest extant evidence becomes so small as to be in fact negligible, and the last foundation for any doubt that the Scriptures have come down to us substantially as they were written has now been removed." Thus both "the authenticity and the general integrity of the books of the [NT] may be regarded as firmly established.” No other ancient book has as small a time gap between composition and earliest manuscript copies as the NT.

Not only are there more and earlier NT manuscripts, but also they were more accurately copied than other ancient texts. The NT scholar and Princeton professor Bruce Metzger made a comparison of the NT with the Iliad of Homer and the Mahabharata of Hinduism. He found the text of the latter to represent only 90 percent of the original (with 10 percent textual corruption), the Iliad to be 95 percent pure, and only half of 1 percent of the NT text to remain in doubt. The Greek scholar A. T. Robertson estimated that NT textual concerns have to do with only a “thousandth part of the entire text,” placing the accuracy of the NT text at 99.9 percent—the best known for any book from the ancient world. Sir Frederick Kenyon noted that “the number of [manuscripts] of the NT, of early translations from it, and of quotations from it in the older writers of the Church, is so large that it is practically certain that the true reading of every doubtful passage is preserved in some one or the other of these ancient authorities. This can be said of no other ancient book in the world.”

In summary, the vast number, early dates, and unmatched accuracy of the OT and NT manuscript copies establish the Bible’s reliability well beyond that of any other ancient book. Its substantial message has been undiminished through the centuries, and its accuracy on even minor details has been confirmed. Thus the Bible we hold in our hands today is a highly trustworthy copy of the original that came from the pens of the prophets and apostles.

Introduction to 1 Samuel

AUTHOR

The Bible does not say who wrote 1 and 2 Samuel. Many Bible students think Samuel along with Nathan and Gad had major input, pointing to 1 Ch 29:29 as evidence. Others think the books had a long history of composition with various narratives or narrative sources being composed from the time of the events until the time of the exile, when the "Former Prophets" were gathered into one collection. Such individual narratives would include: Shiloh (1 Sm 1–3), the ark (1 Sm 4:1–7:1), the rise of kingship (1 Sm 9:1–11:15), battles of Saul (1 Sm 13–15), the history of David's rise to power (1 Sm 16:14—2 Sm 5:25), David's reign (2 Sm 9–20), and the succession to the throne of David (1 Kg 1–2). An early scroll of 1 and 2 Samuel may well have been part of the book depository in Solomon's temple when it was completed.

A PIVOTAL PERIOD IN ISRAEL'S HISTORY

First and 2 Samuel play a pivotal role in the Bible for both historical and theological reasons. Historically, these books document the monumental transition that occurred in OT Israel as it moved from being a collection of 12 tribes with no national government to being a unified nation with a centralized government under the control of a king. Furthermore, these books provide a detailed description of the last leaders during the period of the judges, the career of Israel's first king, and the exploits and accomplishments of Israel's most famous king, David.

The books also document the historical fulfillment of promises made by God in the Torah. The law of Moses had predicted the rise of kingship as an institution in Israel (Gn 17:16; 35:11; 36:31; Dt 17:15); the events recorded in the books of Samuel show that the kingship became a historical reality. The Torah predicted that a member of the tribe of Judah would rule over Israel (Gn 49:10); this was borne out by the narratives in 1 and 2 Samuel with the ascent of David, of the tribe of Judah, to the throne. Furthermore, the promises that Israel would defeat Moab, Edom, and the Amalekites (Nm 24:17-20) were also shown to have been carried out. Finally, prophecies regarding the establishment of "a covenant of perpetual priesthood" for the family line of Eleazar the priest (Nm 25:13) were also moved toward fulfillment with the judgment enacted against the family line of Eli.

The books of Samuel also provide concrete historical examples that confirm the theological teachings of the Torah. One of the primary precepts of the Torah is that obedience to God brings blessings, while disobedience brings divine judgment. The contrasts between Eli and Samuel, as well as Saul and David, certainly bear this out. Disaster came to Eli and Saul as a result of their sins, but blessings came to Samuel and David as they followed the Lord. The life of David further demonstrates the sobering truth that God will bring judgment. Illustrations of the disastrous consequences that can result from failing to honor one's father (as Absalom did with his father David), as well as committing acts of murder and adultery (as David did with Uriah and Bathsheba) are all provided in vivid detail.

RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 SAMUEL

Perhaps the most serious question raised by recent skeptics regarding 1 and 2 Samuel relates to the historical trustworthiness of the narratives contained in these books. Some scholars dismiss the accounts as fanciful tales with no more historical value than the legends of King Arthur. This highly negative view of the historical reliability of these books is unjustified, however.

Though it is impossible to "prove" many of the details found in 1 and 2 Samuel (e.g., the exact words spoken in conversations, the daily whereabouts and activities of the participants in the narratives, the outcome of a minor military skirmish), it is possible to provide scientific confirmation of the general claims of the biblical texts. Archaeological investigation has confirmed, for example, that Philistines lived in the regions and at the times when the books of Samuel indicated they did. It has also proven that the family line of David (lit., the "house of David") served as kings over Israel; evidence for this is found in the form of two inscriptions coming from the ninth century B.C., the Tell Dan inscription and the Mesha Stele. The existence of a strong centralized government that developed following a period of destruction has been confirmed in such cities as Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer; this agrees well with the Bible's claims regarding the Israelite conquest of Canaan and the development of a national government during the kingship period.

The books of Samuel are especially valuable for Christians because they lay the foundation for the all-important doctrine of the Messiah, the ultimate descendant of David who would sit on an everlasting throne ruling over God's people and bring deliverance and justice. The promises God made to David in 2 Samuel 7 created hopes and expectations that the NT writers understood to have been fulfilled by Jesus. The Lord promised David that He would establish the kingdom of one of David's descendants (2 Sm 7:12); in the NT Jesus was identified as that descendant of David (Mt 1:20; 21:9) who brought the kingdom of God to humanity (Mt 12:28; Lk 11:20). God said David's descendant would build a house for God's name (2 Sm 7:13); the NT writers portrayed Jesus as one who built the ultimate temple of God in three days (Mt 26:61; Jn 2:19). God promised David that one of his descendants would have a throne that would last forever (2 Sm 7:13); the NT declares that Jesus had just that (Heb 1:8). God said that one of David's descendants would be a "son to Me" (2 Sm 7:14); Jesus came as the ultimate Son of God (Mt 16:16; Mk 1:1; Lk 1:35).

2 Samuel Study Notes

1:6-10 On whether the Bible contains contradictory accounts of how Saul died, see note on 1 Sm 31:3-5.

1:8,13 On whether this reference to the Amalekites contradicts an earlier passage in 1 Sm, see note on 1 Sm 15:7-8.

1:18 If the Book of Jashar contained the word of God, why was that book left out of the Bible? God directed human authors to use passages from many different works in composing the sacred Scriptures. Other omitted Israelite works mentioned in the Bible include the Book of the LORD's Wars (Nm 21:14), the Events of Samuel the Seer, the Events of Nathan the Prophet, the Events of Gad the Seer, (1 Ch 29:29), the Historical Record of Israel's Kings (1 Kg 14:19), and the Historical Record of Judah's Kings (1 Kg 14:29). Solomon composed more than a thousand songs (1 Kg 4:35), yet only two are preserved in the book of Psalms (72 and 127). Writing under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit in the NT, Paul included a quotation from the Cretan poet Epimenides (Ti 1:12) and quoted from the poets Epimenides and Aratus in his speech at Athens (Ac 17:28). As would any good human author, the Divine Author of the Bible used materials selected from many sources, fitting them into His grand design for the book of sacred Christian Scriptures.

1:26 On whether Jonathan and David had a homosexual relationship, see note on 1 Sm 18:1-4.

2:2 On whether God approved of David's taking more than one wife, see note on 1 Sm 25:43.

2:8 First Ch 10:6, which states that Saul's "whole house died together" while doing battle with the Philistines, yet here Ish-bosheth is still living. The term "house" is used several ways in the Hebrew OT: it can refer to a human residence (Jdg 19:21), a sacred temple (Is 56:7), or a family line (1 Kg 12:19). Here it means the employees of a powerful individual. A comparison of 1 Ch 10:6 with its parallel passage in 1 Sm 31:6 makes it clear that the writer intended the phrase "and his whole house" (1 Ch 10:6) to refer to "his armor-bearer, and all his men" (1 Sm 31:6)—that is, men close to Saul who were under his authority.

2:8 Two, or possibly three, different names appear in theBible for the son of Saul who became a rival to David. Throughout 2 Sm he is called Ish-bosheth, but in 1 Ch (8:33; 9:39) he is referred to as Esh-baal. Since Esh-baal means "Man of Baal" or "Fire of Baal," the writer of2 Sm apparently substituted bosheth ("shame" or "abomination") for ba'al in his name to avoid mentioning the title of the pagan god (see Ex 23:13; Jos 23:7). A third name applied to this son may be Ishvi (1 Sm 14:49) The Hebrew word ba'al means "husband" or "lord," hence it could have applied to Yahweh (cp. Hs 2:16). Saul need not have been honoring a Canaanite divinity in giving the name to his son. But because the title was so closely associated with pagan worship, the biblical narrator was led to make a substitution.

3:2 On whether God approved of David's taking more than one wife, see note on 1 Sm 25:43.

3:3 In 1 Ch 3:1 David's second son is called Daniel, but here his name is Chileab. Daniel could be an alternate name for Chileab, or another son born to Abigail. If Daniel and Chileab are different persons, then one of them probably died before reaching adulthood.

3:14 Was it right for David to take another man's wife to make her his own? Michal was already David's wife, and he had the right to take action to be reunited with her. Years before, he had paid for and exercised the right to marry her (1 Sm 18:25-27). They had never been divorced; Saul had forced David to flee from his home and had given Michal to another man. David's wife was thus forced into the awkward situation of being married to two men at the same time. David's actions here were a stern but justifiable effort to put an end to the wrong done to Michal and to him.

3:35 Jesus told his followers not to take oaths (Mt 5:34-37); here David takes one. Jesus' words in the Sermon on the Mount were meant to teach people the importance of speaking the truth at all times. David's oath did not relate to whether or not he was uttering a truthful statement. It was a heartfelt expression of his deep grief over the murder of Abner, his newfound ally.

4:6 Why does this verse read so differently in various Bible versions? In a few recent translations, this verse relates that Recab and Baanah slipped past a female doorkeeper who fell asleep after sifting wheat. Other translations do not mention the doorkeeper, and state that Recab and Baanah stabbed Ish-bosheth in the stomach. These variations mirror the different readings in the Hebrew and Greek texts of the OT, with most following the Hebrew tradition. Both readings stem from ancient sources, and it is impossible to know today which one represents the original text. In either case the essential meaning of the passage is the same: Recab and Baanah entered the king's house and murdered him in a shameful and gory manner.

5:6 On why David would have brought Goliath's head to Jerusalem even before he captured the city, see note on 1 Sm 17:54.

5:8 How did David and his men conquer Jerusalem? According to many modern versions, David spoke of going through a "water shaft." The KJV mentions a "gutter," NEB speaks of a "grappling iron," and the Septuagint reads "dagger." Since no one knows the meaning of the corresponding word in the Hebrew MT, translators have differed on whether David was referring to an architectural feature, a tool, or a weapon. The "water shaft" conjecture draws support from archaeological excavations in Jerusalem, where an ancient underground water shaft (constructed under Hezekiah, 2 Kg 20:20) leads to a spring outside the city walls.

5:8 David did not despise truly lame and blind people, as is evident from his treatment of Jonathan's son Mephibosheth who was crippled in both feet (4:4; 9:3). David permitted Mephibosheth to eat at the royal table daily at the palace in Jerusalem, and treated him as one of his own sons (9:7,11). When he spoke of the lame and the blind here, he was referring sarcastically to what the Jebusites themselves had said about how easy it would be for even the disabled to defend their city.

5:14-16 Two lists of David's sons born to him in Jerusalem appear in 1 Ch 3:5-8 and 14:3-7. Both lists contain the names of 13 sons, with only minor spelling differences. The list in this passage in 2 Sm records only 11 sons, omitting Nogah and Elpelet. This list is an abbreviation, not a contradiction; possibly it mentions only the sons that survived into adulthood.

5:21 This verse is supplemented by the parallel passage in 1 Ch 14:12, which states that David's men burned the Philistine idols. First, of course, they had to carry them away, as described here. The 1 Chronicles passages records their final disposition. No contradiction is present.

5:24 What kind of tree did God use in this miracle? Bible translations differ; suggestions include "mulberry," "aspen," "weeping," and "balsam." As the variant translations imply, the English equivalent of the Hebrew name for this tree is unknown; all translations are conjectural.

6:1 Ancient manuscripts give different totals for the soldiers involved in moving the ark of the covenant. The Hebrew MT reads 30,000 while the Septuagint figure is 70,000. Either total is possible, but there is no way to know which agrees with the original manuscript.

6:5 Were the people celebrating "with all kinds of fir wood instruments" or "with all their might with songs"? English translations that do not refer to fir wood instruments substitute a phrase from 1 Ch 13:8; in the translators' judgment, mention of fir wood instruments is out of place in the context. Honest efforts on the part of translators to emend what they consider a corrupted reading, the result of an ancient copyist's error, should not be considered contradictions.

6:6-7 Uzzah was only trying to stabilize the ark of the covenant; why did God kill him? The ark was the earthly throne of the living God (Ex 25:22; Nm 7:89; 1 Sm 4:4; 2 Sm 6:2; 2 Kg 19:15), or more properly, the footstool of His invisible throne. It was the holiest object in Israelite religion. As with ancient Asian kings (see Est 4:11), the Lord promised death to any unauthorized person who closely approached His throne (Nm 4:15). Uzzah was not an Aaronic priest and had no authority to touch the ark. He was not slain for his good intentions, but because he violated a command and trespassed into "territory" reserved for consecrated priests.

The tragedy could have been avoided if Uzzah and Ahio had insisted that David move the ark in the way the law of Moses required. It was to be carried by the Levites, not transported on a cart (Nm 4:15; 7:9; see2 Sm 6:13).

6:10 This passage identifies Obed-edom as a Gittite, but throughout 1 Ch he is a Levite (1 Ch 15:17-25; 16:4-5,37-38; 26:1-5). "Gittite" is a geographical designation referring to one living in the region of Gath; "Levite" is a tribal designation. Obed-edom could have been both.

6:14 Within Israelite society the linen ephod was worn only by priests (Ex 28:6; 1 Sm 2:18; 22:18). David was of the tribe of Judah, not the priestly tribe of Levi, yet he wore the ephod on this ceremonial occasion. In so doing he was placing himself in a priestly role, but not that of a Levitical priest. Having recently conquered Jerusalem, he assumed all the titles and offices held by its previous kings, including those of Melchizedek, ancient king of Salem (Jerusalem) who was also a priest of God Most High (Gn 14:18). In this sense David could be considered a priest, though not one that could perform the duties reserved only for Levitical priests.

6:20 Did David expose his nakedness while dancing before the Lord? Though Michal accused David of this, she was probably exaggerating in her anger. David was wearing a linen ephod, a garment worn by priests of the Lord (Ex 28:4). If he was properly dressed as a priest, he would also have worn a linen undergarment (Ex 28:42-43). His modesty would have been preserved even while he was dancing exuberantly. Michal despised David(2 Sm 7:16) and, moreover, seems to have not fully commitment herself to the worship of the Lord; she avoided the religious ceremony, even though other women attended (see vv. 19-22). Her spurious charges against David were only symptomatic of her deeper spiritual problems.

6:23 This passage indicates that Michal remained childless, whereas the Hebrew MT of 21:8 ascribes five sons to her. An ancient scribal error in the Hebrew text of 21:8, followed by some English versions, seems to be responsible for the discrepancy. The ancient Greek and Syriac (Aramaic) manuscripts, and English translations that follow them, preserve the correct reading.

7:16 This important passage is the Bible's earliest full statement about the enduring Davidic dynasty (but cp. Gn 49:10). Did God break His promise when He allowed the Babylonians to conquer Judah in 586 B.C., ending the independent political rule of the Davidic kings? Although the line of David continued during Israel's exile (2 Kg 25:27-30) and afterward (Mt 1:12-16.), the family dropped into obscurity after the governorship of Zerubbabel (Hg 1:1). But this passage can be understood as a messianic prophecy fulfilled by Jesus, who was of the line of David (Mt 1:17; Lk 1:32; Rm 1:3). God had promised through several OT prophets that the line of Davidic kings would one day be reestablished (see Is 11:1; 9:7; Jr 23:5; 33:15-17; Ezk 34:23-24; 37:25; Hs 3:5; Am 9:11). With the coming of Jesus the Christ (Messiah, "anointed"), the ultimate descendant of David and King of the Jews (Mt 27:11,37; Mk 15:2,26; Lk 23:3,38; Jn 18:33-34; 19:19-22; Rev 17:14; 19:16), God fulfilled His promise eternally.

8:1 Did David capture Metheg-ammah or Gath? The parallel passage in 1 Ch 18:1 substitutes the Philistine city Gath for Metheg-ammah. That two-word phrase occurs only here in the Bible, with the obscure literal meaning of "the bridle of the forearm"; it may or may not be a place name. Apparently the writer of 1 Ch understood to the phrase as a description of the important Philistine city and chose to substitute its common name. If Metheg-ammah is a place name, then the writer of2 Sm mentioned one city that David conquered at that time, while the Chronicler mentioned another.

8:4 English versions of this passage, following variant translators' judgments, disagree on whether David captured 1,700, 700 or 7,000 horsemen from Hadadezer. In the 1 Ch 18:4 parallel passage, the total is 7000, with some additional factual differences. The KJV and NKJV apparently try to reconcile the discrepancy by stating that David captured 1,000 chariots and 700 horsemen. The NIV rejects the MT here, following the reading of the Septuagint and Dead Sea scrolls which agrees with 1 Ch 18:4. A copyist's error in pre-Christian times can be assumed for either this verse or 1 Ch 18:4. Most probably of the alteration occurred in 2 Sm after the writing of 1 Ch, which preserves the original wording.

8:8 From which of Hadadezer's cities did David obtain bronze? The city names listed here do not agree with those given in the corresponding verse in 1 Ch (1 Ch 18:8). The differences may be evidence of a damaged text in this chapter, or the writer of 2 Sm may have mentioned two other cities in Hadadezer's territory, not mentioned in the Chronicler's account, from which David obtained bronze. (This is the third time a significant disagreement occurs between this chapter and 1 Ch 18.)

8:13 The Hebrew text here states that David struck down the Arameans; other ancient versions, as well as 1 Ch 18:12, indicate that his forces defeated the Edomites. As with the three previous problems in this chapter, it is probable that a scribal error has occurred here and that 1 Ch 18:12 preserves the original reading. The error could have arisen from confusion of the Hebrew "r" (resh) with "d" (daleth), which resembles it in both ancient and later script.

8:17 On whether Abiathar was the son of Ahimelech or vice versa, see note on 1 Sm 22:20.

8:17 On who was high priest at that time, see note on 1 Sm 21:1.

10:18 Did David's army kill 700 or 7,000 Aramean charioteers? The figure given here is one-tenth the total in the parallel passage, 1 Ch 19:18. As in other numeric disagreements between 1 and 2 Sm and 1 and 2 Ch (see 2 Sm 8:4), one of the two verses must incorporate a scribal error introduced after the original manuscript was written. It is not possible today to determine which reading is the original, but the smaller number seems more likely.

10:18 The name of Hadadezer's general is Shobach in this verse, but given as Shophach in 1 Ch 19:18. The difference amounts to one letter in Hebrew—"b" (beth) here and "p" (pe) in Chronicles—and can be accounted for as a transcriptional error by an ancient copyist, an error of hearing through copying by dictation (the sounds are similar), or an alternate name for the same person. In any case, it need not be considered an error in the original manuscript.

11:2 In ancient Israel all houses had flat roofs. Since houses were not air-conditioned and building space was limited within cities, roofs were used as living space. During daylight hours they were used much like patios or decks are today, and at night they might be used as a place to sleep (see Dt 22:8; 1 Sm 9:25-26). It would not have been unusual for David to walk around on the roof. His palace was probably located at the highest point in the city, and his view from the patio roof would have included the entire city below.

11:2 Why was Bathsheba bathing outside where David could see her? The law of Moses declared that a woman in her menstrual cycle would be unclean for seven days, after which the impurity caused by her blood flow would be cleansed with water (see Lv 15:21,27). Verse 4 suggests that Bathsheba was performing this monthly ritual act. Ancient Israelite homes had no indoor plumbing or bathtubs; ritual washings would regularly be done outside, perhaps in the private courtyard of a house or near a public water supply. David may have seen her as she was in her courtyard.

11:8-9 Uriah was on active military duty and devoted to the Lord. Service in battle was considered an act of service to the Lord, and David had required his men to refrain from sexual contact while on duty (1 Sm 21:5; cp. Ex 19:15). Based on the example of Achan (Jos 7) Uriah knew that if even one soldier offended God by violating a divine guideline the whole army might be punished. To protect his fellow soldiers he ignored David's suggestion that he sleep with his wife ("wash your feet" is a euphemism for intercourse).

11:21 Abimelech was the son of Gideon, also called Jerubbaal (Jdg 6:32; 9:1). To avoid pronouncing or writing the title of the Canaanite deity Baal (see Ex 23:13), the author of 2 Sm substituted the word bosheth ("shame, abomination") as an element in Gideon's alternate name.

12:13 The law of Moses required the death penalty for adulterers (Lv 20:10; Dt 22:22) and murderers (Gn 9:6; Lv 24:17; Nm 35:33), yet David was spared that penalty. Being king, of course, he had the ability to forestall action by whichever human authority would have dared to enforce the law. But the Lord's hand was also at work in the situation, for He could have overridden any such efforts. The Lord is a God of grace (see Ex 34:6), and chose to spare David's life. In so doing He transformed David into a historic object lesson of divine grace. David's immediate readiness to confess his sin, when confronted with it by the Lord's spokesman Nathan (2 Sm 12:1-7), proved that he still had a heart deeply devoted to God. The Lord gave David better than he deserved; he would not die. But the consequences of his sins would play themselves out in the history of his family, as Nathan predicted (12:10-14,18; 13:28-29; 18:14-15; 1 Kg 2:24-25).

12:14 Why did the son born to Bathsheba die, since it was David who committed the sin? Behavior that ignores the Lord's purposes and precepts always hurts others, including the "innocent"; this is one of sin's most terrifying realities. As an example, an inebriated driver rams his car into a church van full of young people on the way to a conference. David's high-handed and sinful behavior toward Bathsheba and Uriah led to turmoil and great sadness within his own family, including the death of this newborn son.

12:31 Did David make the Ammonites labor at brickmaking, or make them "pass through" the brick kilns as a form of torture? The Hebrew MT (followed by KJV) has the verb "pass through." This appears to be a scribal error in which the verb 'avad "work" was replaced with 'avar "pass over or through" by confusion of the similar-appearing Hebrew letters "d" (daleth) and "r" (resh).

13:18 An obscure Hebrew word is used to describe Tamar's outer garment. Translators must make a judgment based on their understanding of the evidence. Some English versions, following the Septuagint, assume that the word describes the clothing's color. Other versions opt for the garment's style; mention of its length and cut fits the context, where color would be irrelevant.

13:19 Putting ashes on one's head was a traditional expression of extreme grief in the ancient Near East (Est 4:1,3; Is 61:3). It was not specifically associated with rape. But Tamar, who warned Amnon that "such a thing should never be done in Israel" (2 Sm 13:12), was apparently conscious of a serious transgression of the law (Lv 20:17) and the grievous offense to the Lord as well as to her. Tamar's plea for Amnon to ask the king's permission to have her (2 Sm 13:13) may have been her attempt to "buy time."

14:26 How was it possible for Absalom to grow five pounds of hair on his head in a year? Absalom's hair as he wore it weighed five pounds. He may have been quite hairy, but also probably had adornments in his beard and hair—intended to make them look more impressive—that added to the weight of his facial hair.

14:27 According to 18:18 Absalom had no sons. The present verse probably reflects the earlier history of Absalom's family. If so, he fathered three sons, all of whom preceded him in death. Therefore Absalom built the monument mentioned in 18:18 to ensure that his name would be remembered in future generations, and perhaps secondarily as a tribute to his dead sons.

15:7 Many modern English versions indicate that Absalom waited four years before proclaiming himself king, but other major English versions speak of a 40-year period. The disagreement reflects differences in ancient textual authorities; the Hebrew MT gives 40 years, while one tradition of the Septuagint, the Syriac, and Josephus reads "four." Either number may be the correct one, depending on what the number of years signifies. It if indicates Absalom's age the number 40 is original; if it refers to the number of years Absalom schemed, building up his reputation among the Israelites, then four is the correct number.

17:18-20 Since God expects people to tell the truth, was it wrong for the woman to deceive Absalom's messengers about the whereabouts of Jonathan and Ahimaaz? God does want people to tell the truth (see note on Ex 20:16; Eph 4:25); but even more

He expects people to protect innocent human lives (cp. Pr 24:11). Jonathan and Ahimaaz had not committed any crime deserving of death, so it was right to take measures to protect them. Strictly speaking, the woman told the truth; the fugitives were "toward the water," i.e., down in the well. (For further discussion of lying, see notes on Ex 1:19;1 Sm 19:13-17; 20:6.)

17:25 The Hebrew MT of this verse states that Amasa's father was Ithra the Israelite, whereas 1 Ch 2:17 notes that Amasa's father is Jether the Ishmaelite. (The Septuagint reads "Ishmaelite" also for 2 Sm 17:25; see HCSB footnote.) Jether is a (perhaps dialectical) variant form of the name Ithra, but the ethnic designation assigned to the men differs significantly. The difference is probably due to a scribal error in confusing two Hebrew letters, "m" (mem) and "r" (resh) in the first instance and the two gutturals (unvoiced letters) ayin and aleph in the second case. Since neither pair of letters in question resemble one another (in either ancient or later Hebrew script) it is possible that the error occurred through a misunderstanding of dictation, rather than a miscopying. As to which reading is correct for this verse, the designation of Ithra as an "Israelite" seems redundant in the context, suggesting that the Septuagint and Chronicles preserve the original.

18:6 Ephraim's tribal territory was west of the Jordan River, but the "forest of Ephraim" mentioned here is in Transjordan (cp. 17:22). This forest could share the name for several reasons. The name may preservethe memory of a major battle fought there in which the Ephraimites lost 42,000 men (Jdg 12:1-6), or it may have come from an individual or group that shared the name of the Israelite tribe. Finally, the name Ephraim came to refer to all the northern Israelite tribes, and the separate kingdom of "Israel," in contrast to Judah (e.g., Is 7:2; 9:9; 11:13; 17:3; Jr 7:15; 31:9,20; Hs 4:17; Zch 9:13). Hence it applied to Israelite territory on both sides of the Jordan.

18:9 Absalom was known for having an extraordinary amount of hair on his head (14:26), probably held back with combs or ornamentation. His fast riding on the mule probably loosed his hair, which became entangled in a low tree branch. To keep his scalp from being literally ripped off, Absalom grasped the branch and the mule ran off without him.

18:18 On whether Absalom had no sons or three sons, see note on 14:27.

19:20 Shimei is identified as a member of the tribe of Benjamin (v. 16), yet here he comes to David as the "first one of the entire house of Joseph." This is not a contradiction of his earlier tribal identification. Especially after the division of the nation following Solomon's death, it was not unusual to refer to all the Israelite tribes north of Judah, collectively, as the "house of Joseph" (see 1 Kg 11:28; Ezk 37:16; Am 5:6; Ob 18; Zch 10:6). Shimei was the first person from Israel, outside of David's own tribe of Judah, to welcome his return to the land west of the Jordan.

19:23 David swore that Shimei would not die, despite his malicious treatment of the king (16:5-13). But later, as he was about to die, David ordered Shimei's death. According to 1 Kg 2:8-9, David promised Shimei only that he—David—would not put him to death. His deathbed instruction to Solomon was to mete out the justice Shimei deserved, which Solomon did after Shimei himself provided a pretext (1 Kg 2:39-46).

19:43 Why did the Israelites speak of only "10 shares" in the king, since there were 12 tribes in all (13, counting Ephraim and Manasseh separately)? Warfare had torn Israel into two major factions, north and south. There are two ways to understand the number of tribes involved, both excluding Levi which had no territorial holdings of its own (see Dt 10:9; 18:1): (1) the north had 10 tribes, counting Ephraim and Manasseh, the Joseph tribes, as one; (2) the north had 10 tribes, counting Ephraim and Manasseh separately, if Benjamin was reckoned with Judah. Jerusalem, David's capital, was located within the territory of Benjamin, and would remain the capital of the separate kingdom of Judah after the reign of Solomon.

20:14 Did Sheba go to the Berites (Hb text) or Bichrites (Septuagint)? The difference between the two words amounts to the omission of a single letter in Hebrew, a possible copyist's mistake. Unlike the HCSB, some English versions prefer the Septuagint's reading, believing that Sheba went to some of his clan members (see 20:13). As with other verses that reflect a disagreement between the earliest texts, there is no way to determine with certainty which reading reproduces the original.

20:23-26 This list of David's officials differs from the earlier list in 8:16-18, but does not contradict it. The two lists apparently contain the names of individuals who held key positions in David's administration at different times. The present list seems to name the persons who held these positions at the end of David's 40-year reign.

21:2 In the Bible the term "Amorites" can refer, in a general sense, to the inhabitants of Canaan (see Gn 15:16; Am 2:9-10). Though the Gibeonites were specifically Hivites, they could also called Amorites.

21:8 On whether Adriel was the husband of Merab or Michal, see note on 1 Sm 25:44.

21:8 On David's allowing the Gibeonites to execute most of Saul's descendants, see note on 1 Sm 24:21-22.

21:16 Was Ishbi-benob a descendant of "the giant," or of "Rapha"? Modern English versions differ in their translation of an obscure Hebrew word. Some translations render the word as a personal name, while most other translations take it similarly to the HCSB. A recent suggestion is that the phrase "one of the descendants of the Rapha" (the literal Hebrew phrase) means that Ishbi-benob was a member of a group that worshiped a god named Rapha.

21:19 On whether David or Elhanan killed Goliath, see note on 1 Sm 17:50.

22:2-51 Why does the Bible include this psalm twice—here and, in virtually the same form, in the book of Psalms? This, the longest of David's psalms, is used in two ways. The book of Psalms is Israel's collection of hymns and lyrics for use in the service of worship. Here, near the end of the narrative of David's career, the poem is used to bring out the spiritual center of Israel's most beloved king. Several of the psalms are embedded in Israel's historical records (e.g., in 1 Ch 16:8-36; 2 Ch 6:40-42) and some psalms are repeated within the book of Psalms itself (e.g., Pss 14 and 53; Ps 15 and 24:3-6; Ps 135 is based entirely on material in other psalms).

22:9 The biblical writer refers to God's "nostrils" and "mouth" to express, in a colorful and memorable way, God's terrifying acts of judgment against His enemies. God is spirit (Jn 4:24), but Scripture often employs such anthropomorphisms (descriptions of God's action using a human analogy) to convey some aspect of His involvement in the human scene (on anthropomorphism in the Bible, see Gn 3:8).

23:8-39 This list of David's warriors is shorter than the one in 1 Ch 11:1-47. Furthermore, some names found the list here are not in 1 Ch (and vice versa) and some of the names and places of origin differ slightly in spelling. These two lists were probably composed at different times during David's reign, and the different spellings may reflect differences of dialect.

23:8 Adino the Eznite is listed in some English Bibles, but not others. The MT mentions him but the parallel verse in 1 Ch 11:11 does not. Because the name and the syntax of the verse are obscure, and because 1 Ch omits the name, many recent translators suspect a copyist error here and rely on the Chronicler's reading.

23:20 Did Benaiah kill two sons of Ariel, or two lion-like men of Moab? Disagreement between English versions results from variants in ancient texts, and from a Hebrew word with an obscure meaning. Many recent versions assume that Ariel is a personal name, and follow the Septuagint; others interpret the word to mean a "lion-like man." The translators' judgment determines which reading is thought to reflect the original.

24:1 This verse indicates that God's anger incited David to take a census which was not in the Lord's will, yet1 Ch 21:1 states that it was Satan who led David to take this wrongful action. The two statements would not be considered contradictory in the ancient Israelite way of thinking. The writer of 2 Sm affirms that God is the ultimate ruler of the universe; every event is subject to

His authority. If even king David, despite his strength and intelligence, could be led into a foolish decision, the Lord's hand is still involved (cp. Ps 76:10). Satan, too, is subject to God's complete control (cp. Jb 1:6-12). In His position as Sovereign over all, God used one of His created beings—in this case Satan—to bring about judgment on another. People have the authority to resist Satan (Jms 4:7) but David declined to do so, and thus experienced the consequence in the effects of God's wrath (cp. Rm 1:18).

It was not wrong for David to take a census, as such; the law of Moses explicitly permitted this (Ex 30:12). Censuses had been taken among the Israelites on two occasions in the days of Moses (Nm 1:2; 4:2,22; 26:2) with no adverse consequences. The problem with David's census lay either in his motivation for it or the manner in which it was conducted. If the former, David's purpose was to build his nationalistic ego; he would number the troops in order to boast of his nation's military might, instead of trusting in God. If the latter, David failed to direct his officials to use the proper procedure. The law required every person counted to pay half a shekel (about one-fifth of an ounce) of silver to the sanctuary treasury (Ex 30:13), but perhaps this was not done. According to the law, failure to collect the money would result in an outbreak of plague, which is exactly what happened in this case.

24:9 Do these census figures contradict those in 1 Ch 21:5? The numbers indeed differ: 800,000 Israelites versus 1.1 million, 500,000 Judahites versus 470,000. But these differences may not be true contradictions. The figure of 1.1 million Israelite men in 1 Ch may include the 288,000 men in Israel's regular army (see1 Ch 27:1-15), rounding the total. The discrepancy in the Judahite totals may simply be a matter of rounding in 2 Sm. The ancient Jewish historian Josephus recorded 900,000 Israelite soldiers and 400,000 Judahites, perhaps following another textual tradition. It is always possible that the numbers were altered, through copyist error, in one or more ancient manuscript traditions.

24:24 In this passage David is said to have purchased "the threshing floor and the oxen" for 50 shekels of silver. In 1 Ch 21:22-25 David asks to buy the "threshing-floor plot" (lit. "the place of the threshing floor"), apparently a parcel of land that included much more than the threshing floor itself, and accordingly pays a much larger sum of money, 600 shekels of gold. The different payments are not contradictions, but refer to different purchases.

1 Kings Articles

Can Biblical Chronology Be Trusted?

by E. Ray Clendenen

The Bible is not a book of philosophical or ethical principles, although it contains them. It is a book about how God has made Himself known in history. Its message is timeless in that the nature of God and man has not changed. But the framework of that message, which holds it together and cannot be extracted from it, is the story of what God has said and done in history.

Chronology is the foundation of history; without it, history is a swarm of events with no relationship to each other or to us. Relative chronology places events before or after (or simultaneous with) each other. Absolute chronology relates events to us by fixing them on our conventional time line in terms of B.C. or A.D.

The Bible is full of relative chronology. For example, we are told that Abraham was 100 years old when Isaac was born (Gn 21:5), that the Israelites lived in Egypt for 430 years (Ex 12:40), that Israel wandered in the wilderness for 40 years (Nm 32:13), and that Judah's exile lasted for 70 years (Jr 25:11-12). But no absolute dates are given for any of these or other biblical events. Does this situation leave us unable to confirm or deny biblical chronology? This is not the case for two reasons.

First, the Bible's relative chronology can be shown to be internally consistent. Israel's time in Egypt, the wilderness, and the exile, for example, is consistently given in many different places. Chronological differences between Kings and Chronicles have been closely examined and have yielded to reasonable methods of harmonization.

Second, the historical accounts in both OT and NT intersect at various points the histories of surrounding nations such as Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, and Rome, whose chronologies have been established to a high degree of accuracy. Assyrian chronology, for example, is set according to an eclipse known to have occurred on June 15, 763 B.C.

Problems still remain. Differences between ancient and modern calendars, for example, often require the giving of alternate dates in the form 931/0 B.C. Furthermore, different methods of harmonizing the dates of biblical kings yield slightly different results.

Even conservative scholars do not always agree on how a particular chronological reference should be interpreted. For example, some scholars argue that many numbers in the Bible are figurative, especially 40 and its multiples. These scholars prefer in some cases to give priority to archaeological clues in establishing biblical chronology. Thus the patriarchal period is often dated to the Middle Bronze Age between about 1800–1600 B.C. It is also supposed that the Hebrews migrated to Egypt during the Hyksos period (about 1700–1500 B.C.), when Semitic people ruled Egypt. The exodus is then associated with the reign of Rameses II shortly after 1290 B.C. Following the wilderness period, the conquest of Canaan would have begun about 1250 B.C. Pharaoh Merneptah (1224–1214 B.C.) mounted a campaign against Canaan in the fifth year of his reign (about 1220). In his record of that campaign, he mentioned that, among others, Israel was utterly destroyed. Thus, by that date, the people Israel were a recognized group in Canaan.

Assuming a literal interpretation of 1 Kings 6:1, however, the exodus occurred in 1446 B.C. and the conquest period lasted about seven years around 1400 B.C. Continuing backward, based on Exodus 12:40, Jacob's migration to Egypt would have been in 1876 B.C. Data regarding the ages of the patriarchs would place their births at 2006 B.C. for Jacob (Gn 47:9), 2066 B.C. for Isaac (Gn 25:26), and 2166 B.C. for Abraham (Gn 21:5). Because the genealogical lists in Genesis are believed by most to be intentionally incomplete or "open," attempts are usually not made to establish historical dates prior to Abraham (see "Are the Genealogies Reliable?" in the notes on Genesis).

The NT is not much concerned with when events took place, with Luke being somewhat the exception. Luke tells us, for example, that Jesus was 12 when His parents lost Him in Jerusalem (Lk 2:42) and was about 30 at the beginning of His ministry (Lk 3:23). Both references are altogether reasonable. Luke 3:1 gives what appears to set the date for John the Baptist's ministry—"In the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, while Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea, Herod was tetrarch of Galilee, his brother Philip tetrarch of the region of Iturea and Trachonitis, and Lysanias tetrarch of Abilene." There is nothing problematic about this date except the interpretation of Tiberius's fifteenth year, the determination of which depends on the beginning point and which calendar Luke had in mind.

Due to an error by a sixth-century Scythian monk who was responsible for our current Western calendar, Jesus' birth actually occurred in the B.C. era, perhaps in late 5 B.C. We know that Herod the Great, who was alive when Jesus was born, died between March 12/13 and April 11, 4 B.C.

Unfortunately the date of Jesus' crucifixion is uncertain. Although the majority opinion is that it occurred in A.D. 30, a good argument can be made for A.D. 33. Our knowledge of Roman history allows us to determine that Herod Agrippa and therefore the events of Acts 12 occurred in A.D. 44.

There is no credible reason, then, to question the Bible's historical chronology, even though at times we wish we had more information.

What Does the Bible Teach About Angels?

by Ron Rhodes

• The NT speaks of angels more than 165 times; the OT more than 100 times.

• The angels were created prior to God's creation of the earth (Jb 38:7; Ps 148:2-5).

• Humans do not become angels at the moment of death (1 Co 6:3; 13:1).

• All the angels were created by God as good angels (Gn 1:31).

• The angels were apparently subjected to a period of probation. Some angels remained loyal to God; others did not.

• An angel rebellion, headed by the evil one, arose against God. Apparently the evil one became so impressed with himself that he wanted to take God's place. He came to be referred to as Satan, meaning "adversary." One-third of the angels followed him in this rebellion (Ezk 28:11-19; 2 Pt 2:4; Rv 12:3-4,10), becoming what the Bible calls demons.

• The holy angels live in heaven (Is 6:1-6; Dn 7:10; Heb 12:22). When they are assigned a task by God, they leave heaven, complete their work on earth, and then return to heaven.

• Angels are personal beings, with minds (2 Sm 14:20), emotions (Heb 12:22), and wills (Rv 22:8-9).

• Angels are incorporeal (lacking material form) and invisible (Heb 1:14). We are thus generally unaware of their activities around us (2 Kg 6:17).

• Angels can nevertheless take on human appearance when their assigned task calls for it (Gn 18:1-8; Heb 13:2).

• Angels are localized beings. They are not "everywhere present" like God. They have to move from one place to another (Dn 9:21-23).

• Angels are extremely powerful; they are described as "mighty" (Ps 103:20).

• God's angels are holy ("set apart"). They are set apart from sin and set apart unto God to do His bidding (Jb 5:1; Ps 89:7).

• The holy angels are unreservedly obedient to God (Ps 103:20).

• Angels are immortal, though created. Once created (Ps 148:2-6), they never cease to exist (Lk 20:36).

• The angels are innumerable (Rv 5:11). Daniel 7:10 makes reference to "ten thousand times ten thousand" angels (100 million angels).

• Angels are called "ministering spirits" (Heb 1:14). The word "ministering" comes from a Greek word meaning "serve." Angels, then, are spirit servants who render aid to the heirs of salvation in the outworking of God's purposes on earth.

• This service takes many forms, including being used by God in answering believers' prayers (Ac 12:7), bringing announcements and warnings to God's people (Lk 1:13; Ac 10:3-33), giving encouragement (Ac 27:23-24), providing protection (Ps 91:11), giving guidance (Gn 19:17), providing deliverance (Ac 12:7), and caring for believers at the moment of death (Lk 16:22).

• Many believe that every Christian has a specific guardian angel throughout life (Mt 18:10; Ac 12:15). Others believe that angels are charged with different assignments as God directs (Ps 91:11).

• Angels are organized by rank, including thrones, powers, rulers, authorities, and dominions (Eph 1:20-21; Col 1:16), but the details and nature of these ranks are not revealed to us.

- Among unbelievers, angels restrain wickedness (Gn 19:1-15), announce God's judgments (Rv 14:7-10), execute God's judgments (Ac 12:23; Rv 16:1-18), and in the end times cast them "into the blazing furnace" (Mt 13:37-43).
- In the afterlife Christians will judge angels (1 Co 6:3).

Introduction to 1 Kings

AUTHOR

The books of 1 and 2 Kings were originally one book in the ancient Hebrew manuscripts. They are the account of Israel and Judah from the final days of King David to the fall of Jerusalem under Nebuchadnezzar in 597/6 B.C. They both comprise one complete narrative and exhibit the same literary characteristics. From a contemporary perspective, they are the closest to what we would call "history" in the modern sense, but with important differences noted below. The Septuagint (LXX) first divided the book into two, possibly because the Greek text required more space than the Hebrew. Various Greek and Latin manuscripts divide the text at different points, showing that there was no tradition of two books of Kings and that the division was made arbitrarily. The LXX gives 1 and 2 Kings the titles "Third and Fourth Kingdoms," respectively. The compilers of this ancient Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible evidently considered Samuel and Kings as one narrative split into four parts. Hebrew manuscripts, however, are unanimous in keeping Samuel and Kings as two separate books.

The authorship of 1 and 2 Kings, their literary style, and the principles used in their composition are linked together. The author or authors do not identify themselves, but the books consistently evaluate each king based upon the same moral criterion: How faithful was the king to the law of Moses, and especially to the requirements of the law as recorded in the book of Deuteronomy? If we assume a single author—as is mostly likely, given the books' consistent historiography—then the author lived during or after the final events recorded in the book, that is, during or after the seventy years of Israel's exile.

So who wrote the books of Kings? Jewish tradition (Talmud: Baba Bathra 15a) attributes the books to Jeremiah, because 2 Kings 24:18–25:30 is repeated in Jeremiah 52. Certainly the focus upon the kings' faithfulness to Yahweh (or lack of it) fits a concern evident in Jeremiah. Against this conclusion is the fact that the account in Kings of the deportation and imprisonment of Jehoiachin (2 Kg 24:8-17) appears to have been written from Babylon, whereas Jeremiah was in Egypt at that time. We assume that the author or authors lived sometime during the final years of Judah since that is the time when the narrative ends. He or they presumably lived during the exilic period of Israel's history, and so would have been either contemporaneous with or younger than Jeremiah.

Because there are verbal differences between the parallel passages of 2 Kings and Jeremiah, these suggest that both were copied from a larger common written source, perhaps the book of Deuteronomy since the list of phrases and expressions common to 1 and 2 Kings and Deuteronomy is extensive. This fact has led to a theory that Kings was edited by the same group of priests that edited Moses' sermons into Deuteronomy. But there is a fundamental difference between the two books. Deuteronomy presents the lessons history teaches us ("Learn from your parents' mistakes in Egypt and in the wilderness!"), while the books of Kings are much more concerned about the covenant and how closely the king and people followed it.

PURPOSE

Why were the books of Kings written? The answer lies in another question: What kind of historian was the author and what principles of composition and historiography did he use? The author's purposes are revealed in the choices he made in the selection and arrangement of the events he chose to narrate, as well in explicit editorial comments made about those events.

Stepping back and looking at the sweep of the narration, we see a special emphasis upon David's last days and Solomon's achievements as kings. Then, beginning with Jeroboam I (1 Kg 12:25) of Israel, the northern kingdom, the author moves on to cover events contemporaneous with Jeroboam. He continues to narrate reigns in Judah until the death of Asa. After Asa, the author alternates his narration between the northern and southern kingdoms. This pattern shows the author's purpose: to compare and contrast the two kingdoms in light of God's plan for Israel and how well they followed the Deuteronomic ideal for kings and kingdoms. The narration of each individual king has a similar literary pattern: (1) correlation of the date of the reigns of the two kingdoms: the name of the ruler, age at accession to rule, length of reign, name of the ruler's mother; (2) the author's theological assessment of the ruler: Did he follow the law of Moses or not? The literary pattern varies depending upon dynastic changes, especially frequent in the northern kingdom.

POLITICS AND HISTORY

What can we deduce from the author's choices in crafting his narration? First, the books of Kings present a different picture of Israel than one gets from contemporary records of other nations. For example, Omri is given only seven verses (1 Kg 16:21-27) for his reign and accomplishments, but he was mentioned in Assyrian documents and was one of the most "important" rulers of the northern kingdom in terms of political and economic achievements. But the author of 2 Kings dismisses Omri as unimportant. Hezekiah is given three chapters (2 Kg 18–20), but the reign of Jereboam II—accounted by many as a true Golden Age for Israel—is told in just eight verses (2 Kg 13:13; 14:16,23,27-29; 15:1,8).

From a political standpoint, Omri and Jereboam II are important figures, but they are treated in just a few short verses. On the other hand, the short ministries of Elijah and Elisha comprise nearly one-third of the books. The author's purpose is not to present a complete history of Israel but to emphasize certain events to support a specific interpretation of that history. He wanted to show how the kings led the nations to obedience to the Mosaic law or, more frequently, led them away from obedience and how God dealt with the nation and individuals as a result. He selected events and details that were relevant to that purpose. The books of Kings are the author's reflection on the history of the monarchy. The human king of a theocracy had responsibilities laid out in Deuteronomy. The author is concerned to show how it worked out, in accordance with the blessings and curses of Deuteronomy.

The principles that obedience brings blessing and disobedience brings disaster, and that God is active in the judging of individuals and nations on the basis of the covenant are used by the author as his criteria for evaluation of the kings of Israel and Judah. For example, the author consistently condemns kings for allowing the worship of Asherah, the Canaanite goddess of fertility on the "high places" (e.g. 2 Kg 17:9-10; see Dt 16:21). The emphasis on Ahab's reign is due to his marriage to Jezebel, a Phoenician princess, and allowing her to introduce the worship of Phoenician gods into Israel (1 Kg 16:30-33). In contrast, the author reserves his unqualified praise only for Hezekiah (2 Kg 18:3-7) and Josiah (2 Kg 22:2) because they removed the high places and restored national worship to conform to Mosaic prescriptions. He gives qualified commendation to Asa (1 Kg 15:11-14), Jehoshaphat (1 Kg 22:43), Joash (2 Kg 12:2-3), Azariah (2 Kg 15:3-4), and Jotham (2 Kg 15:34-35) for generally following Deuteronomic prescriptions, but explicitly complains about their failure to remove the high places.

WHAT SOURCES DID THE WRITER OF 1 AND 2 KINGS USE?

The books of 1 and 2 Kings are not completely original documents. The author may be described as a compiler of information about Israel's kings who then evaluated each king according to certain religious and moral principles. The text itself mentions at least three sources. The first source is the Book of Solomon's Events (1 Kg 11:41), which contained contemporary events, biographical material, and extracts from the records in the temple archives. Scholars have assigned various parts of 1 Kings to this source: Solomon's marriage with an Egyptian princess (1 Kg 3:1), judgment of the dispute over a newborn infant (1 Kg 3:16-28), lists of court officials (1 Kg 4:1-6) and government administrators (1 Kg 4:7-19,27), the treaty with Hiram of Tyre and preparations for building the temple (1 Kg 5:1-18), construction of the temple (1 Kg 6:1–7:51), the dedication of the temple (1 Kg 8:1-66), additional relations between Hiram and Solomon (1 Kg 9:11-14), the construction of terraces (1 Kg 9:24), the wisdom of Solomon and the visit of the Queen of Sheba (1 Kg 9:26–10:29), and possibly the story of two enemies of Solomon (1 Kg 11:14-25).

The second source, the Historical Record of Israel's Kings, records events from the time of Jeroboam I to Pekah (1 Kg 14:19—2 Kg 15:31) and is explicitly cited 18 times as a source. It contained not only current events, but also official records of significant political happenings and other memorable events from each reign.

The Historical Record of Judah's Kings is the third source used for much of the material in 1 Kg 14:29—2 Kg 24:5, covering events from Solomon's son Rehoboam and the dividing of the kingdom into two parts until the reign of Jehoiakim. It is cited 15 times as the author's source. These are apparently extracts from court records of state archives in Jerusalem. Although this source is not explicitly mentioned, scholars have ascribed the reigns of Ahaziah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah to it; interestingly, their deaths and burials are not recorded, unlike the other kings of Judah. Some have also included Athaliah (2 Kg 11:1), who usurped the throne and ruled for seven years, as well as the construction projects of Asa (1 Kg 15:23), the wars of Jehoshaphat (1 Kg 22:45), and the conduit of Hezekiah (2 Kg 20:20).

There is the possibility that the author of Kings used other, unidentified sources. There are passages which are tightly composed and appear to be stand on their own as literary units. While only speculation, these literary units might include court records of David (1 Kg 1–2), three "cycles" of tradition for Elijah, Elisha, and Ahab: (1) the Elijah stories (1 Kg 17–19; 21; 2 Kg 1), which are very political and polemic; (2) the Elisha stories (2 Kg 2–13), which focus more upon the needs of religious groups and individuals and the narratives of the wars against Mesha, King of Moab (2 Kg 3:4-27).

The Elisha stories are integrated into the account of Jehoram, second son of Ahab, king of Israel. They are not in chronological order, and the name of the Israelite ruler is unmentioned (deliberately?), so it is not clear which of the Elisha stories actually occurred during the reign of Jehoram. Perhaps this reflects an attitude that the northern kingdom, Israel, had already been rejected by God because of their failure to respond in faith to the clear demonstration of the Lord's reality and power by Elijah on Mount Carmel.

Some postulate an "Ahab source" (1 Kg 20; 22:1-38), but in what way it is different from the Elijah source is difficult to say. The Ahab narratives exhibit a consistent antagonism to the Arameans (1 Kg 20:42), but this is hardly grounds for distinguishing it from the Elijah source. The evidence simply does not allow it. Conclusions based upon this kind of "internal" evidence are subjective at best, and speculative at worst.

However, there is one further source that forces itself on our attention—the so-called "Isaiah source" (2 Kg 18:1–20:20). So named because it is almost a word-for-word parallel to Isaiah 36–39; either the exilic author of 2 Kings quoted from this eighth century B.C. prophet, or both cited a common source. Since 2 Kings 20:20 refers the reader to the Historical Record of Judah's Kings for further information about Hezekiah's reign, it is possible, even likely, that this is the common source. However, 2 Chronicles 32:32 refers to the Visions of the Prophet Isaiah son of Amoz, and the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel as a source separate from the Historical Record of Judah's Kings.

While not completely certain, it is most likely the author of Kings copied his text from Isaiah directly.

1 Kings Study Notes

1:2 The phrase "lie by your side" in Hebrew is literally "lie in your lap," indicating physical proximity, not sexual intimacy.

1:5 Adonijah was the fourth son of David, but the eldest surviving son after the death of Absalom (see 1 Ch 3:1-2).

1:6 The author of 1 and 2 Kg issues the first of many evaluations of a king's behavior.

1:8 This is the same Shimei who cursed David and threw stones at him (2 Sm 16:5-14).

1:9 This was a fellowship offering (Lv 7:11-36), a common occasion for feasting. "En-rogel," literally, "the Fuller's Eye." In geographic names, "eye" always refers to a water source, a natural place to set up an altar where water is needed for the rites. A fuller was someone who thickened and shrunk newly shorn wool or newly woven cloth; also he washed or bleached clothing.

1:13 There is no biblical record of David's promise to Bathsheba. Adonijah was apparently unaware of it. It may never have been publicly announced.

1:23 Literally "with his nose to the ground," a very deep obeisance.

1:27 Since David was the first king of his dynasty, the procedures for the succession had not yet been established.

1:33 In Hebrew, literally "Take the servants of your lords." Not David's palace servants, but the servants of the entire party loyal to David. "Gihon" was another well in the Kidron valley, closer to the city than En-rogel, where Adonijah was.

1:35 The title of "ruler" specifically referred to a tribal authority and leadership role. Both Saul (1 Sm 10:1) and David (2 Sm 7:8) held this office, and here Solomon did.

1:38 Benaiah commanded David's foreign mercenaries (probably Philistines) as his personal bodyguard. Here David gave Solomon this royal protection to face Adonijah's forces.

1:41 The Hebrew word for "town" denotes a smaller settlement than a city. The uproar was in Gihon, not Jerusalem.

1:42 The phrase "excellent man" literally means "man of strength," one high in social standing, a nobleman.

1:45 "Gone" is literally "gone up," i.e., to Jerusalem from Gihon, spreading the announcement of Adonijah's claim to rule.

1:49 They scattered in panic.

1:50 The four corners of the altar curved upward to points, called "horns." A common practice in the ancient Near East was to seek refuge from summary execution in a temple or other sanctuary.

1:52 The term "character" is literally "son of strength," i. e., a great warrior. Solomon was referring to the warrior virtues of loyalty, honor, and obedience.

2:3 The Deuteronomic ideal for a king (Dt 17:14-20) is given here as one who is unswervingly loyal to God and His Word. The author of 1 and 2 Kg evaluated Israel's rulers against this ideal.

2:6 "Sheol" in Hebrew thought was the abode of the dead, both good and evil. Though the overall picture of Sheol is grim, the OT nevertheless affirms that God is there (Ps 139:8; Pr 15:11) or that it is impossible to hide from God in Sheol (Jb 26:6; Am 9:2). The OT also affirms that God has power over Sheol and is capable of ransoming souls from its depths (Jb 33:18,28-30; Ps 16:10; 30:3; 49:15; 86:13).

2:7 See 2 Sm 17:27-29; 19:31-40.

2:8 "Bahurim" was a Benjaminite village north of the Mount of Olives, on the road to Jerusalem from the Jordan Valley. "Mahanaim," meaning "the two camps," was a Gilead city on the Jabbok river used by David during Absalom's revolt as a base of operations.

2:9 For more on "Sheol," see note on 2:6.

2:16 "Don't turn me down" is literally, "Do not make me turn my face." In other words, don't force Adonijah to turn away in shame if Bathsheba refuses his request.

2:22 Abishag was the last of David's harem. Control of the harem was a politically important claim to rulership (2 Sm 16:20-22), and Solomon feared that such a marriage could reunify his political opponents.

2:27 Abiathar was a member of Eli's house (1 Sm 22:20).

2:28 Joab vigorously opposed Absalom (2 Sm 18:14-15) in support of David. The Septuagint reads "Solomon" for "Absalom." "Horns of the altar," see note on 1:50.

2:34 Joab's house would not have been in the uncultivated "wilderness," but he probably had a large country estate of land for cultivation, grazing and hunting.

2:37 Literally "the wadi Kidron." A "wadi" is a river bed which flows with water only part of the year, and is especially dangerous as the path of flash floods. The deep valley formed by the Kidron River (meaning "dark, turbid") served as the eastern boundary of Jerusalem, separating it from the Mount of Olives.

2:39 Gath was one of the five principal cities of the Philistines. Its location is not known exactly, but it lay in the Shephelah, the coastal plains lying below the Judean highlands where Jerusalem is situated.

2:46 This statement is a conclusion for all of chapter 2: the ruthless and systematic elimination of all possible troublemakers by the hand of the Solomon—not by the hand of the Lord.

3:1 "Made an alliance" is literally "to become a son-in-law," used in a political context. Marriage to foreigners was explicitly forbidden by the law (Dt 7:3-4). Her ultimate permanent residence was built outside Jerusalem, but Solomon had higher construction priorities at the moment.

3:2 "High places," the traditional place for sacrifice among the Canaanites, were not limited to the heights, but these open-air sanctuaries were also found in towns and villages. Another translation might be "country shrines."

3:3 The toleration of these places by the kings of Israel is a major and recurring complaint of the author.

3:4 Compare this verse with 2 Ch 1:2-6. Here the author gave only a brief mention of the worship experience at Gibeon and then moved directly on to Solomon's dream. The book of 2 Ch describes Solomon's worship in more detail. This shows a difference in purpose. Second Chronicles focuses on fidelity to the worship of the Lord, whereas this book focuses on Solomon's character.

3:7 "A youth" was an exaggeration. Solomon meant he was inexperienced.

3:11 Jesus enunciated a similar principle in Mt 6:33: "But seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things will be provided for you."

3:16 Second Ch 1 omits 3:16-28, the story of Solomon's wisdom in solving the case of the identity of a baby. While the writer of 1 Kg used secular events to illustrate Solomon's greatness, the writer of the books of Ch used the building and furnishing of the temple to define Solomon's greatness. These two visions of Solomon's greatness are not incompatible or contradictory, but they emphasize different aspects of the king. The author intended to contrast Solomon's wisdom at the beginning of his reign with his fall from wisdom during his latter years.

3:18 The mother's point was that there were no other possible suspects to the murder.

4:2 "Officials" means literally "princes." Zadok had been reassigned to a lesser position, and his son Azariah appointed chief priest.

4:4 Abiathar had been reinstated to the priesthood (see 2:26-27), apparently due to Solomon's change of heart in chapter 3.

4:7 While "12 deputies" recall the traditional number of the tribes of Israel, the 12 districts outlined in verses 8-19 do not at all correspond to the traditional tribal areas. This was clearly a new order for the government of Israel.

4:8 "Hill country of Ephraim" referred not only to the tribal area of Ephraim, including Mount Ephraim, but also part of Manesseh as well.

4:9 These towns were in the Shephelah, the coastal plain previously controlled by the Philistines, and were partly co-extensive with the list of Danite tribal cities.

4:10 The hill country of Manasseh.

4:11 "Naphath-dor" was an important harbor on the Carmel coast.

4:12 These were northern valleys bounded on the north by Jezreel of Issachar, extending eastward to the Jordan Valley, thence south to Jokmeam, a Levitical city of Ephraim.

4:13 This Transjordan district was in the north, encompassing the rich and fertile region north of the Yarmuk river, known as the Argob.

4:14 "Mahanaim" was the capital city of the central of the three Transjordan districts.

4:15 The most northern district, from the Jezreel Valley on the south through eastern Galilee to the river Li-tani on the north including the northern Jordan River valley.

4:16 This ninth district of Asher and Bealoth was what remained of the tribal area of Asher after the Acco plain was given to Hiram of Tyre, and also included the tribal region of Zebulun.

4:17 This district sat right below Naphtali, extending east to the Jordan River and westward to Mt. Tabor.

4:18 Benjamin was the area directly north of Jerusalem, including Jericho on the east.

4:19 Gilead was the southernmost of the three Transjordan districts, although Gilead was the name for the entire Transjordan at that time. But the district occupied the Moabite mesa from Arnon in the south to Heshbon in the north.

4:24 Tiphsah was a town on the upper Euphrates about 75 miles south of Carchemish, located on the main trade route connecting Mesopotamia to the west. Gaza was the old Philistine city on the southern coastal plain of Palestine. Solomon's kingdom, then, went from the Euphrates River in the northeast to the border of Egypt on the southwest. This is the extent promised to Abraham in Gn 15:18.

4:26 Deuteronomy 17:16 forbids the accumulation of many horses.

4:32 The number 1,005 was probably not intended to be an exact number, but rather an idiom similar to the English phrase "a thousand and one"; in other words, more than one thousand.

5:6 Although Solomon appeared to be setting the amount of remuneration in 2 Ch 2:10, Hiram apparently was given the opportunity to set the amount.

5:13 These "laborers" were evidently Israelites. They were supervised by 550 foremen (9:23). They were described by the Hebrew word mas, "forced labor." See note on 5:15.

5:14 By sending laborers into Lebanon, Solomon was acting on his original proposal to Hiram, and ignored Hiram's counter-proposal. This suggests that Hiram was subordinate in some way to Solomon, and that the treaty of v. 12 was a vassal treaty. However, in 9:13 Hiram called Solomon "brother." Hiram was paid for his services, rather than providing them without charge.

The treaty in v. 9 makes no mention of any submission or subordination on Hiram's part. While the text appears to make Solomon the more dominant partner, the evidence does not indicate a legal vassalage for Hiram.

5:15 These are 150,000 stonecutters who were supervised by 3,300 foremen, see 11:28; 12:3-4. According to 2 Ch 2:17-18, these are foreigners.

6:1 The parallel passage (2 Ch 3:2) does not include the name of the month, just the month's number. The name Ziv has been identified as Canaanite, and only appears in connection with Solomon's building of the temple.

6:14 This statement has been made before in verse 9. It introduces the summary of the final stages of the temple's construction which follows in the rest of the chapter.

6:18 "Flower blossoms" in the Hebrew suggests open flowers.

6:21 The phrase "overlaid it with gold" probably refers to the outside front of the inner sanctuary.

6:37 That is, the fourth year of Solomon's reign. "Ziv" is the Canaanite name for the second month of the year (April/May).

6:38 That is, the eleventh year of Solomon's reign. "Bul" is the Canaanite name for the eighth month of the year (October/November).

7:1 Solomon spent nearly twice as long on his own palace than he did on the Lord's temple. The juxtaposition of this verse with the previous was a statement by the author about Solomon's priorities.

7:2 The "House of the Forest of Lebanon" was probably used as an assembly hall in the temple compound.

7:13 This Hiram is not to be confused with the king of Tyre.

7:14 Hence, he was half-Israelite, unless he was the son of his mother's first husband, in which case he was probably a full-blooded Israelite.

7:21 "Jakin" means "He [the LORD] shall uphold," alluding to the function of the pillar to uphold the ceiling. "Boaz" means "In Him [the LORD] is strength."

7:23 "Reservoir" literally means "sea." This was a poetic term for a very large basin or reservoir of water used in sacrifices and cleansing.

7:39 That is, the main reservoir of water.

7:44 That is, the bronze water reservoir used in the rituals.

7:46 "Succoth" means "huts." It is usually identified with Deir 'Alla just north of the Jabbok River on the east side of the Jordan. Archaeological excavations have revealed extensive metal works and furnaces. "Zarethan" is an uncertain location; the best estimates are of a site about eight miles north of Deir 'Alla (Succoth?), on the east side of the Jordan.

7:47 Solomon decided that, because of the great number of utensils, trying to determine the weight was not worth the effort.

7:48 The "bread of the Presence" symbolized the covenant between God and His people. The term Presence was an important concept of Israelite theology: The Lord was personally present with His people.

8:2 "Ethanim" was the Canaanite name for a month later known as Tishri, covering part of September and October. This was the Festival of Booths (see Nm 29). Thus, the dedication of the temple occurred eleven months after its completion (1 Kg 6:38).

8:7 The picture was of cherubim with wings outstretched in obeisance toward the ark.

8:8 "They are there to this day," that is, the days when the books of Kg were first written during the early days of the exile. The disappearance of the ark of the covenant was anticipated by Jeremiah (Jr 3:16).

8:9 Aaron's rod (Nm 17:10) and a jar of manna (Ex 16:33) were never placed in the ark, but alongside it. The only items in the ark were the stone tablets of Moses. "Horeb," also known as Sinai, was located in the southern Sinai peninsula. The exact location is uncertain, but it is traditionally identified with Jebel Musa.

8:11 The "cloud" was the form that represented the Lord's glory and presence (see Ex 40:34-38). It occupied the tabernacle and led the Israelites during the wilderness years.

8:23 The Hebrew word for "gracious" refers to the kindness and good treatment expected by both parties of the covenant, namely God and Israel. Solomon pointed out that the Lord had not only kept His part of the agreement, but had given special treatment to Israel because of that relationship.

8:31 "Forced to take an oath" is literally "lifts a curse against him to curse him." The Hebrew idiom refers to the ancient Near East practice where one taking an oath calls upon the gods (in this case, the Lord) to punish him if he speaks falsely.

8:32 "May You hear . . . and act"; that is, the Lord will carry out the punishment. "Bringing . . . on his own head" refers to the guilty person suffering the consequence of his actions.

8:33 See Dt 29:17-27. Solomon was deliberately using the language of this passage.

8:41,43 The Lord will hear the praying foreigners and treat them according to what they deserve.
8:42 This is the fulfillment of God's purpose in creating Israel as a "kingdom of priests" (Ex 19:6).

8:51 The "iron furnace" referred to a furnace where iron is smelted.

8:63 Given the fact that "all the Israelites" were gathered together and that the feast lasted for 14 days (see v. 65), the numbers for the sacrifices are not unreasonable.

8:64 The large number of sacrifices overflowed into the courtyard in order to handle the volume.

8:65 Hamath was located at the northernmost boundary of Israel; the Brook of Egypt was at the southernmost boundary of Israel. The festival lasted 14 days: seven days for the dedication of the temple, and then seven days for the Festival of Booths.

8:66 This would be the day after the Festival of Booths, the fifteenth day of the combined celebrations.

9:8 Seeing the ruined temple, "every passersby will be appalled and will hiss." The horror of the scene will cause the observer to suddenly have an intake of breath that would audibly hiss through their lips and teeth.

9:13 The name Cabul was a pun meaning "like nothing," an allusion to Hiram's assessment of the region.

9:15 The "supporting terraces"; literally "the Millo" or "Filling." It was probably a system of terraced embankments on the enormous gulf between the City of David on the southeast hill and the Orphel "bulge" to the northeast, east of Solomon's palace. This was likely the site of the barracks of the praetorian guard of professional soldiers so important to the Davidic dynasty.

9:21 The phrase "until today" was not the actual time of the author, who lived after the destruction of Jerusalem, but the "today" of the source he used, probably the Acts of Solomon. See the Introduction for more on the authorship of 1 and 2 Kg.

9:22 The Canaanites were permanently enslaved as workers for the Israelites. The Israelites were drafted temporarily for specific periods of time.

10:11 "Almug wood" is traditionally identified as sandalwood (Pterocarpus santalinus), imported from India. Elsewhere almug was said to be native to Lebanon (see 2 Ch 2:8), suggesting that it may refer to juniper (Juniperus phoenicea excelsa).

10:26 A large part of Solomon's wealth came from taxes and tolls on international commerce. The army's primary mission was to protect commercial traffic on Israelite caravan routes.

10:27 "Foothills", literally "Shephelah," the coastal plains lying below the Judean highlands.

10:28 The Masoretic scribes may have misread the Hebrew word that is translated here as "Egypt." This Hebrew word differs by only one letter from a word that refers to "Mutsri," the Cappadocian seacoast in Anatolia (modern Turkey). This fits with the other source of import, Kue, which is also located in Anatolia. The kings of Israel were forbidden to import horses from Egypt in Dt 17:16.

11:1 Solomon did this in direct disobedience to Dt 17:17. Most of the marriages were designed to seal political alliances.

11:2 The term "intermarry" is an idiom used for more than just marriage. While the context clearly centers upon marriage, it is the entire cultural package that went along with marriage (economic, political) and the negative moral influence of close association with unbelievers that was in view here.

11:5 "Milcom" was the national deity of the Ammonites; the name apparently means "the king," and was identified with Chemosh, the deity of Moab, by Jephthah in Jdg 11:24. Some suggest Milcom is the same god as Molech, see Jr 49:1.

11:6 "Did what was evil"; literally "The Evil." This expression with the definite article, referring to idolatry, is very common in the Former Prophets: Jos, Jdg, 1 and 2 Sm, and 1 and 2 Kg (see Ex 20). The use of capitalization captures the original intent. Of all sin, the greatest in the eyes of the biblical authors was idolatry, and they often wrote of it this way.

11:11 "Since you have done this," can mean, "since this idolatry is your habitual practice."

11:20 "Tahpenes herself": it was not the sister of Tahpenes who weaned her son, but Tahpenes, the queen, who did so; a signal honor for Hadad.

11:25 "Aram" is modern Syria.

11:28 The porters provided the basic labor of carrying materials to the craftsmen. In this case, the primary job was to fill the breach, so the responsibility assigned to Jeroboam was significant.

11:30 The Hebrew word used here for "cloak," salmah, was a pun on Solomon's name (Hb shelomoh), having almost exactly the same consonants. The cloak was symbolic of the entire nation about to be divided, and the pun emphasized the irony: it was Solomon who was about to be divided.

11:34 The title of "ruler" referred to a leader of a single tribe, and so was a demotion from king.

12:4 There is strong evidence that Solomon, while not starting out enslaving Israelites, ended up doing so.

12:18 Rehoboam insulted "all Israel" by sending the man in charge of the Canaanite slave work force. By sending Adoram, Rehoboam implied that Israel was to be dealt with the same way.

12:28 "Here is your God": literally "behold your gods." This was almost exactly the same language used by Aaron in presenting the golden calves to Israel at Sinai (Ex 32:4).

12:29 Dan was in the far north of the kingdom, Bethel was in the southernmost part.

13:18 Though the man of God was deceived by the "word of the LORD" from the old prophet, he still disobeyed a clear command (v. 9), and God held him accountable.

13:30 He mourned not because of any regret for the Judean prophet's death but because that death demonstrated that the Judean prophet's denunciation of Jeroboam and Samaria would also be fulfilled.

13:33 Jereboam had a clear word from the Lord, but he disregarded it. The modern reader sometimes wonders why God does not do more miracles today to authenticate His message. One reason is that miracles are not always heeded even when they cannot be explained away (see Lk 16:31).

14:14 See 15:29 for the fulfillment of this prophecy.

14:22 "Did what was evil," literally "The Evil"; that is, idolatry. See note on 11:6.

14:23 The "sacred pillars" were among those objects to be destroyed by the people when they entered the land (see Dt 12:3).

14:30 Since outright war is not recorded between the two kings, we assume this refers to a "cold war" with skirmishes and other incidents.

15:1 The "eighteenth year" was 913 B.C. "Abijam" is the same person called Abijah in 2 Ch 13.

15:2 Abijam reigned for three years, until 909 B.C.

15:9 The "twentieth year" was 910 B.C.

15:10 Asa reigned for 41 years until 869 B.C.

15:11 The phrase "what was right" is literally "The Right Thing," a deliberate contrast to "The Evil" thing of idolatry that characterized disobedient kings.

15:17 "Ramah" was four miles north of Jerusalem on the road leading from the coastal plain. This would be the primary route for an invading army.

15:25 The focus of the narrative shifts to Israel, the northern kingdom, until the final verses of the book.

15:26 Literally, "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 11:6.

15:27 Nadab and Israel had their military attention on the Philistines and so were vulnerable to internal treason.

15:28 Asa's "third year" was 908 B.C.

15:29 See 14:10-11.

15:33 Baasha reigned 24 years, until 886 B.C.

15:34 Literally, "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 11:6.

16:7 The author's comments here reflected his philosophy of history and theological perspective: kings who commit "The Evil" of idolatry and break the first commandment are judged by the Lord. Both the king and people experienced disaster.

16:8 The "twenty-sixth year" of Asa's reign was 886 B.C. Elah reigned two years until 885 B.C.

16:10 Asa's twenty-seventh year was 885 B.C.

16:11 Baasha experiences the same fate as he gave to the house of Jeroboam.

16:13 "Worthless idols," literally "vapors, mists."

16:15 The: twenty-seventh year of Asa's reign was 885 B.C.

16:21 Tibni reigned six years, 885-880 B.C., overlapping with Omri's reign by two years.

16:23 Asa's "thirty-first year" was 880 B.C.

16:24 The term for "150 pounds" is literally "two talents." Originally representing the weight a man could carry, a talent was a weight of about 62-66 pounds (28-30 kg) and was divided into 3,000 shekels.

16:25-26 "The Evil": that is, idolatry, see note on 11:6. "Worthless idols," literally "vapors, mists."

16:27 According to secular records of Moab and Assyria, the "house of Omri" made significant accomplishments. But in 1 Kg, the author evaluated and then dismissed Omri on the basis of spiritual—not political, economic, or military—criteria.

16:29 Asa's "thirty-eighth year" was 874 B.C. Ahab reigned 22 years, until 853 B.C.

16:30 "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 11:6.

16:34 Most commentators understand Hiel's sons to be a reference to child sacrifice, in light of the prophecy of Joshua about the one who rebuilds Jericho (see Jos 6:26).

17:1 "Gilead" on the east of the Jordan river and south of the Yarmuk river was wild, forested, and largely unsettled during this era. "Baal," the Canaanite storm god, supposedly brought life-giving rain to the land. The drought and control of the weather was a direct challenge to Baal's credibility as a deity.

17:3 A "wadi" is a stream that is dry most of the year, but which tended to have flash floods during the wet season.

17:9 Zarephath was located in Phoenicia, the heart and home of Baal worship and Jezebel's home. The story of Elijah and the widow demonstrates the Lord's sovereignty over Phoenicia as well as His grace and mercy even to Phoenician idolaters.

17:18 The woman was a Phoenician and a witness to the Lord's provision for her needs. She thought her son had died as punishment for her guilt. The guilt she referred to was most likely due to her previous worship of Baal, which she had presumably ceased since Elijah came to stay with her.

18:4 They used two different caves.

18:5 For "wadi," see note on 17:3.

18:15 The "Hosts" in "Lord of Hosts" is a reference to the angelic might of heaven. Elijah used this divine title to reassure Obadiah's fears.

18:21 The phrase "two opinions" uses the Hebrew word saif, which means "crutches made from two sticks." So an alternative translation might be, "How long will you limp about on two crutches?" The point of this metaphor was not about wavering between two opinions, but about the damage Israel was doing to itself by refusing to follow the Lord.

18:26 The phrase "did their lame dance" is literally "pass over, hence leaped, danced." This is a pun on the concept of limping in verse 21. Elijah was making a derogatory pun to describe their ritualistic dance. Such ecstatic dancing was a documented characteristic of Phoenician and Canaanite religions.

18:33-34 Note the symbolism: 12 jugs of water, like the 12 stones of the altar—one for each tribe of Israel.

18:40 For "Wadi," see note on 17:3.

19:10 "Hosts," or, "armies"; a reference to the angelic might of heaven.

19:15 "Aram" is modern day Syria.

19:21 Elisha demonstrated his commitment to his new calling by destroying the means of his former livelihood.

20:1 "Aram" is modern day Syria. The "thirty-two kings" were rulers of allied city-states.
20:11 An English proverb with the same meaning is, "Don't count your chickens before they hatch!"

20:12 The Hebrew word used for "tents" is the same word as the city of Succoth, so it could possibly be a reference to the city rather than the literal meaning of "tents."

20:22-23 "Consider" is literally "know"; i.e., learn what you can from military intelligence. "Aram" is modern Syria.

21:10,13 "Wicked men," literally "sons of worthlessness, scoundrels."

21:20 "What is evil," literally "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 11:6.

21:21 The phrase "sweep away" could also be "burn." The image is of a wildfire out of control, chasing Ahab.

21:25 "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 11:6.

22:4 "My horses as your horses" is a Hebrew idiom that simply means, "We are unified in this action."

22:21 Literally, "the spirit," using the definite article. The most natural understanding would be the Holy Spirit. However, there is a theological problem with God being a deceiver. Some try to moderate the tone by translating the verb deceive as "entice." This does not solve the problem. Both Jeremiah (Jr 20:7) and Ezekiel (Ezk 14:9) spoke of the Lord deceiving a prophet, using the exact same Hebrew word as here.

22:22 A "lying spirit" was a pun on the Hebrew word, which can mean both spirit, wind, or breath.

22:23 While the "lying spirit" spoke through the prophets, the Lord clearly laid out the truth and Ahab had a choice whom to believe. God is truth and cannot lie. He does permit lying spirits to deceive those who will not believe the truth (2 Th 2:5-12).

22:28 Micaiah appealed to the Lord's test of the true prophet: 100 percent accuracy in prediction verifies that the prophet's message is from the Lord (Dt18:21-22).

22:34 "Without taking special aim," literally, "guilelessly, in his integrity." The man drawing the bow did not do so with the intent of killing the king, but was simply doing his job in good faith.

22:41 The narrative now shifts its focus from the northern kingdom of Israel to the southern kingdom of Judah, and this continues into 2 Kg. The "fourth year" of Ahab was 869 B.C., after a co-regency with Asa.

22:42 Jehoshaphat reigned twenty-five years, until848 B.C. This number includes a three-year co-regency with Asa.

22:43 He did "what was right," literally, "The Right Thing," a deliberate contrast to "The Evil" of idolatry that disobedient kings did.

22:48 The "ships of Tarshish" were a particular type of ship, evidently a special metal-carrying ship. Tarshish is the ancient name for the Iberian peninsula.

22:51 The "seventeenth year" was 853 B.C. Ahaziah reigned for two years, until 852 B.C.

22:52 "Did what was evil," literally, "The Evil," i.e., idolatry. See note on 11:6.

2 Kings Articles

Aren't All Religions Basically the Same?

by Craig J. Hazen

There is a very old and famous fable—of either Buddhist or Jain origin—that has been used through the centuries to illustrate what is thought to be a fundamental truth about the religions of mankind. Several blind men were led into a rajah's (king's) courtyard, where they encountered an elephant. One felt a tusk and concluded that an elephant is like a spear. Another touched a leg and thought that an elephant is like a tree. Yet another bumped into the side of the beast and thought that it is like a wall. And so on. The rajah heard the activity, came out on his balcony, and told the blind men that they were each encountering only one small part of the magnificent whole.

The lesson by analogy, of course, is that the different religious traditions of the world are all stumbling upon only one particular aspect of ultimate reality and are blind to the total picture. But all the religious hands are touching the same essential truth.

It is easy to see the appeal of this unifying approach to the broad spectrum of religious beliefs. After all, exclusive claims to religious truth are seen by many to be the root of so much violence and suffering in the world as believers in one tradition fight those of other traditions—sometimes for centuries. If at their core all religions are the same, or each is heading toward the same end, then there is no real reason for conflict or quarrel.

Ironically, this fable has built into it an element that is not highlighted in the traditional interpretations but may be the most important issue in the story. How do the blind men discover the truth about their encounter with the elephant? It is revealed to them from above. The rajah steps out on his balcony and from his transcendent perspective, and with his intact sense of sight, communicates to those below the full picture of their experience. The more profound real-world question that emerges from the fable is where is our "Rajah" who can see all and can reveal to us the truth that is not accessible from our limited perspective?

Unless there is some word from above to tell us that all religions are basically the same, there is no good reason to conclude they are, because the evidence is stacked heavily against it. Although one can identify common beliefs and practices, some of the differences among the traditions are stark and irreconcilable.

Compare, for instance, Mormonism, Buddhism, and Christianity on the critical question of what is ultimately real. Mormon scripture teaches that ultimate reality is material or physical and that even God and spirits are material objects whose constituent matter has existed for all eternity. Mahayana Buddhists believe that ultimate reality is emptiness (sunyata) or beinglessness (nisvabhava)—no gods, no matter, no spirit, no self. Christians, by contrast, see ultimate reality in God, who is an eternal, personal, triune Being who created all there is—both physical and nonphysical—from nothing. By any measure these are dramatic differences.

The conflicting ideas are multiplied once other issues are addressed. What is a human being? Why do we exist? What is good? Why is there pain and suffering? Where is history going? How do I reach salvation or enlightenment? Given the deep divergence on such timeless questions, it is completely legitimate to wonder if the essential unity of all religions is really just a noble wish or a pious hope. Indeed, without a word from the "Rajah" to tell us that the contradictions among the great faiths can be overcome, the notion that all religions are the same seems utterly untenable.

Another irony about the fable presented here is that there is excellent reason to believe that there really is a Rajah who has spoken to mankind and has given us the transcendent perspective we need to know the truth. Jesus Christ is a radical figure in the history of the great religious traditions in that he is the only leader who claimed to be the one eternal God in human flesh. He knows the beginning from the end and knows the deepest religious yearnings of all people. He said definitively that there is only one God and only one source of salvation: Jesus Christ Himself. Moreover (and this is very important), Jesus did not leave us with "blind faith" as the only means to know that His claims are true. Rather, He established the truth of His claims objectively through His glorious resurrection from the dead—the central miracle of human history.

The King has indeed spoken from on high. All religions are not the same. And although we are all blind in sin, we can still hear the Savior's words. He who has ears, let him hear the voice of the King.

Introduction to 1 Kings

AUTHOR

The books of 1 and 2 Kings were originally one book in the ancient Hebrew manuscripts. They are the account of Israel and Judah from the final days of King David to the fall of Jerusalem under Nebuchadnezzar in 597/6 B.C. They both comprise one complete narrative and exhibit the same literary characteristics. From a contemporary perspective, they are the closest to what we would call "history" in the modern sense, but with important differences noted below. The Septuagint (LXX) first divided the book into two, possibly because the Greek text required more space than the Hebrew. Various Greek and Latin manuscripts divide the text at different points, showing that there was no tradition of two books of Kings and that the division was made arbitrarily. The LXX gives 1 and 2 Kings the titles "Third and Fourth Kingdoms," respectively. The compilers of this ancient Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible evidently considered Samuel and Kings as one narrative split into four parts. Hebrew manuscripts, however, are unanimous in keeping Samuel and Kings as two separate books.

The authorship of 1 and 2 Kings, their literary style, and the principles used in their composition are linked together. The author or authors do not identify themselves, but the books consistently evaluate each king based upon the same moral criterion: How faithful was the king to the law of Moses, and especially to the requirements of the law as recorded in the book of Deuteronomy? If we assume a single author—as is mostly likely, given the books' consistent historiography—then the author lived during or after the final events recorded in the book, that is, during or after the seventy years of Israel's exile.

So who wrote the books of Kings? Jewish tradition (Talmud: Baba Bathra 15a) attributes the books to Jeremiah, because 2 Kings 24:18–25:30 is repeated in Jeremiah 52. Certainly the focus upon the kings' faithfulness to Yahweh (or lack of it) fits a concern evident in Jeremiah. Against this conclusion is the fact that the account in Kings of the deportation and imprisonment of Jehoiachin (2 Kg 24:8-17) appears to have been written from Babylon, whereas Jeremiah was in Egypt at that time. We assume that the author or authors lived sometime during the final years of Judah since that is the time when the narrative ends. He or they presumably lived during the exilic period of Israel's history, and so would have been either contemporaneous with or younger than Jeremiah.

Because there are verbal differences between the parallel passages of 2 Kings and Jeremiah, these suggest that both were copied from a larger common written source, perhaps the book of Deuteronomy since the list of phrases and expressions common to 1 and 2 Kings and Deuteronomy is extensive. This fact has led to a theory that Kings was edited by the same group of priests that edited Moses' sermons into Deuteronomy. But there is a fundamental difference between the two books. Deuteronomy presents the lessons history teaches us ("Learn from your parents' mistakes in Egypt and in the wilderness!"), while the books of Kings are much more concerned about the covenant and how closely the king and people followed it.

PURPOSE

Why were the books of Kings written? The answer lies in another question: What kind of historian was the author and what principles of composition and historiography did he use? The author's purposes are revealed in the choices he made in the selection and arrangement of the events he chose to narrate, as well in explicit editorial comments made about those events.

Stepping back and looking at the sweep of the narration, we see a special emphasis upon David's last days and Solomon's achievements as kings. Then, beginning with Jeroboam I (1 Kg 12:25) of Israel, the northern kingdom, the author moves on to cover events contemporaneous with Jeroboam. He continues to narrate reigns in Judah until the death of Asa. After Asa, the author alternates his narration between the northern and southern kingdoms. This pattern shows the author's purpose: to compare and contrast the two kingdoms in light of God's plan for Israel and how well they followed the Deuteronomic ideal for kings and kingdoms. The narration of each individual king has a similar literary pattern: (1) correlation of the date of the reigns of the two kingdoms: the name of the ruler, age at accession to rule, length of reign, name of the ruler's mother; (2) the author's theological assessment of the ruler: Did he follow the law of Moses or not? The literary pattern varies depending upon dynastic changes, especially frequent in the northern kingdom.

POLITICS AND HISTORY

What can we deduce from the author's choices in crafting his narration? First, the books of Kings present a different picture of Israel than one gets from contemporary records of other nations. For example, Omri is given only seven verses (1 Kg 16:21-27) for his reign and accomplishments, but he was mentioned in Assyrian documents and was one of the most "important" rulers of the northern kingdom in terms of political and economic achievements. But the author of 2 Kings dismisses Omri as unimportant. Hezekiah is given three chapters (2 Kg 18–20), but the reign of Jereboam II—accounted by many as a true Golden Age for Israel—is told in just eight verses (2 Kg 13:13; 14:16,23,27-29; 15:1,8).

From a political standpoint, Omri and Jereboam II are important figures, but they are treated in just a few short verses. On the other hand, the short ministries of Elijah and Elisha comprise nearly one-third of the books. The author's purpose is not to present a complete history of Israel but to emphasize certain events to support a specific interpretation of that history. He wanted to show how the kings led the nations to obedience to the Mosaic law or, more frequently, led them away from obedience and how God dealt with the nation and individuals as a result. He selected events and details that were relevant to that purpose. The books of Kings are the author's reflection on the history of the monarchy. The human king of a theocracy had responsibilities laid out in Deuteronomy. The author is concerned to show how it worked out, in accordance with the blessings and curses of Deuteronomy.

The principles that obedience brings blessing and disobedience brings disaster, and that God is active in the judging of individuals and nations on the basis of the covenant are used by the author as his criteria for evaluation of the kings of Israel and Judah. For example, the author consistently condemns kings for allowing the worship of Asherah, the Canaanite goddess of fertility on the "high places" (e.g. 2 Kg 17:9-10; see Dt 16:21). The emphasis on Ahab's reign is due to his marriage to Jezebel, a Phoenician princess, and allowing her to introduce the worship of Phoenician gods into Israel (1 Kg 16:30-33). In contrast, the author reserves his unqualified praise only for Hezekiah (2 Kg 18:3-7) and Josiah (2 Kg 22:2) because they removed the high places and restored national worship to conform to Mosaic prescriptions. He gives qualified commendation to Asa (1 Kg 15:11-14), Jehoshaphat (1 Kg 22:43), Joash (2 Kg 12:2-3), Azariah (2 Kg 15:3-4), and Jotham (2 Kg 15:34-35) for generally following Deuteronomic prescriptions, but explicitly complains about their failure to remove the high places.

WHAT SOURCES DID THE WRITER OF 1 AND 2 KINGS USE?

The books of 1 and 2 Kings are not completely original documents. The author may be described as a compiler of information about Israel's kings who then evaluated each king according to certain religious and moral principles. The text itself mentions at least three sources. The first source is the Book of Solomon's Events (1 Kg 11:41), which contained contemporary events, biographical material, and extracts from the records in the temple archives. Scholars have assigned various parts of 1 Kings to this source: Solomon's marriage with an Egyptian princess (1 Kg 3:1), judgment of the dispute over a newborn infant (1 Kg 3:16-28), lists of court officials (1 Kg 4:1-6) and government administrators (1 Kg 4:7-19,27), the treaty with Hiram of Tyre and preparations for building the temple (1 Kg 5:1-18), construction of the temple (1 Kg 6:1–7:51), the dedication of the temple (1 Kg 8:1-66), additional relations between Hiram and Solomon (1 Kg 9:11-14), the construction of terraces (1 Kg 9:24), the wisdom of Solomon and the visit of the Queen of Sheba (1 Kg 9:26–10:29), and possibly the story of two enemies of Solomon (1 Kg 11:14-25).

The second source, the Historical Record of Israel's Kings, records events from the time of Jeroboam I to Pekah (1 Kg 14:19—2 Kg 15:31) and is explicitly cited 18 times as a source. It contained not only current events, but also official records of significant political happenings and other memorable events from each reign.

The Historical Record of Judah's Kings is the third source used for much of the material in 1 Kg 14:29—2 Kg 24:5, covering events from Solomon's son Rehoboam and the dividing of the kingdom into two parts until the reign of Jehoiakim. It is cited 15 times as the author's source. These are apparently extracts from court records of state archives in Jerusalem. Although this source is not explicitly mentioned, scholars have ascribed the reigns of Ahaziah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah to it; interestingly, their deaths and burials are not recorded, unlike the other kings of Judah. Some have also included Athaliah (2 Kg 11:1), who usurped the throne and ruled for seven years, as well as the construction projects of Asa
(1 Kg 15:23), the wars of Jehoshaphat (1 Kg 22:45), and the conduit of Hezekiah
(2 Kg 20:20).

There is the possibility that the author of Kings used other, unidentified sources. There are passages which are tightly composed and appear to be stand on their own as literary units. While only speculation, these literary units might include court records of David (1 Kg 1–2), three "cycles" of tradition for Elijah, Elisha, and Ahab: (1) the Elijah stories (1 Kg 17–19; 21; 2 Kg 1), which are very political and polemic; (2) the Elisha stories (2 Kg 2–13), which focus more upon the needs of religious groups and individuals and the narratives of the wars against Mesha, King of Moab (2 Kg 3:4-27).

The Elisha stories are integrated into the account of Jehoram, second son of Ahab, king of Israel. They are not in chronological order, and the name of the Israelite ruler is unmentioned (deliberately?), so it is not clear which of the Elisha stories actually occurred during the reign of Jehoram. Perhaps this reflects an attitude that the northern kingdom, Israel, had already been rejected by God because of their failure to respond in faith to the clear demonstration of the Lord's reality and power by Elijah on Mount Carmel.

Some postulate an "Ahab source" (1 Kg 20; 22:1-38), but in what way it is different from the Elijah source is difficult to say. The Ahab narratives exhibit a consistent antagonism to the Arameans (1 Kg 20:42), but this is hardly grounds for distinguishing it from the Elijah source. The evidence simply does not allow it. Conclusions based upon this kind of "internal" evidence are subjective at best, and speculative at worst.

However, there is one further source that forces itself on our attention—the so-called "Isaiah source" (2 Kg 18:1–20:20). So named because it is almost a word-for-word parallel to Isaiah 36–39; either the exilic author of 2 Kings quoted from this eighth century B.C. prophet, or both cited a common source. Since 2 Kings 20:20 refers the reader to the Historical Record of Judah's Kings for further information about Hezekiah's reign, it is possible, even likely, that this is the common source. However, 2 Chronicles 32:32 refers to the Visions of the Prophet Isaiah son of Amoz, and the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel as a source separate from the Historical Record of Judah's Kings.

While not completely certain, it is most likely the author of Kings copied his text from Isaiah directly.

2 Kings Study Notes

1:2 "Baal-zebub" literally translates to "Lord [Baal] of the flies." This was a deliberate change from "Baal-zebul," meaning "Baal the Prince," a parody designed to be insulting. "Ekron" was a Philistine city on the coastal plains.

1:5 The king's surprise may have been due to the swift return of the messengers. The road to Ekron entered the hills about seven miles from Samaria. Verse 9 places Elijah on a hilltop, suggesting the confrontation occurred close to Samaria.

1:16 The ideal king first consulted the true God for guidance. Elijah spoke of the consequences Ahaziah would suffer because he sought guidance from the false god Baal-zebub rather than the Lord.

1:17 Joram was Ahaziah's brother (see 3:1). The "second year" was 852 B.C. Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat was co-regent with his father at the end of his father's reign.

2:1 The town of Gilgal had two possible locations. There was a Gilgal between Jordan and Jericho (Jos 4:19-20). A second possibility was the Gilgal that was eight miles north of Bethel, because they "went down to Bethel" (2 Kg 2:2). "In a whirlwind" is literally "in the storm of the heavens." It is unclear whether a literal funnel was meant.

2:5 The "sons of the prophets" were not literal sons but metaphorical ones, that is, disciples.

2:9 A "double portion" was the inheritance or blessing that a firstborn son would expect from his father (see Dt 21:15-17).

2:12 The "chariots and horsemen" refer to the divine army that had come for Elijah and that would also be Israel's defense. Later, the prophet Elisha was so strongly committed to God's purposes that Joash the king used the same expression at Elisha's death (13:14). Elisha "tore" his clothes, which was a common expression of grief upon the death of a loved one.

2:21 Mineral salts are often what makes ground water unusable. The symbolism here is not completely clear, but the concrete image focused attention on the prophet's words, which were the vital part of his actions.

2:23 The Hebrew phrase for "small boys" refers to adolescents from 12 to 30 years old (see 1 Sm 20:35; 1 Kg 3:7; 11:17). It is unlikely that these youths were younger than 12 years old. Many readers and commentators are uncomfortable with the idea that God would hold children accountable for their actions with such severe judgment. But many of God's judgments upon Israel also affected children as well as their parents. Keep in mind that Bethel was the center of Jeroboam's idolatrous worship. Disrespect for God's prophet is disrespect for the Lord. A strong message was sent to the city and parents.

2:24 "Cursed" in Hebrew means "to call for divine judgment" from the Lord. Elisha did not use vulgar language or invoke a magical spell. The number "42" implies there were more who escaped the bears. With such a large number, there is reason to believe there could have been some threat to Elisha. The Hebrew word for "mauled" means "to tear to pieces." It is likely that some, if not all, died, but the word allows for some ambiguity.

3:1 "Joram" is "Jehoram" in the Hebrew. This son of Ahab should not be confused with Joram (Jehoram), son of Jehoshaphat (see 8:16-24; 1 Kg 22:50). An additional source of confusion is that these two king's reigns overlapped. The "12 years" were 852–841 B.C.

3:2 "He did what was evil"; literally "The Evil," i.e., idolatry (see note on 1 Kg 11:6). This expression with the definite article, referring to idolatry, is very common. The use of capitalization captures the original intent. Of all sin, the greatest in the eyes of the biblical authors was idolatry (see Ex 20), and they often wrote of it this way. The writer carefully applied God's criteria for evaluating a king's reign, noting a redeemable quality in Joram: He abandoned Baal worship.

3:8 The attack on Moab was to be from the south through Edom, which was a dependency of Judah.

3:15 Note the similar association of prophesying with music in 1 Sm 10:5-15.

3:22 The water was flowing out from Edom. The Hebrew word adom, "red," sounds similar to the proper noun edom, "Edom."

3:27 "Wrath"; the Moabites' anger was in view here, although God's judgment was behind it.

4:12 "Before him"; that is, before Gehazi.

4:38 The phrase "a famine" is translated literally "the hunger." Because of the definite article, some scholars believe this is a reference to the seven-year famine of chapter 8, where the exact same expression occurs in the Hebrew.

4:39 The "wild vine" is not a grapevine, but more likely citrullus colocynthus, a yellow fruit of the size of a small melon. They were purgative and could be fatal in large quantities.

4:42 Baal-shalishah was about 14 miles north of Lydda in the foothills of Ephraim, where Saul searched for the lost donkeys (1 Sm 9:3-4). Since the temple in Jerusalem was politically inaccessible, this believer gave the "first bread of the harvest" (see Lv 23:20; Dt 18:4-5) for the support of the servants of Yahweh.

5:1 "Aram" is modern Syria. "The LORD had given victory": the author repeatedly emphasized that Yahweh was the only God and that He controlled the fate of Israel and every nation (see 1 Kg 19:15). This possibly referred to Aram's victory over Israel at Ramoth-gilead (1 Kg 22:29-36). The Hebrew word for Naaman's "skin disease" includes a range of diseases besides leprosy (Hansen's Disease). Whatever it was, it apparently was not advanced enough yet to interfere with his military exploits.

5:7 There was no mention of Elisha or a prophet in the letter. The king of Israel assumed he was the one who was expected to effect the cure. Possibly the king of Aram assumed the prophet was in the king of Israel's employ or under his command.

5:10 Seven days of quarantine were required for certain diseases (see Lv 13–14), and perhaps washing seven times reflected that quarantine.

5:12 The name "Abana" is not attested elsewhere, so the actual location of this river cannot be determined. The Pharpar River is probably the Wadi al-Awaj, which flows from Mount Hermon into the swamps southeast of Damascus. Naaman expected real healing, and was offered what he thought was only a ritual cleansing.

6:8 These "servants" were high ranking, including military officers.

6:13 Dothan was a city within 12 miles of Samaria. Itcommanded the pass between the southern end of the Carmel mountain range and the hills of Manasseh, on the primary road between Damascus and Egypt via Samaria.

6:14 That the Aramean army could come this far into Israel means Ramoth-gilead must have been in Aramean hands.

6:17 "The mountain," that is, the hill upon which the city stood, not the hills surrounding Dothan.

6:24 This was Ben-hadad III, son of Hazael.

6:25 Famine came as a result of the siege, limited to the capital city. The Aramean army lived quite well off the country (see 7:7).

6:26 The "king of Israel" here was either Jehoahaz or Joash.

6:33 The messenger "came down" from the citadel of Samaria, at the highest point in the city.

7:1 These prices are cheap for real produce, compared to the high prices of 6:25.

7:2 "Windows in heaven"; the idea is of the Lord handing out His bounty from heavenly storehouses (see Mal 3:10).

8:3 By abandoning her property, the land had reverted to the king. Since she made the appeal to the king directly, it appears her husband had died (4:8-37), making her situation very similar to that of Naomi and Ruth (see Ex 21:2; 23:10-11; Dt 15:1-4; Ru 1:1,22).

8:4 Gehazi's leprosy evidently did not change his relationship to the prophet, unless this story occurred before the Naaman incident.

8:7 This story dates before 6:24–7:20, because the Ben-hadad of that incident was the son of Hazael. This increases the likelihood that the Elisha stories in this section are not in strict chronological order.

8:9 "All kinds of goods" translates literally "every good thing of Damascus." Hazael "stood," showing a significant sign of respect from the crown prince to a commoner, and a foreigner at that. "Your son" is the metaphoric deference of a child to a parent.

8:10 The Hebrew word for "to him" sounds exactly the same as the Hebrew word for "not," making possible the alternate translation: "Go say, 'You will surely not recover.' "

8:11 "Stared steadily": the Hebrew syntax of these clauses makes it impossible to understand Elisha as the subject of this verb. Hazael stared steadily at Elisha, perhaps stunned by Elisha's pronouncement, until Elisha's weeping breaks into his thoughts.

8:12 See Am 1:13.

8:13 Calling himself a "mere dog," Hazael continued to express deference to Elisha with his self-deprecation. The term was commonly used in the ancient Near East for this purpose.

8:15 Assyrian records name Hazael "the son of a nobody," meaning he usurped the throne, although they do not record how it was accomplished.

8:16 The "fifth year" was 848 B.C. "Joram . . . Jehoram" are two separate kings, with overlapping reigns. "Joram" is a variant spelling or pronunciation of "Jehoram," and the text uses both spellings to refer to both men.

8:17 "Reigned eight years," until 841 B.C.

8:18 This is the first king of Judah to descend to the same level of idolatry as the kings of Israel had done. And no wonder, with Ahab's (and Jezebel's) daughter as a wife. Her name, we discover later, is Athaliah (8:26). "Evil" is literally "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 3:2.

8:19 This editorial comment is placed here to explain why the Lord did not treat Judah the same way He had treated Israel.

8:20 In his father's reign, they lost control of Moab, and the kingdom was diminished once again.

8:22 "Today" refers to the time of the source document used by the author, not the "today" of the exilic compiler of the books of Kg. "Libnah" means "white," and it was a town on the border of the Philistine coastal plains, and probably never really considered itself a part of Judah. So, east and west, Judah is losing its political and economic dominance in the south.

8:25 The "twelfth year" was 841 B.C. This Ahaziah is not to be confused by Ahaziah, king of Israel, who reigned 853–852 B.C. during the reign of Jehoshaphat ofJudah.

8:26 "One year," until 841 B.C.

8:27 "He did what was evil," literally "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 3:2.

9:1 This was some unfinished business that the Lord had commanded Elijah to do, see 1 Kg 19:15-17.

9:2 The "Jehoshaphat" here was not the king of the same name.

9:3 Jehu would be anointed king of Israel, not of Judah, citing yet another dynastic change for the northern kingdom.

9:5 "Sitting there": in a council of war.

9:22 It's not possible for Joram to know Jehu's intentions. Joram means "peace" in the sense of "Is everything in order?" He was anxious to hear a report from his military officers. Jehu ironically used the word in a literal sense.

9:29 The "eleventh year" was 841 B.C.

9:31 "Zimri" was a mocking reference to the seven-day reign of Zimri (1 Kg 16:8-20).

9:36 See 1 Kg 21:23.

10:11 So began a bloodbath that went far beyond his prophetic mandate, and Jehu would be judged for it (Hs 1:3-5).

10:31 See Dt 6:5. The Lord requires exclusive loyalty at whatever cost. Jehu went only part of the way. More was required and expected of the leader of God's chosen people.

10:33 Assyrian records show Jehu offering voluntary tribute to King Shalmaneser III in 841 B.C., leading to a pro-Assyrian policy carried out by his successors and earning the enmity of Hazael of Aram.

10:36 Jehu's reign of "28 years" was from 841–814 B.C.

11:1 The literal translation for "all the royal heirs" is "all the seed of the kingdom." But one royal prince survived.

11:2 Jehosheba was also the wife of the priest Jehoiada according to 2 Ch 22:11.

11:4 Jehoiada was "the priest," meaning the chief priest (see 11:9,15). The "Carites" could possibly be the same group of David's personal bodyguards, the Kerethites(1 Kg 1:38; see also 2 Sm 20:23, where a scribal note corrects "Carites" to "Kerethites").

11:6 "You are to take turns providing protection for the palace," literally translates, "You will keep the watch of the house massach." This last Hebrew word only occurs here in the OT and is translated here as "take turns." But the Hebrew root, nsch, means "tear down, take away." Other forms of this root word occur in the OT always in the context of the Lord's judgment of the wicked. Thus, an alternate translation might be, "keep watch of the house [named/destined for] Destruction," which was different from the king's palace in 11:5 or the Lord's temple in 8:7, and was Baal's temple destined for destruction in 11:18.

11:18 "Mattan" was a Phoenician personal name. He possibly was not a Judean, but an imported priest of Baal.

11:19 "Carites," see note on 11:4.

11:20 The usual final summary notations about Athaliah's rule were omitted. Clearly, the author did not consider her rule to have been legitimate, and so undeserving of the same treatment as a "real" ruler.

12:1 The "seventh year" was 835 B.C. He reigned 40 years until 796 B.C.

12:2 The phrase "what was right" is literally "The Right Thing" (see 1 Kg 15:11), a deliberate contrast to "The Evil" thing of idolatry that characterized disobedient kings.

12:20 Details on the assassination are provided in 2 Ch 24:17-25. Joash promoted idolatry toward the end of his reign. He was wounded in battle with the Arameans, and these men found him and finished him off.

12:21 Amaziah became king in 796 B.C.

13:1 The "twenty-third year" was 814 B.C. He reigned 17 years, until 798 B.C.

13:5 The identity of this "deliverer" is not known. Because of language similar to Jdg, Elisha is a likely candidate. See the king of Israel's comment in v. 14.

13:10 The "thirty-seventh year" was 798 B.C. He reigned for 16 years, until 782 B.C.

13:14 See note on 2:12. Jehoash was particularly referring to Elisha's protection of Israel against Aram. The phrase "wept over him" is literally "wept before (in front of) him." Jehoash was grieved because of his impending defeat, not because of Elisha's mortal illness.

14:1 The "second year" of Jehoash was 793–782 B.C., in co-regency with Joash.

14:2 Amaziah reigned 29 years, until 767 B.C.

14:3 The phrase "what was right" is literally "The Right Thing" (1 Kg 15:11), a deliberate contrast to "The Evil" thing of idolatry that characterized disobedient kings.

14:7 The "Valley of Salt" is in northern Arabia, just south of the Dead Sea.

14:23 The "fifteenth year" was 782 B.C. This was the beginning of Jereboam's official reign. This "Jeroboam" was the second Israelite king with this name, and he served a co-regency with Jehoash from 793–753 B.C. The "41 years" was his total reign, including the co-regency.

14:25 "Jonah son of Amittai" was the same reluctant prophet whose story is told in the book of Jonah.

15:1 The "twenty-seventh year" was 767 B.C. "Azariah" was also known as "Uzziah." Isaiah the prophet ministered during his reign (Is 1:1).

15:2 The "52 years" was from 792–740 B.C. He was co-regent with Amaziah from 792–767 B.C.

15:5 Jotham's co-regency with Azariah was from 750–740 B.C. the phrase "separate house" is literally "house of freedom." The term "freedom" may possibly mean "free from responsibility," that is, "house of retirement."

15:8 The "thirty-eighth year" was 753 B.C.

15:13 The "thirty-ninth year" was 752 B.C. "Uzziah" was also known as "Azariah." Shallum's record was unique in that there is no evaluation of his actions and attitudes toward idolatry. This omission does not imply he was faithful to Yahweh, but that his reign was so short there was nothing by which to evaluate him.

15:17 "Azariah" was also known as "Uzziah." The "thirty-ninth year" was 752 B.C. Menahem reigned 10 years, until 742 B.C.

15:19 "Pul" is also known as "Tiglath-pileser" (see 15:29). Assyria replaced Aram (Syria) as the primary perceived threat to the northern kingdom. Menahem tried to buy Assyria off.

15:23 The "fiftieth year" was 742 B.C. Pekahiah reigned for "two years" until 740 B.C.

15:25 Pekahiah's assassination occurred in 740 B.C.

15:27 The "fifty-second year" was 740 B.C. Pekah reigned 20 years, 752–732 B.C. He ruled in Gilead from 752–740 B.C., overlapping with Pekahiah's reign in Samaria before he killed Pekahiah in 740 B.C.

15:29 This began the deportation of the northern kingdom into exile by Assyria. The purpose of deportation was to destroy political and social structures of the enemy population so they would be easier to rule. At the end of Pekah's reign, it was only ten years before Samaria was destroyed and the northern kingdom ceased to exist.

15:30 The "twentieth year" was 732 B.C.

15:32 The "second year" was 750 B.C.

15:33 Jothan reigned 16 years, until 735 B.C.

15:35 See 2 Ch 27 for details on Jotham's building programs.

15:37 "Aram" is modern Syria.

16:1 The "seventeenth year" was 735 B.C.

16:2 Ahaz reigned 16 years, until 715 B.C. His official reign was 16 years, with four years co-regency with his father Jotham.

16:3 The first recorded human sacrifice by a Judean kingdom; his idolatry reaches a new low in Judah's history.

16:4 Ahaz worshiped every god he could in the hopes that one of them might deliver him from his political and military crises.

16:5 The purpose of this attack was to push Judah into supporting their war against Assyria.

16:7 Ahaz did this against the prophet Isaiah's counsel (Is 7:1-10).

16:9 It was Assyria's standard policy to deport conquered peoples so that they would not continue to be a source of rebellion. Aram (Syria) was no longer a political power.

16:10 Ahaz met with the king of Assyria to offer tribute and to affirm loyalty to Tiglath-pileser. Israel was now no more than an Assyrian province.

16:12 "Ascended" is from a Hebrew verb that uses the causative inflection; that is, he caused (something) to go up on it, meaning to offer a burnt offering. It was a summary statement that is detailed in the next verse.

16:18 "To satisfy the king of Assyria," see Ezk 46:1-2. This was the place where the king made his public sacrifices to the Lord. Tiglath-pileser reduced the dignity of Ahaz, emphasizing Ahaz's dependence on him rather than on the Lord.

17:1 The "twelfth year" was 732 B.C. Hoshea reigned nine years, until 723 B.C.

17:4 "So" was the personal name of the king of Egypt.

17:7 Here the author summarized his conclusions for his readers: it was not politics, but sin and idolatry, that brought about Israel's downfall.

17:41 The phrase "until today" was the "today" of the author's time.

18:1 The "third year" was 715 B.C.

18:2 "Became king," that is, when his co-regency ended and he became king in his own right. Hezekiah reigned 29 years, until 686 B.C.

18:3 The phrase "what was right" is literally "The Right Thing" (1 Kg 15:11), a deliberate contrast to "The Evil" thing of idolatry that characterized disobedient kings. The author's ideal king was David, who worshiped the Lord with his whole heart. All other kings were evaluated against David. And, until Hezekiah, no king of Israel or Judah approached this ideal.

18:4 Unlike the other kings, Hezekiah removed the high places.

18:10 The "sixth year" was 722 B.C.

18:13 An almost word-for-word parallel of this passage in 18:13–20:21 can be found in Is 36:1–39:8. This is not surprising, since Isaiah was a contemporary of Hezekiah. Clearly they were using the same source document of Hezekiah's reign. It is also possible that the author of 2 Kg used Isaiah as his source. The "fourteenth year" was 701 B.C.

18:17 The "Tartan" was the commander in chief. The "Rab-saris" was the chief eunuch/court official. Rabshakeh in Hebrew means "field commander," but the Assyrian title may have meant "chief cupbearer," i.e., chief spokesman.

18:26 The Aramaic language is closely related to Hebrew, but is not mutually comprehensible with it. Judeans would have been more isolated than the northern kingdom and so most would not have been able to speak it. However, Aramaic had become the language of diplomacy and international trade and politics.

19:24 Sennacherib had an exaggerated notion of his own greatness, as rulers often do.

19:28 "I will put My hook," thus treating Assyria the way she treated her defeated enemies. (See Am 4:1-3.)

20:1 "In those days": This must have been before Sennacherib's arrival, perhaps 712 B.C. Others suggest701 B.C.

20:9 Isaiah had also offered Hezekiah's father, Ahaz, the opportunity to choose a sign, but Ahaz had refused (Is 7:10-12).

20:12 Hezekiah had rebelled against Sargon of Assyria and was looking for political and military allies.

21:1 Manasseh co-reigned with Hezekiah from 697–686 B.C. He reigned in his own right until 642 B.C.

21:3 Manasseh worshiped every god for which there had been precedent in Israel's history, and then added new ones to the list! The "heavenly host" were astral deities that were popular throughout the ancient Near East. Assyrian influence undoubtedly contributed to Manasseh's decision to worship them.

21:5 "Both courtyards" is literally "in the two courts." First Kg 6:36 talks about an inner court and 2 Kg 20:4 about an outer court. In the temple description of Ezekiel's vision (Ezk 40:17-20), there is both an inner and outer court. Some suggest the second courtyard is that of the royal palace, which was part of the general temple complex.

21:6 "Pass through the fire," that is, human sacrifice.

21:13 The "measuring line" is the image of a surveyor marking how the destruction of this "urban renewal" will take place.

21:16 The reference to "innocent blood" may include Manasseh's persecution of the prophets. Isaiah was sawn in two during this time (Heb 11:37). "What was evil," literally "The Evil," i.e., idolatry, see note on 3:2.

21:17 Spiritually, Judah went from one extreme to the other. Manasseh's apostasy was not just spectacular in its own right, but had an even greater contrast with his father, Hezekiah.

21:19 Amon reigned "two years," from 642–640 B.C.

22:1 Josiah reigned "31 years," from 640–609 B.C.

22:2 The phrase "what was right" is literally "The Right Thing" (see 1 Kg 15:11), a deliberate contrast to "The Evil" thing of idolatry that characterized disobedient kings. "To the right or the left" is an allusion to Dt 17:20, where the ideal king perfectly obeys the law. Josiah joined the exalted company of David and Hezekiah, serving the Lord with his whole heart.

22:8 The "book of the law" is the book of Dt (see Dt 28:61; 29:21; Jos 1:8). How long had the book of the law been out of public view? It certainly was available to Josiah's great-grandfather Hezekiah (2 Kg 18:6). Its proper place was next to the ark of the covenant (Dt 31:26). It mostly likely dropped out of sight during Manasseh's reorganization of temple worship. Did Hilkiah truly "find" it, or did he bring it out of hiding, convinced that Josiah would accept it? We cannot say for sure.

22:20 Although Josiah died a violent death at the hands of the Egyptians at Megiddo, he did not see Judah's final destruction. This is the "peace" that he had in death.

23:7 "Weaving tapestries" is literally "weaving (in) quarters." Perhaps this was a reference to the production of ritual garments.

23:8 "Geba to Beer-sheba" were the official northern and southern boundaries of Judah.

23:9 The idolatrous priests (see also 23:5) were removed from their positions, but were allowed to live with their families ("fellow priests"). This was the mercy of the king.

23:12 The roof would be the appropriate place to worship astral deities; hence, the reference to "altars . . . on the roof."

23:13 The "Mount of Destruction" is from the Hebrew har hammishchit, and was the deliberate change of the actual name of the place, har hammishchah, the "Mount of Anointing" (probably the Mount of Olives). The idolatry that occurred there was so detestable, they changed the last syllable to reflect the ultimate fate of those who worshiped other gods there.

23:15 Bethel was not a part of Judah. Here Josiah stepped beyond his authority as a vassal of Assyria.

23:19 Nineveh fell to the Babylonians and Medes (Persians) in 612 B.C. Assyria was completely under Babylonian control by 609 B.C. and its hold on Aram and northern Israel faded. For the first time since Solomon, the king could treat the northern kingdom just like the south.

23:25 The highest praise the author of 1 and 2 Kg had for any king, including David or Solomon.

23:29 With Assyria weakening and Babylon on the ascendancy, Egypt saw its chance to retake control of Palestine all the way up to the Euphrates. Why did Josiah confront Neco? He perhaps was pro-Babylon, like his great-grandfather, Hezekiah. More likely, he wanted to contest Egypt's bid for control of the former northern kingdom of Israel.

23:31 Jehoahaz became king in 609 B.C.

23:36 Jehoiakim reigned "11 years," from 609–598 B.C.

24:8 Jehoiachin reigned "three months," from 598–597 B.C.

24:12 The king of Babylon's "eighth year" was 597 B.C. This is the first time the regnal date of a foreign ruler is used in Kg.

24:18 Zedekiah reigned "11 years," from 597–586 B.C.

25:3 The "fourth month" was Tammuz (June/July). The famine was severe because the Babylonians had interfered with two harvests, living off the land and consuming what was available.

25:8 Nebuchadnezzar's "nineteenth year" was 586 B.C.

25:22 Jeremiah 40:7–48:18 has a much more detailed account of 2 Kg 25:22-26. Gedaliah's grandfather was the scribe for King Josiah (22:3); his father was one of those sent to the prophetess Huldah (22:14) and who saved the life of Jeremiah the prophet (Jr 26:24).

25:27 "The year he became king" was 561 B.C.

25:30 The book of 2 Kg ends on a positive although bittersweet note. Not all is lost, for God's promises still remain. If we learn anything at all from the history of Israel's kings, it is that idolatry brings disaster, and obedience to God's law brings hope.

1 Chronicles Articles

Does the Existence of the Mind Provide Evidence for God?

by J. P. Moreland

Many believe that finite (limited) minds provide evidence of a divine mind as their Creator. If we limit our options to theism and naturalism, it is hard to see how finite consciousness could result from the rearrangement of brute matter; it is easier to see how a conscious Being could produce finite consciousness.

This argument assumes a commonsense understanding of conscious states such as sensations, thoughts, beliefs, desires, and volitions. So understood, mental states are in no sense physical since they possess four features not owned by physical states:

1. There is a raw qualitative feel, or a "what it is like," to have a mental state such as a pain.
2. Many mental states have intentionality—being or aboutness—directed toward an object (for example, a thought about the moon).
3. Mental states are inner, private, and immediate to the subject having them.
4. Mental states fail to have crucial features (for instance, spatial extension and location) that characterize physical states and, in general, cannot be described using physical language.

Given that conscious states are immaterial and not physical, at least two reasons have been offered for why there can be no natural scientific explanation for the existence of conscious states:

Something from nothing. Before consciousness appeared, the universe contained nothing but aggregates of particles/waves standing in fields of forces. The naturalistic story of the cosmos's evolution involves the rearrangement of atomic parts into increasingly more complex structures according to natural law. Matter is brute, mechanical, physical stuff. The emergence of consciousness seems to be a case of getting something from nothing. In general, physico-chemical reactions do not generate consciousness. Some say they do in the brain, yet brains seem similar to other parts of organisms' bodies (e.g., both are collections of cells totally describable in physical terms). How can like causes produce radically different effects? The appearance of mind is utterly unpredictable and inexplicable. This radical discontinuity seems like a rupture in the natural world.

The inadequacy of evolutionary explanations. Naturalists claim that evolutionary explanations can be provided for the appearance of all organisms and their parts. In principle, an evolutionary account could be given for increasingly complex physical structures that constitute different organisms. It is clear that as long as an organism, when receiving certain inputs, generates the correct behavioral outputs under the demands of reproductive advantage, the organism will survive. What goes on inside the organism is irrelevant and becomes significant for the processes of evolution only when an output is produced. Strictly speaking, it is the output, not what caused it, that impacts the struggle for reproductive advantage. Moreover, the functions organisms carry out consciously could just as well have been done unconsciously. Thus both the sheer existence of conscious states and the precise mental content that constitutes them is outside the pale of evolutionary explanation.

It will not do to claim that consciousness simply emerged from matter when it reached a certain level of complexity, because "emergence" is merely a label for, and not an explanation of, the phenomena to be explained.

Introduction to 1 Chronicles

AUTHOR

In 538 B.C., having overthrown the Babylonian Empire the previous year, Cyrus of Persia decreed that the Jews could return to their homeland after 70 years in exile. The first 75 years were difficult. There was no temple and the land available to the returned Jews had included only about a 15-mile radius around Jerusalem. The walls of Jerusalem were in ruins. The people were vulnerable to the enemies who surrounded them—their neighbors hardly welcomed these "interlopers" who had come home to compete with them politically and economically. Harvests were poor or failed completely, and the people had to endure the subsequent famines. Morale was low and there was little to motivate the people's spiritual life.

The author of the books of Chronicles, whom we shall call the Chronicler, saw a need to remind the returnees of their national identity. This identity superseded the division of the nation into northern and southern kingdoms and found its center in the law of Moses. With the spiritual life of the nation in shambles, temple worship needed to be restored by the Levites and priests as the true mediators of God's Word and will. So the Chronicler sat down to pen a book to encourage a change in the self-image and identity of God's chosen people.

These two books were originally one. The book's Hebrew title is "the words of the days" or "the events of the times," that is, the annals of the nation of Israel. When the book was translated into Greek (the Septuagint version, or LXX), it was divided into two parts. Since the Greek language used vowels and consonants, whereas the Hebrew text at the time included only consonants, this division was possibly made because of the expanded length of the translated text. The LXX gave the book the title "the things omitted," referring to the fact that Chronicles includes material not found in the parallel material in the books of Samuel and Kings. Several hundred years later, the Christian scholar Jerome described the book as "a chronicle of all sacred history." Our modern title, Chronicles, is a shortened form of that description.

Chronicles appears as the last book of the third division of the Jewish canon, the "Writings." The LXX, Vulgate, and modern translations place it after Kings and before Ezra—Nehemiah, probably because its contents were historical and overlapped the period narrated by Samuel and Kings. In fact, the book is a history of the Hebrew people from Adam to the Persian king Cyrus, which parallels the writings of Genesis through Kings, with Ezra—Nehemiah as a continuation of what happened after Cyrus permitted the Jews to return to their land.

The earliest that Chronicles could have been written was 538 B.C. since the end of the book records Cyrus's decree of that date. The use of Chronicles in the book of Ben Sira (published in 180 B.C.), and the second-century LXX translation of Chronicles, give us the approximate latest date when it could have been written. Thus we have about a 350-year span of time when the book could have been produced.

But we can be more specific than that. First Chronicles 3:19-24 records Zerubbabel's descendants for two (not, as it might appear, four) generations. And since Zerubabbel can be dated to around 520 B.C., this means Chronicles was compiled around 400 B.C. or slightly later. There is no scholarly consensus on the exact date, but the purposes for which the book was intended suggest that a fourth century B.C. date fits best.

While the author of Chronicles is anonymous, rabbinic authorities claimed that Ezra the scribe wrote the genealogies. Did the same author write the Chronicles as well as Ezra and Nehemiah? Since the book ends with Cyrus's decree, the author could not have lived much earlier than Ezra's time. The opening verses of Ezra are also the closing verses of Chronicles, which means the author of Ezra and Nehemiah had access to Chronicles. However, these same facts are compatible with the conclusion that Chronicles is an independent work. Ezra may simply have borrowed the last verses of Chronicles to establish a context for his work.

The common linguistic features of the books are standard post-exilic Hebrew, proving they were written in the same linguistic era but not necessarily by the same person. The common theological position and viewpoint supports the notion that both authors were from the same theological community and shared the same religious values. Ultimately, whether written by one author or two, Chronicles and Ezra/Nehemiah stand on their own as separate works, with separate purposes and aims, exhibiting internally consistent unity of composition. They should be interpreted as complete, self-contained works.

Reading Chronicles carefully reveals a number of facts about the author. He was evidently a member of the post-exilic theological community, with a religious orientation to life rather than a secular one. He may have been a priest or a Levite, but he certainly believed God's will was mediated to the people though the Levitical priesthood. He reflected the values and ideals of Ezekiel and some of the post-exilic prophets about Temple worship and correct ritual observances. This theological emphasis on strict adherence to ritual and social organization was a preemptive effort to prevent a fall back into the idolatry and apostasy that had brought on God's judgment in the first place. The Chronicler, like the post-exilic prophets, did not desire a repeat of the Lord's judgment on Israel for disobedience to the First Commandment. He emphasized a strict compliance with liturgical worship and moral purity in order to realize God's blessing upon the newly restored nation.

First Chronicles starts with nine chapters of genealogies that trace Adam's line down to the sons of Jacob. The rest of 1 Chronicles (chaps. 10–29) narrate the life of David. The first nine chapters of 2 Chronicles detail the reign of David's son Solomon. The stories of David and Solomon should be treated as one unit, for the Chronicler presented both of them as models for Israel's kings. Chapters 10–36 record the history of the southern kingdom of the divided monarchy, Judah.

THE IMPORTANCE OF GENEALOGIES

Genealogies were very important to the Chronicler, and thus the modern reader cannot gloss over them and still expect to understand the message of the book. Some were used to show the kinship between Israel and neighboring tribes, while others established the legitimacy for persons of rank and authority. The genealogies reflect a teleological view of history, that is, a view in which humankind is moving toward a goal set by the Creator. More importantly, they provide a framework for the Chronicler's concept of "all Israel."

The Chronicler used this important phrase 45 times. For the Chronicler, there was no more north and south, Israel and Judah, but just "all Israel." His genealogies emphasized the unity of the sons of Jacob, whom the Chronicler always called "Israel." "All Israel" accepted David as king at Hebron (1 Ch 11:1). The lists of
1 Chronicles 11–12 are apparently motivated by the "all Israel" concept. "All Israel" was at the dedication of the temple (2 Ch 7:8). Hezekiah invited "all Israel" to come to Jerusalem for worship (2 Ch 30:1), and although most mocked the invitation, some "humbled themselves" before Yahweh and came to worship at Jerusalem
(2 Ch 30:11). Although Israel had been divided, the damage was never irreparable, and repentance was always available to the people.

In Chronicles the northern kingdom is essentially ignored except insofar as it interacted with Judah. This is an important clue to the Chronicler's purpose for writing the book. He sought to prove that the newly restored nation was the true successor to the Davidic covenant. It is no surprise, then, that most of the text of Chronicles is devoted to David and Solomon, representing the ideals of kingship laid out in Deuteronomy. The author assumed his readers knew the contents of the books of Samuel and Kings, and so he gave only enough detail to establish the historical context. Also omitted were the personal failings of David and Solomon as well as the stories of Absalom, Amnon, and Adonijah. They were not relevant to temple worship and other institutions of the theocracy (God-ruled government).

Some have suggested that the Chronicler was attempting to whitewash David and Solomon's sins and failures, but it is clear that the Chronicler expected his readers to be familiar with the books of Samuel and Kings. These negative elements in the lives of the kings were public and well known; they were simply not pertinent to the issues pressing upon the Chronicler. He focused upon the consequences of idolatry and God's desire for the sinner to repent and return to a life of obedience to the law of Moses. This obedience is the basic characteristic of anyone who had a covenant relationship with Yahweh, since God's moral character had to be reflected by the nation He had chosen.

In his grand survey of Israelite history, the Chronicler made liberal use of sources within the Scriptures: the Pentateuch (first five books of the Bible), Joshua, Samuel, and especially Kings, which he explicitly cited (2 Ch 27:7; 35:27; 36:8). For the genealogies, the Chronicler must have drawn upon other sources than just the biblical ones. The difference in arrangement and balance is great enough to suggest there were other sources that survived the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

THE RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 CHRONICLES

While it is certain that the Chronicler knew of and consulted with the book of Kings, a careful comparison of the parallel passages show Chronicles giving details not found in Kings, and, at the same time, omitting details that Kings includes. This suggests that the Chronicler used a source other than Kings, but that this source or sources was also used by the author of Kings. Second Chronicles 24:27 cites "Writing of the Book of the Kings." Other extra-canonical sources used by the Chronicler were narratives of the prophets and seers (1 Ch 29:29; 2 Ch 9:29; 12:15; 13:22; 24:30; 26:22; 32:32; 33:19) and official genealogies preserved in government archives, although these have been lost to us.

Some of the differences in text of the books of Chronicles arose from the Chronicler using a different Hebrew text tradition from that of the author of Kings. Textual criticism has traced the history of manuscripts by comparing sets of text variations among manuscripts. They conclude that during the time of the Chronicler there were two major "families" of Hebrew manuscripts of that book: the family that eventually became known as the "Masoretic Text" (MT) and a lesser known "Palestinian" family, represented by the (Lucianic) LXX and the Samaritan Pentateuch. Chronicles used a copy of Samuel—Kings that is closer to the Palestinian family than the MT used for our printed editions of the Hebrew Bible. But most of the differences can be accounted for by comparing and contrasting the literary purposes of Kings and Chronicles.

Are the books of 1 and 2 Chronicles historically trustworthy? Yes, but because of the clearly Judean and Levitical viewpoint from which the author wrote and selected material from his sources, critics have tended to hold Chronicles to be slanted and so not a valuable historical witness. But the Chronicler did not claim to be writing a modern, objective historical narrative. The selection of material was based upon different criteria. Chronicles was written in the context of a post-exilic Jewish theocracy to present a corrective understanding of Israel's history from its origins to the ending of Israel's exile by Cyrus's decree. The Chronicler synthesized a historical narrative from a specific theological stance and intended it as an antidote to contemporary spiritual apathy.

1 Chronicles Study Notes

1:1 To the modern reader, genealogies make for boring reading. Why did the Chronicler devote so much space (chaps. 1–9) to them? In the ancient world one's identity was rooted in one's family and then in one's clan or tribe. Ethnicity was the essence of one's public and private loyalties. The Chronicler's primary purpose in writing his book was to impart a sense of unity and loyalty to a scattered and demoralized nation. The genealogy shows one's place, who is family, and who is not. To whom am I obligated, and to what degree? One cannot deny family relationships, wrote the Chronicler to his "brothers." The lists and genealogies make up between 25-30 percent of the Chronicles, based upon actual word count. Clearly, ancestry and relationships are a major part of the Chronicler's message: the importance of Israel in world history and its essential unity.

Genealogies come in two basic forms: (1) linear: tracing a single line of descent from generation to generation; (2) lateral: tracing several parallel lines of "siblings" one after the other. The tracing is usually descending (tracing descendants) but occasionally ascending (tracing ancestors). The names found in the genealogies often represent not only the individual, but also the clan or the geographical region or towns founded by that individual. Here the Chronicler followed the genealogy in Gn 10 with only minor differences.

1:7 "Rodanim" refers to the inhabitants of Rhodes.

1:8 "Cush" represented the Sudan and Nubia in the south. "Mizraim" is literally "Egypt." "Put" represents Libya in the west. As with the Table of Nations in Gn 10, these names also point to geographic relationships. Although "Canaan" is included with the other nations in the south and southwest of the Fertile Crescent, the languages and ethnicity of the Canaanites known to Israel are clearly Semitic from archaeological and extra-biblical literary evidence. Most of Canaan and the rest of Palestine were frequently under Egypt's sphere of influence in ancient times.

1:10 While most of the extra comments in Gn 10 about individuals were omitted in this list, it is not clear why Nimrod was an exception to this practice.

1:11 "Mizraim" was Egypt.

1:12 The Philistines were of great interest to Israelites, since they were enemies of Israel for centuries.

1:17 The Chronicler began to focus upon the line that would end with Israel (Jacob).

1:24 The Chronicler recapitulated the line in summary fashion, following the path leading to Israel (Jacob).

1:29 The pattern of this genealogy is to deal with the secondary lines first, and then continuing the ever-sharpening focus upon the line leading to Israel (Jacob). Thus, Ishmael's descendants were recorded first, then Isaac's.

1:34 From Adam to Jacob (Israel), the trail narrows down to the twelve tribes of Israel. Notice the Chronicler named him "Israel" not "Jacob." He began presenting his theology right from the start, a theme that will echo back again and again: "We're all together in this exile; one for all and all for one." The Chronicler only rarely uses the name "Jacob" (16:13,17) rather than "Israel." This was part of his emphasis upon the unity of the nation of Israel—that they all came from the same father.

1:35 "Esau's sons"; throughout the Chronicler's genealogies, the descendants of Esau (including Edom and Seir) were given substantial attention, probably because Edom had a significant economic and political presence in the post-exilic era and because of their close proximity to Judah.

1:38 "Seir" was not among the recorded descendants of Esau. But Seir is mentioned in 2 Ch 25:11,14 as dwelling in the same region as Esau. The implication is that the relationship is national rather than ethnic, but strong enough to be included (see Gn 36:20-28).

1:43 It is not clear why the Chronicler includes the kings of Edom. Certainly it was not to record ethnic continuity. The digression of Seir's descendants and now Edom's rulers demonstrated a special interest in this land. Proximity to Judah perhaps gave Edom a greater relevance to the Chronicler's readers. Edom was conquered by David (18:13), but was later a source of rebellion against the kings of Judah.

1:51 The use of the word "chiefs" suggests these names are not direct relatives. The list simply outlines their political structure, not so much the family relationships.

2:1 The genealogy here narrows its focus upon the sons of Jacob, which has been the thread of this story told in terms of names. Telling that story from Adam to Jacob takes one chapter of 54 verses. Telling the story of Jacob's family will take the next eight chapters. The sons are listed (with one exception—Dan) by birth mother, and then by birth order: Leah (Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun); Rachel (Joseph, Benjamin); Rachel's servant Bilhah (Dan, Naphtali); Leah's servant Zilpah (Gad, Asher). See Gn 29–30.

2:3 The presentation of Israel's sons is not in order of birth or by birth mother at all. Instead, it began with Judah as the surviving and most cohesive of the tribes in exile, but also as the tribe of David and the hope for restoration of the nation. Judah and Levi (the next tribe in this presentation) were at the center of the Chronicler's hopes for Israel's future. The "Lord" is the first mention of the Hebrew YHWH, "Yahweh," in Chronicles.

2:6 The superscriptions to Pss 88 (Heman) and 89 (Ethan) suggest this branch of the family was musically talented. The name Zimri comes from the Hebrew verb "to make music," either as a composer or performer.

2:9 This is the line of David, so the thread turns to Hezron's descendants. The name Hezron occurs in Gn 46:12 and Nm 26:21. Since there is no biblical record of Hezron's family, the Chronicler had used some extra-biblical genealogical source (probably archived at the Jerusalem temple) unknown to us.

2:10 "Ram," Hezron's middle son, was the next link leading to David. The word "leader" is from the Hb nasi, meaning "chief, sheikh" of a tribe; a lesser ruler than a melech, "king."

2:15 First Sm 16:10 lists seven sons of Jesse, excluding David, who was the eighth. First Ch 27:18 names "Elihu" as a brother of David, a name not found in this list. Some suggest that one of the brothers might have died at some point, but the text is silent on this matter.

2:18 This "Caleb" (son of Hezron) was not the same as Caleb (son of Jephunneh), Moses' spy and warrior of the conquest of Canaan. That Caleb was a contemporary of Bezalel (v. 20), who was the great-grandson of this Caleb.

2:20 "Bezalel" was important to the Chronicler because of his work on the tabernacle furnishings (Ex 31).

2:21 "Machir" was a member of the tribe of Manasseh (see Nm 32:39-41). Intertribal marriage at this early stage in Israel's history already had begun to blur tribal distinctions and create cross-tribal loyalties.

2:42 "Hebron" was associated with Caleb's family in Jos 14:13, and is the name of a city in 15:13 and in Jdg 1:20.

2:49 Caleb son of Jephunneh had a daughter named Achsah (Jos 15:16), yet the following list of descendants in vv. 50-52 are the sons of Caleb son of Hezron. Taking the text as it stands, the most likely solution is that both Calebs had daughters with the same name.

2:50 This was Caleb son of Hezron. See vv. 18-19,24.

2:52 "Shobal" was an Edomite name; see 1:38,40. Some see the presence of Edomite genealogy here to be evidence of Edomite clans being incorporated into Judah.

2:54 The term "sons" clearly includes the later development of these families into larger communities and were synonymous with towns founded by them.

2:55 The name "Kenites" was the same as the ancient tribe mentioned in Gn 15:19, who apparently took their name from Cain, the son of Adam. Just how closely related the scribal Kenites were to the family of Rechab is unclear. "Hammath" could refer not just to a person but to a city or region, as we have seen before in this genealogy. Some suggest a relationship by marriage.

Here is an insight into the economies of that time. "Scribes" were apparently a hereditary guild where the skills are passed from generation to generation as part of the "family business." They were not necessarily related to the family of Caleb. See also Pr 31 for evidence of textile production and import-export business conducted on an (extended) family basis.

3:1 David first ruled in Hebron over Judah for seven years and six months before coming to power over all Israel (2 Sm 5:5). Because of his desire to emphasize Israel's unity, the Chronicler did not mention this early period of David's reign again.

3:2 "Maacah" was probably a political marriage on David's part to bolster his claim on an area claimed by Saul's son, Ishbaal (2 Sm 2:8-9; Geshur was east of the Sea of Galilee).

3:5 "Bath-shua," or Bathsheba. Note that Solomon was the youngest of the sons of Bathsheba. In ancient Israel, birthright (succession to the throne, in this case) and the position of firstborn were not always synonymous. It is possible that the list was not in birth order, but if so, it would be highly unusual.

3:11 Athaliah, Ahaziah's Canaanite mother, was not mentioned as she was a usurper (2 Kg 11:1,13).

3:12 Azariah was also known as "Uzziah" (2 Kg 14:21).

3:15 Shallum's throne name was "Jehoahaz" (see Jr 22:11).

3:16 Jeconiah was also known as "Jehoiachin" (see Jr 27:20) and "Coniah" (Jr 22:24).

3:17-24 This follows the line of David after the exile.

3:19 Zerubbabel's part in the return to Judah is told in Ezr (Ezr 3:2,8; 5:2) and Neh (Neh 12:1).

3:24 "Anani": names of this type were commonly attested during the sixth and fifth centuries B.C. Some consider this evidence for dating the books of Ch to the late fifth century B.C. This verse ends the record of David's descendants. For the Chronicler, the fact that David's line still existed was reason for the hope of the restoration of Israel.

4:2 "Zorathites": Rehoboam built the town of Zorah(2 Ch 11:10), and it was occupied by Jews in the post-exilic period (Neh 11:29).

4:4 Most of the names here also correspond to towns.

4:6 "Haahashtari" is literally "[the clan of] the Ashashtarites." The word is not Hebrew, possibly Persian.

4:9 This and the following verse were independent from the preceding list, and apparently were included for theological rather than genealogical reasons. The word "honorable" is literally "heavy." If taken literally, this would then be the explanation of his mother's misery in birth.

4:10 The name Jabez literally means "he afflicts, gives pain." He was asking God not to allow his name to characterize his destiny. In the ancient Near East, names were often associated with the character of a person, or of a desirable or undesirable destiny.

4:12 The name Irnahash means "city of Nahash, city of the craftsman."

4:14 Joab established a family or clan guild of craftsmen in that location. The location of the valley is not known.

4:15 The Hebrew word elah can be translated "these," and the final sentence could be (possibly) better translated: "These are the sons of Kenaz." This "Caleb" (to be distinguished from the son of Hezron of the same name) was one of Moses' twelve spies and was prominent in the initial conquest of Canaan.

4:21 Here is yet another reference to the guild economic system based upon clan relations.

4:22 The word "married" is the Hebrew ba'alu meaning "they ruled," and so secondarily could mean "rule over a woman, i.e., marry." But since Moab is the object of this verb, it is more naturally to be understood that "they ruled Moab." "Lehem" may be a shortened form of Bethlehem. The phrase "ancient records" was an explicit reference to the Chronicler's sources, possibly surviving temple records.

4:27 "Did not become as numerous": Simeon (v. 24) was early absorbed into Judah (see Jos 19:1,9). It is interesting to note that Simeon was not mentioned in Moses' blessing of the tribes (Dt 33).

4:39 If the identification of Gedor being near Gaza is correct, then population pressure caused the Simeonites to expand in coastal Philistine areas.

4:41 See 2 Kg 18:8.

4:42 "Mount Seir" shows that the tribe of Simeon also extended their habitation in the southeast direction, toward Edom.

4:43 They "still live there today." Although Simeon was no longer a political or geographical entity, they were part of Israel and so still had a place. In light of the need for unity, Simeon provided an important example to the rest of Israel of God's grace and commitment to Israel's continuing existence.

5:1 See note on Gn 35:22-26.

5:2 "Ruler" was a reference to David. See also Gn 49:10. The Chronicler distinguished between birth order and birthright. The two were not necessarily synonymous.

5:6 Tiglath-pileser reigned from 745–727 B.C. See 2 Kg 15:29.

5:7 Because land was originally apportioned on the basis of tribe and clan, the term "families" could also include the idea of "neighborhood," since family and geography are so closely associated in Israel.

5:8 "They settled" is literally "he settled." "He" probably referred to Bela as the closest possible referent, although some suggest Reuben as a possibility.

5:10 For more on the "Hagrites," see vv. 19-22. Other than Ps 83:6, there is no mention of this war.

5:14 This is an ascending genealogy beginning with "Abihail" and ending in the next verse with "Guni." No sons of Abihail are actually listed. Some suggest the phrase "sons of Abihail" is a standard formula and so is not to be understood literally.

5:16 "Sharon" was not the same place on the coastal plain, but was in the Transjordan region (east of the Jordon River).

5:17 Jotham reigned 742–745 B.C. Jeroboam reigned 786–746 B.C.

5:18 Eventually Reuben was absorbed by Gad, as Simeon was by Judah. "44,760 warriors": this number was considerably smaller than the combined number for these three tribes in Nm 26:7,18,34.

5:20 "Received help": One principle of the Chronicler's historiography was that when Israel called upon the Lord, He heard and answered them. See v. 25, where 300 years later they failed to call upon the Lord.

5:25 While acknowledging the fact that the nations worshiped gods other than Yahweh, this statement "gods of the nations" was not an acknowledgment of their reality. The Chronicler explicitly denied this (2 Ch 32:19). We see here a partial statement of the Chronicler's historiography: Israel's exile was a direct consequence of faithlessness to God. Restoration of the nation would be predicated upon the opposite attitude of the returnees: faithfulness to God's word and law; most importantly, turning away from the worship of any other deity.

5:26 "Today," that is, at the time of the Chronicler. Even though these tribes were in exile and though Judah, Benjamin, and Levi were the dominant tribes of the post-exilic era, nevertheless the Chronicler was at pains to include "all Israel" as a part of his message of unity.

6:1-15 This passage lists the high priests of Israel in their succession. Verses 1-3 form a lateral list; verses 4-15trace descent linearly. The name Gershom is spelled "Gershon" in the Hebrew text.

6:1 The tribe of "Levi," like Judah, was important to the theology of the Chronicler. Since the tribe was scattered throughout the land of Israel, they were crucial to Israel's faithfulness or lack thereof.

6:2 The list of priests was arranged in 25 generations with Zadok (v. 12) at the center, and with 12 generations listed before and after. This emphasized Kohath, Zadok, and Jehozadak (v. 15), the beginning, middle, and end.

6:16 Having listed the high priests in a straight line vertical descent, the Chronicler backed up and recorded the branching lines of Levi's sons.

6:25 This list (vv. 25-33) is an ascending list.

6:28 First Sm 1:1 lists Samuel's ancestors as Ephraimite, yet here he was included with the tribe of Levi. Either his fosterage by Eli the priest and his subsequent service to the Lord caused him to be included in the Levitical lists, or else he was a Levite from one of the Levitical towns in Ephraim (see Jos 21:20-22). The name "Joel" is not present here in the text, but added by the translator. The text reads only, "the firstborn, and his second son Abijah." We learn that the name of the firstborn is "Joel" from 1 Sm 8:2.

6:31-32 David was a musician (playing the harp; 1 Sm 16:23; 2 Sm 6:5) and a composer (see 2 Sm 23:1), so it is natural that David organized the tabernacle worship himself. Singing was important to the Chronicler as a part of the proper worship of the Lord, and he was careful to detail those Levites who specialize as musicians.

6:50-53 The list of high priests in verses 3-8 was repeated here from Aaron to the time of David. The point is that David appointed priests from the line of Aaron, and the legitimacy of the Aaronic line was confirmed.

6:66 For the Chronicler, it was not just about genealogy or pedigree; it was also about the land, which was the rightful heritage of an Israelite.

7:1 This chapter deals with the "northern" tribes of Issachar, Benjamin, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, and Asher.

7:2 Because of the seemingly high numbers of those capable of bearing arms, some suggest the Hebrew word eleph, usually translated "thousand," had come to be the designation of a military unit, which may have been theoretically 1,000 strong. While plausible, this meaning of eleph is not unambiguously attested either inside or outside the biblical text.

7:6 The descendants of Benjamin were given greater attention in chapter 8.

7:7 The number "22,034" is too exact to be considered a round number. Apparently the Chronicler was working from (perhaps official) census documents.

7:13 Genesis 30:5-8 lists Dan and Naphtali as Bilhah's sons, but Dan was omitted here. See also Gn46:23-25.

7:14 Manasseh in the Transjordan (east of the Jordan River) was dealt with in 5:23-26; the Manasseh in the Cisjordan (west of the Jordan River) was the one written of here in verses 14-19.

8:1 Already introduced in summary fashion in 7:6-12, greater detail is now given for the line of Benjamin.

8:8 That Israelites lived in Moab territory is also attested in Ru 1:1 (during the time of the judges) and in1 Sm 22:3-4 (in the time of David).

8:9 "Mesha," a king of Moab had this name, known from the "Mesha stele." See 2 Kg 3:4.

8:28 Jerusalem was on the border between Benjaminite territory and Judah, so the idea of Benjamin chiefs and clan leaders living in Jerusalem was not at all strange. Being the "City of David," it may very well have been viewed as neutral ground, not belonging to any tribe.

8:29 From here to the end of the chapter, the records focus upon Benjaminites who lived in or near Gibeon, six miles northwest of Jerusalem. Gibeon's modern name is el-Jib.

8:33 "Esh-baal": the use of the word baal in the names of this verse and the next reflect an origin before the introduction of the Phoenician deity of Baal. The word in its common, non-technical meaning here is simply "lord, husband." Only later did it gain the connotation of a divine name. When that occurred, the use of the baal element in names discontinued. See 5:5.

9:1 "All Israel" means both Judah and the northern tribes were registered in the official genealogies. "But" is literally "and." The Hebrew conjunction here does not express contrast. Since v. 2 speaks of their return to the land after the exile, the Chronicler carefully reminded his readers why Judah went into exile in the first place.

9:2 The term "Israelites" (Judeans) refers to laymen in contrast to the clergy: priests, Levites, and temple servants. This is not a reference to the northern tribes.

9:20 See Nm 25:12 in which Phinehas's zeal against idolatry earned him a "covenant of peace."

9:26 In the ancient Near East, most ordinary economic transactions were by barter, with standard weights of goods equivalent to other goods. What money or precious metal existed was usually entrusted to places of worship, where they functioned something like a bank. The temple in Jerusalem was the national repository of wealth apart from that of the king. The role of a gatekeeper included providing security for the treasuries.

9:35 Beginning with this verse, the Chronicler rehearsed Saul's lineage. In some ways, the rest of the book of Chronicles is simply an extension or continuation of the genealogies of the first nine chapters, but with ever more extensive notes about the individuals in the lineage.

9:39 "Esh-baal" is literally "man of Baal." This son of Saul was named "Ish-bosheth," which means "man of shame" (2 Sm 2:8-10), see note on 2 Sm 2:8.

10:1 The Chronicler began with the final days of Saul's life. Why? Because from the Chronicler's point of view, Saul was simply an introduction to the ideal king, David. As Israel's first king, Saul cannot be ignored, but his reign was a disaster politically and spiritually for Israel—a condition that David spent a good part of his reign trying to correct. The Chronicler's source here was 1 Sm 31, and he copied it nearly word for word.

10:4 "Uncircumcised men" referred to the Philistines.

10:6 "Three sons died." Ish-bosheth survived Saul's death, but Saul's family was no longer an effective dynasty and played no further role in Israel's history.

10:13 Here is a clear statement of the Chronicler's view of history. Saul's death was the consequence of a failure of faith and a lack of obedience to God's law. He consulted a medium (1 Sm 28:8-25), an act which was forbidden in Dt 18:9-13.

11:1 From here to the end of the book, David is the focus of the Chronicler's narrative. Second Ch begins with David's son, Solomon. What was omitted from the Chronicler's narration tells us almost as much of the Chronicler's purpose as the story itself. He omitted all of David's youth, his exile among the Philistines, and the struggle with Saul. He began after David's first seven-year reign over Judah at Hebron. The narrative began with "all Israel" asking him to be king over the rest of the tribes. The Chronicler wanted to emphasize Israel's corporate identity as a nation, with a divinely chosen ruler. If all the tribes of Israel were once unified under God, it could—and would—be so again in the future.

11:4 The Chronicler used the phrase "all Israel" repeatedly to hammer home his message of national unity to his readers.

11:7 The "city of David" is Jerusalem, which became David's personal property by right of conquest. The Chronicler included this event because a united Israel needed a political center, a capital. It was only later, during Solomon's reign, that Jerusalem became the religious center of the nation.

11:8 "Built up" probably means "restoration, repair." The "supporting terraces" are literally "the Millo." See also 1 Kg 9:15,24. Although 1 Kg only mentioned Solomon as the builder, it is clear that he was continuing and completing a project his father had begun.

11:9 This was in contrast to Saul. David was able to complete the task of occupying the land and conquering its inhabitants.

11:10 "David's warriors" formed the base of his military forces.

11:12 See 2 Sm 23:9-10.

11:15 The number "30" occurs with the definite article: "The Thirty."

11:19 David's action here showed his respect of life and God's value of life. The drinking of blood was forbidden by the law (Dt 12:16).

11:21 Literally, "Of The Three, he was honored in [more than?] The Two and he became their commander. And [But] [up] to The Three he did not come." This is a difficult verse because it apparently contradicts itself. There are a number of manuscript variations that attempt to solve the problem. The translation here is probably the best solution; but the problem remains unresolved.

11:42 This "30" was a different group from "the 30" in verse 15. The number here occurs without the definite article.

12:1 Ziklag was given to David for his base of operations as a mercenary for Achish, king of Gath, after David had fled Saul (see 1 Sm 27:6).

12:3 Gibeah was Saul's hometown.

12:15 The "first month" refers to the new year that began in the spring, when the Jordan would be flooding due to winter snow-melt and rain (see Jos 3:13).

12:16 The "stronghold"; if this was not a reference to Ziklag, then the location is not known.

12:18 "Took control" is literally "wore" or "clothed himself with." "Amasai" was possibly the same person as Absalom's general, Amasa (see 2 Sm 17:25).

12:20 Some commentators interpret "thousands" to be the name of a kind of military unit, and did not necessarily denote a literal thousand men.

12:22 "Like an army of God." The Chronicler compared David's army to the innumerable and unimaginably powerful angelic host that God is able to muster.

12:23 Recruits came to David from "all Israel," as the following verses show. The list shows that David led a united Israel.

12:24 The numbers have troubled many commentators because they seem larger than our knowledge of ancient Palestine would support. Some solutions are: (1) the Hebrew word eleph, "thousand," is the name of a military unit and not a literal number. In this case, 6,800 becomes "six military units, 800 strong." (2) Another proposal is that the Hebrew word should be pronounced alluph, "military leader." Then 6,800 becomes 800 troops under the command of six officers. In light of the comparison of David's army to the innumerable hosts of heaven in v. 22, perhaps these numbers should be best understood literally.

12:37 "120,000" probably means 40,000 from each tribe.

13:1 The story of bringing the ark to Jerusalem is told in 2 Sm 6:2-11. However, the Chronicler added the detail of how David called Israel to this task in vv. 1-5.

13:2 The "whole assembly" is emphasized. Throughout the book of Chronicles, the author was at great pains to emphasize Israel's unity. His message to the reader was, "We are one people, not merely separate tribes, and our great leaders led all Israel."

13:3 David was superior to Saul, the Chronicler noted, because David cared about the will and word of God and understood his role under the high kingship of the Lord, unlike Saul.

13:6 The Hebrew word for "dwells" means literally "the one who sits"; meaning one who literally sits, or by extension, "the one who dwells." In the present context, and in light of 28:2 where the ark is called a "footstool for our God," the better translation here is, "the one who is enthroned between the cherubim."

13:11 While David emotionally felt anger against what he considered to be an unjust response of the Lord's, the next emotion that he felt was fear and respect for God's requirements. God's holiness does not make exceptions, even when the result might be tragic.

13:13 Obed-edom is a Levite (15:18,21), and so was a lawful keeper of sacred objects such as the ark.

14:8 The Philistines were David's former employers and allies.

14:10 David "inquired." In sharp contrast to Saul, and essential to a king's success, David first found out if he should do battle with the Philistines.

14:12 The Philistines viewed their defeat as evidence of their gods' inability or unwillingness to defend them and defeat David, and in the rout they left the useless idols behind.

14:15 Unlike the Philistines' gods, the Lord is able and willing to intervene directly to fight for His people.

15:2 David had learned his lesson about transporting the ark! (For more on the ark, see 13:9-13; Dt 10:8.)

15:15 For the Chronicler, proper observance of the law's ritual and regulations was of utmost importance. Here he noted the proper way to transport the ark: Levites carrying it with poles (see Ex 25:13-15; Nm 7:9). David had used a cart with no Levites. Had they followed the correct procedure, the ark would not have been in any danger of falling and a man would not have died.

15:17 Asaph was the composer of Pss 73–83.

15:28 Note the "all Israel" motif, the Chronicler's most frequent phrase used to communicate his message of the unity of Israel.

15:29 The Chronicler omitted Michal's verbal confrontation of David for his dancing before the ark in 2 Sm 6:16-23. Her opinion had no bearing on David's piety, which was the Chronicler's main point.
16:14 Verses 14-22 are parallel to Ps 105:7-15.

16:35 A prayer for a return from exile and restoration to nationhood, see Ps 106:47.

16:39 That there was a tabernacle at Gibeon is not recorded elsewhere in the OT, and some have questioned the historicity of this tradition. The Chronicler clearly used genealogical records that other Chroniclers of the OT did not have access to or did not use. That is the most natural understanding here: The author had access to ancient records that did not otherwise survive.

17:1 If the central theme is the building of the temple, then the account of Nathan's prophecy of David's dynasty and the identification of David's son as the builder of the temple is the preface to that theme. For the Chronicler, the temple was the theological, geographical, and spiritual heart of the nation.

17:6 David's desire to build a temple to the Lord that he loved and worshiped is understandable and commendable. But the Lord did not share that concern. Indeed, before He spoke of who would build His temple, God noted that He was building David's "house" or dynasty as rulers over Israel.

17:7 "Ruler" is from the Hebrew word nagid, referring to a tribal chieftain or a lesser ruler accountable to a "high king." This term was deliberately chosen instead of the more usual Hebrew word melek, "king." This latter word should be applied to the Lord. David was nagid and served his melek, the Lord. This is a very different understanding of ruling from Israel's ancient Near Eastern neighbors, where nearly every little town boasted of a "king" jealous of his prerogatives and prerequisites. These rulers claimed divinity more often than not, instead of acknowledging stewardship to a higher authority.

17:12 This verse encompasses the Chronicler's two major themes: the temple and the dynasty of David.

17:14 The parallel passage in 2 Sm 7:16 says, "your house and kingdom" in reference to David. This shift from second person (David) to first person (the Lord) shows the Chronicler's more theological point of view. The Chronicler was deeply committed to the restoration of the nation, and this historiographical principle is reflected in how he wrote his story.

18:1 Although the wars David fought disqualified him from building the temple (see 22:8-9; 28:3), they were necessary wars. These wars brought peace and political strength required for national survival as well as the booty and wealth needed for the building materials. The next three chapters record how David completed what Joshua began in the conquest of the land the Lord had given Israel.

18:6 The Chronicler's worldview is evident here: David's success was first of all caused by the Lord—not simply by his own military prowess.

18:11 This booty became part of the stock used for the needs of the temple. In 2 Sm 8:12, some manuscripts use "Edom" in place of "Aram." This is because the Hebrew letters r and d are very similar shapes, and the copyist of Samuel misread his original.

18:12 Second Sm 8:13 mentions a victory of David's in Edom where there were 18,000 Edomite casualties. The superscription of Ps 60 mentions Joab—also a son of Zeruiah (1 Ch 18:15)—as victorious over 12,000 in the Valley of Salt. Apparently, both Joab and Abishai acted together under David's command.

18:17 "Cherethites and Pelethites" were David's personal guard, non-Israelites and mercenaries. One might think of them as a professional, standing army. The Chronicler omitted naming David's sons as priests, in contrast to 2 Sm 8:18. He was jealous of the Levitical privilege and evidently did not consider David's sons to be true priests, regardless of what Levitical functions they might have performed. Some have suggested that there was a textual corruption in Samuel, a book famous for the many scribal errors in the history of its transmission. The Hebrew word for "administrator" is just one letter different from the word for "priest."

19:7 Such a large number of chariots seems incredible to some commentators and so some consider the Chronicler or his sources to be in error, if the number is taken literally. The Hebrew word for "thousand," eleph, could be understood as a military unit originally numbering one thousand, but now used as a proper name for a military unit of a much smaller number. While plausible, there is no independent evidence that eleph was ever used in this way.

20:1 The Chronicler omitted writing of David's affair with Bathsheba and the consequent murder of her husband Uriah, a member of the Thirty Mighty Men narrated in 2 Sm 11–12. Because the Chronicler wished to emphasize David's role as the ruler of "all Israel," many interpret his omission as an attempted cover-up of David's failure and sin, that David was the "perfect" ruler. But this interpretation requires the assumption that the Chronicler's readers were unaware of this event and had no access to the book of Samuel, when it is clear that the Chronicler had access to it. Instead, the more natural explanation requiring fewer assumptions is that the Chronicler assumed his readers knew about the story, but he omitted it because it contributed little or nothing to his message. There is nothing to suggest that the Chronicler was rewriting history to hide the faults and sins of David. We will see this choice again in the case of Solomon as well.

20:8 The Chronicler again omitted an incident in David's life when the Philistine Ishbibenob was killed by Abshai so that David was not put at risk in battle any further (2 Sm 21:16-17). Some suggest the Chronicler felt the event showed weakness in a ruler too weak to face combat. But this interpretation has no evidence to support it. The Chronicler only selected material that advanced his message, and this event was evidently too minor to be included.

21:1 "Satan" is not mentioned in the parallel passage (2 Sm 24:1). There, the Lord is stated to be the cause. He was angry with David, although we are not told why. The Hebrew word satan (meaning "accuser") occurs elsewhere (Jb 1:12; 2:6; Zch 3:1-2) with a definite article: "the accuser." Here it occurs without the definite article, implying it is a proper noun, "Satan." The "count," as the following verses make clear, was a military census. Such a census for the purpose of mobilizing an army was authorized by Nm 26:2. The difference is that previous censuses were authorized by the Lord. We're not given any details as to what caused David to prepare to mobilize, but it is clear that even his general Joab knew better.

21:5 If one assumes the Bible is not historically trustworthy unless external evidence demonstrates to the contrary, then these numbers are not in line with the archaeological evidence of the population of Palestine in the tenth century B.C. However, since archaeological data is by definition what remains of ancient civilizations, this text is documentary evidence that such interpretations of the archaeological data are too pessimistic. And certainly the land could have supported such population.

21:8 Here is evidence that the Chronicler had no intention of "whitewashing" David or any other character about whom he wrote. David had his faults, but not everyexisting story about them served the author's purposes. The Chronicler included this story of the census, but omitted the Bathsheba affair (cp. 20:1 with 2 Sm 11:1). One major difference between the two events is that while David's sin and murder affected only a small number of people, his ordering the census had consequences for many thousands. Put another way, the Chronicler chose to omit personal sins, but he included sins of a king that had negative consequences for "all Israel."

21:18 In 2 Sm 24:18 it is Gad who gave the message of the Lord to David, with no mention of the Angel of the Lord.

22:1 The material in chapters 22–29 is found nowhere else in the OT, and the Chronicler's source or sources for this detailed section on David has been the object of much speculation.

22:2 Although Solomon built the temple, David accumulated a great mass of the required building materials. "Foreigners" included Canaanites as a permanent forced labor corps. The "finished stones" are probably limestone, of which there was a great quantity near Jerusalem.

22:3 The tenth century B.C. is part of what historians call the Iron Age. Iron was relatively new and expensive. The Philistines were masters of iron technology, and the origin of this iron was almost certainly captured booty from David's wars.

22:13 A basic moral principle for the Chronicler: follow the law carefully and with precision.

23:1 Chapters 23–27 document how David fulfilled all of his duties as a true ruler under the Lord. While some have argued this section is more of a parenthesis or appendix—or even placed here by someone other than the Chronicler—the function of these chapters clearly argue for the faithfulness to the Lord's expectations of a pious ruler. Note that the focus of David's duties was to organize and provide for the worship of the Lord. Verse 1 says he "installed" Solomon. David did not necessarily die immediately upon appointing Solomon as his successor. They probably ruled together for a time as co-regents, a practice known from Egyptian politics of the time. But we do not know how long the co-regency lasted.

23:3 The Chronicler gave the Levites the honor of describing their administration first.

23:4 The "officers" were perhaps "record keepers."

24:10 "To Abijah." This was the priestly division to which Zechariah, the father of John the Baptist, belonged (see Lk 1:5).

25:1 The term army refers to an "army" of Levites (see Nm 4:3, where "qualified to do work" is literally "entering the [Levitical] service"). Therefore, these officers were senior Levitical leaders.

25:7 The number "288" is the product of 24 courses (divisions) times 12.

26:1 The gatekeepers primary duty was evidently the security of the temple compound.

26:4 "Obed-edom": it was at his home that the ark rested after its return from the Philistines (13:14).

26:16 "Shallecheth": this gate is not spoken of elsewhere in the OT.

27:24 "Didn't complete it": see 21:5-6, where Joab refused to count Levi or Benjamin in the census numbering.

27:25 In ancient Israel there was no formal taxation of the people at this time. Expenses of the state were paid for out of the income of the king, usually from crown lands and the agricultural activities mentioned herein vv. 26-31. Solomon also used forced labor for his building program.

27:33 Ahithophel later defected to Absalom's rebellion (2 Sm 15:12,31). Hushai, on the other hand, remained loyal to David during that same rebellion (2 Sm 15:32).

28:1 This verse reprises 23:2, picking up the thread of the narrative after concluding the record of the Levites and their organization in chapters 23–27.

28:2 "Footstool": see Ps 132:7.

28:3 See 22:8-9.

28:4 God "chose Judah." See Gn 49:8-12 and Jacob's prophecy concerning the future of Judah's descendants.

28:7 Another principle the Chronicler emphasized is that the kingdom survives and prospers, if and only if, the king and people are faithful in obedience to God's law.

28:12 The phrase "in mind" is literally "in/by the spirit." The Hebrew ruach can mean "wind, mind, (human) spirit, (Holy) Spirit." This phrase could also be interpreted as "under the inspiration of the Spirit."

28:19 This verse seems to support the interpretation of verse 12 that the source of David's building plans was the Holy Spirit. Note the parallel to Moses being shown the model of the tabernacle by the Lord (Ex 25:9).

29:6 See Ex 35:4-9, where the people also gave willingly to build the tabernacle.

29:7 "Drachmas" were the Persian coinage in use in the Chronicler's day. This was his attempt to communicate to his readers the amount of the gifts in terms his readers would understand.

29:10 "Praised" is literally "blessed." The Hebrew verb barach is normally used for when the Lord is blessing human beings, but it is also used this way in Neh 8:6 and Ps 145:21.

29:22 "A second time": the first time was in 1 Kg 1:32-40.It was a rushed affair with a small audience due to the urgency of Adonijah's self-proclamation as king. Once the immediate crisis had passed, a more formal and public anointing was possible.

29:29 This may be a reference to the canonical books of Samuel and Kings or to other sources now lost to us. The Chronicler here explicitly told us that more was written in those sources than he had chosen to narrate.

2 Chronicles Articles

Don't Christian Missionaries Impose Their Culture on Others?

by Philip J. Sampson

Many people believe Christian missionaries impose their culture on others. Missionaries allegedly soften up native peoples by weakening their cultural resistance, leaving the field open for colonists and Western capitalism. Mission has been described as enslavement or even as genocide, and the gospel has been called the "everlasting story of the West against the Indians."

Such extreme accusations signal that we are entering a world of stereotype and caricature. We first find them in the nineteenth century, but stereotypes of missionaries became widespread in the mid-twentieth century, with the recognition that some cultures can oppress others. This insight was selectively applied to "Christian" cultures of the West, especially as supposedly spread by missionaries.

Most caricatures have a basis in fact, however flimsy, and some missionaries have fit aspects of the stereotype. The early church faced similar issues (Ac 15; Gl 2) when the apostles rejected the imposition of traditions upon new converts. The fact that Scripture records such disagreements is strong witness to its historical reliability. It's also a warning to churches to be vigilant against imposing local customs on other people groups. The stereotypes assert that missionaries have consistently ignored this warning. Have they?

Missionaries cannot avoid taking their own culture with them, but they can avoid imposing it on others. As Henry Venn remarked in 1868, long before the twentieth-century secular discovery of pluralism, that the "marked national characteristics" of the church will be its "perfection and glory." Indeed, at a time when the study of native cultures was almost racist in its focus on the evolution of culture from primitive to sophisticated, some missionary scholars—such as James Legge, Robert Morrison, and John Farquhar—insisted on the value of native cultures.

Examples abound of missionaries recognizing cultural diversity and pioneering its study and preservation. This isn't surprising, as missionaries often lived alongside native people and learned their language in order to translate the Bible. From José de Acosta in Latin America to William Carey in India, from Jacob Grigg in Africa to John Smith in Jamaica, missionaries have helped preserve cultures and native languages. Linguist Mary Haas has estimated that 90 percent of the material available on Native American languages is missionary in origin. Some missionaries courageously identified with native peoples. For example, Samuel Worcester went to prison for his defense of Cherokee rights.

Stereotypes of missionaries aren't only factually inaccurate; they can also be unjust toward black and Asian peoples. The stereotype of Christianity as white and Western misrepresents the church's origin and has long been out of date. The period of Western dominance came full circle many years ago when the church's centers of gravity moved to Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

Moreover, we do no favors to native cultures in saying a few missionaries easily overpowered them. This presumes native cultures fell easily to Western influence and obscures the violent oppression of native people.

Stereotypes that treat Christianity as Western, and native cultures as weak, are culturally biased at best and unintentionally racist at worst.

All cultures, developed and developing, fall short of biblical standards and need the gospel. We shouldn't fear or ignore all criticism of missionary methods. But to be helpful, such criticism should be informed and fair. Stereotypes of missionaries are neither.

Introduction to 1 Chronicles

AUTHOR

In 538 B.C., having overthrown the Babylonian Empire the previous year, Cyrus of Persia decreed that the Jews could return to their homeland after 70 years in exile. The first 75 years were difficult. There was no temple and the land available to the returned Jews had included only about a 15-mile radius around Jerusalem. The walls of Jerusalem were in ruins. The people were vulnerable to the enemies who surrounded them—their neighbors hardly welcomed these "interlopers" who had come home to compete with them politically and economically. Harvests were poor or failed completely, and the people had to endure the subsequent famines. Morale was low and there was little to motivate the people's spiritual life.

The author of the books of Chronicles, whom we shall call the Chronicler, saw a need to remind the returnees of their national identity. This identity superseded the division of the nation into northern and southern kingdoms and found its center in the law of Moses. With the spiritual life of the nation in shambles, temple worship needed to be restored by the Levites and priests as the true mediators of God's Word and will. So the Chronicler sat down to pen a book to encourage a change in the self-image and identity of God's chosen people.

These two books were originally one. The book's Hebrew title is "the words of the days" or "the events of the times," that is, the annals of the nation of Israel. When the book was translated into Greek (the Septuagint version, or LXX), it was divided into two parts. Since the Greek language used vowels and consonants, whereas the Hebrew text at the time included only consonants, this division was possibly made because of the expanded length of the translated text. The LXX gave the book the title "the things omitted," referring to the fact that Chronicles includes material not found in the parallel material in the books of Samuel and Kings. Several hundred years later, the Christian scholar Jerome described the book as "a chronicle of all sacred history." Our modern title, Chronicles, is a shortened form of that description.

Chronicles appears as the last book of the third division of the Jewish canon, the "Writings." The LXX, Vulgate, and modern translations place it after Kings and before Ezra—Nehemiah, probably because its contents were historical and overlapped the period narrated by Samuel and Kings. In fact, the book is a history of the Hebrew people from Adam to the Persian king Cyrus, which parallels the writings of Genesis through Kings, with Ezra—Nehemiah as a continuation of what happened after Cyrus permitted the Jews to return to their land.

The earliest that Chronicles could have been written was 538 B.C. since the end of the book records Cyrus's decree of that date. The use of Chronicles in the book of Ben Sira (published in 180 B.C.), and the second-century LXX translation of Chronicles, give us the approximate latest date when it could have been written. Thus we have about a 350-year span of time when the book could have been produced.

But we can be more specific than that. First Chronicles 3:19-24 records Zerubbabel's descendants for two (not, as it might appear, four) generations. And since Zerubabbel can be dated to around 520 B.C., this means Chronicles was compiled around 400 B.C. or slightly later. There is no scholarly consensus on the exact date, but the purposes for which the book was intended suggest that a fourth century B.C. date fits best.

While the author of Chronicles is anonymous, rabbinic authorities claimed that Ezra the scribe wrote the genealogies. Did the same author write the Chronicles as well as Ezra and Nehemiah? Since the book ends with Cyrus's decree, the author could not have lived much earlier than Ezra's time. The opening verses of Ezra are also the closing verses of Chronicles, which means the author of Ezra and Nehemiah had access to Chronicles. However, these same facts are compatible with the conclusion that Chronicles is an independent work. Ezra may simply have borrowed the last verses of Chronicles to establish a context for his work.

The common linguistic features of the books are standard post-exilic Hebrew, proving they were written in the same linguistic era but not necessarily by the same person. The common theological position and viewpoint supports the notion that both authors were from the same theological community and shared the same religious values. Ultimately, whether written by one author or two, Chronicles and Ezra/Nehemiah stand on their own as separate works, with separate purposes and aims, exhibiting internally consistent unity of composition. They should be interpreted as complete, self-contained works.

Reading Chronicles carefully reveals a number of facts about the author. He was evidently a member of the post-exilic theological community, with a religious orientation to life rather than a secular one. He may have been a priest or a Levite, but he certainly believed God's will was mediated to the people though the Levitical priesthood. He reflected the values and ideals of Ezekiel and some of the post-exilic prophets about Temple worship and correct ritual observances. This theological emphasis on strict adherence to ritual and social organization was a preemptive effort to prevent a fall back into the idolatry and apostasy that had brought on God's judgment in the first place. The Chronicler, like the post-exilic prophets, did not desire a repeat of the Lord's judgment on Israel for disobedience to the First Commandment. He emphasized a strict compliance with liturgical worship and moral purity in order to realize God's blessing upon the newly restored nation.

First Chronicles starts with nine chapters of genealogies that trace Adam's line down to the sons of Jacob. The rest of 1 Chronicles (chaps. 10–29) narrate the life of David. The first nine chapters of 2 Chronicles detail the reign of David's son Solomon. The stories of David and Solomon should be treated as one unit, for the Chronicler presented both of them as models for Israel's kings. Chapters 10–36 record the history of the southern kingdom of the divided monarchy, Judah.

THE IMPORTANCE OF GENEALOGIES

Genealogies were very important to the Chronicler, and thus the modern reader cannot gloss over them and still expect to understand the message of the book. Some were used to show the kinship between Israel and neighboring tribes, while others established the legitimacy for persons of rank and authority. The genealogies reflect a teleological view of history, that is, a view in which humankind is moving toward a goal set by the Creator. More importantly, they provide a framework for the Chronicler's concept of "all Israel."

The Chronicler used this important phrase 45 times. For the Chronicler, there was no more north and south, Israel and Judah, but just "all Israel." His genealogies emphasized the unity of the sons of Jacob, whom the Chronicler always called "Israel." "All Israel" accepted David as king at Hebron (1 Ch 11:1). The lists of
1 Chronicles 11–12 are apparently motivated by the "all Israel" concept. "All Israel" was at the dedication of the temple (2 Ch 7:8). Hezekiah invited "all Israel" to come to Jerusalem for worship (2 Ch 30:1), and although most mocked the invitation, some "humbled themselves" before Yahweh and came to worship at Jerusalem
(2 Ch 30:11). Although Israel had been divided, the damage was never irreparable, and repentance was always available to the people.

In Chronicles the northern kingdom is essentially ignored except insofar as it interacted with Judah. This is an important clue to the Chronicler's purpose for writing the book. He sought to prove that the newly restored nation was the true successor to the Davidic covenant. It is no surprise, then, that most of the text of Chronicles is devoted to David and Solomon, representing the ideals of kingship laid out in Deuteronomy. The author assumed his readers knew the contents of the books of Samuel and Kings, and so he gave only enough detail to establish the historical context. Also omitted were the personal failings of David and Solomon as well as the stories of Absalom, Amnon, and Adonijah. They were not relevant to temple worship and other institutions of the theocracy (God-ruled government).

Some have suggested that the Chronicler was attempting to whitewash David and Solomon's sins and failures, but it is clear that the Chronicler expected his readers to be familiar with the books of Samuel and Kings. These negative elements in the lives of the kings were public and well known; they were simply not pertinent to the issues pressing upon the Chronicler. He focused upon the consequences of idolatry and God's desire for the sinner to repent and return to a life of obedience to the law of Moses. This obedience is the basic characteristic of anyone who had a covenant relationship with Yahweh, since God's moral character had to be reflected by the nation He had chosen.

In his grand survey of Israelite history, the Chronicler made liberal use of sources within the Scriptures: the Pentateuch (first five books of the Bible), Joshua, Samuel, and especially Kings, which he explicitly cited (2 Ch 27:7; 35:27; 36:8). For the genealogies, the Chronicler must have drawn upon other sources than just the biblical ones. The difference in arrangement and balance is great enough to suggest there were other sources that survived the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

THE RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 CHRONICLES

While it is certain that the Chronicler knew of and consulted with the book of Kings, a careful comparison of the parallel passages show Chronicles giving details not found in Kings, and, at the same time, omitting details that Kings includes. This suggests that the Chronicler used a source other than Kings, but that this source or sources was also used by the author of Kings. Second Chronicles 24:27 cites "Writing of the Book of the Kings." Other extra-canonical sources used by the Chronicler were narratives of the prophets and seers (1 Ch 29:29; 2 Ch 9:29; 12:15; 13:22; 24:30; 26:22; 32:32; 33:19) and official genealogies preserved in government archives, although these have been lost to us.

Some of the differences in text of the books of Chronicles arose from the Chronicler using a different Hebrew text tradition from that of the author of Kings. Textual criticism has traced the history of manuscripts by comparing sets of text variations among manuscripts. They conclude that during the time of the Chronicler there were two major "families" of Hebrew manuscripts of that book: the family that eventually became known as the "Masoretic Text" (MT) and a lesser known "Palestinian" family, represented by the (Lucianic) LXX and the Samaritan Pentateuch. Chronicles used a copy of Samuel—Kings that is closer to the Palestinian family than the MT used for our printed editions of the Hebrew Bible. But most of the differences can be accounted for by comparing and contrasting the literary purposes of Kings and Chronicles.

Are the books of 1 and 2 Chronicles historically trustworthy? Yes, but because of the clearly Judean and Levitical viewpoint from which the author wrote and selected material from his sources, critics have tended to hold Chronicles to be slanted and so not a valuable historical witness. But the Chronicler did not claim to be writing a modern, objective historical narrative. The selection of material was based upon different criteria. Chronicles was written in the context of a post-exilic Jewish theocracy to present a corrective understanding of Israel's history from its origins to the ending of Israel's exile by Cyrus's decree. The Chronicler synthesized a historical narrative from a specific theological stance and intended it as an antidote to contemporary spiritual apathy.

2 Chronicles Study Notes

1:1 Most of the material on Solomon is more or less related to the temple and its construction. The Chronicler saw the temple as essential for the unity of Israel as a theocracy.

1:2 Compare vv. 2-6 with 1 Kg 3:4, where the author of Kg gave only a brief mention of the worship experience at Gibeon, and then moved directly on to Solomon's dream. This shows a difference in the Chronicler's purpose in comparison to the author of Kg: Solomon's character is the point in Kg, whereas fidelity to the worship of the Lord is the focus of Ch.

1:4 This verse summarizes information already given in great detail in 1 Ch 13:15–26.

1:5 Why was Solomon great? Because he "inquired" of the Lord and he led the people to do the same. The Chronicler's implication is that Solomon began well because he sought the Lord and his readers ought to do the same.

1:7 See Mt 7:7.

1:11-12 Jesus enunciated this same principle in Mt 6:33: "But seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things will be provided for you."

1:13 The Chronicler omitted 1 Kg 3:16-28, the story of Solomon's wisdom in solving the case of the identity of a baby. While Kg used secular events to illustrate Solomon's greatness, the Chronicler's definition of greatness began and ended with the building and furnishing of the temple and its dedication. These two visions of Solomon's greatness are not incompatible or contradictory, but they emphasize different aspects of the king.

1:14 These are not unreasonable numbers (9:25 speaks of 4,000 stalls). Assuming each chariot required two horses, then 2,800 horses would be required. If we include horses for individual riders and remounts, there would be room for 1,200 additional horses.

1:15 The phrase "as common . . . as stones" is hyperbole and not to be understood literally. "Apparently limitless quantity" is what it means.

1:16 "Kue" is usually identified with Cilicia (southern Turkey) in the north. Israel sat squarely on the main north-south trade routes connecting Africa, Asia, and Europe. This was the source of much of Israel's wealth, both by participating in trade and by collecting tolls and tariffs on goods transiting through Israel on their way elsewhere.

1:17 The sale of military equipment has been lucrative throughout mankind's history.

2:6 The temple was never the "house" where God had His being, unlike the temples of the surrounding nations. Rather, Israel's temple was a place to meet the Lord in worship. See also Jesus' statement to the Samaritanwoman at the well, that true worshipers of God must do so in spirit and truth, not in a physical location (Jn 4:17-24).

2:7 The Hebrew word for "purple" is spelled in the Aramaic, the same language found in Dn 5:7,16,29. This reflectsthe impact of the exile upon the Chronicler's language.

2:10 These are probably total, not annual, numbers. In 1 Kg 5:6, Solomon asked Hiram to set the price. Here Solomon appeared to be setting the price. The treaty would certainly spell out the numbers, with Hiram having input into the amount of remuneration.

Was Hiram a vassal of Solomon's? In 1 Kg 9:13, Hiram calls Solomon "brother." Here Hiram was paid for his services, rather than providing them without charge. The treaty in 1 Kg 5:9 made no mention of any submission or subordination on Hiram's part. The evidence does not support Hiram being a legal vassal of Solomon, although Solomon does appear to be the more dominant partner.

2:17 There is some question as to whether Solomon imposed forced labor on Israelites in addition to the Canaanite "foreigners" mentioned here. In the parallel passage, 1 Kg 5:13, Solomon raised his forced labor out of "all Israel." This could mean that Solomon used Israelites as forced labor, something forbidden by the law (see Lv 25:43,46,53). Second Ch 8:9 and 1 Kg 9:22 explicitly deny that Solomon did this.

Nevertheless, there is strong evidence that Solomon, while not starting out enslaving Israelites, ended up doing so. The northern tribes begged Rehoboam, Solomon's son and successor, to lighten their heavy burdens (1 Kg 12:4). Further, why would Rehoboam send the officer in charge of forced labor to negotiate with Israelites (Canaanite forced laborers would not be in a position to negotiate)? And why would the Israelites stone Adoram to death (1 Kg 12:18), if they did not view him as the source of their suffering?

3:3 "Length" is literally "in the former measure." There were two different standards for the length of the cubit, based upon an Egyptian system of six palms per cubit and a longer one at seven palms. A short cubit was 17.4 inches and a long cubit was 20.4 inches. It's not completely clear what is meant by the "former measure," but the Jerusalem temple used the long cubit.

4:1 First Kg 7:21-24 omitted any description of the altar, although it was mentioned elsewhere in Kg (1 Kg 8:64; 9:24; 2 Kg 16:14).

4:2 "Reservoir" is literally "the Sea." It was given this name to signify its large size. This basin has the same function as the laver in the tabernacle (Ex 30:18).

4:7 See Zch 4:1-3.

4:9 The "courtyard of the priests" was the "inner court" of 1 Kg 6:36 and 7:12.

4:19 The "gold altar" was the altar of incense (Ex 30:1-10).The instructions in Exodus are that it should be made of acacia wood and overlaid with gold.

5:2 The "all Israel" theme is present here. When the ark was brought to Jerusalem, "all Israel" was present. Regardless of the competing places of worship established by the northern kingdom or those established during the exile, the proper place for the unity of Israel's worship to manifest itself was Jerusalem.

5:4 First Kg 8:3 says the "priests" moved the ark. The Chronicler's less precise term is consistent with his desire to emphasize the role of the Levites in the life of Israel. This use of "Levites" is in sharp contrast to the ones who moved the ark previously (1 Ch 13:9-10; 15:2).

5:9 "To this very day"; that is, the day of the Chronicler's source, which in this case is 1 Kg 8:8. The poles may or may not have still been there at the time the Chronicler wrote.

5:14 The "cloud" was a frequent sign of God's presence in a particular place (see Ex 13; Nm 9; Ezk 10:3-4). It also signified God's acceptance of the temple as an appropriate place to meet His people.

6:6-7 The establishment of the house of David on the throne of Israel and the building of the temple are two important themes for the Chronicler, ones which he repeatedly stressed or highlighted in various ways. Here we have both themes in close proximity to one another.

6:24 Israel's defeat by an enemy because of its sin was a recapitulation of the curses for breaking the Mosaic covenant, laid out in detail in Dt 28:15-68. Here, and in the verses that follow, Solomon was seeking forgiveness in advance of the sins that he knew Israel would commit, but only on the basis of repentance.

6:28 The geography of the Fertile Crescent placed Israel in the midst of trade and traffic from all over the known world. Along with that traffic came wealth, war, and disease.

6:30 God judges the individual and rewards or punishes on the basis of individual and personal responsibility.

6:42 This verse echoes Ps 132:10. The phrase "loyalty of Your servant David" is ambiguous. It means either:(1) the loyalty which David expressed toward God; or(2) the loyalty that David received from the Lord. In light of Is 55:3, it seems that the second explanation is to be preferred. Solomon recognized that his position comes as a result of the Lord's promise to David, and Solomon asked the Lord to remember that promise and fulfill it in his own case.

7:5 These very large numbers have caused much comment. For the 15 days of the celebration, it has been calculated that it would require 20 sacrifices per minute for 10 hours per day. Some resolve this by interpreting the numbers as hyperbole (intentional exaggeration). Others suggest "sacrifice" meant Solomon gave the animals to the priests, but that they were not all necessarily sacrificed at once during the celebration.

7:8 "The entrance to Hamath to the Brook of Egypt" marked the ideal north and south boundaries of thenation, see Gn 15:18; Nm 34:5,8.

7:9-10 What apparently happened was that the dedication of the temple occurred before the Festival of Booths, from the eighth to the fourteenth of the month. Then the Festival of Booths began on the fifteenth day of the month, lasting until the twenty-second day, see Lv 23.

7:12 The Lord's statement to Solomon (vv. 12-22) summarizes the events that occur in chapters 10–36.

7:18 See Mc 5:2. This was a reaffirmation of God's promise to David spoken by Nathan (2 Sm 7:12-16). This centered the hope of Israel on the dynasty of David for succeeding generations. In the exilic and postexilic ages, the expectation of a coming Messiah came into sharper focus, commencing with Jeremiah's and Ezekiel's vision of a Messiah who would combine the traits of a king and a priest (Jr 33:14-18; Ezk 46:1-8; Zch 4:1-14; 6:13).

7:19 The Hebrew uses the plural form of "you" throughout the verse. The Lord is not referring just to Solomon or even to his generation, but to their descendants.

8:2 First Kg 9:12 said Hiram was not pleased with the 20 Galilean cities that Solomon had given him. Apparently Hiram returned the cities to Solomon and this is what Solomon did with them.

8:3 This is the only record of a military action by Solomon. This event is omitted by 1 Kg 9:17-19, the parallel passage (see 1 Ch 22:9).

8:11 The Chronicler assumed his readers knew all about Solomon's marriage to Pharaoh's daughter as a part of his international diplomacy.

8:18 Because the round trip journeys to Ophir took three years (9:21; 1 Kg 10:22), the city (or country) has been located in India, in Somaliland (on the African coast), or in western or southern Arabia. However, in the absence of other evidence, the location remains a mystery.

9:1 "Sheba" was the kingdom of Saba in southern Arabia, modern Yemen.

9:15 These shields were taken by the Pharaoh Shishak in an attack made shortly after Solomon's death (12:9).

9:21 The phrase "kept going to Tarshish" is literally "the Tarshish goers." The Hebrew is not clear whether Tarshish (on the Iberian peninsula at the far end of the Mediterranean sea) was a literal destination or a description of a class of ships. In this case they would be the kind of ocean-going vessel that can sail to Tarshish (that is, they can go anywhere).

9:29 These sources that the Chronicler used are no longer available to us.

9:31 The Chronicler omitted Solomon's latter years where his fidelity to the Lord slipped. It is not, as some have asserted, that the Chronicler was covering up Solomon's failures. Time and time again we see that the Chronicler assumed his readers had access to and knew the books of Samuel and Kings. He omitted details that were not relevant to his purpose in order to show what kind of person should sit on the throne of David. The latter Solomon was not that kind of person, and so was left out of the narrative. This authorial decision was the same as the decision to omit the Bathsheba affair and Uriah's murder by David.

10:3 Jeroboam is presented here as a spokesman or ringleader for the rebellion. The book of Kings does not mention him in connection with the confrontation with Rehoboam.

10:16 The term "Israel" here had not yet taken the meaning of "the ten northern tribes."

10:18 "Hadoram" was known as "Adoniram" in the book of Kings. The king accompanied him, apparently in an attempt to abort the split.

11:5 Verses 5-12 do not appear in the book of Kings. The Chronicler evidently followed sources known only to himself. The military reinforcement of these cities was important because they guarded mountain passes and roads leading into the heart of Judah.

11:8 This "Gath" was not the Philistine city of Gath, which was west of Rehoboam's line of fortresses, and there is no evidence that Solomon or Rehoboam ever conquered that city. More likely, it was a shortened name of the city of Moresheth-gath, just north of Mareshah.

11:13 The Chronicler was careful to note that there were faithful Levites from "all Israel," to counteract the notion that any particular part of Israel was totally apostate.

11:14 Jeroboam had reason to fear: loyalty to the Lord required continued worship at Jerusalem. After he decided to establish his own worship center and priesthood, the question of loyalty became sharper. One could no longer support the political regime and continue to obey the Lord. For the Levites, it meant becoming refugees and migrating to Judah to start their lives over again.

11:17 Rehoboam departed from God's law after this period of "three years" (see 12:1-2). Then Shishak's attack came as a direct judgment against Rehoboam's apostasy.

11:18 "Jerimoth" is not mentioned anywhere else as David's son. It is unclear whether this was an alternate name for one of David's sons or a previously unknown son to be added to the list.

11:22 "Abijah" was known as "Abijam" in the book of Kings.

12:1 "All Israel" refers to Judah and Benjamin, the southern kingdom. The northern kingdom had already abandoned the Lord's law.

12:3 While the number of chariots is in line with documented military units of the time, the number of horsemen seems excessive. If it was a scribal error for 6,000, the number would be appropriate for the number of chariots. There is, however, no documented evidence for a scribal error, and so the question of the large number of horsemen is an open one.

12:4 From Egyptian records it appears that Shishak's primary military objective was the northern kingdom.

12:12 "Conditions were good" is literally "good [things/people] were [existed]." If we take the phrase to mean "good things" existed, then it may mean that Judah was spared looting and pillaging from enemies. If it means "good people," then it may mean there were many faithful people living there. Since the previous sentence speaks of Rehoboam's repentance as a reason for moderating God's judgment, "good people" is the preferred understanding of the phrase, and adds an additional reason for the Lord's forbearance.

12:16 "Abijah" was known as "Abijam" in the book of Kings. He reigned from 913–909 B.C.

13:3 Because archaeologists have estimated Palestine's population during this period as around 300,000, there have been various efforts to resolve this conflict of numbers. Some suggest the Hebrew word for "thousand," elef, is also the name of a military unit that had less than a literal thousand, much like the Roman centurion commanded a unit of less than one hundred soldiers. Others understand the use of numbers here as hyperbolic, not intended to be taken literally, but to show the size of the victory the Lord gave to Abijah. There is one other possible explanation that few seem to entertain: that the documentary evidence of the biblical text suggests the archaeological estimate of the population at that time is in error.

13:4 The Chronicler passed over all of Abijah's sins, described in 1 Kg 15:1-8. Instead, he narrated an event where the king placed his trust in the Lord.

13:18 The Chronicler's view of history is stated here again: success and failure are dependent upon one's faithfulness—or lack of it—to the Lord and His law.

14:1 The notation of "10 years" is probably a round number. The next recorded attack on Judah was by Zerah and the Cushites (14:9-15).

14:2 Although Kings recounts Asa's reign in 16 verses (1 Kg 15:9-24), Chronicles takes 47 verses (14:1–16:14). While 16 verses are sufficient to evaluate Asa's reign for the author of Kings, the Chronicler's purpose was to illustrate the theological principles of proper kingship. That required more detail.

14:4 The Hebrew word for "instruction" includes the definite article, hatorah, "the law," and is very possibly one of the first references to the canonical books of Moses.

14:9 "One million" is probably hyperbole for "vast, uncountable." An argument against this is the number of chariots (300) which seems small for a "vast" army. Some suggest the number 300 is somehow symbolic, but the symbolic meaning is not known. The point here is that, from a human and military standpoint, Asa and Judah were outmatched. Their subsequent victory against overwhelming odds was all the more evidence of the Lord's action.

14:15 The Cushites were nomads, not an urban civilization.

15:3 A reference to the period of the judges, between the initial conquest of Canaan by the 12 tribes and the appointment of Saul as king of Israel.

15:9 Although the tribal area of Simeon was south of Judah (1 Ch 4:23-43), evidently some had moved out of their territory to the Transjordan tribes. They may have been pressured from attacks from Edom or the Arabian desert. When they saw Asa's faith and the Lord's deliverance, they left the northern kingdom to Judah.

15:16 Removing Maacah from being "queen mother" shows that the position was not automatic and hereditary. Apparently, by removing her, Asa prevented her from leading Judah into further idolatry.

15:17 This apparently contradicts 14:2, which says Asa did remove the high places. But as the books of Kg make clear, the cult of Asherah and the country shrines built on the "high places" were popular and nearly impossible to stamp out, springing back into existence after every suppression. It also explains why the kings were reluctant to destroy them and incur the people's wrath.

16:1 By the thirty-sixth year of Asa, Omri ruled the northern kingdom of Israel, contradicting this verse. Some suggest "36" refers to the years since the division of the nation, thus putting it at the sixteenth year of Asa's reign. However, the text clearly states that it was Asa's reign, not the years since the kingdom had been divided. First Kg 15:16 says that there was war the entire time Baasha was king. So the events narrated here could have been at any point during that 24-year period. A clear solution to this chronological problem has not yet presented itself.

16:9 See Zch 4:10; Ps 33:18; 34:15; Pr 15:3; 1 Pt 3:12.

16:11 See 1 Kg 15:23, where this same source is cited.

16:14 This "great fire" was not cremation, but a ritual or memorial of honor.

17:1 Jehoshaphat reigned from 872–848 B.C. More space is given to Jehoshaphat here in Ch (17:1–21:1) than in Kg (1 Kg 22:1-38; 2 Kg 3:4-27), which is consistent with the Chronicler's habit of focusing upon the faithful kings of Judah in contrast to the tendency of the books of Kg to focus upon the kings of Israel.

17:7 "Third year," that is, the third year (870 B.C.) from the beginning of his co-regency (872 B.C.). His own reign was 869–848 B.C.

17:9 The "book of the LORD's instruction," or "book of the Torah of the LORD." Regardless of the translation, this is a clear reference to an authoritative document representing God's will. The five books of Moses were beginning to be "published" and distributed among the Levites for educational purposes. See note on 14:4.

18:2 The Chronicler made Jehoshaphat the central figure of his narrative, while in 1 Kg 22 Jehoshaphat was peripheral to Ahab. This difference is the reflection of their different purposes in writing. The books of Kg emphasize the damage caused by faithless and idolatrous kings. The Chronicler emphasized the national blessings that come from faithfulness to the Lord and His law.

18:3 Although the Chronicler followed 1 Kg 22 closely, most of 1 Kg 22:3 is omitted, where Ahab claimedRamoth-gilead to be his.

18:20 "A spirit" is literally "the spirit," using the definite article. The most natural understanding would be the Holy Spirit. However, there is a theological problem with God being a deceiver. Some try to moderate the tone by translating the verb deceive as "entice." This does not solve the problem. Both Jeremiah (Jr 20:7) and Ezekiel (Ezk 14:9) wrote of the Lord deceiving a prophet, using the exact same Hebrew word as here; see 1 Kg 22:21-28.

18:21 "Lying spirit" is a pun on the Hebrew word, which can mean "spirit, wind, or breath."

18:22 While the "lying spirit" spoke through the prophets, the Lord clearly laid out the truth and Ahab had a choice whom to believe.

18:27 Micaiah appealed to the Deuteronomic test of the true prophet: 100 percent accuracy in prediction verifies that the prophet's message is from the Lord (see Dt 18:21-22).

18:33 "Without taking special aim" is literally "guilelessly, in his integrity." The man drawing the bow did not do so with the intent of killing the king, but was simply doing his job in good faith.

19:8 The "Israelite families" must refer to the southern kingdom and would not include the ten northern tribes.

20:1 This invasion is not recorded in the books of Kg. It was included here to show the king's repentance and trust in the Lord, along with the positive results of that act of faith.

20:31 "Reigned 25 years": in 2 Kg 3:1 and 8:16 his reign is recorded to be 22 years. The difference is because of the three year co-regency with his father Asa.

20:34 "Israel's Kings": Judah was, as far as the Chronicler was concerned, the only part of the nation that remained loyal to Israel's legitimate king.

21:2 "King of Judah" is literally "king of Israel." This was not the only time where the Chronicler used the term "Israel" to refer to Judah. As far as he was concerned, the divided kingdom was an aberration. All the kings of Judah were the legitimate kings of all Israel. (See note on 20:34.)

21:5 Jehoram became co-regent with his father Jehoshaphat in 853 B.C., and his official reign was 848–841 B.C.

21:6 "Ahab's daughter" was Athaliah, also the granddaughter of Omri (22:2).

21:7 In contrast to the "house of David" here, 2 Kg 8:19 uses "Judah." It also says "because of His servant David." The Chronicler emphasizes the covenant that promises a dynasty to David. "A lamp" indicates a house is occupied; so the house of David would survive.

21:10 "Today," that is, at the time the Chronicler wrote.

21:19 "Two full years" is literally "two days." Most modern translations understand the Hebrew word for "days" in the plural to mean a year. Otherwise, it seems to contradict the longer period of illness implied in v. 15 above. Some interpret the expression to mean his intestines came out two days before he died. The "fire" was not a cremation, but a ritual of honor (see note on 16:14).

22:2 "22 years old": the Hebrew text says "forty-two," in contradiction to 2 Kg 8:26, the Septuagint, and the Syriac version. It is best to understand a textual error here and follow the majority opinion of 22 years. The term "granddaughter" is literally "daughter." Hebrew idiom often uses the terms "son" and "daughter" for "descendant."

22:10 Athaliah ruled 841–835 B.C. Given only three verses to describe her reign, the Chronicler clearly did not view Athaliah's rule as legitimate. The Chronicler did not include the usual formulas about her reign that he used with the other rulers of Judah.

23:1 The narrative here emphasizes the role of the priests and Levites in the palace coup, whereas the parallel passage in 2 Kg 11 highlights the role of the military.

23:17 Athaliah was the granddaughter of the Phoenician king of Tyre, and the daughter of Ahab. It is no wonder that she had permitted the worship of Baal in the Jerusalem temple, perhaps hoping that it would replace the worship of the Lord.

24:1 Joash reigned from 835–796 B.C.

24:7 Who are the "sons of Athaliah" mentioned here? Since all the brothers of Ahaziah had been murdered, are these natural sons of her body? More likely, the word "son" is used in the sense of "supporter," a gang of thugs used by Athaliah to bully others, as in this case.

24:9 See Ex 30:11-16 for details about the half-shekel tax. It was a one-time fund-raising tax then. It was not commanded to be collected regularly. The tax was taken as a precedent in this situation to raise funds for the restoration of the temple.

24:14 The parallel passage in 2 Kg 12:13-16 says that the temple utensils were not made from the gold andsilver given for the temple restoration. The articles were made out of the surplus funds after the restoration was completed.

24:15 Long life is a sign of God's blessing, and so many understand the number "130" to be symbolic of that blessing rather than Jehoiada's actual age at death. It is unusual enough that the Chronicler recorded his age at death. There seems to be no reason not to understand his age literally, except that it was much longer than a normal lifespan.

24:21 Jesus may have referred to this incident (Mt 23:35; Lk 11:51).

25:1 Amaziah ruled from 796–782 B.C.

25:4 See Dt 24:16.

25:24 E. R. Thiele suggests that it was likely during Amaziah's captivity that Uzziah his son became co-regent.

26:3 Uzziah became co-regent in 792 B.C. Beginning in 767 B.C. he ruled in his own right until 740 B.C.

26:10 "Fertile lands" is from the Hebrew word, karmel, "orchard, tree farm." It is not a reference to the Carmel mountain range in the north, but to a place south of Hebron.

26:14 Unlike earlier times when the militias provided their own weapons, the king provided the material means for war.

26:15 Some have interpreted these "devices" to be catapults used to throw arrows and stones. However, such weapons were not otherwise known until 400 B.C. Ancient murals of the siege of Lachish (shortly after Uzziah's time) show defensive constructs on the walls, wooden frameworks holding shields in place, protecting archers and other defenders (Yigdal Yadin, The Art of Warfare in Biblical Lands). This appears to be the best explanation for this verse.

26:19 Only priests were to offer incense, according to the law (Nm 16:40). This was the sin of Aaron's sons (Lv 10:1). "Skin disease" is traditionally, "leprosy." (This was not necessarily Hansen's disease, what modern doctors call leprosy.)

26:21 Uzziah's quarantine was required by Mosaic law (Lv 13:46; Nm 5:1-14; 12:15). His disease required his son to be appointed as co-regent.

26:22 The Chronicler's source is not the canonical book of Isaiah, but some other record. We know that Isaiah had a government position and had access to government records, as well as being an eyewitness to Uzziah's reign. It was in the year that Uzziah died that Isaiah was called by the Lord to become His prophet (Is 6:1).

27:1 Jotham's co-regency was 750–740 B.C. His official reign lasted until 735 B.C.

27:6 The principle declared here is one of the main themes of the Chronicler: When one obeys the Lord, success follows. Disaster comes when one forgets what one's success is based upon (as happened in the case of Jotham's father, Uzziah).

28:1 Ahaz reigned from 735–715 B.C.

28:15 This event reminds us of Jesus' parable of the Good Samaritan, where a Samaritan helped a Judean in need (Lk 10:30-37).

29:1 Hezekiah ruled from 715–686 B.C. Although the material in 2 Kg 18-20 was substantially the same size as that given to Hezekiah here, the two accounts overlap one another very little.

29:2 The Chronicler wrote more about Hezekiah than any other king except David or Solomon. But unlike the books of Kg, in which Hezekiah's religious reforms are handled in one verse, the Chronicler devoted three chapters (chaps. 29–31) to them.

29:16 The "Kidron Valley" was a burial place, and so the proper place for the "detestable things." According to Mosaic law, corpses were unclean (Lv 22:4; Nm 19:13).

29:20 The events of vv. 20-24 and vv. 25-30 probably occurred at the same time.

29:21 "For the kingdom" probably referred to the royal dynasty.

30:2-3 Passover was normally held on the first month of the year (Ex 12:2; Lv 23:5; Nm 9:5). But exceptions were not unknown for those who had been unclean because of contact with a corpse or who had been traveling (Nm 9:10-11). Both of these exceptions were applied here. The temple and the nation were unclean due to contact with Ahaz's idols. The burial of the idols in the Kidron Valley was an important symbol in this respect (29:16). In addition, because the northern kingdom was invited to the feast, time was needed for the journey. Also, Jeroboam had changed the religious calendar by one month (1 Kg 12:32-33).

30:5 "From Beer-sheba to Dan" was the theoretical extent of the nation's territory (see 1 Ch 21:2).

30:7 See Zch 1:2-6 for a very similar exhortation. Repentance is always available.

30:25 One purpose of the nation of Israel was to declare the glory of the Lord to the nations (see Ex 6:1-6). Non-Israelites, "foreigners," had always been welcome at Passover (see Ex 12:48-49).

31:2 "Camp of the Lord": the Chronicler used the image of the tabernacle in the wilderness, another time of spiritual renewal for the nation, to refer to the temple.

31:3 Evidently Ahaz had discontinued the morning and evening offerings.

31:10 "Azariah" named here is not the same Azariah named in 26:17, nor is this one mentioned in the list of high priests in 1 Ch 6:3-15.

32:1 According to Sennacherib's own records of this campaign, he claimed to have conquered 46 Judean cities.

32:18 "They": 2 Kg 18:28 says more specifically that it was Rabshakeh who was the Assyrian spokesman before the walls of Jerusalem.

32:24 "In those days"; that is, the days following the confrontation with the Assyrians.

32:30 This is the famous "Hezekiah's tunnel" where the Siloam inscription was cut into the wall of the tunnel as work was still going on. (See 2 Kg 20:20.)

32:33 Other possible meanings of the Hebrew word for "ascent" are "upper storey, platform." The actual architectural reference is unclear. It could have been the upper level of a multilayered tomb, or even an expression of a finer quality of tomb.

33:1 Manasseh's reign began with a co-regency with Hezekiah from 697–686 B.C. He continued to reign after Hezekiah's death until 642 B.C.

33:3 The use of the plural for "Baals" indicates that many competing deities were being worshiped.

33:6 See Dt 18:9-13 for similar language. Manasseh was the personification of doing "everything wrong."

33:12 The parallel account in 2 Kg 21:1-18 does not mention this repentance, but is completely negative in its evaluation of Manasseh. The Chronicler was always ready to point out the constant availability of repentance to the believer.

33:17 The people clearly did not understand the law, where sacrifices were only to be done at the temple. The language suggests Levites were not present, but that the people themselves were conducting the sacrifices. At best, the place and context of this "worship" were inappropriate and ignorant of the law; at worst, it was deliberate syncretism.

33:21 Amon reigned from 642–640 B.C.

33:24 Since Amon was a vassal of Assyria at a time when Assyria was appearing weaker on the international scene, perhaps the conspirators were pro-Egyptian.

33:25 This execution was probably made to avoid retaliation by Assyria.

34:1 Josiah reigned from 640–609 B.C. Assyria's power declined during this period, allowing Josiah greater independence and freedom of action.

34:2 Along with Josiah, Hezekiah is the only other king who is compared to David in a positive manner (29:2).

34:3 In the "eighth year" Josiah would have been 16 years old, and 20 years old in his twelfth year (the year of his majority) when he began his cleansing of Judah.

34:6 After the fall of Samaria in 722 B.C. Josiah would have had more influence on the former northern kingdom. Although still officially an Assyrian province, that empire was pre-occupied with power struggles in Mesopotamia.

34:8 Josiah was now 26 years old and exerting his full authority as king.

34:14 Many if not most scholars believe this "book of the law" was the book of Dt. Because it is referred to as the "book of the covenant" (34:30; see Ex 24:7; 2 Kg 23:2, 21), it is also possible that the entire five books of Moses were present together.

34:30 "Book of the covenant": see note on 34:14.

35:3 There is no record of the ark having been removed from the temple. It could have happened during Ahaz's reign with the introduction of idols into the temple area (2 Kg 16:10-16), or it might have occurred during Manasseh's reign (33:7).

35:21 Neco was moving north to support Assyria against Babylonia, who was successfully pushing against Assyria's southern flanks. Josiah's motivation must have been that anything bad for Assyria was good for Israel. There is no evidence that Josiah was in any way formally allied with Babylonia.

35:25 This book of "the Dirges" (laments) for Josiah is not to be confused with the canonical book of Lamentations, which includes laments over Jerusalem's fate. The Dirges work is lost to us.

36:2 Jehoahaz's "three months" occurred in 609 B.C.

36:5 Jehoiakim reigned from 609–598 B.C. See also the prophecy of Jeremiah for additional information about his reign (Jr 26).

36:6 Jehoiakim was an Egyptian vassal, but Egypt could not protect him.

36:9 Jehoiachin's reign was in 598–597 B.C. "18 years old": the Masoretic Text reads "eight years old," but the Septuagint and 2 Kg 24:8 agree he was 18 years of age. In addition to this, Babylonian records show that Jehoiachin had five sons in 592 B.C., five years after his exile. All of this leads to the conclusion that a scribe made an error here in the Masoretic Text.

36:11 Zedekiah's reign was from 597 B.C. until the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. More information about Zedekiah may be found in 2 Kg 24:18–25:7; Jr 27:1–28:17; 34:1-22; 37:1–38:28; 39:1-7; 52:1-11.

36:21 See Lv 26:34-35,43; Jr 25:11-12; 29:10. The Babylonian exile extended from the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. to the dedication of the rebuilt temple in 516 B.C.

36:22 Verses 22-23 are verbatim with Ez 1:1-3; many believe a later editor copied these from the book of Ezr to show the historical connection and continuity of these books. The "first year" of Cyrus was 539 B.C.

36:23 Thus the Chronicler brought his story up to his own time, leaving his readers with the possibility of hope through repentance and the freedom to return and rebuild the temple in Jerusalem. See Jr 25:11-14; 28:10; Ezk 1:2-4; 6:2-5.

Introduction to Ezra

AUTHOR

The book of Ezra is a history of the early days of the return of the Jewish people from their 70 years of captivity in Babylon. The book covers the period from 538 B.C. to around 456 B.C. Two principal units make up the book. The first is Ezra 1–6, which describes the return under the leadership of Sheshbazzar and Zerubbabel and the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple. The second is Ezra 7–10, referred to as the Ezra Memoir since it is Ezra's own account of his activities as priest and scribe to order the life of the returned Jewish community according to biblical standards.

Two features of the Ezra Memoir cause concern for some people. The first is the fact that Ezra 10 changes from first to third person reporting. The second is the realization that another part of this memoir is probably in the book of Nehemiah (Neh 8–10).

However, while it seems unusual to the modern reader for a person to speak of his own actions in the third person, this was not a problem in the ancient Near East. A perfect example of this is the fact that the Cyrus Cylinder (an archaeological artifact recording statements from King Cyrus) uses both first and third person reporting, though all of it is considered to be the statement of Cyrus.

Also, the location of part of the Ezra Memoir in the book of Nehemiah helps to tie the two books together and serves as an indicator of the unity of the two works. Another indicator of this unity is found in Nehemiah 12, where Ezra is present at the dedication of the wall.

The unity of the books of Ezra and Nehemiah is so evident that it is common to hear them referred to as a single work: Ezra/Nehemiah. This is the work of a single individual who, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, recognized the hand of God at work in this community's restoration and wrote a history of its emergence, using primary source materials to accentuate the credibility of his work.

The books of Ezra and Nehemiah share a literary bond with the books of Chronicles.
The last verses of 2 Chronicles and the first verses of Ezra are nearly identical (cp. 2 Ch 36:22-23 with Ezr 1:1-3). The verses preserve Cyrus's decree authorizing the return that coincided with the end of the 70 years of captivity as prophesied by Jeremiah (Jr 25:11). This literary bond casts the books of Ezra and Nehemiah as sequels to the events described in Chronicles. Together the three works form a history of Israel, from its beginnings to its return from exile.

The literary bond established by the repetition of Cyrus's decree in 2 Chronicles and Ezra has created considerable speculation about the authorship of the two works. Until recently, the view commonly held was that Chronicles and the two-part Ezra/Nehemiah were written by the same person. Jewish tradition credits Ezra the scribe. Subsequent detailed analysis, however, has revealed a number of significant ideological differences between Chronicles and Ezra/Nehemiah. These differences have led to the prevailing (and probably correct) view of the majority of scholars that Chronicles and Ezra/Nehemiah were written by different people.

Given the significant prominence Jewish tradition places on the importance of Ezra to the emergence of Judaism, and its attribution of authorship of Ezra and Nehemiah to him, it is possible that Ezra was responsible for the final text. However, since it appears certain that the same person did not write both Chronicles and Ezra/Nehemiah, and since there is considerable speculation that Ezra authored the Chronicles, a definitive answer to the question of the authorship of Ezra and Nehemiah cannot be given.

DATING THE TEXT

A number of suggestions have been offered for the date of the composition of Ezra and Nehemiah, from 400 B.C. to 100 B.C. Much of this speculation rests on conjectures about the reason for the composition and the number of revisions the text went through. Certainly much of the material found in the books (e.g., the Ezra Memoir, the Nehemiah Memoir, the decree of Cyrus, and the letters to and from the Persian royal court in Ezra) predates the composition of the books.

In the absence of any definitive statements resolving the question, it becomes necessary to rely on clues from the text itself. Nehemiah was still active in 433 B.C., so he must have written his own memoir sometime after that. This gives an approximate date of 400 B.C. as a likely early date for the final composition. If the Jaddua mentioned in Nehemiah 12:22 was the same person whom the first-century A.D. Jewish historian Josephus says was high priest when Alexander the Great invaded Persia, then it would make him the last mentioned high priest in Nehemiah's list of priests, and it would mean that the final composition of Ezra/Nehemiah would have to have been after 333 B.C. This identification is not certain; it serves merely to provide the latest possible date for the final composition.

THE RELIABILITY OF EZRA

Prominent in Ezra are texts of official proclamations of the Persian government (e.g., Ezr 1:1-5; 4:8-10,11-16,17-22; 5:6-17; 6:6-12; 7:11-26). Until recently many scholars doubted the authenticity of these texts. They claimed that the language sounded too theological or that they didn't follow standard Persian form. However, recent studies have silenced these criticisms. Study of the letters from the Jewish community at Elephantine, Egypt, reveals that the theological sound of the royal edicts is probably the result of the interaction of the Jewish people with the king prior to the issue of his edicts. In other words, the king (or his scribe) used language that would be familiar to the recipients. The official letters in the book are now known to be comparable in style to typical letters of the day, varying partly in whether they were written from inferiors to superiors or vice versa.

Another question that has occupied scholars is the chronological order of Ezra and Nehemiah. Some scholars have concluded that Nehemiah arrived in Jerusalem before Ezra. This has significant bearing on the historical reliability of the works since they clearly contend that Ezra preceded Nehemiah. Those who make this claim use two principal arguments.

First, there is the supposed evidence from archaeology. Some scholars argue that the archaeological data suggest that the geopolitical climate during the reign of Artaxerxes II (404–359 B.C.) was more suited to the kinds of activity in which Ezra engaged. It is certainly true that the situation with Egypt had declined considerably by the time of Artaxerxes II and that it would have been in Persia's best interest to strengthen its relationship with this buffer region as a result. But Egypt had also revolted around 459 B.C., and that rebellion was not put down until 454 B.C. So it is equally plausible that Persia could have seen the value in a stronger relationship with this outlying region at an earlier time.

Furthermore, the adherents to a late date for Ezra must remove from the biblical text the two instances in which Ezra appeared in Jerusalem with Nehemiah (Neh 8:1–10:39; 12:27-47) since Nehemiah was governor from 445–433 B.C. While some scholars differ about the date of Nehemiah's mission, most agree that he arrived in Jerusalem in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes I (445 B.C.; Neh 1:1; 2:1). The first time Ezra and Nehemiah appeared together occurred less than two months after Nehemiah arrived in Jerusalem. Nehemiah recorded that he was in Jerusalem three days before he challenged the people to rebuild the wall (Neh 2:11). It took 52 days to complete the wall (Neh 6:15). The dedication, at which Ezra was present, would most likely have occurred shortly afterward (Neh 12:27-36). In any event, Nehemiah recorded that he returned to Babylon in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes's reign (433 B.C.), and the dedication most certainly would have been conducted before he left. Ezra's significance in these events is totally unexplained if he had not already been active in Jerusalem.

The second line of argument is based on supposed discrepancies in the two texts. Critics argue the following points: (1) Jerusalem was better populated during Ezra's time than during Nehemiah's time (cp. Ezr 10:1; Neh 11:1). (2) The high priest during Ezra's activity was Jehohanan, who appears to have been the grandson of Eliashib, who was high priest during Nehemiah's activity (Neh 3:1,20). (3) Nehemiah had to appoint temple treasurers (Neh 13:13), whereas they were already present in Ezra's time (Ezr 8:33). (4) Ezra thanked God for giving them a wall in Judah and Jerusalem, whereas Nehemiah is credited with building Jerusalem's wall (Neh 6:15).

For many reasons, these arguments do not hold up. For example, Ezra 10:1 refers to a large gathering of Israelite men. It does not say they all were inhabitants of Jerusalem. It is probable that the Eliashib mentioned in Nehemiah 3:1 and 20 was Eliashib II, a later priest. Nehemiah 13:13 does not say there were no treasurers. Verse 10 says only that the Levites and singers had not received their allocation from the temple storehouse. Nehemiah said that he appointed trustworthy men to assure this didn't happen again. It is possible that the previous treasurers were simply not trustworthy and had to be replaced. The wall Ezra referred to was probably a figurative wall, that is, God's hedge of protection, since it refers to Judah as well as Jerusalem. Obviously, Nehemiah's wall pertained only to Jerusalem. The arguments for reversing the missions of Ezra and Nehemiah are not adequate to overrule the biblical chronology.

Ezra Study Notes

1:1 Shortly after Cyrus the Great assumed rule over the former Babylonian Empire in 539 B.C., Cyrus gave an account of his conquest of Babylon on a clay cylinder. The Cyrus Cylinder, inscribed in 538 B.C. in Babylonian cuneiform, claims that he began a campaign of restoration. This included allowing displaced people to return to their homelands and returning statues of deities taken from their homelands in Babylonian victories. Skeptics note that the magnanimity shown by Cyrus toward the Jewish exiles was not due to divine intervention. It was a typical policy toward displaced people under his rule. This is undeniable, but this fact of history does not diminish the significance of the return of the Jews from exile. After all, the return was a fulfillment of prophecy. Isaiah prophesied the rise of Cyrus and his benevolence toward Israel 150 years earlier (see Is 44:28–45:7). Furthermore, the timing was impeccable. Cyrus's decree coincided with Jeremiah's prophecy that the captivity in Babylon would last 70 years (see Jr 25:11).

1:2-4 Some scholars claim that Cyrus's edict is not genuine. They believe that Cyrus would never have spoken in these terms. However, the Cyrus Cylinder (see note on v. 1), as well as inscriptions from the cities of Uruk and Ur contain language by Cyrus that reads very much like parts of this edict. Furthermore, the biblical character of the language is very likely the result of Cyrus's interaction with Jews with whom he conversed as he prepared to authorize the return of the Jews and the rebuilding of the temple. This kind of interaction may have been fairly common. For example, a papyrus from the Jewish community in Elephantine, Egypt, dated around 407 B.C., asks Bagoas, governor of Judah, to authorize the rebuilding of their temple in Elephantine.

2:1 As some people debate the appropriateness of the Jewish presence in Israel, it is important to remember that God promised this land to Abraham and his descendants (Gn 17:1-8). This passage is used by some to lend support to the Jewish claim to the land of Israel. The returnees traced their ancestry to this land. No other identifiable group can claim a more ancient relationship to the Holy Land.

2:2 There is no reason to doubt the accuracy of the list's head count. It is probable that it represents a series of returns, so that all these people did not return as one group. The scope of the captivity was extensive (see2 Kg 24:14-16). After 70 years, this exiled community would have grown even more numerous. The total number that returned would be much higher if women and children had been counted. Recent demographic analyses of the archaeological data have led some to propose that the province of Judah never had this many people within its borders in the fifth century B.C., even if one assumes this list records successive returns covering over a century. However, these studies are based on incomplete data and a number of suppositions about population density. In addition, no consideration has been given to the possible depleting effects of disease, conflict, and discouragement that may have caused many people to move on to more favorable locations, like Elephantine, for example. This list also occurs at Neh 7:4-73. For an explanation of its reoccurrence, see note on Neh 7:4-69.

2:3 This group is not to be confused with the community of faith. While it is likely that many of those listed had a saving faith in God, faith was not the principal criteria for this list. Ancestry was the determining factor. In all times, saving faith is the sole determining factor for salvation (Rm 2:28-29).

2:62 To qualify for service in the priesthood, certain standards had to be met. The ancestry standards established here reveal that ability or desire were not the only criteria for some areas of spiritual service.
2:63 God had specified the use of Urim and Thummim for discerning His will (see Ex 28:30). This practice does not persist in the church since all believers now have the Holy Spirit indwelling them and also have the complete written revelation ofGod's will in the Bible to help them discern God's will.

2:68 Some believers today discourage the use of money for buildings and other expenses that they consider to be unnecessary for the church's mission, claiming that all money should go toward reaching and helping people. The freewill gifts contributed for the rebuilding of the temple, however, are regarded positively (cp.1 Ch 29:1-9).

3:2 Some scholars claim that the Pentateuch came into existence through a gradual process of additions and edits, which started some time around 950 B.C. However, this community attributed its origin to Moses.

3:3 God's people are a "set-apart" people. This distinction between believers and non-believers has led some out of fear or resentment to persecute Christians. Just because believers have deeply held beliefs and practices that are contrary to popular culture is no justification to persecute them.

3:4 The returnees knew that there was a proper way to worship God and that any form of religious expression was not necessarily pleasing to God. This is an important principle for today when so many people advocate that there is more than one way to God. Jesus said that He is the only way to God (Jn 14:6).

3:6 The people began to offer sacrifices to God before they built the temple. Relationship with God does not depend on a building or any other religious structure. The institutions of worship may facilitate worship but they can never substitute for it.

3:10 The descendants of Asaph (see 1 Ch 15:16-17) used a musical instrument in this worship event. The use of musical instruments in worship is not uncommon or unbiblical. They are often called for in the psalms. See the heading for Ps 67 and the calls for musical accompaniment in Ps 98:4-6 and 150:3-5.

3:11 "All the people gave a great shout of praise." Worship is not reserved for the professional clergy. All believers may, and are expected to, engage in worship. Worship comes in many styles, from subdued to exuberant, and when done in the right spirit according to biblical standards, they are all pleasing to God.

4:3 Some people see an arrogant attitude at work in this rejection of help. However, the Jews were applying an important spiritual principle—service to God should be conducted by God's people. They should be very wary of partnerships that involve unbelievers in fulfilling their service to God.

4:9 Some scholars have questioned the authenticity of the letters reproduced in the book of Ezra. Recent scholarship has reversed this negative assessment. See the Introduction for a discussion of the authenticity of the official documents in the book of Ezra.

4:20 Some scholars doubt the Bible's depiction of a once-powerful kingdom of Israel. However, the enemies used Israel's glorious past as a principal argument to convince Artaxerxes to stop the rebuilding project. Artaxerxes's principal motivation for complying with their request was his discovery in Persia's historical archives that this was indeed part of Israel's past.

5:1 The government had the power to prevent continued work on the temple, but this constituted an improper intrusion of government in religion. The prophets Haggai and Zechariah opposed this intrusion and called the people back to the work. This episode provides a good example of the need for a sound policy of separation of church and state. The state should not have the power to dictate to the church. God created both institutions, but He gave them separate responsibilities (cp. Rm 13:1-7).

5:5 Contrary to the opinions of some, God is activelyengaged in helping His people with their work. He is not unknowing or uncaring. He can intervene in whatever way He chooses (Is 59:1).

5:12 People cannot live any way they choose without consequences. The judgment of God is a reality. His judgment may come immediately, or He may choose to delay His judgment, but no one should think that God is indifferent to sin. God's people are held to this standard as well. In fact, it is likely that God expects more from His people who have been given the truth of His will (see Heb 6:4-8; 10:31; 1 Pt 4:17-18).

6:8 While it is preferable not to take government money for ministry activities, this passage reveals that the Bible does not condemn such assistance. However, a ministry must be very careful if it chooses to take government funding to assist its work, for it is always possible that government intrusion will follow government investment.

6:18 Here is another example of this community's belief that Moses wrote the Pentateuch. See note on 3:2 for an explanation.

6:21 Spiritual holiness was expected of those who worshiped God. Today's church could learn from this early community. Church discipline has fallen by the wayside as contemporary congregations attempt to shed their image of exclusivity. However, God expects to be served by a holy people. The church today must demand that church members conduct themselves according to certain spiritual standards that honor the faith community and God (see Rm 12:1-2; 1 Pt 1:13-16).

7:6 The people of Israel had a high view of their Scriptures. While they credited Moses with authorship of the Pentateuch, they credited God as the source of Moses' text. Unfortunately this belief is not common among many scholars today, who consider the Bible to be merely a human text.

7:24 The exemption of religious workers from state taxation is not a new practice. Artaxerxes instructed the government not to impose any monetary demands on those engaged in religious service. The church should be free to engage in its work without government interference or hindrance, except when the church's practices break civil laws.

7:25 Ezra was a religious as well as a civil leader. His service in both of these spheres provides important guidance on the appropriate role of believers in public life. It is completely acceptable for people of faith to serve in government positions. Membership in the spiritual household does not disqualify someone from service in the public sector. Other biblical examples of believers who served in public positions are Joseph, Daniel, and Esther.

7:26 Artaxerxes allowed the requirements of religious law to become state law in Israel. This was appropriate since Israel was both a religious and a political entity. It would be inappropriate to apply the religious laws of the church to the state in the same way today since the church is not a political entity.

9:3 Ezra's reaction to the intermarriages was not driven by racism. His concern was a spiritual one. These "surrounding peoples" (v. 2) adhered to other faiths. Ezra was deeply saddened that the people, especially the leaders, had jeopardized the spiritual purity of the community by allying themselves with people of other faiths. God had instructed His people not to adopt other beliefs (see Dt 11:13-32).

9:11-12 Ezra's recitation of scriptural injunctions is not a verbatim quote of a specific passage. But this should not be construed to mean that he didn't know the precise language of the passages to which he referred. Nor should his loose wording be construed to mean that he didn't believe in the verbal inspiration of Scripture. The text gives no indication that Ezra thought he was quoting a specific passage or that he was trying to. Ezra was expressing what he understood to be the meaning of God's instructions regarding intermarriage. At times, he quoted God's instructions verbatim. At other times he paraphrased them.

10:3 Though some consider this solution to be too harsh, it is important to understand it in light of the situation. Israel was a political entity as well as a spiritual entity. The intermarriages should be understood from a nationalistic perspective. These intermarriages jeopardized all of Israel. If they resulted in a failure of the people to comply with God's standards, the entire nation was at risk of suffering God's judgment once again (9:10-15). Ezra's solution is unacceptable for the church today. Since the church is not a political entity, it is not threatened in the same way if some members intermarry and go astray. While God's judgment may very well fall on some congregations that allow non-Christian influences to lead them astray, this judgment would not affect all other Christians since the church is decentralized. Furthermore, the contemporary church benefits from additional guidance on the issue of divorce. Jesus reiterated God's abhorrence of divorce (Mt 19:4-9), and Paul instructed believers not to divorce unbelieving spouses (1 Co 7:10-17).

Introduction to Nehemiah

AUTHOR

The book of Nehemiah is the second part of the two-part sequel to the books of Chronicles (the other part being the book of Ezra). The book of Nehemiah, which covers the period from 445 B.C. to sometime after 433 B.C., relates the continuing efforts of the Jewish people who returned from 70 years of captivity in the Babylonian Empire to reestablish themselves in their homeland. The principal person in this part of the history is Nehemiah, a Jew who had attained the influential position of cupbearer in the court of the Persian King Artaxerxes.

Nehemiah was the last in a succession of Jewish leaders in the biblical record to help the people achieve a stable and vibrant life in the Persian province known as Yehud, or Judah. Nehemiah followed Sheshbazzar (who led the first return), Zerubbabel (who led the temple rebuilding project), and Ezra the priest and scribe (who led the spiritual renewal of the people). Nehemiah's principal contribution to the emerging community was the rebuilding of Jerusalem's wall, which had been destroyed in 586 B.C. by the Babylonians. The apocryphal text Sirach praises Nehemiah's successful completion of this task (Sir 49:13).

Scholars are not in agreement about the dates for Nehemiah's activity. Some suggest that the growing problem of unrest in Egypt in the late fifth century B.C. prompted the Persians to strengthen the buffer province of Judah for security purposes. The matter is complicated by the fact that Nehemiah credited a Persian king by the name of Artaxerxes for his permission to return to Judah. Two Persian kings from this period were named Artaxerxes: Artaxerxes I (464–424 B.C.) and Artaxerxes II (404–359 B.C.). Relating Nehemiah's mission to these two kings results in very different dates, beginning in either 445 B.C. or 385 B.C.

While credible arguments can be made for either date, the earlier date is preferred by most scholars. There are a couple of key reasons for that preference. First, a letter from the Jewish colony in Elephantine, Egypt, written around 407 B.C., indicates that Judah had a different governor (a man named Bagoas) at the end of the fifth century B.C. This fact favors the earlier date for Nehemiah's governorship. Second, the biblical text of Nehemiah places Nehemiah and Ezra together on a couple of occasions, at the covenant renewal (8:9) and at the dedication of the wall (12:36). Consequently, if one accepts the late date for Nehemiah's mission, then one must also accept a late date for Ezra's mission—or else reject the reliability of these passages.

THE RELIABILITY OF NEHEMIAH

As with the book of Ezra, the book of Nehemiah consists of a number of source documents. Its principal source is known as the Nehemiah Memoir, attributed to Nehemiah. The full extent of the Nehemiah Memoir is uncertain, but it definitely includes the autobiographical sections (1:1–7:73; 12:27-43; 13:4-31). The other major section is attributed to the Ezra Memoir (chap. 8 and probably chaps. 9–10). This unit is written in the third person and mentions Ezra numerous times (8:1-2,4-6,9,13). One also finds a number of lists, including these: (1) a list of the residents of Jerusalem (11:3-24); (2) a list of the farming settlements occupied by members of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin (11:25-36); and (3) a list of priests and Levites (12:1-26).

While the book of Nehemiah can be read independently of the book of Ezra, it probably was not intended to be read in isolation, for it comprises a crucial part of the message begun in the book of Ezra. For a description of the function of this book in the work Ezra/Nehemiah, refer to the introduction to the book of Ezra.

Many people treat the OT historical texts as works of fiction that attempt to communicate certain values or lessons. They must overlook many evidences of history telling in order to do this. In Nehemiah these evidences include such history telling devices as (1) the dating of events (e.g., "the month of Chislev in the twentieth year," which was November–December 445 B.C.; 1:1); (2) references to historical settings confirmed by the archaeological record (e.g., Susa is known to have been one of the three capitals of the Persian Empire as well as the spring residence of the Persian kings; 1:1); and (3) the naming of historical personages (e.g., King Artaxerxes; Sanballat, who is known from the Elephantine Papyri to have been governor of Samaria; 2:1,10).

Nehemiah Study Notes

1:1 Some scholars discredit the historical reliability of the Neh text by pointing to alleged dating inaccuracies as evidence that the writer was not an eyewitness of the events described or that he was ignorant of key historical details. However, the author was most certainly a careful historian.

1:7 Some scholars believe that the Pentateuch (Gn–Dt) was not written until the post-exilic period. The numerous references in the book of Nehemiah to Mosaic authorship of authoritative passages found in the Pentateuch and the intense reverence the people felt toward many of these passages argue for Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. Some of the Pentateuchal passages attributed to Moses in the book of Nehemiah include Dt 4:25-27; 28:64, cp. Neh 1:8; Lv 26:33; Dt 4:27; 26:12, cp. Neh 8:10; Lev 23:34-43, cp. Neh 8:14-15; Ex 16:23, cp. Neh 9:14; Dt 7:3, cp. Neh 10:29-30; Dt 23:3-6, cp. Neh 13:1.

1:11 Some have misunderstood the importance of what Nehemiah divulged at the end of this verse, thinking that the cupbearer was a lowly position. To the contrary, the cupbearer in the Persian court served in a position of honor and influence, second only to the crown prince in relation to the king. Nehemiah's relationship to the king actually explains why he received such a positive response to his request and the subsequent authority he exercised in the province of Judah.

2:3 Rightful claim to Jerusalem is hotly debated today. This is nothing new. Nehemiah's later response to Sanballat and his associates suggests that even in his day rightful claim to Jerusalem was contested (see v. 20). Nehemiah's ancestral relationship to Jerusalem helps support the priority of the Jewish claim to this ancient city.

2:8 Some people doubt God's active involvement in the affairs of people. Nehemiah acknowledged just the opposite. He knew that God was responsible for his success (see also v. 18; 4:15,20; 6:16). God's direct involvement in Nehemiah's success also serves as a reminder that He had not abandoned His people. His covenant with the nation of Israel is an everlasting covenant (see Gn 17:1-9).

2:10 The animosity that Israel's neighbors felt toward the nation should not be thought of as a recent development brought on by the restoration of the nation of Israel in 1948. Hostilities were the same in Nehemiah's day.

2:16 A significant population was already established in Jerusalem when Nehemiah arrived. This fact helps to support the biblical order of the return, in contrast to the contention of some that Nehemiah's return preceded Ezra.

4:15 Some have suggested that God is a helpless spectator, unable to prevent misfortune. Nehemiah's experience reveals a much different God. He reveals that God is a sovereign ruler. People can only do so much. When their plans conflict with God's plans, He is able and willing to step in to thwart them (see Gn 50:20; Pr 21:1).

5:15 There is no consensus on the political status of Judah prior to Nehemiah's appointment as governor of the region. Some argue that Judah was under the administration of governors based in Samaria prior to Nehemiah's appointment. However, both Sheshbazzar (Ezr 5:14) and Zerubbabel (Hg 1:1,14) are referred to as governors of this region. Additionally, N. Avigad, Bullae and Seals from a Post-Exilic Judean Archive, has identified inscriptions excavated in the region that point strongly to the likelihood that there were governors over the region known as "Yehud" (Judah) prior to Nehemiah's governorship. The archaeological support for the existence of other governors of Judah also helps to offset the possibility that Nehemiah was criticizing Sheshbazzar and Zerubbabel in this passage. He could easily be referring to other governors of Judah.

6:10 The existence of the temple prior to the completion of the walls provides additional support for the biblical order of the return to Jerusalem as Zerubbabel–Ezra–Nehemiah, rather than Zerubbabel–Nehemiah–Ezra as some have suggested. Zerubbabel led the people to build the temple; Nehemiah led them to build the wall.

7:4-69 This list also occurs at Ezr 2:1-70, but this should not be a cause for doubting the reliability of either book. Most scholars agree that this list existed separately and was incorporated into both books. In most cases differences in names and numbers between the two lists can be attributed to scribal errors that occurred in the copying process over the centuries. In other cases, material may have been added or deleted to provide the kind of information that the authors wanted the reader to know. For example, Neh 7:70 records the contribution made by a governor, whereas this is not mentioned in the list in Ezr. It must be remembered that the doctrine of inspiration applies to the original text as the author intended it, not to the text as it may have existed before it was incorporated or after it was affected by various problems during its transmission from one generation to the next. Consequently, both lists are equally inspired, and they fulfill the purpose for which they were each intended. It is, in fact, the authorial changes made to previously existing material that can often give clues to aspects the author wanted to stress. In this case, for example, it is significant that the list in Nehemiah includes this note about the contributions made by a governor, since this memoir was written by Governor Nehemiah, who was concerned that God would look favorably on his contributions to this community, evidenced by his numerous "Remember me" statements (e.g., 5:19; 13:14). For additional discussion of this list, see note on Ezr 2:2.

7:65 See the note on Ezr 2:63 for an explanation of the significance of the mention of the Urim andThummim.

7:73 The Jewish people can trace their ancestors to the land surrounding Jerusalem as well as to the city itself. This ancient connection to the land supports the Jewish claim to their current residency there. See 11:20 for further support.

8:1 Ezra's abrupt appearance at this point and the shift to third person reporting has led some scholars to contend that some portion of this material (8:1–10:39) was added to Nehemiah's memoir by a later editor and that these events actually preceded Nehemiah's presence in Judah. This is probably partially correct. Most likely this material was placed here by the author of Ezra/Nehemiah. However, Neh 8:9 includes Nehemiah in this event. It seems preferable to conclude that Ezra was active during Nehemiah's governorship, and that this material was inserted at this point because it fit in the actual chronology of the events of the return. Nehemiah's memoir notes that the wall was completed on the "twenty-fifth day of Elul," which was the sixth month in the Jewish calendar (6:15). The covenant renewal ceremony began on the first day of the seventh month (8:2).

8:3 Some scholars argue that much of the OT Scriptures were written or obtained their current form during the post-exilic period. The reverence that the people show for the Scriptures in this public reading dictates against this argument. Their response suggests that the people had a long-standing knowledge of and love for their sacred writings.

8:14 Instructions for observance of the Festival of Booths are found in Lv 23:34-42. This passage in Neh attributes these instructions to Moses, providing further support for an early date for the Pentateuch and its Mosaic authorship.

9:6 The Bible does not support naturalistic explanations for the existence of life (see Gn 1:1-31). Here the Levites confess their belief that God gave life to all things. The entire community accepted this confession (cp. 10:28-29).

9:7 The following confession provides a fairly comprehensive summary of Israel's past. It is evident that their history was well known, which suggests that much of it was already written and in circulation prior to the post-exilic period.

9:8 The Levites noted that God had given the land of Israel to Abraham by a covenant commitment (see Gn 17:1-9). They believed this covenant was still valid. In fact, they considered their restoration to the land as an indication that God is righteous. His failure to keep His covenant commitment would have been an unrighteous act. God would be unrighteous today if He were to renege on His covenant commitment to Abraham.

9:10-11 Many people today question whether or not the miracles recorded in the Bible actually occurred. These Jews, who had suffered so long in captivity and were now restored to their homeland, did not question them. They believed their God had performed these miracles in their distant past.

9:30 Recently scholars have attempted to equate Israel's prophets with similar figures in contemporary near eastern cultures. They believe prophets constituted a unique social institution of ancient near eastern cultures, speaking to their communities about their social and religious responsibilities. While it is evident that these other cultures had their own so-called prophets, they were not speaking on behalf of the Lord, but rather on behalf of their own gods. God warned the people not to listen to these other prophets (see Dt 18:9-22). Even some of Israel's own prophets were false (Dt 13:1-5; Jr 23:9-40).

10:30-39 What follows is a commitment to a wide range of responsibilities, which the people ascribe to the "law of God given through God's servant Moses" (v. 29). The breadth of the responsibilities provides further evidence that a large body of legislation was already in existence and considered authoritative. What we now call the Pentateuch must have been in existence prior to this commitment service.

13:3 Racists cite this act as support for their bigotry. They are mistaken when they do so, however. God'sexclusion of Ammonites and Moabites from the assembly was in response to their refusal to assist the Israelites during the wilderness journey (Nm 21:21-24; 22:1–24:25; Dt 23:3-6). Their race was not the issue; their refusal to assist God's people was the issue. These people experienced God's vow to bless those who bless Abraham and to curse those who curse Him (Gn 12:3; 27:29; Nm 24:9). This vow is still in force today.

13:23-28 Nehemiah's action does not reveal a racist attitude, nor can it be used today as support for discrimination against others on the basis of race or ethnicity. His concern about these foreign women was spiritual in nature. These other peoples were not true believers. Consequently, they represented a threat to the spiritual integrity of the community. Nehemiah's reference to Solomon makes clear that he was concerned about the negative spiritual ramifications of these marriages. Solomon's marriages to foreign women resulted in his own worship of false gods and the introduction of the worship of false gods in Israel (see 1 Kg 11:1-13). Nehemiah's concern is echoed in the Apostle Paul's exhortation not to be "mismatched with unbelievers" (2 Co 6:14). See note on Ezr 10:3 for more discussion.

Esther Articles

How Can We Know the Bible Includes the Correct Books?

Norman L. Geisler

Why are there only these 66 books in the Bible? Because God is the ultimate author of the Bible, and He inspired only these 66. All Scripture is breathed out of the mouth of God (Mt 4:4; 2 Tm 3:16). What the human authors wrote did not originate with them but with God, who moved upon them (2 Sm 23:2; 1 Pt 1:20-21). So God determined which books would be in the Bible, and the people of God merely discovered which books these were. Believers did not bestow authority on them; God did.

How did the people of God discover that only these 66 books were inspired of God? Because only these had the "fingerprints" of God on them. These "fingerprints" of God include characteristics reflected in the answers to these questions: (1) Was it written by a prophet of God, such as Moses (Ex 4:1-9) or Paul (1 Co 9:1)? (2) Was it confirmed by acts of God (Heb 1:1; 2:3-4)? Did the human author tell the truth of God known from other revelations and facts (Dt 18:20-22)? (3) Did it have the power of God to edify (2 Tm 3:16-17; Heb 4:12)? (4) Was it accepted and collected by the people of God?

The collection of books known as the canon of Scripture was made gradually as the books were written. When Moses wrote the first five books of the Bible, they were taken immediately and put in the most holy place (Dt 31:24-26). The book of Joshua, his successor, was added to the collection upon his death (Jos 24:26). Likewise the books of Samuel (1 Sm 10:25) and the prophets were added after they wrote them (Zch 7:12). Daniel had a collection of Moses' books and the prophetic writings up to Daniel's time, including the book of his contemporary, Jeremiah (Dn 9:2).

The so-called missing books of the OT, known as the Apocrypha (meaning "hidden" or "doubtful"), are not missing and do not belong in the OT for many reasons. (1) Unlike the canonical books, the apocryphal books do not have either an explicit or implicit claim to be inspired by God. In fact, some even disclaim being prophetic (cp. 1 Mac 9:27; 14:41). (2) They were written between 250 B.C. and the first century A.D., but according to Judaism, the Spirit of prophecy had departed from Israel before that time, by about 400 B.C. (3) The Jewish historian Josephus gave the names and numbers of the authentic Jewish OT, which correspond exactly with the 39 books of our OT (Against Apion 1.8). Judaism, which produced these books, has never accepted them into its Bible (the Hebrew Scriptures, corresponding to our OT).

(5) Neither Jesus nor the apostles ever cited any of the Apocrypha in the NT as inspired. (6) Most of the church fathers of the first four centuries of the Christian church did not accept these books as inspired. (7) Jerome, the great Roman Catholic scholar (c. A.D. 420) who translated the Latin Vulgate Bible, emphatically rejected the apocryphal books. (8) The acceptance of these books in A.D. 1546 by the Roman Catholic Church is unjustified since: (a) they were the wrong group to make this decision (Christians, not Jews); (b) it took place at the wrong time (sixteenth century A.D.); and (c) it was done for the wrong reasons (for example, to support the doctrine of prayers for the dead [see 2 Mac 12:45] in response to the Reformation and biblical teaching to the contrary [Heb 9:27]).

The NT books were also written by apostles and prophets of God (Eph 2:20), who were confirmed by acts of God (2 Co 12:12; Heb 1:1; 2:3-4), and their books were immediately accepted into the growing canon of Scripture. Luke acknowledged that other narratives were written (Lk 1:1) in his time (possibly Matthew and Mark). In 1 Timothy 5:18, Paul cited the Gospel of Luke (10:7) as "Scripture" alongside the OT. The Apostle Peter referred to Paul's epistles as "Scripture," just like the OT (2 Pt 3:16). The first-century church publicly read and circulated the books written by apostles and prophets (Col 4:16; 1 Th 5:27). What is more, the early Christian fathers, beginning in the first century, collected every one of the 27 books of the NT and cited almost every verse and over 36,000 quotations! From the second century A.D. on, there were collections of these books and translation in other languages, such as Syriac and Old Latin. All groups of Christendom, including Roman Catholics, Eastern Orthodox, and Protestants, accept all and only the 27 books of the NT as the inspired Word of God, right alongside the 39 books of the OT.

The apocryphal books of the second and third centuries A.D. are universally rejected by the Christian church. There are many good reasons for this. (1) They were not written by the apostles whose names they bear, since the apostles died in the first century. (2) They contain many heresies and doctrinal errors. (3) They claim to contain childhood miracles of Jesus, but John said Jesus did not perform any miracles until He was an adult (Jn 2:11). (3) They contain highly embellished accounts of Gospel stories, indicating they were later fabrications. (4) They are rejected by every section of official Christendom.

In brief, only the 66 books of the common canon claim to be and prove to be the divinely inspired, infallible, and inerrant Word of God. That is, only these books were inspired of God, written by prophets of God, collected by the people of God, and preserved by the providence of God for the spiritual edification of the people of God (2 Tm 3:16-17).

Does the Bible Demean Women?

by Sharon James

If there is an unforgivable sin today, it is that of sexism. We are conditioned by modern presuppositions about equality to react against any role distinctions for men and women. When we read that God created woman as the "helper" (Gn 2:18), that "the man is the head of the woman" (1 Co 11:3), that wives should submit (Eph 5:22), or that only men are to lead the church (1 Tm 2:12), we instinctively think, How unfair! The issue is even more serious because throughout history men have used their superior physical strength to exploit women, and sometimes the Bible has been misquoted to justify abuse of women.

It is sadly true that, since the fall of humanity into sin, male leadership has often been expressed in sinful oppression (Gn 3:16). It is also sadly true that, often in church history, the gifts of women have not been properly affirmed. Yet historically, wherever Christianity has spread, the status of women has improved. Those countries where women are most exploited today are those with least exposure to the gospel. The Bible teaches that men and women were made equally in God's image (Gn 1:27-28) and that all human life is sacred. Christians have been among the first to provide education and other rights for women.

What about the intrinsic patriarchy of Scripture? Evangelical feminists (egalitarians) reject role distinctions. They argue that the Bible was written in a patriarchal context but that we have moved beyond that today. So marriage is an equal partnership with mutual submission (see Gn 2:24; Mt 19:4-5; Eph 5:31), and women should engage in every ministry in the church. But their efforts to explain away the "difficult texts" (for instance, 1 Tm 2:8-15) are unconvincing. Feminist scholars who reject the authority of Scripture simply say that the Bible is wrong on this issue.

We should be willing to challenge contemporary presuppositions in the light of Scripture.

Presupposition 1: Equality means sameness. Talk of different roles is discriminatory.

Response: Equality does not mean sameness. The three persons of the Trinity are equal in deity but different in role.

Presupposition 2: Difference in role relates directly to personal worth. Submission equals relegation.

Response: Submission does not mean being of lesser worth. The Son submits to the Father, while being equal in deity, and His submission is His glory.

Presupposition 3: Women will be empowered only when they have become the same as men (filling the same jobs and reaching the same status).

Response: Women do not have to fill the same jobs as men in order to be empowered. This idea insults the large number of women who regard relational success as of greater importance than career success. The Bible honors those women who were wives, mothers, and homemakers (Pr 31; 1 Tm 5:9-10,14) as well as women who ministered and worked in other ways.

If we abandon false presuppositions, we can see that the Bible affirms women. God wonderfully designed them to bear and nurture new life, equipping them in a multitude of ways (physical, emotional, psychological) for that task. The calling of wife and mother is an exalted one. The Bible also affirms the calling of single women (1 Co 7:34), those who are unable to have biological children: they can be "spiritual mothers" to many. God equips women with distinctive strengths that can be used not only in the family but also in many areas of ministry as well as in the workplace.

Those men who lead the church are responsible for equipping other members, including women, for ministry (Eph 4:12). The NT mentions many women who were involved in important ministries. Mary Magdalene, Joanna, and Susanna traveled with Jesus and the Twelve and supported His ministry financially (Lk 8:1-3). While all but one of the disciples was in hiding following Jesus' arrest, several women witnessed Jesus' death and prepared His body for burial (Mt 27:55). Jesus first appeared to women following His resurrection (Mt 28:1-7). The church at Jerusalem met at the home of Mary, mother of John Mark, apparently a woman of means (Ac 12:12). Paul commended Phoebe and other female co-workers (Rm 16); Euodia and Syntyche contended with him in the cause of the gospel (Php 4:3); Priscilla and her husband taught Apollos (Ac 18:26); women prayed and prophesied in the meetings of the Corinthian church (1 Co 11:5); godly widows were placed on an official list—probably to receive aid and for a ministry of prayer and practical service (1 Tm 5:3-10). Many believe that female deacons were involved with mercy ministries (1 Tm 3:11). Elders were to equip mature women to teach younger women (Ti 2:3-5).

Those who see defined gender roles in Scripture maintain that the Bible explains the meaning behind gender distinctions. Masculine strength can be for protection and provision. Many women are gifted with a "helper design"—relational capacities to nurture and care. These distinctive qualities, and the way we relate to each other, reflect something deep within God Himself. In short, a closer look at Scripture shows that women are honored and affirmed in the Bible. They are not second class in His eyes.

Introduction to Esther

AUTHOR

The book of Esther is anonymous but Jewish tradition maintains that Mordecai wrote it. This tradition is plausible in the fact that Mordecai was an eyewitness or had access to all of the eyewitnesses to the events narrated in the book. As Ahasuerus's prime minister, he may well have placed his account in the official Persian archives (9:32; 10:2). The Hebrew of Esther is highly polished. The writer was skilled in character and plot development and in creating narrative tension.

DATE

The book of Esther is an account of the Jewish people living in exile in Persia. It recounts how the hatred of one man for the Jews nearly resulted in the eradication of the Jewish people in the entire Persian Empire. Events in the book of Esther took place during the reign of Ahasuerus I (486–465 B.C.). Ahasuerus is the Hebrew form of his name; Xerxes is the Greek form; Khshayarsha is the Persian form. The events described in the book occurred between 483–473 B.C.

GOD IN ESTHER

Some question the appropriateness of the book's presence in the Bible because of the lack of any direct mention of God. Those who translated Esther from Hebrew into Greek (second century B.C.) were apparently so concerned by the lack of reference to God, they inserted more than 100 verses with numerous mentions of God. Protestants have accepted as Hebrew Scripture only what was in Hebrew manuscripts.

While the omission of God is unusual, the book shows considerable evidence of belief in the active involvement of God in the events described. In fact, direct mention of God is hardly required. The outcome of the book is so unexpected that it cannot be explained without acknowledging the work of God behind the scenes. This would certainly be an appropriate way for a people who may feel forgotten by God to see afresh that, while God may be hidden from their sight, He certainly hasn't abandoned them. The narrative reflects the way the exiles feel and causes them to see God working in their own circumstances in the same way they see Him working on behalf of these fellow exiles.

In addition there are several clear evidences that characters in the story believed in God. For example, Mordecai and Esther are called Jews, which at the very least identifies them as among God's covenant people (2:5-7). Mordecai refused to bow to Haman, indicating that his faith would not allow him to bow to anyone except his God (3:2). The Jewish people's allegiance to another law suggests their commitment to the law of Moses (3:8). The people fasted—a typical practice in urgent prayer (4:3,16). Mordecai spoke with certainty that the Jewish people would not be annihilated, revealing a strong faith in God's care for the Jewish people (4:14). Zeresh informed Haman that if Mordecai was Jewish, his "downfall [was] certain," reflecting a clear understanding that a powerful hand protected the Jewish people (6:13).

Finally, the book is filled with instances of incredible reversals of fortune that can only be ascribed to the presence of a powerful guiding hand. Vashti was removed and Esther took her place. Haman was hanged on the gallows he had built for Mordecai's death. Zeresh counseled Haman to have Mordecai hanged and then informed him that he would be the one destroyed instead. The Jewish people defeated the enemies who were intending their defeat.

THE RELIABILITY OF ESTHER

Many scholars doubt the historicity of the events described in the book because there is no evidence outside the Bible for some of the characters, events, and customs described in the book. Consequently these scholars prefer to designate the book as something other than history. Some have suggested that the book of Esther is a wisdom tale, a historical romance, a festival tale, a novel whose central characters are Jews living outside their homeland , a sermon with a moral, a Persian court chronicle, and even a comedy along the lines of Greek comedy.

Many other scholars are not nearly so skeptical about the book's relationship to history. They note that Vashti may well be the Hebrew name for the cruel and self-willed queen Amestris, Ahasuerus' wife during this time. The difference in spelling has been attributed to the lack of certain vocalizations in Hebrew, making it difficult to pronounce the Greek name. Certainly Vashti's character appears similar to the character of the historical Amestris.

In addition, the historical situation in Persia during this time tracks closely with the events described in Esther. With the help of such important Greek historians as Herodotus and Ctesias, and Persian records discovered during archaeological digs, it is possible to reconstruct a history of this period without reference to the biblical record. These records enable scholars to piece together the following order of events.

Revolts in the empire toward the end of Darius's life (Egypt in 486–484 B.C. and Babylon in 484 B.C.) required a crushing response from his son Ahasuerus in 484. Following these victories, Ahasuerus held a banquet in Susa for the leading people in his kingdom as preparation for his planned invasion of Greece. This may coincide with the banquet mentioned in 1:5. Ahasuerus failed in his attempt to defeat Greece, assured by his naval defeat at Salamis in 480 B.C. He returned home in defeat and engaged in a series of harem intrigues. The search for a new queen described in chapter 2 fits well within this time period. (Many other supposed historical inaccuracies are refuted in the study notes.)

There is no doubt that the book of Esther intends the reader to believe the events actually happened as they are described. The author located them within the reign of a specific king, Ahasuerus/Xerxes (1:1). He associated events with specific dates (e.g., the "third year" of Ahasuerus' reign, 1:3; "the tenth month, the month Tebeth, in the seventh year" of Ahasuerus' reign, 2:16; "the first month, the month of Nisan, in King Ahasuerus' twelfth year," 3:7). And he tied the establishment of the Festival of Purim to the events in the book (9:26). It is difficult to imagine that the author would fabricate a story to explain the origin of Purim.

D. Clines has noted that many details of Persian life recorded in Esther are confirmed by sources beyond the Bible. These confirmed details include the extent of the empire under Ahasuerus from India to Ethiopia (1:1), the council of seven nobles (1:14), the efficient postal system (3:13; 8:10), the keeping of official diaries including records of the king's benefactors (2:23), the use of gallows as a form of capital punishment (2:23; 5:14; 7:10), the practice of obeisance to kings and nobles (3:2), belief in lucky days (3:7), setting crowns on the heads of royal horses (6:8), and reclining on couches at meals (7:8).

Dating the composition of Esther is made more difficult by the existence of several versions of the story. Three principal Esther texts exist. These are the Hebrew Masoretic Text (MT) and two Greek texts: the LXX and another Greek text referred to as the "alternative Alpha Text" (AT). The AT is a Greek translation of an earlier Hebrew text. It is shorter than the MT, omitting a number of episodes and the concluding legislation regarding Purim. The LXX text is a translation of the MT, with some additions. It is likely that the AT represents an early account of the events described in Esther, before Purim was well established. Once Purim became a prominent festival in the life of the Jewish people, the relationship between its observance and the events that led to it was explained, resulting in the MT.

There is some textual evidence for this conjecture. Esther 9:20 states that Mordecai recorded what had transpired and sent letters to the Jewish people instructing them to observe the Festival of Purim. This might be the AT. What follows after 9:20 is an accounting of how things developed after this, which is the MT. It is likely that Mordecai first recorded the events shortly after the first celebration (9:17; c. 473 B.C.). If we allow at least a generation to pass for the festival to become an integral part of life in the Jewish communities, we should expect the text preserved in the MT to have been written some time after 433 B.C.

Esther Study Notes

1:1 The 127 provinces mentioned here should not be confused with the mention of 120 satraps in Dn 6:1. This difference does not reveal an error. First, the texts come from two different periods during Persian rule. The Dn text relates an incident that occurred in the early years of the Persian Empire, during the reign of a ruler identified as Darius, whereas this passage refers to a later time in the Persian period, during the reign of Ahasuerus/Xerxes. It is certainly possible that different administrations subdivided the empire differently. Second, the Est passage refers to administrative districts, whereas the Dn passage refers to administrators. It is also possible that some administrators had more than one province assigned to them. Also, this passage should not be compared to the mention by Herodotus that Darius had divided the Persian Empire into 20 satrapies (Her 3:89). Verse 1 refers to "provinces" (Hb medinoth), which are smaller regions than "satrapies" (Hb satrapeiai).

1:3-4 Critics question the likelihood that the king would have held a feast that lasted 180 days. They contend that this is an exaggeration that reveals the fictional nature of the story. It is of interest that the non-canonical book of Judith mentions a victory celebration by Nebuchadnezzar that lasted 120 days (Jdt 1:16). However, it is likely that two different activities are described here. The king held a feast for all these people and he also displayed the wealth of his kingdom for 180 days. There is no reason to think that the people feasted for 180 days, and then immediately followed that with a weeklong banquet (Est 1:5). When examined in the light of the historical record, the events gain more clarity. Ahasuerus became king in 486 B.C. In 484 B.C. he successfully put down two revolts. It is easy to imagine that the king would celebrate these victories with a feast. Furthermore, it was around this time that he began to prepare for his campaign against Greece, which began in 480 B.C. Many scholars believe that Ahasuerus used the six-month period described here to convince his leadership that he had the wealth that would be required to field an army large enough to defeat Greece.

1:10-12 The king commanded his wife to display herself in an inappropriate manner. We are not given the details of why Vashti felt her appearance at the banquet would be inappropriate. The writer's primary focus in the narrative is to explain Esther's rise to the throne. In the course of doing so, he shows Ahasuerus to be a pompous and selfish man, driven by his own lusts, and ruling by whim. In contrast, Vashti, brief though her appearance is, conveys strength. While the king condemned Vashti's refusal to put herself on display, the Bible does not.

1:19 Skeptics note that there is no extra-biblical evidence for this policy. They claim that such a policy would make it very difficult to administer a kingdom. Granted such a policy could make things difficult at times, but it does not make them impossible. In Est, the king overcame a later problem with this policy by permitting Esther and Mordecai to issue another command that in essence allowed the Jews to counter the effects of an irrevocable law (cp. 3:10-12; 8:8-10). Herodotus provides an example of a similar type of policy. He notes that at the Royal Supper, the annual celebration of the king's birthday, no one who made a request of the king could be denied the request. It was called "the law of the Supper" (Her 9:109). In this case as well, Herodotus relates that the king attempted to prevent the fulfillment of the request by circumventing it rather than canceling it.

1:22 The king and his advisers were worried that Vashti's disobedience would encourage other wives to disobey their husbands, so the king issued a command that husbands were to be the masters in their homes. The Hebrew word for "masters" (sarar) refers to a lord/subject relationship. This is not what the Bible teaches about headship. The biblical model of headship is to be exercised in the home in a spirit of servant-leadership, not a spirit of domination. This passage should not be used to teach the principle of headship, nor should it be used to discredit that model. What the king had in mind here is unbiblical (see Eph 5:22-33).

2:1-2 The king acted very rashly. His behavior is not condoned by the Bible. The Bible instructs a husband to "take pleasure in the wife of your youth" (Pr 5:18). The king felt that he had been dishonored, and chose to rid himself of his wife rather than reconcile with her. His pride and misunderstanding about the proper relationship between a husband and wife prevented him from doing the right thing (see Mt 19:1-12).

2:5-6 Critics looking for evidence of historical inaccuracies often cite this passage as evidence. They contend that the text says Mordecai is the one who had been carried into exile with Jeconiah. If this were so, then Mordecai would have been about 119 years old when Esther became queen. While this cannot be ruled completely out of the realm of possibility, there is another possible explanation. The Hebrew text of v. 6 actually begins with a relative pronoun, asher. The immediate antecedent is "Kish," not "Mordecai." So the pronoun may be referring to Kish, Mordecai's great-grandfather, as the person who had been taken into exile.

2:6 This mention supports the Bible's account of the exile and captivity of the people of Judah (see 2 Kg 24:10-16).It even corroborates the role of Nebuchadnezzar and Jehoiachin in the captivity. "Jeconiah" was another name for the Judean King Jehoiachin.

2:7 The reference to Esther's beautiful figure should not be construed as an indication of sexist attitudes by the biblical writers. The statement helps the reader understand one reason Esther came to the king's attention.

2:7 Mordecai's kindness to Esther reveals an important pro-life principle. He was willing to care for Esther when she was essentially destitute. His act provides an important example for believers today as they consider what can be done for the millions of unwanted babies and orphans throughout the world. Adoption is a biblical principle.

2:9 The king had numerous wives, which was customary for rulers of his day. The fact that the Bible acknowledges this does not mean that it condones it. To the contrary, the Bible makes it clear that God's ideal is the union of one man and one woman for life (Gn 2:18-25).

2:17 Some critics contend that this marriage could not have occurred. They note that according to Herodotus the Persian kings agreed to restrict themselves to marrying only within a circle of seven noble families (Her 3:84). However, Herodotus also records that Darius, who was a party to the agreement, married three women, none of whom were related to any of those seven noble families (Her 3:88).

2:21-22 Mordecai persisted in his obedience despite the fact that Esther had been taken from him by that same government (v. 8). Mordecai's behavior exemplified the biblical command to obey the ruling authorities (1 Pt 2:13-17).

3:2 Mordecai's obedience to the civil authorities had a limit. It stopped at the point where his loyalty to the civil authorities violated the biblical mandate. As a Jewish man, if Mordecai bowed down to Haman, he would have violated the covenant obligation of obedience to God above all other allegiances (Ex 20:3).

3:6 Haman's intention to eradicate all the Jews in Ahasuerus' kingdom revealed a horrible prejudice that is inexcusable. It is never permissible to persecute a person because of religion, race, or ethnicity. Every person is created in the image of God, regardless of these differences (Gn 1:26-27). All deserve equal treatment and respect.

3:11 Some critics doubt that the king would approve the eradication of an entire race of people within his kingdom. However, there is historical evidence from this period of just such acts. Herodotus records an event some time before Darius became king, in which a group known as magi became so reviled by Persians that the Persians killed all of them they could find. Then the Persians instituted an annual festival known as Magophonia or "Killing of the Magi," during which no Magus was to show himself in public for the entire day (Her 3:79).

3:13 Critics doubt that the king would have issued an order of this magnitude that wouldn't be carried out for eleven months. However, in 193 B.C. Antiochus IIIissued a decree for a similar action that had a four-month delay.

4:11 Skeptics often attack the credibility of the book of Esther by claiming that the law Esther quoted was ludicrous. They assert that if such a law existed, no one could ever be in the king's presence. However, these objections result from a failure to read the text carefully. Esther did not say that no one could see the king without being summoned, but that anyone who approached the king without being summoned could forfeit his or her life. Josephus supports this fact (Antiquities, XI 205), also noting that the king surrounded himself with men bearing axes who would punish anyone who approached the throne without being summoned. Herodotus describes a similar, but not exact, policy (Her 3:85, 118, 140).

4:14 Mordecai acknowledged the sovereignty of God. He knew that Haman could not ultimately succeed in his campaign because God's design cannot be thwarted. God is the one in control and He was committed to the preservation of the Jews, who are beneficiaries of God's covenant with Abraham (Gn 17:1-9).

4:17 Some feminists claim that the Bible devalues women. Mordecai's response to Esther reveals the opposite. Obviously, he held women in high esteem. Mordecai was perfectly willing to follow the leadership of a woman, an example found in other places in the Bible, for example, Deborah (Jdg 4). (See also the article, "Does the Bible Demean Women?" page 730.)

5:5 Esther was not seeking revenge; she was seeking a way to protect her people from the coming attacks organized by Haman. Chapter 9 reveals the way in which the Jews defended themselves. The text purposely states that the Jews did not enrich themselves at the expense of those against whom they defended themselves, even though the king's edict permitted it.

9:14 Esther's request to have the bodies of Haman's 10 sons hung from the gallows is understandable in light of similar practices of her contemporaries. It was common in her day for a ruler to put on public display the bodies of those executed for certain crimes. The display served as a warning to others. Similarly, Esther's request would serve as a warning to those who would seek to destroy the Jews. Today such a display of the dead is no longer considered appropriate for any reason.

10:3 The fact that the historical record has not corroborated the biblical claim of Mordecai's power and fame is insufficient reason to doubt its truthfulness. Undoubtedly, the names of numerous powerful and influential people in ancient societies have been lost. It is fortunate that the biblical record has preserved the memory of this great man.

Job Articles

How Can God Have All Power and Be Loving and Yet There Be Evil?

by Gregory E. Ganssle

What philosophers call "the problem of evil" is a family of arguments from the existence or nature of evil to the conclusion that God does not or probably does not exist. The oldest form of the argument is that the mere existence of evil is logically incompatible with God's existence. If God exists, evil could not, and if evil exists, God could not. I call this argument the "charge of contradiction." The claim is that there is a logical contradiction in asserting that God is all-powerful, God is all-loving, and that evil exists. Wouldn't this kind of God eliminate all evil? The existence of God, in this view, is on a par with a square circle. Given the existence of evil, it is impossible for God to exist. The challenge is to show that theism is logically consistent.

Few today, including atheists, think this argument succeeds. If God might have a good reason to allow evil, then it is possible that both God and evil exist. We need not know what God's actual reasons are, but if it is possible He has one, then the argument is defeated. Most think it is possible that God has good reasons to allow evil and that, therefore, there is no contradiction between God's existence and the existence of evil.

Today, the most important form of the argument against the existence of God from evil is called the "evidential argument from evil." The one who presses this argument admits that the existence of God and the reality of evil are not logically incompatible. The argument is that the amount and the kinds of evil we find in the world is strong evidence against the existence of God.

Even though it is possible that God has a reason to allow the evils we find in the world, it does not seem likely that there are good reasons for some of the evils we see. We cannot prove that there is no good reason, but if we have lots of cases in which it seems as though there is none, we will conclude that there probably is no good reason to allow these evils. If it is true that probably there is no good reason to allow these cases of evil, then it is probable that God does not exist. This argument is called the "evidential argument" because we cannot prove that there is no good reason to allow the particular evils we are thinking about. These evils do, then, look like good evidence that God does not exist.

In order to begin to answer this argument, we must think about the claim that it is probable that no good reason exists to allow the evil in question. Why should we believe this is true? The one who puts this argument forward will appeal to cases of evil in which it is difficult to find a reason that might fit. Does this mean we ought to conclude that it is probable that there is no reason? No.

The reasoning here goes as follows: It seems like there is no reason to allow this evil therefore, probably there is no reason to allow it. Sometimes this kind of reasoning is strong and other times it is weak. Let me illustrate. The argument is of the form: It seems like there is no x, therefore, probably there is no x. The Bible has numerous cases where one could mount this argument. Let's take the case of Lazarus's death in John 11. Lazarus was likely in the prime of his life. He's a good man and a close friend of Jesus. Lazarus becomes ill and dies. The citizens of his village, Bethany, could see such an evil and after three days of mourning come to the conclusion that there is no reason for this. Therefore, God doesn't exist. Then Jesus comes to Bethany. Lazarus's sisters, Mary and Martha, chastise Jesus for not getting there sooner. As we read John's account, we see that unbeknownst to Mary and Martha, Jesus had reasons for delaying. Moreover, there were reasons Lazarus was permitted to die in the prime of his life. When Jesus arrived at Lazarus's tomb, He prayed and then called Lazarus to come out of the tomb four days after his death. The reason for Lazarus's sickness, death, Jesus' delay, and Lazarus's resuscitation was that God's glory might be seen.

Some of the citizens might have thought they had a strong case against the existence of God the three days after Lazarus died. But subsequent events place the evil of Lazarus's death in a much different context. In light of this context, Lazarus's death is seen to be part of a much greater good than anyone in Bethany could imagine.

The pattern that we see in this and numerous other biblical cases shows that there are times when we can't say, "If God had a reason to allow this particular case of evil, we would probably know what it is."

There are two reasons we can't always make this claim. First, we can figure out reasons that God might have for many (perhaps most) of the evils in the world. For example, both human freedom and a stable, cause-effect universe are necessary for any meaningful action. Meaningful action, then, may be a reason that God allows various kinds of evil. Second, it is reasonable to think that God will have reasons that we cannot grasp for allowing evils in our lives. In fact, to think that we should be able to figure out God's reasons for allowing every case of evil implies that we think God is not much smarter than we are. If God is the almighty creator of the universe, there will be evil the reason for which we cannot discern. This is exactly what we should expect if there is a God. It cannot be counted as evidence against God.

So even though it might seem, at first glance, that there are no good reasons to allow certain evils we see, this does not provide strong evidence that these evils are really unjustified. The argument that the kinds of evil we see make it unlikely that God exists has been seen to be pretty weak.

The philosophical problem of evil has to do with what is reasonable to believe. To what degree is it reasonable to believe in God in light of what we seem to know about evil? We have seen that evil does not contradict God's existence. Nor is it strong evidence against the existence of God. The evil in the world, then, does not make it unreasonable to believe in an all-powerful and all-loving God.

What Does the Bible Say About Euthanasia?

by Nigel Cameron

Euthanasia is any act or omission, in the context of sickness or disability, that intentionally causes death. As such, it has become a topic of contemporary debate. But it is nothing new. The killing and abandonment of the sick and elderly have been common practices in cultures around the globe, and one of the most powerful impacts of the gospel has been to defend the defenseless and to devalue those without economic benefit to society.

In the Greco-Roman world of the early church, euthanasia was common and widely approved. The powerful pagan protest against physicians who had taken the Hippocratic oath, repudiating euthanasia and assisted suicide, came in a context in which euthanasia could be an appealing option in the face of chronic disease or uncontrollable pain. What is remarkable about the resurgence of interest in this primitive approach to sickness and suffering in our own day is that we now have far greater medical and other resources with which to cope with these challenges. It is perhaps the surest indicator that our understanding of human nature is being reinvented as the culture turns its back on its Judeo-Christian roots.

The starting point for a biblical understanding of human nature is the idea that human beings are made in the image of God. It is clear from Genesis 1:26-27 that this applies to all members of the human species. Homo sapiens is distinguished from all other "kinds" by our bearing the likeness of our Maker. The imago Dei (image of God) is what makes us the beings we are, and it is in place wherever there are members of our species. This godly image plainly applies to those who are sick and disabled as well as those in the flower of human giftedness. Those with severe mental impairments, including the so-called persistent vegetative state, remain full members of the human species and therefore bear God's image.

A definition of euthanasia that focuses on the intent to cause death is important, and in principle it distinguishes euthanasia from health care decisions affecting terminal patients when there is no intent to end life. The term "physician-assisted suicide" has been coined to promote voluntary euthanasia, but it is misleading. Voluntary euthanasia does entail a suicidal motive, and suicide is a sad but immoral case of homicide—the homicide of the self. But euthanasia always involves a homicide on the part of the physician, whether it comes through the prescription of lethal drugs or another method. And if it is legal, it involves a community policy decision which states that such lives are not worth living.

A distinction is often made between "active" and "passive" euthanasia, but this distinction can be misleading. If the intent is to bring about death, the moral accounting is the same. A more useful distinction lies among voluntary, involuntary, and nonvoluntary euthanasia. Voluntary euthanasia is the public policy goal of some activists and intellectuals who deny that they favor involuntary killing. Yet there are problems in defining adequate consent in the case of the seriously ill. For example, even some who favor voluntary euthanasia would consider Dr. Jack Kevorkian a serial killer, since even though he secured "consents," he preyed on the fears of lonely people. Moreover, there is the problem of "nonvoluntary" killing—the euthanasia of those who are not competent, such as Alzheimer's patients or infants, who constitute some of the prime candidates for an induced death.

The biblical doctrine of the sanctity of life of those in God's image offers a fundamental protection for patients, aging relatives, the handicapped, and the poor by ruling out the option of acting to bring about death. Job—the OT's great example of suffering and faithfulness—was challenged by his wife to take the euthanasia option: "Curse God and die!" (Jb 2:9). But he maintained his integrity and proclaimed in response, "Should we accept only good from God and not adversity?" (2:10).

Didn't the Church Oppose Galileo?

by Mark A. Kalthoff

Simple questions do not always have simple answers. "Didn't the church oppose Galileo?" is certainly one such question. Everyone "knows" the church opposed Galileo, but what does this mean?

Despite the complexity of Galileo's engagement with the church, there are several relevant facts that can be simply stated.

For one thing, every significant player in the Galileo affair was a committed Christian. This was no tale of a secular scientific community pitted against a backward, antiscientific church. The Roman Catholic Church provided greater patronage to astronomical study than did all other contemporary institutions combined.

That being said, straightforward readings of certain biblical passages (Gn 1; Jos 10:12; Pss 19:4-6; 93:1; 104:5,19; Ec 1:4-5) suggest an earth-centered cosmology with the sun revolving about a stationary earth. By the early seventeenth century, in the wake of the Protestant Reformation and the Roman Catholic Council of Trent, such a plain interpretation of these passages was normative throughout Christendom. Moreover, both common sense and the weight of contemporary scientific opinion opposed the idea of the earth's motion.

Hence, any public defender of the Copernican (sun-centered) cosmology would have to overcome two difficult challenges. He would have to supply conclusive scientific evidence for the earth's motion and the sun's fixity—something that was not then available, even to Galileo. In addition, he would have to provide expert theological guidance to explain how properly to interpret those biblical texts that seemingly contradicted the Copernican hypothesis. Galileo was not a theologian. He was a mathematician and natural philosopher.

Although Galileo believed that he possessed proof of the Copernican hypothesis (in his theory of the tides), he was mistaken. His theory was seriously flawed. Overconfidence in the strength of his case led Galileo to tread out of his area of expertise and into the theological territory of biblical interpretation. As a layman, he overstepped his bounds by presuming to give guidance on reading the Bible.

What did the Roman Catholic Church do? It acted prudently and conservatively by upholding the received biblical and scientific opinion of the day. In 1616 the Theological Consultors of the Holy Office (advisers to the Pope) declared the Copernican theory heretical and foolish. Protestant leaders, such as Martin Luther and John Calvin, had expressed similar disapproval of Copernicanism.

In 1633, Galileo was judged to be "vehemently suspected of heresy" and sentenced to house arrest for defending the Copernican hypothesis. Of greater significance is the fact that the church never formally condemned the Copernican theory ex cathedra. That is, it never formally made opposition to Copernicanism an article of faith. Neither has any Protestant denomination done so. The Pope, his advisers, and other Christian leaders may have erred in their personal opinions on the matter, but all stopped short of asserting anti-Copernicanism an official doctrine of Christianity. Galileo was punished as a Christian layman for overstepping his bounds in a theological matter (biblical interpretation) that touched on a scientific question. In the end this was a religious dispute about biblical interpretation between Christians within the Roman Catholic Church.

Did the church oppose Galileo? Yes, it did. But that opposition was grounded in a careful attempt to preserve both Christian orthodoxy and scientific integrity in a time of tumultuous change. The remarkable fact is that, despite the inclinations of its leaders, both Protestant and Catholic, the Christian churches never made opposition to Copernicanism an official article of faith.

Does the Bible Teach the Abuse of Nature?

by Steve W. Lemke

The answer to this question requires balancing and blending two truths.

1. God expects us to use nature. God commanded humans to have dominion over all of nature, subduing it and ruling over it (Gn 1:20-31). God gave persons broad latitude in their dominion over nature, including permission for humans to eat plants and animals for food (Gn 1:29-30; 9:1-3). Jesus demonstrated His absolute control over nature in events such as calming a storm (Mt 8:24-27) and causing a fig tree to wither (Mt 21:18-27). We thus have divine approval to use nature for our own needs and purposes. Good stewards are expected to maximize production by shrewd management of God-given resources (Mt 25:14-30).

2. God opposes the abuse of nature. Our having dominion over nature should not be confused with our owning nature. Humans do not own nature, because the earth is the Lord's (Lv 25:23; Ps 24:1; 50:10-11). We are given the natural world as a stewardship, not as a possession.

Scripture teaches that, as stewards of God's good creation, we should apply sound principles of land and resource management. In the agricultural regulations of OT law, for instance, the land was to lie fallow in the seventh year so its minerals could be replenished (Ex 23:10-11; Lv 25:1-22). In two key NT parables—the parable of the vineyard (Mt 21:33-44; Mk 12:1-12; Lk 20:9-19) and the parable of the talents (Mt 25:14-30)—human beings are depicted as stewards or managers of God's property. These parables emphasize that God will hold us accountable for our management of these resources.

Nature is good because it was created by God and pleases God (Gn 1:1-31). God designed the natural world with an orderly structure, and violating that natural order is sinful (Rm 1:26-27). The natural world shares the burden of the curse of the fallen world (Gn 3:17-19), but Scripture repeatedly affirms God's providential care for the world of nature (Ps 104:1-35; 147:7-9; 148:1-10). Scripture also suggests that all of creation will share in redemption (Rm 8:20-22), promising the creation of the new heavens and the new earth (Rv 21:1).

Introduction to Job

AUTHOR

It is often said that Job is the oldest book in the Bible. One support for such a view is found in the statement in the Talmud (a collection of rabbinical writings on Jewish law and practice) that "Moses wrote his own book and Job" (Baba Bathra 14b). Additional support for the ancient origin of this book comes from the absence of any mention of the nation Israel in Job as well as a lack of specific references to the law of Moses or any priestly system. Further support is noted in the centrality of the clan in the narrative, a situation that was typical of patriarchal society. Moreover, the names of the characters in the book are compatible with those of the patriarchal period.

Critical scholars are quick to point out, however, that in Baba Bathra 15a a divergent Jewish opinion is cited, giving dates for Job from the era of the judges to the fifth century B.C. Current critical opinion opts for a date of the book ranging from the seventh to the second century B.C.

Conservative scholars also disagree as to the date of the writing of the book. Some decide for a pre-Mosaic date; others for a Solomonic date; and still others for a time as late as the seventh century B.C.

We must take care to differentiate between the date of the composition of Job and the date of its setting. Many of the arguments for an early date for Job apply to its setting, which can be shown to be early. Further indications of an early setting include the fact that Job's lofty social standing revolved around his wealth, consisting primarily of livestock and a large number of servants (1:3). The reference to silver as an item of monetary exchange is mentioned (28:15), but the term qesitah used in 42:11 is employed elsewhere only before the Israelite monarchy (Gn 33:19; Jos 24:32). In addition, Job led his family in matters of religion such as purification rituals and sacrifices (Jb 1:5)—matters that were delegated to the Levites in the law. Job's death at age 140, "old and full of days" (42:17), is also typical of the patriarchal period (e.g., Abraham, Gn 25:7-8; Isaac, Gn 35:28-29).

When the story of Job was put into writing is another matter. All attempts to assign a date, whether on the basis of literary or linguistic data or with regard to its philosophical and theological viewpoint, have proved to be capable of variant interpretations and therefore inconclusive. The age of Solomon, when other such wisdom literature began to flourish, is perhaps a likely time.

Although the author and date of Job are unknown, the status of Job as a biblical book has never been seriously questioned. What has been questioned, however, is whether the story of Job is history or fiction.

THE RELIABILITY OF JOB

Did Job really live, and did the things that the book reports really happen, or is all this just a good story? Is the book of Job pure fiction like some of the stories of innocent sufferers preserved in ancient literature from Mesopotamia, Egypt, and elsewhere? In answer, it must be pointed out that these other stories may be more than fiction; they could be stories of historical events. Moreover, efforts to equate Job with, or derive the account of Job's trials from, such ancient Near Eastern sources have not provided much insight into the book.

The absence of convincing contradictory data suggests that a fair hearing of the evidence points to the existence of a real person named Job. Certainly the style of the opening statement concerning Job (1:1) is much like that of Samuel's father, Elkanah (1 Sm 1:1), whose historical existence is not seriously doubted. Moreover, Ezekiel links Job with two other historical figures, Moses and Daniel (Ezk 14:14,20). Jesus' brother James apparently accepted the history of both Job and the Lord's dealing with him as much as the facts concerning the prophets who suffered in their service for the Lord (Jms 5:10-11).

A further area of criticism concerning Job has to do with its theological outlook, which some have categorized as undeveloped. Critics say that God is portrayed in the book as a sovereign who is interested solely in His power and control rather than in the plight of His creatures. Nor can He be the good and merciful God of the later Hebrew-Christian Scriptures, for He seems uninterested in Job's situation and unwilling to alleviate his suffering until He has demonstrated His mastery over all creation and creatures, including Job.

Such a viewpoint misses a great deal of the presentation of God in the book. From the beginning God is seen to be conscious of Job and his integrity (1:8; 2:3) and concerned for Job's life (1:12; 2:6). During Job's long test at the hands of Satan, his friends and even Job himself often acknowledged that God is just and the giver of that which is good.

THE PROBLEM OF SUFFERING

While the book of Job never fully addresses the solution to the problem of suffering, nothing in the book is out of harmony with general scriptural teaching on the subject. Thus the story of Job reminds us that suffering can be a sacred trust allowed by God to bring the sufferer to full dependence on and trust in God. Indeed the meaning of Job's name ("where is the father") may reflect the deeper purpose of the book. Rather than asking "Where is God when I need Him?" the more basic question may be "Is God sufficient for everything in life?" The answer is a resounding yes. God, not man, is alone the true source for strength, guidance, and success.

Sufferers should realize that God's power is available for all of life, even to carry them through their severest trials. When we see that God is truly the God of all life, we have a comforting assurance that, whatever may happen, God's good purposes for our lives will be accomplished.

All of life is for God's glory and for human good. So it is that when Job came to a realization of God's sufficiency rather than his own, God's greatest blessing followed.

Job Study Notes

1:1 Critical suggestions that the description of Job's character (lit. "perfect and upright") contradicts texts indicating mankind's sinfulness (Rm 3:23; 1 Jn 1:8) are unfounded. God twice attested to Job's integrity (Jb 1:8; 2:3). Both Hebrew words are used of God (Dt 32:4). Men and women in God's image are to reflect those attributes (Mt 5:48; Eph 4:20-24).

1:6 Canaanite mythology portrays the "sons of God" as an assembly of gods. However, angels are meant here. No contradiction exists between the use of this term for "angel" and texts that speak of Christ as God's only Son (Jn 3:18; 1 Jn 4:9) who was with God and was God before creation (Jn 1:1). Spiritually, believers become sons (Rm 8:14) and children (1 Jn 3:1) of God.

1:7-8 God's rhetorical questions to Satan do not imply that God had no knowledge of Satan's activities. The Scriptures attest to God's omniscience and omnipresence (Ps 33:13-15; 139:7-12). The phrase "roaming through the earth" has led some commentators to suggest that Satan was God's "roving agent" to detect mischief in the world, much like the spies who served in the secret service of the Persian king (known from texts from Mari in upper Mesopotamia, contemporaneous with the Hebrew patriarchs). But this is mere speculation. God does not cooperate with Satan in any way.

1:12 God's justice and integrity were not impugned by allowing Satan to inflict suffering upon an innocent man. Only a genuine test could demonstrate to Satan whether Job's devotion was real or was, as Satan insinuated, the result of God's having protected and blessed Job beyond that of most human beings. More important than proving something to Satan, God had purposes for Job's good that could only come through this arduous path of testing.

1:14-19 Skeptics charge that the four disasters that befell Job's possessions and family were violently unjust. Yet all fell within the bounds allowed to Satan. Some note a parallel with the epic of Keret, from Ugarit (Ras Shamra) on the Syrian Mediterranean coast, whose hero saw his entire family perish. That there are parallels does not prove that Job is a copy. Similar tragedies can occur in any family.

1:15 Because Sabeans are traditionally associated with a location in present-day Yemen hundreds of miles to the south (1 Kg 10:1; Jr 6:20), some consider as unlikely the arrival of marauders in Job's homeland in Uz, east of the Jordan River somewhere between Aram (Gn 10:23) and Edom (Gn 36:28). But the Bible indicates Sabean presence further north (Gn 10:7; Jb 6:19). These Sabeans were brigands, hence may point to an early setting of the book before they became the well-known later traders of southern Arabia.

1:17 The Chaldeans (Hb kasdim) were not the later people associated with Nebuchadnezzar but an earlier Bedouin group, perhaps related to Abraham's brother Nahor (Gn 22:22). The appearance of "Chaldeans" does not require a late date for Jb.

2:3-6 The charge that God and Satan were playing games, with Job as the pawn, is insensitive and erroneous. Job's ordeal was intensified to test the depths of his faith and to achieve an end that could only come through these trials.

2:9-10 The skeptical observation that Job's wife was right to fault God for Job's problems and urge him to curse God and receive God's death blow is preposterous. Job rightly rejected her suggestion as "foolish."

3:8 "Leviathan" is known from texts from Ras Shamra (ancient Ugarit, see 1:14-19) in which the god Baal battles and defeats Lotan (a great sea monster) and Yam (the sea god) with weapons over which he has pronounced an incantation. Some suggest this verse reflects those events and revocalizes the Hebrew word "day" (y*om*) to "sea" (yam). Others seek a background in mythologies that portray a solar or lunar eclipse as being caused by a great dragon. Mythological allusions need not indicate scriptural endorsement of paganism. Identical terms have different meanings in different contexts. Ancient Near Eastern backgrounds may have supplied the form but not the content of biblical material. Metaphorical use of "Leviathan" occurs elsewhere (Jb 41:1; Ps 74:14; 104:26; Is 27:1). Leviathan may symbolize an evil spirit. Job wished that it could have eradicated the day of his birth. A similar picture occurs in Rv 12:1-6.

3:13-19 Job's portrayal of death as a place where all the deceased go does not indicate scriptural endorsement of a mythological underworld. Although all go to the grave, all do not share the same eternal destiny (Ps 49:14-15; 73:25-26; 2 Co 5:1-8).

4:12-21 Eliphaz's dream/vision did not indicate that he and the prophets engaged in ecstatic behavior. The text does not suggest that Eliphaz was a prophet.

5:1 Eliphaz's rhetorical question, "Which of the holy ones . . . ?" does not imply scriptural belief in ancient Near Eastern minor deities who served as mediating personal gods. Although the need for a mediator is a prominent theme in Jb (9:33; 13:3; 16:19-21; 19:23-27), the Scriptures do not endorse the idea of angels as mediators. Only One serves in this capacity (1 Tm 2:5;Heb 7:25; 1 Jn 2:1).

5:13 Paul's endorsement of Eliphaz's statement (1 Co 3:19) does not validate all of Eliphaz's remarks or those of his friends, any more than his citing the words of a Cretan prophet (Ti 1:12). Inerrancy guarantees only the accuracy of what the three friends said.

6:1-4 Job's perception of God as his enemy (see 13:24; 33:10), who like a cosmic warrior was shooting poison-tipped arrows into him, was colored by his intense suffering. It was far from objective or accurate. God is neither mean-spirited nor arbitrary with people. God is perfectly just in all of His dealings (Dt 32:4; Dn 9:14; Rv 16:5).

6:27 Job's words should not be understood as indicating that his friends practiced such deeds. In hisdisappointment with Eliphaz, Job pictured the callous treatment he was receiving from his friends as resembling those who made merchandise of an orphan or a friend. Such detestable activities were widely attested in ancient Near Eastern writings, such as the Kilamuwa Inscription from Syria. Righteous kings (e.g., the Code of Hammurabi, eighteenth century B.C.) claimed to be the protector of the underprivileged of society. God is declared to be the defender of the widow, the orphan, the poor, and the resident alien; He instructed His people to have the same concern (Dt 27:19; Ps 68:4-6).

7:1 Again, Job's intense suffering caused him to view life as a form of bondage to a cruel tyrant. It would be interesting to compare Job's present view of God with the view that he held during his many years of pros-perity.

7:7-9 For discussion on Job's view of death, see note on 7:21.

7:12 Earlier critical scholars suggested that Job's remark alluded to the Babylonian Enuma Elish epic, in which Marduk slew Tiamat (the sea goddess) and divided her body in order to form heaven and earth, and then set a guard on her. Contemporary scholars suggest a mythological background in the Ugaritis epic of Baal and Anat (see note on 3:8). Such an allusion may have apologetic value to clarify that it is Yahweh who controls the elements (Gn 1:1-23; Ps 74:12-14; 104:1-5).No mythological allusion may have been intended, however, for the Hebrew yam can mean "sea" (Gn 1:10) and tannin, "a reptile" (Gn 1:21; Ex 7:10). For more about the monster, see note on 9:13.

7:21 Job's pessimistic remarks about death and the grave do not reflect the full biblical perspectives on the subject. Job felt that he would soon die and it would be too late for God to help him. The Bible indicates that no place escapes the view of an omnipresent God (Ps 139:7-8) and that there is life after death (Ps 73:23-27; 1 Co 15:20-57). See notes on 14:13-15; 19:25-27.

8:9 Bildad's statement was not absurd as skeptics charge, but was a metaphor denoting relative age (cp. v. 8). Job and his three friends lived too short a time to acquire the sophisticated wisdom of earlier generations.

9:4 Job's words do not indicate that God acts arbitrarily, capriciously, or maliciously in dealing with mankind, even those who oppose Him (Hs 11:7-11; Rm 5:8; 6:23). God's ultimate purposes are His glory (Is 48:11; Hab 2:14) and man's good (Ps 145:7-13; Eph 2:7-10). See the note on 6:1-4.

9:6 Some Scriptures portray the earth metaphorically and should not be construed as reflecting primitive cosmology. Architectural terms are used (1 Sm 2:8; Ps 75:3); God forms the earth upon the seas (Ps 24:2); the mountains are viewed as pillars for the sky (Jb 26:11); and the circle of the earth and heaven stretched out over it are described as being "like a tent" (Is 40:22). Such metaphors are reminders that the earth belongs to its Creator (Ps 24:1) and is designed to be a place where God and man may meet together.

9:8 The name of the Canaanite goddess Asherah means "she who treads on the sea." The Bible portrays God's sovereignty using similar metaphors, countering pagan mythology with depictions of His greater power. He treads upon the sea with His horses and chariots (Hab 3:8,15) or upon the high places of earth (Am 4:13). He rides upon the clouds of the sky (Ps 68:4,33). The imagery shows God's complete sovereignty over the natural world.

9:13 Because "Rahab" is mentioned elsewhere (26:12-13; Ps 89:10; Is 51:9-10), critics have concluded that the Hebrews shared the Canaanite mythological belief concerning the defeat of a chaos monster. Some critics say that this picture of Rahab as having "assistants" or allies indicates a borrowing of the Babylonian creation account in which Tiamat had her helpers.Hebrew awareness of pagan mythologies does not mean that they embraced them. When the Bible alludes to mythological themes, the writers' purpose was to put them into a different context, one that reveals Yahweh's sovereignty and His control of nature (Ps 74:12-23; Is 51:9-10). See notes on 3:8; 7:12; 9:8; 26:12-13.

10:21-22 Job's view of the afterlife was shaped by his despondency. His view does not represent the full biblical view of the subject. For more on just the OT perspective on the afterlife, see the note on 14:13-15.

11:6 Zophar's remarks are not to be taken literally. He meant that Job was being punished far less than he deserved. The Scriptures report that God remembers sinful actions and will never forget the crimes of those who oppress the poor (Hs 7:1-2). The best example of God's forgetfulness is with those whose sins are forgiven (Is 43:25; Jr 31:34).

11:7-8 No contradiction exists between Zophar's question concerning knowing God's person, power, and wisdom. Paul demonstrates that man can understand enough of God's existence and power to make him accountable for not seeking to know God (Rm 1:18-20).

12:4-6 Skeptics have imagined a contradiction between God's apparent reward of evildoers and the psalmist's declaration of their disastrous end (Ps 34:21; 37:35-38).In his reversals, losses, and the resultant suffering, Job was far more aware of the great injustices in this present world. The Scriptures affirm that evildoers' own wickedness will cause them earthly and eternal ruin (Ps 1:4-5; Pr 11:5; Mt 25:26).

12:9 Critics have suggested that the word "Lord" (Yahweh) is a later substitution for the original 'eloah ("God"), since the name Yahweh does not appear elsewhere in the dialogues. They propose that a later scribe changed the rare phrase "hand of God" to the phrase "hand of the Lord," which is common in the rest of the OT. However, there are very few manuscripts that support 'eloah, and they can be explained as the result of later scribes making consistent Job's usage of 'eloah as the name of God. Some critics say that Job did not know God as Yahweh, but the use of God's covenant name in chapters 1-2 and 38-42 show that he did. Therefore, "LORD" is probably the original text.

13:15 Critical scholars take the Hebrew particle lo' to mean "not." Accordingly they suggest that Job felt that if God slayed him, he would have no hope. HCSB follows the reading of the MT marginal note, "to him," which fits Job's positive reply to his own question (v. 14). The Hebrew particle could also be translated "surely."

14:1-4 Skeptical observations that Job's remarks indicate that women are unclean are without foundation. Some ancient cultures viewed the birth process as conferring ritual uncleanness (see Lv 12:1-8; Lk 2:22), but this did not mean that women, as such, were "unclean."

14:13-15 Although critical opinion discounts any belief in personal immortality here, Job's words can express such an underlying hope. The word translated "wait" (v. 14) is the same word used in 13:15 for "hope," indicating full trust in God. The word translated "relief" (14:14) occurs commonly for change of garments(Jdg 14:12,13). Thus Job's condition will be changed from misery to life and renewed fellowship with God, as indicated in the "call/answer" motif (e.g., Ps 102:1-2; Is 65:24). Belief in immortality is attested to in the OT (e.g., Ps 49:14-15; Dn 12:2).

15:14-16 Eliphaz's philosophical rambling that nothing is pure in God's eyes does not reflect the Bible's full teaching on the subject. Those who truly believe and exercise total trust and faith in God are counted as righteous (Gn 15:6; Hab 2:4). Made righteous in God's sight through Christ's atoning death (Rm 1:17; 2 Co 5:25) and taken into union with Christ (Col 1:27), believers can live virtuous and faithful lives through Christ who lives through them (Gl 2:20).

16:19-21 The need for an intermediary between God and man is an important theme in Jb (9:33). Job feels that his desire to speak directly to God was not possible (13:3), so he spoke of his "advocate . . . in the heights" (16:19). Such an advocate need not have been some personal angel or other heavenly figure; Job may have had in mind that God would intercede with Himself on his behalf (cp. Hs 11:8). See the notes on 5:1; 19:25-27; 33:23.

17:13-15 Job's remarks stemmed from his despair and do not contradict the biblical teaching on life after death (1 Co 15:12-58; 2 Co 5:1-8).

17:16 Some scholars suggest that Job's remarks indicate a belief in a Mesopotamian underworld into which people enter via a series of gates, but this interpretation is unfounded. The term "gates" is a metaphor for entrance into the state of death or the grave. Similar expressions are found in 38:17; Ps 9:13; 107:18; Is 38:10; and Mt 16:18.

18:12-13 Critical suggestions that "disaster" and "death" reflect Mesopotamian or Ugaritic mythology are erroneous. These terms are metaphors of the calamities and diseases that affect humanity. The term "firstborn" often speaks not only of a man's first offspring but metaphorically of priority, authoritative position, or first in rank (Col 1:15; Heb 1:6). The imagery here refers to the most extreme form of death-causing disease.

18:14 Some critics equate the "king of terrors" with Nergal, the Canaanite death deity, but this is unnecessary. The term represents a metaphor for death, mankind's "last enemy" (1 Co 15:26).

19:20 The phrase "by the skin of my teeth" was a common metaphor, with "skin" being a play on an idea in the preceding line. It spoke of Job's desperate circumstances. Skeptical suggestions that the Bible teaches error in saying that teeth literally have skin are nonsense.

19:23-24 Critics once thought that Job could not write because only professional scribes did so in the pre-Mosaic period. Inscriptions discovered at Serabit el-Khadim in the western Sinai Pennisula dating from the seventeenth and sixteenth centuries B.C. demonstrate that ordinary Semitic laborers working in the turquoise mines could write. If ordinary laborers could read and write, doubtless Job could.

19:25-27 The translation of this passage is difficult, but most English versions take it as a glimpse into the reality of the resurrection. Commentators who consider Job's hopeful words inconsistent with his feelings expressed elsewhere fail to reckon with his vacillating thoughts throughout the dialogue. His suffering often caused him to expect (17:1) and desire death (3:3-19; 10:18), considering it a place of nonexistence and no return (7:7-10; 10:21-22; 14:12; 17:13-16). Although Job had viewed God as his enemy (6:4; 7:17-21; 10:3,8-14; 13:21,24; 16:7-14; 17:6; 19:7-12,22) from whom he could receive no justice (9:2-3,16,20,28-33; 10:15; 19:7) but only death (16:18), yet his faith in God (12:13,16,18; 13:15-18; 17:3) and hope in immortality had surfaced previously (14:13-17). Job's words indicate that God was his Redeemer (19:25) whom he would see in some future day after his body had wasted away in death. Job expected to live again bodily and, from the vantage point of his own flesh, behold God (vv. 26-27). See note on 14:13-15 (cp. Jn 11:25; Heb 7:25).

20:1-29 Although Zophar's second speech reflects many biblical truths concerning the wicked, it does not guarantee that his words were given in true biblical spirit. Zophar painted pictures of the certain failure and disastrous end of the wicked but left Job to make the application to himself. Words have the power to wound or heal (Pr 11:9,11; 15:4) and need to be used in a positive manner (Pr 15:23). Believers are to be ready to give a defense of their faith, but their apologetic needs to be spoken with all due propriety and truth, bathed in love (Eph 4:15; Col 4:6; 1 Pt 3:15).

21:7-15 Skeptics point out that Job's characterization of the success of the wicked, despite their godless lives, contradicts biblical teaching (cp. 21:10 with Ps 49:12-15). But Job's issue here was given voice elsewhere in Scripture (e.g., Ps 73:1-14). Biblical writers did not gloss over the seeming contradiction between the prosperity of the wicked and God's promise of blessing for those who obey Him; but their answer came from a change of perspective in which they realized the ultimate destiny of those who disregard God (Ps 73:17-20). The book of Jb is a dialogue in which the speakers, including Job, encircled the main issue—God's righteousness—approaching it from a variety of angles. Along the way some negative (Job) and superficial (the friends) ideas came out, but they should never be taken as the author's final teaching. Although seemingly reminiscent of the innocent sufferer's lament in other ancient documents, including one known as the Babylonian Theodicy, Job's remarks were a true report of his feelings at this stage of the discussion, not the book's final position.

22:8 Some critics have denied the integrity of this verse because the MT is written in the third person, while the succeeding verses are in the second person. Yet such variation is not uncommon in Hebrew, and verse 8 actually provides the basic premise upon which Eliphaz built his argument: The wealthy too often get rich at the expense of others. Eliphaz reasoned that whether knowingly or unknowingly, Job had become wealthy by violating common standards of decency. He had taken advantage of the poor, the widow, and the orphan (vv. 6,9). He had failed to assist those in need of life's basic staples (v. 7). The charges were false (1:1,8; 2:3) and Job would speak against such actions (29:12; 31:16-23). Eliphaz's false accusations are a reminder that texts must be read in context and compared with other passages so as not to be incorrectly cited as proof. Verses 6-10 are a true report of Eliphaz's speech, but Eliphaz's words are not to be read as the truth concerning Job.

22:24 Although "Ophir" has not been located with certainty, scriptural reports of Solomon's trading ventures there (1 Kg 9:26-28; 10:11) dispel any notion that such a place was a fabled land such as Shangri-La.

23:8-9 Job's complaint concerning the inaccessibility of God does not contradict the biblical teaching of God's omnipresence (Ps 139:7-12) and nearness to those in need (Ps 34:18; 103:1-2; 145:18; Is 65:24). Job's cry arose from what he considered to be unjust suffering (23:10-12). His remarks reflected accurately his perspective of things but does not guarantee theological accuracy.

24:1-17 Critical tendencies to date this chapter in the Babylonian exile period are unnecessary. The crimes listed here reflect the general moral and spiritual failure of mankind. Job's questions as to why a just God fails to deal with crimes condemned in His law (for example, cp. v. 2 with Ex 20:5; Dt 19:4; v. 3 with Ex 22:22; Dt 28:31; v. 7 with Ex 22:26-27; v. 14 with Ex 20:13,15; v. 15 with Ex 20:14) expressed only his opinion. God's seeming inactivity does not indicate divine inability or unconcern. He controls all things (Ps 22:28). Though not always condoned by God, man's free acts are under His jurisdiction (Jr 10:23; Php

2:13). People may not understand His purposes or "delays" (Ps 10:1; 2 Pt 3:9), but God's administration of the universe is just (Ps 75:2; 89:14; Is 45:21).

24:18-25 Critics have either deleted portions of this passage (e.g., v. 21) or largely transferred it to another place in the book (e.g., after 27:13 or 27:23). The difficult Hebrew and the emphasis on divine retribution upon the wicked are cited as evidence of a dislocation here. Various schemes have been suggested, such as assigning it to Bildad or to a supposed lost speech of Zophar. The number and variety of differing proposals show that the critical approach is unlikely to resolve the issue. Because this is an ongoing discussion, Job's remarks at this point need not be consistent with his previous or subsequent statements. Job endorsed the principle of divine retribution earlier (10:14-15), even if he did not think it rightly applied to his situation (23:10-12).

25:4-5 Bildad's question should not be understood as a denial that man's reconciliation with God is impossible. Bildad returned to where the dialogue began, and he repeatedly surfaced in stating that weak, flawed human beings cannot hope to be so morally perfect that they are pure in God's sight (4:15-18; 9:2; 14:4; 15:14-16). His statement was designed to counter Job's claim that were he to present his case before God, his innocence and righteousness would be established (23:10-12). Bildad asked better than he knew. The Scriptures answer the question by declaring that sinful people can be just in God's sight by meeting God's terms (Gn 15:6; Hab 2:4), faith in the substitutionary death of Christ for sins (Rm 3:21-26; 5:8; 2 Co 5:21; 1 Pt 3:18).

25:6 "Maggot" and "worm" are metaphors of man's relative weakness and imperfection. Psalm 22, quoted by Jesus as He was dying, uses this same imagery (v. 6). Bildad built upon Job's previous remarks (Jb 7:5; 17:14; 21:26). His philosophy did not represent the biblical view of man's essential dignity and potential worth as created in the image of God (Gn 1:26). Although that image is marred by sin, it is not obliterated (1 Co 11:7; Jms 3:7). It can be renewed by faith in Christ, who is the precise image of God (Col 1:15-20; Heb 1:3). The price of restoring the image of God in man was Jesus' full participation in the wretchedness of the human condition that is so aptly described in Bildad's and the psalmist's metaphors. The believer's full conformity to the image of Christ lies in the future (1 Co 15:49).

26:7 Critical attempts to view the "northern" skies (Hb. tsaphon) in terms of Ugaritic mythology in which the god Baal's title was Baal-zephon with his residence on Mount Zaphon are unnecessary, despite Ps 48:2-3 and Is 14:13-14, where the north figures prominently in connection with God and mountains. These texts may indicate that it is Yahweh, not Baal, who rightly indwells Zaphon (i.e., "heaven"). Mythological derivation may not be present, however. Job could intend "the northern skies," home to the North Star and constellations. Some scholars suggest that Job wrote better than he knew, for his observation approached the knowledge that the earth is suspended in space supported only by gravitational forces.

26:12-13 Critical theory endorses a mythological reference to Baal's subjugation of Yam (the sea) and Leviathan (a sea monster). Whether "Rahab" is to be identified with Yam or the sea monster is unclear. Similar phraseology is used of God's crushing Leviathan's heads (Ps 74:13-14; 89:9-10; Is 51:9-10). Leviathan is also called the gliding and twisting serpent that God will pierce in eschatological times (Is 27:1). The biblical accounts demythologize Canaanite theology by pointing out that Yahweh is the Creator and Controller of the forces of nature. See the notes on 3:8; 7:12; 9:13.

27:2 The text gives a true record of Job's feelings but these do not represent the scriptural position as to God's righteous and just character (Dt 32:4; Is 30:18; Zph 3:5). God loves righteousness and justice (Ps 33:5), and reigns in justice (Ps 97:2). He also expects His people to act justly (Mc 6:8) so that He might pour out His blessings on them (Dt 16:20). Isaiah predicted that David's heir would one day rule Israel with justice (Is 1:27; 11:1-5).

27:13-23 Because Job appears to adopt his friends' view in this passage, some critics theorize that this description of the wicked is wrongly attributed to Job. Some suggest this passage is a lost third speech of Zophar, or that it should be added to Bildad's short speech (25:1-6). But, as seen elsewhere in the dialogue, Job was searching for answers and encircling his problem from different angles, so his pronouncements were not necessarily consistent with one another (see 21:7-15; 24:18-25). There is no reason to question the text as it stands.

28:1-28 Many critical scholars suggest that because the poem of chapter 28 seems to bear no relation to the surrounding discussions, it was once an independent composition that was incorporated later into the text. This view is unnecessary. Job mused concerning the nature of true wisdom that had not been adequately determined in the previous discussions (e.g., 4:21; 11:6-9; 12:12-13; 15:8; 26:3-4). Chapter 28 serves as a transitional piece, clarifying many issues relating to wisdom that have been brought up previously and laying the groundwork for Job's soliloquy in chaps. 29–31.

28:2 Critics once held that the use of iron was a late development. Mining of iron is now known to have taken place as early as the third millennium B.C. in Egypt, Anatolia, and Mesopotamia, though widespread mining operations began around 1200 B.C. Since the use of iron antedates Moses, Job could have been familiar with it.

28:28 Some critics have denied the integrity of this verse for several reasons. (1) The opening line is considered to be too short and to be a poetic line. (2) The divine name that is used, Adonai ("Lord"), occurs only here in Jb. (3) The verse is said to be inconsistent with the rest of the chapter. The critical charges do not stand, for these reasons: (1) Other poetic pieces have short introductory lines (e.g., Ps 1:1; 50:16). (2) It is gratuitous to suggest that the traditional formula concerning "the fear of the Lord" must always appear exactly the same. (3) Verse 28 provides the logical end to Job's poem. It is by fearing the Lord and submitting to him as master (Adonai) that man can acquire wisdom. There aresuggestions from critics that "mankind" ('adam) should be translated to read "He said to Adam," since he would be the first recipient of God-given wisdom. But this idea is questionable at best.

29:6 The imagery spoke of Job's former luxury. "Cream" was so available to him that he could have bathed his feet in it (see Dt 33:24). Olive oil flowed over his stone olive presses. Similar images of abundance occur in the OT (e.g., Dt 32:13-14; Ps 81:16).

30:16-23 Job's characterization of God as One who had abused His power by causing Job's pain and refusing to answer Job's pleas should not be interpreted as normative theology. Job's accusations arose out of suffering and psychological trauma. The Scriptures plainly teach that God is not the author of evil (Jms 1:13) but that He is holy, just, and perfect in all that He does (Lv 11:44-45; 19:2; Dt 32:4). His grace and goodness flow out of His love to needy human beings (Ps 145:8-9). He answers those who call upon Him in their distress(Ps 22:24; 102:1-2), unless they have broken fellowship with Him (Ps 66:18). Although all must face the eventuality of death, even then God lovingly cares for His own (Ps 16:10; 23:4).

31:1-34 Suggestions that Job's ethical standards reflect a late date for the book are unfounded. Many verses reflect the principles in early law codes of the ancient Near East, the Decalogue, and the Pentateuch (e.g., Nm 15:39). Some critics have attempted to restructure the chapter so that Job's list of specific sins has a more logical grouping. Thus v. 1 would be placed together with vv. 9-12. Such attempts are unnecessary for three reasons: (1) Job's remarks do not constitute a legal brief but reflect the passionate outburst of a man who felt that he suffered as one who was innocent of wrongdoing. (2) Textual support for the transposition of verses is lacking. (3) The final editors saw no need to restructure the text.

31:1 Some critics attempt to link the "young woman" that Job mentioned with either the Ugaritic virgin Anat or the Mesopotamian Ishtar, thus suggesting the worship of fertility goddesses. But this is unfounded. The standard warnings against the lust of the eyes are sufficient to explain the verse without resorting to deeper meanings gleaned from supposed pagan precedents.

31:15 The suggestion that Job embraced the universal fatherhood of God finds no support in the context. Job pointed out that he had no inherent superiority to his servants (v. 13), for God oversaw their birth process as well as his. Although God is the universal Creator, He is Father to those who stand in covenant relation with Him (Dt 32:6; Hs 11:1-11; Jn 1:12) and to the Messiah, His Son Jesus Christ (Ps 2:7; Mt 3:17; 11:27).

31:18 Some scholars are skeptical that Job actually cared for the orphan "from [his] youth." However, such hyperbolic speech was as common then as when we now say, "I've done it all my life." Job testified to his life-long commitment to caring for the underprivileged of society (cp. 29:12).

31:40 "The words of Job are concluded" should not be construed to indicate that the subsequent chapters were added later to bring closure to the story line. Similar editorial notes are found in Ps 72:20 and Jr 51:64. The remark indicates that Job had made his case before God and would allow Him to respond.

32:1 Critics view the speeches of Elihu (chaps. 32–37) as a late interpolation into the text, and they offer the following reasons: (1) Elihu is not mentioned in the prologue or epilogue. (2) These chapters contain an unusual proportion of Aramaic words in the Hebrew text. (3) These speeches contain fewer metaphors than the preceding ones and have vocabulary differences.(4) Elihu's speeches are more philosophically/theologically reasoned than those of Job's three friends.

But these charges lack validity. First, Elihu's absence from the prologue is understandable, if he arrived after the dialogue had begun. His absence from the epilogue is no more inexplicable than that of Satan or Job's wife. Second, Elihu's speeches give allusions to all three rounds of the dialogue. Third, the presence of 12 Aramaic words is scarcely disproportionate to the 26 Aramaic words found elsewhere in the book. Arguments based on style are subjective; Elihu should be allowed his own style. Fourth, the failure of Job's friends to convince him necessitates Elihu's philosophical and theological approach. Elihu's speeches were a preparatory bridge between Job's summation of his case and God's reply.

33:13 Elihu's remarks should not be understood as indicating that God is callous, frivolous, or inconsistent in dealing with peoples' prayers. God is under no obligation to answer prayer but the Bible indicates that He does answer prayers that are in accordance with His will (Jms 5:13-18; 1 Pt 3:12). The answer may not be what the petitioner is seeking but it will be that which is best (2 Co 12:7-10). Many believers testify to God's gracious answers to prayer (Ps 34:6).

33:18 Some scholars suggest that this is a mythological allusion to passing through a river into the underworld, where all the departed enter. But this is erroneous. The Scriptures reveal a difference between the state of the saved and unsaved dead (Ps 49:10-15; Lk 16:22-23). The imagery here is a passing through "the river of death" into the grave (the "Pit").

33:23-25 Elihu's remarks form a conditional sentence. They should not be interpreted that angels hear believers' prayers or serve as mediators between the petitioner and God. There is one heavenly Mediator between God and man, and that is Christ Jesus (Jn 14:14; 1 Tm 2:5-6; Heb 7:25). Elihu's thoughts resemble the biblical teaching concerning the "Angel" of the Lord, who is often closely tied to God Himself.

34:29-37 These verses are difficult in Hebrew. The widely differing attempts by critical scholars to emend the text have no supportive manuscript evidence, so it is best to let the MT stand as the reliable source. As has sometimes been the case in the past, future archaeological discoveries may clarify the meaning of obscure terms in this passage.

35:6-8 Elihu's statement that human conduct (whether sinful or righteous) has no effect on God is misleading. Although human conduct does not affect God's essential character, God does respond to human actions. God expresses concern, sorrow, and disappointment over Israel's infidelity (Hs 11:1-11; Mal 1:6-9). Jeremiah declared that God repeatedly sought earnestly to warn His disobedient people but to no avail (e.g., Jr 7:13; 25:4-7; 32:33-35; 35:14-15; 44:4-6). Jesus lamented over Jerusalem's stubborn refusal to turn from disbelief and receive God's appointed means of reconciliation (Mt 23:37). As the believer's great High Priest, Jesus feels all the temptations that a Christian might face (Heb 4:13-16). The Holy Spirit can be grieved (Eph 4:30). God's goodness (Nah 1:7; Rm 2:4) toward man, His love for people (1 Jn 4:10), and His forgiveness all demonstrate that God cares for people (1 Pt 5:7) and has concern for their eternal destiny (2 Pt 3:9).

36:25 Elihu's observation flies in the face of those who say they have "seen" no evidence of God. The Scriptures affirm, "The heavens declare the glory of God" (Ps 19:1; cp. 8:1-4). Paul indicates that this natural revelation is sufficient to hold people accountable for knowing God and their conduct before Him (Rm 1:18-23).

36:31 Some critics suggest transposing this verse after verse 28. No textual evidence supports this view.

36:33 Despite dozens of interpretations and emendations to this verse, HCSB supports the simple meaning of the text. Even the cattle are aware of an approaching storm, which may herald the coming presence of the Judge of all the earth (Ps 96:13; 98:9; Ac 17:31).

37:9 Some critics suggest that "chamber" is an allusion either to the subterranean abode of the god El, mentioned in the texts from Ugarit (see note on 1:14-19), or the sacred chambers of the Mesopotamian god Ea. Others propose that it refers to the seven chambers of the winds of the earth. But the metaphor refers to God as the source of weather phenomena (Ps 135:7). The constellations of the southern sky are often called "chambers" (Jb 9:9, footnote).

37:18 Skeptics suggest a primitive cosmology is shown here, in which the sky is a dome made of solid bronze, fashioned like ancient mirrors. The simile, however, refers to a prolonged draught featuring a prevailing south wind. Under such conditions the sky seems like "cast metal." Similar metaphors are used of God's judgment via a draught that renders the sky like "bronze" and the earth like "iron" (Dt 28:23). Still other comparative metaphors of the expanse of the sky occur elsewhere (Ex 24:10; Ps 104:2; Is 40:22).

37:22 For information refuting the interpretation of "north" as a supposed mythological reference, see note on 26:7.

38:4-6 Some critics use this passage to assert that the Bible teaches that the earth stands on "pillars" (cp. 9:6), set on a foundation with a cornerstone, and built according to measured specifications. But throughout this chapter the imagery of creation is cast in bold metaphors designed for human understanding. The Lord's speeches should not be viewed as scientific treatises (see note on 26:7).

38:7 Some think the "morning stars" reflect ancient Near Eastern mythology in which stellar bodies were considered gods. But this interpretation ignores the obvious metaphor. For more on "the sons of God," see note on 1:6.

38:8-11 Critical attempts to relate the delineation of ocean boundaries only to Mesopotamian or Canaanite mythology overlook the varied metaphors here. Literal interpretation demands taking metaphors as metaphors.

38:19-20 This is another obvious metaphor. Light and darkness are likened to those who put in their work period and go home.

38:22-23 The storing of "snow" and "hail" in storehouses is metaphorical. Much as an army keeps its arsenal of weapons in an armory, so God's "weapons" are available to Him for use at the proper time of judgment, for "warfare and battle."

38:31-32 No reflection of Greek mythology in which Orion is chained in the sky should be read here. Uncertainty as to the identity of "the Bear and her cubs" should not obscure the fact that God controls all the constellations.

38:37 A colorful word-picture, comparing the raining clouds to "water jars of heaven," underscores the poetic quality of the book of Jb.

39:13-18 In these verses the style of the speech changes from rhetorical questions to narrative description. Some commentators, noting their omission from the Greek OT, have questioned their originality. Such stylistic variation, however, is common in poetry and is utilized in the verses that follow. The fact that God is referred to in the third person rather than the expected first person is not unusual in divine discourse (e.g., Ex 34:14; Jb 40:2; Hab 2:14, 20). The MT offers no support for dropping this passage.

39:14-16 The charge that the description of the ostrich is erroneous misses the point. The description conforms to popular perception rather than intending to be based upon scientific observation. The intention was to demonstrate Job's inability to comprehend the natural world. Nevertheless, the description contains some valid observations concerning the ostrich. She lays her eggs in the sand to be warmed by the sun(v. 14). Despite the eggs' thick shells, an extremely heavy foot might crush them (v. 15). Some females share the same nesting area so that a female may look disdainfully at the eggs (v. 16). The ostrich can run at great speeds (v. 18).

40:15-24 Although skeptics ridicule the existence of such a beast as this "Behemoth," critical scholars attempt to relate it to an ancient mythological beast. Some suggest an allusion to the "Bull of Heaven" found in the ancient Mesopotamian epic of Gilgamesh, others relate it to the monstrous, ferocious bullock that the goddess Anat defeated. Because Job is invited to consider a creature known to him (v. 15), most commentators identify Behemoth with some large, ferocious animal such as a buffalo, dinosaur, rhinoceros, or hippopotamus. Although all identifications are tenuous, the hippopotamus appears to be the most likely reference, despite the description of his short tail as being "like a cedar tree" (v. 17). Although Egyptian royalty regularly sponsored hunts for the hippopotamus, only God would metaphorically dare to face the Behemoth alone with a sword (v. 19).

41:1 For the critical view that Leviathan is drawn from Canaanite mythology, see note on 3:8. References to Leviathan are found elsewhere in the Bible, characteristically as metaphors to depict the enemies of God and Israel (e.g., Ps 74:14; 104:26; Is 27:1). Although some suggest that Leviathan was a whale or a great shark, most hold that the reference was to a crocodile. Like the hippopotamus (see note on 40:15-24), the crocodile was a hunted animal in Egypt. The appearance in successive chapters of Egypt's two most hunted animals supports the prevailing view concerning Behemoth and Leviathan. As in ancient Egypt, where the crocodile could symbolize royal power, so Leviathan may stand for a hostile force that only God can subdue (41:33-34). Similarly, God is portrayed as slaying the great dragon, Satan, in the eschaton (Rv 20:7-10).

41:25 "The mighty" can be translated "the divine beings," critics suggest a mythological reference in which the gods tremble before an impending disaster or trouble. But names for divinity are often used as superlatives (e.g., Ezk 31:11; 32:21). Thus whether they are people or other animals, "the mighty" are terrified.

42:1-7 This crucial passage reveals the key to the entire book of Jb. Job finally received the answer to the question of his unjust treatment, but the answer did not come in the form of a logical argument that vindicated either his righteousness or his friends' accusations against him. Instead—thanks, in part, to Elihu's intervention—Job came to a revelation of God's overwhelming majesty and, what is more, God had spoken to him at last. Job saw that, in questioning God's justice, he had spoken out of turn; God does the questioning ("When I question you, you will inform Me," v. 4). Job had "seen" the God of whom he had formerly only "heard rumors." This revelation moved Job to repentance (vv. 5-6). He had made much of his own integrity, failing to recognize Who was really in charge of the discussion all along.

42:7-17 A widely accepted theory of critical scholarship holds that the dialogues of the book of Jb were inserted into an original story in which Job displayed his proverbial "patience" and piety, while his friends found fault with both him and God. According to this theory, the ending (and beginning) of the book come from the old story, which would explain why Job appears to behave differently here from the way he responded in the dialogues with his friends. When one considers the logical method of Israelite wisdom literature, such a theory becomes unnecessary. Looking at the book as a whole, we see that Job (and his friends as well) proposed various answers to the problem of his suffering. Job considered it unmerited and demanded an explanation from God. The friends tried to explain it, defending God's justice. Yet in the end God told them, "You have not spoken the truth about Me, as My servant Job has" (v. 7). This sounds odd, since the friends' arguments sounded completely "orthodox" in terms of the Bible's general view of God's punishment of the guilty. What they failed to do—and which Job did—was to deal directly with God about the issue instead of just talking about Him. They felt they had to defend God, while Job "dared" God to speak for Himself—because God needs no defense.

Psalms Articles

What Does the Bible Teach About Human Beings?

by Russell D. Moore

According to the Bible, one of the most powerful apologetic arguments for the Christian faith is humanity itself. The Scriptures tell us that the wonder of the human body points to the creativity and genius of the Creator God in a way that should evoke both fear and awe (Ps 139:14). The human exercise of dominion over the created order reflects God's kingship over the universe (Gn 1:26), a kingship that is fully realized in the mediation of Christ Jesus (Eph 1:10). Man is created male and female in the image of God for a one-flesh union resulting in offspring, a union that foreshadows the reality of the Christ/church relationship (Eph 5:22-33).

The Bible tells us that the human conscience testifies to the content and the rightness of the law of the Creator. Although human beings sought to define good and evil apart from the authoritative Word of God (Jms 4:17), God nonetheless planted within all children of Adam a witness to His standards of good and evil. The fact that fallen humans acknowledge any standards of morality indicates that there is a transcendent code of law, somewhere above merely constructing societal rules and boundaries (Rm 2:12-16). Moreover, as the Apostle Paul pointed out, this conscience points beyond itself to a day of reckoning. When humans make moral choices—or make immoral choices using moral arguments—they are actually acknowledging that they know of a day in which God will judge all the secrets of the heart (Rm 2:16).

Regardless of how often fallen humans seek to classify themselves as merely biological, they know on the basis of their common rationality, morality, and search for meaning that this is not the case. No matter how many times Darwinians, for example, speak of humans as one more kind of animal, and no matter how many times some psychologists explain our behavior on the basis of evolutionary mechanisms, human beings know it just isn't so. We know there is something distinctive about us—which is why the Bible calls on us to appeal to the minds and consciences of unbelievers, even though the minds are blinded (2 Co 4:4) and the consciences are often calloused (1 Tm 4:2).

Therefore, the biblical witness about human beings stands in stark contrast with other belief systems. Unlike some Eastern religions, the Bible does not present the life of a human being as a cycle of incarnations, nor does it affirm, as Mormonism does, the preexistence of disembodied human spirits. Unlike many nature religions and various forms of pagan worship, the Bible does not present humanity as part of the larger "life force" of nature. Unlike Islam, the Bible affirms the freedom and responsibility of human beings as moral creatures before a God whose image they reflect. Unlike many psychological theories, the Bible does not reduce human motivations or actions to the interactions of unconscious desires, habitual patterns, or the firing of neurons. Unlike Marxism and libertarian capitalism, the Bible presents the longings of the human heart as far more than material. Unlike Gnosticism or feminism, God's good creative purposes are seen in the goodness and permanence of sexual differentiation, in the equal worth of the sexes as image bearers (Gn 2:27), and in the protective, sacrificial headship of men as fathers of families and leaders of tribes (1 Co 11:3). In contrast to rival belief systems, the Bible presents human beings as distinct from a nature they are called to govern (Ps 8:5-8), free to act according to their natures (Jos 24:15), responsible for actions before the tribunal of Christ (Rv 20:12-13), and created for conformity to the image of Jesus as joint heirs of a glorious new creation (Rm 8:17,29). The doctrine of the image of God grants value to every human life, regardless of its vulnerability or stage of development (Gn 9:6), and it stands in eternal hostility to any form of racial bigotry or nation-state idolatry (Ac 17:25-27).

The Bible's truthfulness about human depravity contrasts strongly with belief systems that are more optimistic about human nature, such as Mormonism, Scientology, or secularism. Human sin is an apologetic issue since a Christian framework explains how educated, rational, loving persons can bring forth cruelty, violence, and hatred. The biblical teaching on sin also answers what may be the most persistent charge against the truthfulness of Christianity: Christian hypocrisy.

Likewise, the prevalence of world religions and ideologies, which is often used as an objection to Christianity, actually serves as an apologetic argument for Christian claims. The Bible tells us that the universal instinct to worship and to interpret reality is grounded in the revelation of God and that the universal suppression of this truth leads to diverse idolatries (Rm 1:18-32). We should not be surprised, then, that literally every human civilization in history has had some practice of worship, but also that cults, world religions, and even secular ideologies often ape some aspects of Christian truth. Nor should we be surprised, as the ancient book of Ecclesiastes illustrates, when the human quest for sensual gratification, material abundance, or the wielding of power apart from the Creator's purposes leads to despair.

Notable Christian Apologist: Anselm

by Ted Cabal

Born in what would be modern-day Italy, Anselm (A.D. 1033–1109) was raised by a father who resisted his son's desire for a life of scholarly devotion. His mother, however, instilled in him a vision and love of God. Through his unwavering commitment Anselm became not only a Christian scholar but eventually also a celebrated teacher and the archbishop of Canterbury. Like the earlier scholar and churchman Augustine, Anselm sought to better understand the faith he already believed. In the classic Why God Became Man, Anselm produced what has become the standard view of the atonement: God alone can satisfy the infinite demands of His righteous wrath—and He graciously does so through the saving work of the God-man, Jesus Christ.

Written in a spirit of prayer, Anselm's Proslogion presents one of the most controversial and fascinating arguments for God's existence—the so-called ontological argument (argument from being). When a fool says in his heart that there is no God (Ps 14:1), he demonstrates that he understands what is meant by the term God, namely "that than which nothing greater can be conceived." And anything that can be conceived not to exist is not God. Thus God cannot be conceived not to exist. Or in other terms, God would not be that than which nothing greater can be conceived if He existed only in one's mind, for it is greater to exist in reality than in thought alone. Hence God must exist. In response to charges that the argument is unsound, Anselm expounded the argument further by noting that God is a necessary being, that is, a being whose uncaused self-existence accounts for the existence of all other contingent things.

Does the Cosmological Argument Show There Is a God?

by J. P. Moreland

The cosmological argument starts with the existence of the universe and reasons to the existence of God as the best explanation of the universe. There are different forms of the argument. Two important versions are the Leibnizian and Thomist arguments, which are named, respectively, after Gottfried W. Leibniz (A.D. 1646–1716) and Thomas Aquinas (A.D. 1225–1274). In recent years a third version has become prominent and it may be the most effective of all: the kalam cosmological argument, which can be diagrammed as a series of alternatives:

Universe
Beginning No Beginning
Caused Uncaused
Personal Impersonal

The defender of the argument tries to establish one horn of each dilemma and thus to argue for these three premises:

1. The universe had a beginning.
2. The beginning of the universe was caused.
3. The cause of the beginning of the universe was personal.

One philosophical argument for premise 1 involves the impossibility of creating an actual infinite number of events. For example, if you start counting 1, 2, 3, . . . , then you could count forever and never reach a time when an actual infinite amount of numbers had been counted. Your counting could continue forever but would always be finite; that is, it would have some point of ending. If the universe had no beginning, then the number of events crossed to reach the present moment would be actually infinite because the universe would be infinite. It would be like counting to zero from negative infinity. Since one cannot have an actual infinite, then the present moment could never have arrived if the universe had no beginning. Since the present is real, it had to have been preceded by a finite past; therefore, there was a beginning or first event!

One scientific argument for premise 1 derives from the second law of thermodynamics, which in one form states that the amount of useful energy in the universe is being used up. If the universe were infinitely old, it would already have used up all its useful energy and have arrived at a temperature of absolute zero. Since there are many pockets of useful energy (for example, the sun), the universe must be finite in duration. Therefore, there was a beginning when the universe's useful energy was put into it "from the outside."

Premise 2 is confirmed by universal experience with no clear counterexamples. Alleged cases where something comes from nothing actually involve one thing coming into existence from something else (for example, lead from uranium).

Evidence for premise 3 derives from the fact that since time, space, and matter did not exist earlier than the beginning of the universe, the universe's cause had to be timeless, spaceless, and immaterial. This cause cannot be physical or subject to scientific law since all such causes presuppose time, space, and matter to exist. The universe's immaterial cause was timeless, spaceless, and had the power to spontaneously bring the world into existence without changing first to do so. (If it had to change before bringing the world into existence, then that change, not the act of bringing the world into existence, would be the first event.) Such a cause must have free will, and since only persons have free will, it is a personal Creator.

Is Beauty in the Eye of the Beholder?

by David A. Horner

The answer to this question is yes—and no. Beauty involves both subjective and objective elements, both taste and truth, which is why there is often confusion about it.

The ability to perceive beauty does involve a kind of taste, which can be either cultivated and trained or distorted and dulled. Some instances of beauty are perceptible only to those who have cultivated a taste for them through disciplined practice. For example, trained musicians hear subtle distinctions of tone that others miss, and painters see additional hues in the sunset. In a fallen world we can lose our taste for beauty through inattention, self-absorption, and suffering. We can even develop a taste for what is ugly.

Beauty itself, however, is objective, a matter of truth. Tones and hues are real properties of music and sunsets; they are there whether or not we are sensitive enough to perceive them. The way we experience beauty shows this. We are struck by something beautiful. We may even be surprised by it—it takes our breath away. We respond to it with spontaneous expressions of awe, gratitude, appreciation, or reverence. These reactions show we don't really think it is beautiful merely because we think it's beautiful. We are responding to the beauty it has, independently of us. What is truly beautiful merits such a response.

Ultimately, beauty is grounded in the nature of God Himself, the supremely beautiful Person (Ps 27:4), and then in His creation, which reflects His beautiful intentions and artistry (Gn 1; Ps 50:2). The created order is magnificently diverse in its beauty, meaning we can see beauty in a variety of things that can all be considered beautiful (Ec 3:11).

There are deep connections among goodness, truth, and beauty (e.g., goodness is a kind of moral beauty; Php 4:8). The full meaning of the Hebrew word shalom conveys this rich biblical picture. More than merely "peace," shalom is the uniting and flowering of truth, goodness, and beauty in the wholeness of life. However, the fall has broken shalom and as a result sin has introduced ugliness into the world. Evil is not only false and bad but ugly (for instance, pornography is an ugly distortion of God's beautiful created context of sexuality). Thus our experiences of beauty are often distorted—and even dangerous, when we worship beauty instead of God (Gn 3:6; Rm 1:21-25).

Each of us needs beauty in our lives, relationships, work, and worship. We are made for it and we long for it. Our hunger for beauty is an expression of our fundamental human longing for shalom—ultimately for shalom with God (Rm 5:1).

Beauty has value for apologetics in the sense that it is part of the common ground we share with all people, since we are made in the image of God and live in a God-created world. Beauty points beyond the physical cosmos to the Creator. Like goodness and truth, beauty is not a physical property, measurable by science, and its reality indicates that the physical world is not all there is. The beauty of the world points to the nature of the Divine Artist whose handiwork it is. And the fundamental human longing for beauty, for shalom, is a hunger that cannot ultimately be satisfied in this fallen world—it is a clue that we were made for more than this life (Ec 3:11).

Does Science Support the Bible?

by Walter L. Bradley

Introduction

Two major areas of scientific inquiry can in principle either support or undermine the Bible, namely, what science tells us about the nature of our universe and planet and what it can tell us about the history of our universe and planet. Biblical theism describes a God who is immediately responsible for all physical reality, with the laws of nature seen as descriptions of God's customary way of caring for His creatures (as in Col 1:17). Biblical theism also affirms that God sometimes works in extraordinary (or supernatural) ways to shape and care for His creation (Gn 1:1). The challenge is, can the biblical and scientific pictures of our universe and planet be harmonized?

Our Remarkable Home

One of the most surprising scientific developments of the twentieth and early twenty-first centuries has been the discovery of the many remarkable features of our universe and planet that are essential to make it such an ideal habitat for life. First, we need a sufficient diversity of elements, combined with a relative abundance of certain critical elements, to make possible the production of complex "molecular machines" capable of processing energy, storing information, and replicating molecules such as RNA, DNA, and protein. Second, at least one element in this complexity of life must be capable of serving as a ready connector, reacting with essentially all elements to form bonds that are stable but not too stable to be broken during "reuse"; carbon is such an element. Third, we must have an individual element or compound that is liquid at certain temperatures on planet earth and very abundant and that can serve as a universal solvent. This liquid must be capable of dissolving most elements and/or compounds essential to the chemistry of life; that describes water. Fourth, we need long-term sources of energy that fit with the chemical energy in the carbon bonds so that this energy can fuel the chemical reactions we find in the carbon-based, chain molecules that are essential to life.

At least 50 such requirements have been identified, all necessary for life to exist in our universe.

God's Remarkable Design

God has satisfied the many requirements for life in three remarkable ways: the elegant mathematical form that is encoded in nature and that we call "the laws of nature"; the fine-tuning of the 19 universal constants (e.g., the speed of light, the gravity force constant, the mass of the electron, and the unit charge); and the unbelievably demanding initial conditions that God had to set. For example, the ratio of the strong force constant to the electromagnetic force constant must fall within a window of 5 percent of the actual ratio if we are to have elemental diversity and a star like our sun that gives a long-term, stable source of energy. To match the energy of the light from the sun to the chemical bonding energy in organic compounds, six of the universal constants have to be carefully tailored to each other. The speed of light (c), the mass of the electron (m_e), the mass of the proton (m_p), Planck's constant (h), the gravity force constant, and the unit charge must have carefully matched magnitudes that satisfy the following algebraic equation:

$$m_p^2 \cdot G/[h\ c] >\sim [e^2/\{hc\}]^{12} [me/mp]^4$$

Remarkably, these six constants do have exactly the right relative values for the energy from the sun to be matched precisely to that needed to facilitate critical chemical reactions in organic molecules.

Many scientists have remarked with admiration about this amazing characteristic of our universe. For example, the famous English astronomer Sir Fred Hoyle commented, "A common sense interpretation of the facts suggests that a super intellect has 'monkeyed' with the physics as well as the chemistry and biology, and there are no blind forces worth speaking about in nature."

Possibly the most impressive scientific achievement of twentieth century was the discovery of DNA, upon which is encoded the information of life. That such a remarkable information storage system exists, and that the DNA molecules have somehow come to be encoded with the precise information needed for life, is the climax to an amazing testimony from science of God's providential care for us in His creation. For example, for the accidental origin of the cytochrome-C molecule to have the required sequencing of the various amino acids has a probability of only 1 in 10^{60}.

These findings from recent science give an even more profound significance to Paul's testimony in Rm 1:20 that God's divinity can be seen even in the invisible elements of His universe.

Can We Harmonize Genesis 1 and Science?

While the scientific discoveries of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries have strengthened belief in a Designer/Creator, highly publicized conflicts between science and the Bible such as the Scopes "Monkey Trial" have eroded confidence in the biblical inferences about natural history found in Genesis 1–2. This conflict is the result of unsubstantiated scientific claims and unnecessarily limited interpretations of Genesis 1–2 (whether they be of the liberal or conservative variety).

The unsupported claim from science is that the origin of life and its progression from simple to complex forms are achieved by molecular selection and mutation/natural selection respectively. While this synthesis of mutation/natural selection adequately explains how organisms become more adapted to their environment and how incremental improvement in existing characteristics might occur, it seems incapable of explaining the origin of multicomponent systems, such as the human eye. New multicomponent systems would have no advantage from natural selection until the individual parts had already evolved to an advanced stage of development. Yet without natural selection to guide this development, it is almost impossible to imagine how complex, multicomponent systems can originate. Biochemist Michael Behe has dubbed this process "Darwin's black box"—a whimsical term for a device that does something but whose inner workings cannot be seen and sometimes are not comprehensible.

Notable Christian Apologist: Joseph Butler

by Ted Cabal

Joseph Butler (1692–1752) received an Oxford University education, was made bishop of Bristol and later Durham, and became chaplain to the queen of England. But prestige did not dominate his interests; rather, he was concerned about the defense of the Christian faith. In his day Enlightenment views prevailed in Europe. While faith and revelation were increasingly spurned or ridiculed, confidence in reason and science was rising. Biblical Christianity was openly attacked as irrational and superstitious. The intellectual elite regarded deism, with its disavowal of any divine activity after creation, as the true religion. Deism could not accept the supernatural involvement of the biblical God in history.

Butler's Analogy of Religion undermined the deists by employing the very reasoning they used to attack the Bible. He claimed that if biblical revelation is to be doubted due to its difficulties and mysteries, then science should also be disbelieved. The same kinds of obscurities and unanswered questions are part of science, yet deists were all too quick to trumpet science as the new revelation. This example of inconsistent thinking, Butler argued, did not exalt the rationality honored by intellectuals. If anything, the common patterns in nature and the Bible point to one and the same Author. And if deists believed in the grandest of miracles, the creation of the universe, then why should they doubt the lesser miracles of the Bible? Butler's Analogy mightily rebutted deism in his generation and became a standard text at Cambridge and Oxford for more than a century.

If God Made the Universe, Who Made God?

by Paul Copan

Atheist philosopher Bertrand Russell mused, "If everything must have a cause, then God must have a cause." But the question of what or who caused God is misguided.

First, science supports the notion that the universe had a beginning and that something independent of the universe brought it into being. The well-accepted scientific belief in the universe's origination and expansion and the second law of thermodynamics (energy tends to spread out) support the universe's absolute beginning from nothing. This sounds remarkably like Gn 1:1! The chances of a thing's popping into being from literally nothing are exactly zero. Being cannot come from nonbeing; there's no potential for this. Even skeptic David Hume called this "absurd"—a scientific (real) impossibility.

Second, believers reject the claim "Everything that exists has a cause" and affirm "Whatever begins to exist has a cause." To say "Everything needs a cause" would necessarily exclude an uncaused God. This is "question begging" (assuming what needs to be proved). It's like presuming that since all reality is physical (which can't be demonstrated), a nonphysical God cannot exist.

Third, why think everything needs a cause, since an uncaused entity is logical and intelligible? Through the centuries, many believed that the universe didn't need a cause; it was self-existent. They thought a beginningless/uncaused universe wasn't illogical or impossible. But now that contemporary cosmology points to the universe's beginning and an external cause, skeptics insist everything needs a cause after all!

Fourth, a good number of uncaused things exist. Logical laws are real; we can't think coherently without using them (e.g., the law of identity, X = X, tells you: "This book is this book"). Moral laws or virtues (love, justice) are real. But none of these began to exist. They are eternal and uncaused (being in God's mind).

Fifth, the question "Who made God?" commits the category fallacy. To say that all things, even God, must be caused is incoherent—like the question "How does the color green taste?" Why fault God for being uncaused? When we rephrase the question to say, "What caused the self-existent, uncaused Cause, who is by definition unmade, to exist?" the answer is obvious.

How Should a Christian Understand the Age of the Earth Controversy?

by Ted Cabal

Only three major Bible-science controversies have confronted the church: (1) the Copernican controversy, (2) the Darwinian controversy, and (3) the age-of-the-earth controversy. The question about the age of the earth did not become significantly heated until the latter third of the twentieth century. The primary disputants today are young- and old-earth creationists (YCs and OCs); theistic evolutionists and those not holding to biblical inerrancy have little interest in the issue. The debate does not pertain to dating Adam's creation, since both sides believe this occurred only thousands, not millions, of years ago. Nor is the controversy about the age of the universe, because some YCs believe in an old universe. And both creationist camps oppose Darwinian common descent. What is needed is a clearer understanding of both sides and a discussion of how significant an issue this is for biblical faith.

Some OCs contribute to the controversy by contending that YCs undercut biblical credibility with an artificial clash between science and Scripture. The biggest source of the controversy, however, is the contention of some YCs that only belief in a young earth is doctrinally acceptable. Some YCs believe this doctrine is so clear that its rejection compromises biblical authority. While OCs agree that biblical genealogies teach the recent creation of Adam, they don't agree that Scripture teaches that the creation days were consecutive 24-hour periods. (See the article "Are the Days of Genesis to Be Interpreted Literally?" p. 4.)

Some YCs argue that old-earth views, by placing animal death before the fall, conflict with Romans 5:12. OCs respond that Romans 5:12 says nothing about animal death. The Apostle Paul's context treats only of sin and death's entrance into the human race.

Some YCs worry that old-earth interpretations make the Bible subservient to science. And it is true that old-earth interpretations arose due to the (pre-Darwinian) discovery of enormous numbers of extinct animals such as dinosaurs. But this same data also led YCs to interpret Scripture in light of science (such as interpreting the book of Jb to describe dinosaurs). Indeed, some YCs have suggested plate tectonics as the possible interpretation for Genesis 10:25, and some offer a young-earth "big bang" interpretation of the first four creation days. Moreover, virtually all creationists now believe biblical descriptions of a stationary earth and revolving sun are from a human observational standpoint and are not intended as technical scientific descriptions.

Some YCs charge OCs with caving in to evolutionary theory, alleging the "long ages" are synonymous with the evolutionary system. Macroevolutionary theory needs an old earth, but inferring that old-earth views are thereby macroevolutionary is to commit a logical fallacy (x and y regularly occur together; therefore, x is the cause of y). By this same logic, YCs can be charged with accommodating naturalistic views for accepting "microevolution" (the idea that species change over time); Darwinian macroevolution needs microevolution, but this does not entail the two being synonymous. Neo-Darwinists contend that the layers of fossil strata constitute the main evidence for macroevolution. But YCs and OCs agree that this same fossil record, with its scarcity of credible transitional fossils, does not reveal a history of common biological descent. YCs typically understand fossils as depositions from Noah's flood, and OCs view them as artifacts of supernatural creative acts separated by long time spans.

Some YCs even contend that OCs have contributed to the demise of Western culture, but such contentions are historically unjustified. References by YCs to OCs as "evangelical evolutionists," "semi-creationists," or "compromisers" have clouded rather than clarified the debate. Indeed, YCs are not agreed as to just what is "evolutionary" in matters such as ice ages, star formation, and the origins of species.

A lesson from a past controversy may be helpful. Early in the twentieth century, some held the pretribulational rapture to be central to the faith. Great controversy followed, but eventually most Bible believers realized the issue was not worthy of such contention. Perhaps one day this will be true of the age-of-the-earth controversy. Creationist leaders should work hard to understand the data. And exploring, holding, and promoting various creationist views are legitimate projects. But promoting the controversy as a basis for disunity in the church is another matter altogether.

Does the Bible Provide Guidance Regarding Human Cloning?

by R. Albert Mohler Jr.

When Dolly the cloned sheep was born in 1997, few thoughtful persons could avoid wondering whether this stunning new technology would soon be used to clone a human being. Now human cloning has become an issue of immediate, urgent, and universal importance. The cloning of a human being represents a radical break with the human past and with the established patterns of human life. It also raises a host of ethical questions: Who would be the "parents" of a cloned child? In an age of patented forms of life, could a cloned being be "owned," at least in genetic pattern? Will parents seek to clone children in order to provide organs for transplant into another child?

These are but a few of the many pressing questions that will demand answers, and the worldview of secular humanism provides only tentative and provisional answers. The fact is that only the Christian worldview—revealed in God's Word—can provide us with an ethical context and authority adequate to address such questions.

The biblical creation account presents the creation of human beings as the pinnacle of God's creative purpose. After creating the world and filling it with living creatures, God purposed to create human beings. The human creature—set apart from all other creatures—would bear the imago Dei, the image of God.

Though the image of God in human beings has been corrupted by sin, it has not been removed, and this image is an essential mark of true humanity. Each human being is a special creation of God, made in His own image. Each is unique by design of the Creator. The status of human beings as created beings, each unique but all bearing the image of God, establishes a foundation for theological understanding—and for answering the questions raised by human cloning.

This understanding also makes clear the decisive distinction between the biblical and secular conceptions of human nature and value. The nonbiblical understanding of humanity rejects any conception of divine purpose. Human beings are cosmic accidents—the incredible by-products of blind evolutionary process. Any value thus ascribed to human life is arbitrary, tentative, and self-centered.

The Bible, on the other hand, teaches that human beings, like all of creation, were created in order to glorify God. But humans were created with a distinct and unique capacity to know, revere, worship, and glorify the Creator. He made human beings, male and female, of His own good pleasure, in His own image, and to His own sovereign purpose. Thus human beings are not mere biological artifacts nor accidental forms of life.

Human cloning represents an effort to redefine human identity and human reproduction by allowing individuals to replicate themselves. This reality cannot be separated from the related questions of "designer" children, human-enhancement technologies, eugenics, and sexuality. Furthermore, the use of cloning technology in human embryonic stem cell research undermines human dignity and will eventually lead to an expansion of human cloning for other purposes.

The artificiality of cloning technology undermines marriage by further separating sex and reproduction. Human cloning—whatever its form—violates the sanctity of human life as revealed in Scripture.

ARTICLE

What Does the Bible Say About Abortion?

by Nigel Cameron

The intentional taking of life before birth is not new. Though adoption of "abortion rights" as a progressive political cause in Western societies is recent, abortion has been practiced in every culture from ancient times. Indeed, one of the signal achievements of the spread of the gospel in the Greco-Roman world was to push this practice and its close sibling, infanticide, to the margins of society. In classical paganism, while it was sometimes controversial, abortion (like euthanasia) was common and widely approved. The ancient physicians who took the Hippocratic oath, whose medical vision was powered by saving life and not taking it, were swimming upstream. It was the church of Jesus Christ that swept through the later Roman world as the great pro-life movement, setting standards in medicine, culture, and public policy that still condition the thinking of fractured Christendom in the twenty-first century.

Readers who seek abortion in a concordance are unlikely to find it, and as a result believers have sometimes suggested that Scripture is silent on the subject and that therefore we may do as we please. Such a conclusion depends on some serious misunderstandings. The biblical foundations of a comprehensive prohibition on induced abortion lie deep, in the doctrines of creation and incarnation.

The starting point for a biblical understanding of human nature is the truth that human beings are created in God's image. It is clear from Genesis 1:26-27 that this applies to all those who are members of the human species. Homo sapiens is distinguished from all other "kinds" by our bearing the likeness of our Maker. The image is specifically stated to have been given to women as well as men and to remain after the fall (Gn 9:6). And it applies to Jew and Gentile, religious and irreligious, young and old, those in the flower of human ability as well as the disabled and sick. The imago Dei is what makes us the beings we are and it is in place wherever there are members of our species. The question of which beings bear the image is one of species membership and therefore genetics.

While extraordinarily difficult issues are raised by the prospect of human-animal hybrids (and also, perhaps, humanoid robots), the issue here is simple. If someone is a member of the human species, that person bears the divine image. Therefore, his or her life is sacred. With this single recognition, we find the basis of biblical bioethics and immediate answers to many of the most pressing questions in contemporary medicine and bioscience. It provides a straightforward response to the issue of induced abortion, since the commandment "Do not murder" (Ex 20:13) therefore applies to all human beings, from the beginning of life to its end. And this command is explicitly rooted in the bearing of the divine image in Genesis 9:6, in the ironic context of the provision for capital punishment: "Whoever sheds man's blood, his blood shall be shed by man, for God made man in His image."

This species principle is of central importance to debate about human embryos, as researchers have developed techniques using in vitro fertilization and cloning, making it possible to use embryos for destructive research. The biblical position is unambiguous: those who are part of the species, made in the divine image, should not be murdered.

The second foundation lies in the doctrine of the incarnation. As if to illustrate this creation principle of the species-wide bearing of the image, in His incarnation the Son of God, the second Person of the Trinity, took human form and did so from the beginning of human biological existence. When in the "sixth month" (Lk 1:36, a reference not to the calendar but to the advanced state of her cousin Elizabeth's pregnancy) Mary was told by the angel that she would conceive by a miracle, the human life of the Son of God began. Shortly afterward she visited Elizabeth, and we witness John the Baptist's first testimony to his kinsman and his Lord as a six-month fetus leaped in his mother's womb at the presence of the days-old embryonic Jesus (Lk 1:39-45).

In light of these basic theological affirmations, the many incidental references to unborn life in the OT—in the prophets, Job, and especially Psalms—take on powerful significance (for example, Ps 139:13 and the following verses).

The one biblical text sometimes offered as a counterargument is in Exodus 21:22 and following, which refers to the appropriate punishment to be applied if men, while fighting, accidentally hit a woman and cause her to miscarry. There are varying translations of the passage, but it has no relevance to the debate about deliberate abortion, since it refers to manslaughter of the unborn child and not to deliberate killing.

Introduction to Psalms

AUTHORS

The book of Psalms is the largest collection of ancient lyrical poetry in existence. As part of the Bible, this poetry is of course religious; it expresses the emotions of believers as they are stirred by the thought of God and developments in the life of faith. The feelings of joy and pain, fear and security, triumph and tragedy, confidence and doubt, hope and despair are expressed with piety and reverence but honestly and boldly.

The reader is sometimes taken aback by the blunt and powerful words that the psalmists used. But these folk were often in life-and-death situations, attacked by ruthless and cruel enemies, betrayed by friends, or in natural dangers as they traveled the land. Because there was no lasting peace and no sense of security, life was a daily challenge. Yet they were convinced that the Lord reigned over the affairs of men, and so they rejoiced over the law of God as their guide.

Whenever the Lord demonstrated His sovereignty by direct intervention in their affairs, they praised Him. When God's intervention did not seem to be forthcoming, they lamented over their dilemmas and prayed more earnestly. When the affairs of life seemed unfair, they analyzed the wisdom of God's decisions. But in every case they reaffirmed their hope in His loyal love and their commitment to serving Him. That is why the works collected here became the prayer and hymnbook of the temple.

The superscriptions (those little notices that later editors of the collection added to the heads of some psalms to clarify the purpose of the pieces, their melody, or the performers) frequently include notations of authorship. About half the psalms are attributed to David with the brief prepositional phrase "of David." Critical scholars, wishing to date most of the psalms to a much later period (at least the post-exilic period, if not the Maccabean period [c. 150 B.C.]), contend that this preposition (lamed) should be translated "for" rather than "of," because that was its most frequent meaning. The passages would then be dedicated to David but written by others. Of course, many modern scholars simply write off the superscriptions as spurious additions. They may concede that David could have written a number of the psalms, but they say that most of the psalms were written much later and that even the Davidic compositions were heavily edited.

However, there is more than enough evidence to sustain the traditional view that David wrote at least half these psalms, and many of the others were written in the nation's early period rather than later (although some psalms, such as Ps 126, were definitely post-exilic). First, Scripture attests that David was a singer of songs, a composer, and the primary organizer of temple music (2 Sm 6:5; 1 Ch 15:3-28; 16:4-43; 23:1-5). Second, the NT often cites passages from the Psalter and attributes Davidic authorship to them or uses his name in general for the whole collection. Third, the literary form of the psalms, with its parallelism and meter, common vocabulary, and use of verbal forms, finds identical use in the poetry of Canaan dating from some 400 years before David. There is no reason to date the book of Psalms later on the basis of style and vocabulary. Fourth, there is ample evidence in the Bible (Hab 3:1) and outside the Bible (see the early Hebrew ostraca) to support the use of the preposition lamed as an indicator of the author or sender of a document.

Certainly, each psalm must be studied in its totality because the preposition can be used in different ways, even within the heading. But if the "lamed of authorship" stands, then we have the ancient traditions that Moses wrote Psalm 90, David wrote 73 of the psalms, Psalms 50 and 73–83 came from Asaph or his descendants, Heman the Ezrahite wrote Psalm 88, Ethan the Ezrahite wrote Psalm 89, and Solomon wrote Psalms 72 and 127. The rest are anonymous. At times the preposition is used to indicate that the psalm was "for the choir director" or to be sung by "the sons of Korah," or for a number of other purposes. The psalms were written over the centuries, then, by different people, beginning with Moses (Ps 90) and culminating with those who returned from the captivity (Ps 126).

The many superscriptions to the psalms, whether notes of authorship, occasion, performance, or musical notations, may not have been part of the original composition. But they record the ancient traditions about the origin and use of the psalms and therefore may be taken seriously as part of the study of the collection.

A BOOK OF PRAISE

The collection is called the book of Psalms based on its Greek title. (A psalm is a composition sung to the accompaniment of stringed instruments; the word is mizmor in Hebrew, psalmos in Greek.) The Hebrew title is the book of Praises, or more simply, Praises. This is most fitting for the collection because almost all the psalms include praise one way or another. Even lament psalms progress from prayer to praise, the praise often offered as a vow to be fulfilled in the sanctuary once God answered the prayer. The type of psalm indicates whether the praise is current or vowed; English translation cannot always clarify this.

Because the psalms capture the religious ideas of the Israelites, many of them were given over to the temple for use in the services. Accordingly, they often exult in the privilege of entering God's courts and drawing near to His altar and celebrate the ordinances of the sanctuary ritual. Many of the psalms contain lines that formed the liturgy of the temple and later of the church. This function of the psalms, as well as their display of personal religious feelings, make them the most powerful expression of the worship of ancient Israel, both of individual piety and of communal celebration at the great festivals.

The psalms are written in a more concentrated form of discourse than other literary forms, with more consciously artistic elements—images, symbols, figures of speech, emotive vocabulary, and multiple meanings. Often the reader has to become familiar with the way their poetic discourse works in order to gain the full and intended meaning of the texts. Figurative language is used to express more than straightforward propositional statements can express, for it conveys both emotional and intellectual connotations and draws on the culture and history with allusions and references. To understand the psalms and their impact, one must try to live in that culture and sense Israel's experience among pagan neighbors who usually sought to destroy them. Then one will better understand the hope of the psalms for the Lord to reign over all the nations and more greatly appreciate their praise for what the Lord has done.

Being a hymnbook, Psalms is filled with references to music and musical instruments. Some of these are in the superscriptions to the psalms; others are in the text, where the psalms themselves call for praise with all manner of instruments (some of which we know and some of which we do not). The reader must recognize that these are not simply contemplative poems to be studied but hymns and prayers to be sung and prayed. Accordingly, meter and musical accompaniment served to fix the words in the minds of the people more than any other form could do.

THE RELIABILITY OF THE PSALMS

Over the years, the book of Psalms has been approached in different ways. For a long while the psalms were studied for dogma without much consideration given to what they revealed about Israelite worship, even though they were sung in liturgical services. After the Reformation, with the development of higher criticism, studies began to appear that applied the same critical approach that was used for other books of the Bible, focusing on philology, poetic structure, and theological ideas; this led to dating the psalms much later. On the more traditional side, scholars tried to identify the historical settings out of which the psalms had come, even if there was little to go on.

In the early 1900s, form critical studies provided a somewhat more positive approach to critical studies, making the reader aware of ancient literary forms and their functions, especially in conjunction with the ritual acts of Israel's worship. Form critical scholars also sought to determine the setting out of which each psalm grew, depending more on the form and function than on the occasional historical reference. Such an identification is not often possible. But the approach did distinguish types of psalms—laments, declarative praises, descriptive praises, royal psalms, pilgrim psalms, enthronement psalms, and wisdom psalms, as well as a number of others based on these. Many form critical scholars, however, have tried to trace the development of each psalm to its final form, a task that is probably impossible (there is no evidence) and certainly unnecessary (the final form of the text is the canonical text we study and expound). Attempts to decide what was written earlier and what came later in a psalm have not been convincing.

Modern studies have focused on the biblical theology of the psalms. The main theme running through the collection is the reign of the Lord and how that reign is established over all creation. The praises of Israel celebrate every step in the establishment of that reign; they pray for God's will to be done on earth as it is in heaven. Within the psalms the hope of the great coming King begins to take shape, not often, but rather dramatically in places. Thus, the psalms not only express the faith of ancient Israel as it sought to live in this world but also point to the One who would perfectly fulfill the divine Word and establish the kingdom of God.

For the Christian who reads the psalms, many of the passages about the kingdom speak clearly of the person and work of Jesus the Messiah. Moreover, many psalms point to Him as indirect prophecies of His suffering, death, and resurrection or as appropriate descriptions of His obedient life in the midst of enemies. Many of these so-called messianic passages were recognized as such by Jewish interpreters before Jesus was born and thus cannot be explained away as Christian readings of the texts. The Spirit of God was so directing the hearts and minds of the psalmists, especially David, that the words they used to express their own experiences were designed by God not only to fit the historical occasion but also to be fulfilled perfectly in the person and work of the Son of God, not only in His first coming but also in His coming in glory to reign.

There is also substantial agreement about the original text of the psalms. The Hebrew original is largely preserved in the Masoretic Text, clearly the superior text type due to its marks of authenticity. The Greek translation is a serviceable work, capturing for the most part the meaning of the verses in the contexts. But rather than preserving the rugged original, it often smoothes out the difficulties, using familiar words, or general words for specific ones, and clarifying difficult constructions. The Dead Sea Scrolls have confirmed that the text preserved in the Masoretic tradition is much earlier than the Masoretic manuscripts we have. In short, we can be fairly certain we have the original text of Psalms preserved for us in the manuscripts. When there are variant readings, the proper use of textual criticism almost always determines the correct text.

Whenever the NT quotes the Psalter, it is usually from the Greek translation (or translations) because it was easier for communicating to the widening Greek-speaking world. Frequently the Greek text is not precise in its translation, but its wording captures the sense of the context and provided the NT writers with a biblical text to use in their expositions and instructions. On a few occasions the Greek wording appears to be significantly different. Therefore, each case of a Greek citation from the intertestamental period has to be studied on its own merits to see its meaning and how it is being applied in the NT.

Psalms Study Notes

Ps 1 This psalm, which introduces the entire collection in the book of Ps by describing the type of person who reads and uses them, belongs more to the category of "wisdom" than to that of the hymns and prayers that make up most of the book. Wisdom literature is concerned with the conflicting lifestyles of believers and unbelievers, emphasizing that only divine judgment will end the inequity of life and bring reward to the righteous.

1:1 The word "happy" (Hb 'ashrei, "blessedness of") refers to the joy and satisfaction that comes from knowing that one is right with God, even though at times conflict with the world may bring difficulties. Such blessedness is the opposite of the "curse" (see Ex 19:8; 24:3,7; Lv 26:14-39; Dt 11:26; 28:1-68) that takes effect as a result of disobedience to the Lord's commands. The use of "man" in biblical literature refers to persons in general, here any believer who is trying to live in obedience to God. The "advice" of unbelievers may be necessary in matters of commerce, law, medicine or other technical fields, but chapter 1 is concerned with spiritual matters such as ethics, morality, and faithfulness to the Lord in daily life.

1:2 Meditation involves studying a passage of Scripture, memorizing it, praying about it, and exhorting oneself to fulfill it (42:5,11; 63:6; 119:9-10). Spiritual success depends on the constant study and application of God's Word (Dt 6:6-9; Jos 1:8).

1:3 The promise of prosperity is qualified by the context: "whatever he does" will be determined by living in obedience to the Scriptures—that is what will prosper.

1:4 The word translated "wicked" in Ps (rasha') is a general term for an unbeliever (10:2,4,13 and many other places), someone who is not a member of the covenant and not living in obedience to God. Although perhaps appearing to be a good person, such a one is capable of great evil (50:16-20) through his lack of regard for the Lord. Imagery from the harvest is common in contexts of judgment. Chaff, the dried husks surrounding the kernels, has to be separated from the grain by winnowing so it can blow away (35:5; Is 17:13; Mt 3:12). The comparison of those who ignore or rebel against God with chaff indicates that their life is worthless and will be removed in the judgment.

1:5 The word translated "righteous" in the OT (tsaddiq) refers to a member of the covenant who seeks to live righteously; it is a description of the true believer. The righteous are not sinless, but they seek to maintain a right relationship with the Lord.

1:6 "Watches over" (Hb yodea', "knows") has the force of "saves" or "delivers," because it expresses the opposite of the "ruin" in the parallel half of the verse (see also Ex 2:25). Jesus will say to the unbelievers, "I never knew you" (Mt 7:23). If the Lord "knows" the way of the righteous, they will be protected from the judgment (Ps 37:12-17,28-29).

Ps 2 Royal psalms focus on some high point in the life of the king—here his coronation. Because Jesus was raised from the dead, the NT writers saw that He is the Messiah or anointed King, Son of David par excellence (e.g., Ac 2:22-36). Accordingly, they understood that these "royal psalms" found their fullest meaning in Christ (e.g., Mk 1:11; 9:7; Heb 1:5).

2:1 "Nations" refers primarily to the states around Israel that were always attacking. David subjugated many of these ethnic groups, but they were always trying to break free of Israelite control. Peter included unbelieving Jews in this group, because they rejected the Messiah (Ac 4:25-28).

2:2 The king is the Lord's "anointed" (mashiah means "anointed one", translated into Greek as christos). Every legitimate king was a "messiah" (1 Sm 16:13;2 Kg 11:12); but the biblical writers prophesied that a greater king was coming, the Messiah (e.g., Is 9:2-7; Jr 23:5-6; Ezk 34:23-24; cp. 2 Sm 7:11-15). To reject God's anointed king is to reject God.

2:4 The description of God's laughing and mocking is a bold anthropomorphism, a comparison from human behavior (see Gn 3:8) to emphasize how ridiculous their plan is. In the same way, God's being "enthroned in heaven" (Hb yoshev, "sitting") describes His sovereign reign (Ps 29:10; 55:19; 102:12; 123:1).

2:7 The Davidic covenant (2 Sm 7:5-16; Ps 89:26-27) declared that the king would be God's "son." When the king ascended the throne he declared that God called him His son. This was a way of saying that God has installed him as king, heir to the kingdom. Earthly monarchs consistently fell short of this high calling, and the writers of Scripture realized that the coming Messiah would be a "Son" as no other king had been or could be (Is 9:6). When the voice from heaven declared Jesus to be the beloved Son at His baptism (Mt. 3:17), the Messianic Age was introduced. And when John described Jesus as the "the One and Only Son," he was speaking of Jesus' divine nature (Jn 1:14). But Ps 2:7 is used specifically in the NT for Jesus' resurrection and exaltation to the right hand of the Father—His coronation, in harmony with the meaning of the psalm (Ac 13:32-33; Heb 1:3-6; 5:5-6).

2:9 The Hebrew text has "you will smash (ra'a') them with a rod of iron," which is parallel to the second half of the verse. The Greek OT translated it "you will shepherd [rule] (assuming ra'ah) them with a rod of iron," taking the Hebrew letters as a different verb but recognizing the context was concerned with the reign of the king. The emphasis on his iron rule is retained, but the verb ("to shepherd") reflects the whole scope of his rule and not just the putting down of enemies. In the ancient Near East, with its agricultural economy, rulers were often spoken of as shepherds (e.g., 2 Sm 5:2; 7:7; Ezk 34:8,23; Zch 13:7). The NT uses (but does not quote directly) the Greek version (Rv 2:27; 12:5; 19:15) to make its point about the reign of Christ. What John declares in Revelation is true because God inspired it, even though his quote was taken from a different version of the psalm.

2:12 To "pay homage to the Son" can also be translated "kiss the son" (1 Kg 19:18; Hs 13:2). The translation takes the word bar as the Aramaic word for "son"; this is appropriate because David is addressing nations that speak that language. To "kiss" was more than to kiss the face; the word refers to bowing in submissive prostration before a conqueror (cp. RSV "kiss his feet"). Other versions assumed bar was a Hebrew word for "purity" and offered translations along the line of "worship in purity."

Ps 3 The historical note, or superscription, about David fleeing from Absalom (2 Sm 15:13-17) may not have been part of the original text but was included at an early stage when the psalms were collected.

3:2 Selah, which may mean "lift up," was an instruction for the musicians and was inserted when the psalms were adapted to temple service. It could refer to an interlude during which instruments played (see 1 Ch 15:16), but its meaning is uncertain.

3:3 The line uses several metaphors—"shield" for God's protection (Gn 15:1), "glory" for the evidence of His blessing of kingship (Ps 34:7; 91:11), and "lifts up my head" for the restoration to the throne (Gn 40:13; 1 Sm 2:7-8; Ps 110:7).

3:4-5 The report of the deliverance calls for past tense translations even though the Bible text is in the present tense: "I cried" and "he answered me," "I lay down and slept; I woke again because the Lord sustained me." Then, because he made it through the night, David expressed his renewed confidence and prayed for complete deliverance.

3:7 The verbs "strike" and "break" refer to completed action and may be translated in the past tense. They could refer to previous victories of the king; more likely they refer to his future victory. To David the outcome was so certain that he stated it as having already happened. This use of the verb is called the "prophetic perfect" because it often appears in prophetic literature, presenting future acts in the past tense (e.g., lit. "a child will be born," Is 9:6; "he was despised," Is 53:3). The language is also poetic: smashing the jaw and breaking the teeth refer to combat resulting in a convincing victory (1 Kg 22:24; Ps 58:6; Is 50:6; Mc 5:1). The figures are metonymies (substituting the Lord for the armies); this means God will deliver this crushing blow, though it is the armies who will actually fight.

Ps 4 The superscription indicates that this piece was given to "the choir director" for use in the temple by the choirs, accompanied by instruments. The ascription "a Davidic psalm" used here, and with many other psalms, is literally "for David" or "to David." The term may refer to authorship, but can also refer to usage; that is, the "Davidic" psalms are for the use of the Judean kings in the Davidic dynasty (or, actually, the Levitical singers performing in his name). The psalms as a whole are generalized; the situations they describe could apply to David himself, to succeeding rulers, or to any worshiper and servant of the Lord. Thus they have application, supremely, to the Servant Messiah, Jesus Christ.

Ps 5 The psalms include many petitions for swift judgment on the wicked. David was the leader of the covenant community and had the responsibility to defend the people of God against attacks of all kinds from pagans, and even unfaithful Israelites, who opposed the righteous and their God. His prayer was not a personal vendetta; it was a prayer that God would do what He had said He would do at some future time. Christians have been taught to pray for their enemies; even though they have a different way of praying because of the full revelation in Christ, praying for the Lord's coming is still a prayer for judgment upon a sinful world.

5:5-6 The language of "hate" in the Bible may seem discordant until its meaning is understood in depth. The word emphasizes rejection along with displeasure; to hate evil is to avoid association with it. God despises wicked character and evil deeds and therefore not only opposes them but dissociates Himself from them (11:5; Pr 6:16-19); God's people must also totally reject the wicked (Ps 1:1; 139:21-22).

5:10 The prayer of David is that the wicked be banished from God's presence—removed from God's protection and blessing (as in the banishment of Cain in Gn 4:14).

5:12 The word "bless" (barak), when used of the Lord's action, means "enrich," whether materially, physically or spiritually. Here the parallel word "favor" clarifies it. This is a metonymy (where the attribute is stated but the effect is meant); it refers to the protection and provisions of life that divine favor bestows on the righteous (Dt 33:23; Ps 30:5).

Ps 6 Psalms in which the speaker deals with his sin are often called penitential psalms. (The seven traditional "Penitential Psalms" are 6; 32; 38; 51; 69; 102; 130.) Here David pleaded with God to bring an end to his suffering at the hands of enemies, a suffering that was the Lord's chastening for his sin.

6:1 The divine discipline was severe; David prayed that God would not unleash all His anger in the rebuke (the word order is: "Not in your anger / rebuke me /O LORD"). During the discipline it seems that God is angry; but this is a temporary state in comparison to the lifetime in His favor (2 Sm 7:14; Ps 30:5; 94:1; Pr 3:12).

6:4 The basis for the worshiper's appeal for help is the Lord's "faithful love." The Hebrew word hesed is an important term in the psalms and throughout the OT. It refers to Yahweh's loyalty to His people because of the covenant He has granted them. English versions vary in translation of this word; it may appear as "lovingkindness," "steadfast love," "faithfulness" or simply "love." It is a love based on a commitment that has been made. To be able to appeal to the Lord on the basis if His hesed, the worshiper must make a corresponding commitment, calling himself the Lord's "servant" (31:16; 69:17; 143:12) and affirming his loyalty (e.g., "You are my God," 31:14; 63:1; 86:2; 118:28).

6:5 Psalms of petition include a section presenting the reasons why God should answer the worshiper's prayer. These appeals are not crass bargaining; they testify to the believer's covenant faith. If David died, he would not be able to praise God for delivering him from death; if God wanted the king's worship—his first obligation under the covenant—God would have to save him.

6:6-7 It is normal for people who suffer to use hyperbolic language. David did not literally flood his bed with weeping, it just seemed that way. The poetic language reflects his intense feelings of pain and utter despondency.

6:10 The enemies of the king are enemies of the program of God. His prayer that they be "ashamed" was an appeal that they be put to shame or sudden disgrace in a humiliating defeat.

Ps 7 This is a prayer for divine judgment of evil and vindication of the psalmist. Its superscription records a historical context (perhaps 2 Sm 16:5-14 or 20:1-22).

7:8 The verb "judges" can mean condemn, but here the sense is "vindicate" because the appeal is based on righteousness and integrity.

7:9-13 The weapons of God—the sword, the bow, and the flaming arrows—are poetic images that may be interpreted in one of two ways. They are implied comparisons for God's word of judgment (see Rv 19:15), or metonymies—that is, God will use David's armies with their weapons to defeat the enemies.

7:15-16 The psalm writers often followed the principle of lex talionis (see Lv 24:19-20) or measure-for-measure justice. The evil that the wicked plan for others will come back on them. The best biblical example is the fate of Haman (Est 7:9-10), who was hanged on the gallows he built for Mordecai.

7:17 In Hebrew culture, "name" refers to the nature or character of the person (see Ex 34:5-7; Is 9:6). This is the meaning in the expression "the name of the LORD," since "LORD" in the Hebrew text is actually the personal name Yahweh. In praising Yahweh's "name," the focus will be on his attributes and what they mean to the people of God. Here "the Most High" points not only to Yahweh's supremacy but also possibly to his association with Jerusalem from the time of Melchizedek, priest of "God Most High" (Gn 14:18-20).

8:1 This short hymn praises the excellence of the name (nature) of the Lord as the Creator, and marvels at how He has made human beings to rule over all creation (Gn 1:26-28). English translations follow the practice of using "LORD" for the holy name Yahweh, and "Lord" (not all capitalized) for the ordinary title "lord" (Hb 'adonai). The Hebrew says literally, "O Yahweh, our LORD" (see also Pss 97:5; 110:1).

8:5 God made humans a little lower than "God." This is an allusion to creation in which humans were made to be the image of God on earth (Gn 1:26-27). The alternate reading "heavenly beings" comes from the Hebrew word 'elohim commonly used of God, although a plural form. However, it can also be used for false gods (Ps 86:8; 97:7), angels or human judges (Ps 82:1,6-8 could be interpreted either way), and in some cases human rulers who represent God (Ex 7:1). Here the context would suggest either "God" or "angels," for the verb "made less" includes the idea of not quite conferring upon people the abilities of the higher powers, either God or angels.

The Septuagint (Greek OT) translated the word as "angels," the reading followed in Heb 2:7-9. The writer of Heb was applying the passage specifically to Jesus the Messiah, who in His incarnation was "made lower than the angels for a short time." Psalm 8 is not, strictly speaking, a messianic prophecy, but since Jesus Christ was fully human and the second Adam, it had a perfect application to Him. We do not yet see all things under the dominion of mankind, the writer says, but we see Jesus who will have that absolute dominion (1 Co 15:27; Eph 1:22; Heb 2:6-9).

Pss 9–10 These two psalms are evidently one psalm because they follow the acrostic arrangement in Hebrew; each verse or section begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet in alphabetical order. In the Greek OT they are one psalm. The superscription "according to Muth-labben" may refer to a song "The Death of a Son" that supplied the tune or pattern used to perform this psalm. This notation reveals the existence of"popular" musical compositions in ancient Israel and Judah that were adapted for more exalted use in worship.

9:5-6 The enemies will be destroyed in such a way that it will be as though they never existed. The metaphorical expression "erased" (or "blotted out") in similar passages has come to signify complete removal. The Hebrew word refers to scraping off (a tablet), wiping something off the record, or wiping something out (as of the wicked at the flood, Gn 6:7). The effect here is that the wicked will never again be a threat.

9:7-8 The Israelites knew that the Lord was the sovereign King of glory; at every victory they could praise Him by declaring "The LORD sits enthroned." Yet they continued to pray for His kingdom to come, knowing that He had yet to establish His righteous kingdom in its fullness. Such acclamations both praise God for immediate acts and express confidence in a future final deliverance.

9:10 To say that the Lord has not abandoned those who seek Him calls for some clarification. The verse does not say that those who seek Him always get what they want. In fact, David could speak as if God had forsaken him when his prayers were not being answered (22:1). But even when God delays in answering prayers, or does not answer, He is still dealing faithfully with His people for their ultimate well-being (e.g., Is 38:17). If God always answered prayer automatically, His worshipers would experience little development of their faith (see Rm 8:24-28).

9:12 The justice of God requires that He avenge the deaths of innocent people—the martyrs in glory appeal to Him on this basis (Rv 6:10). God will, eventually, make everything right by judging the wicked and rewarding the righteous.

9:14 Zion is the mountain on which the city of Jerusalem is built; accordingly, Jerusalem is frequently called the daughter of Zion (see Is 1:8; 10:32). Sometimes the phrase refers to the people in the city of Jerusalem (Mc 4:8). The gates at the entrance of the city were places where business and legal transactions took place. The gates were always crowded, and were therefore ideal places to testify to the Lord's deliverance. However, "within the gates" could also refer to festival gatherings at the Jerusalem sanctuary (Ps 122:1-2).

9:15 The report was put in the past tense because the outcome was certain (using the "prophetic perfect," see note on 3:7)—it was as good as done.

10:2-11 The psalmist used bold language to describe the arrogant wickedness of those who refused to live according to the Lord's righteousness. The language could describe a gang of thugs or foreign oppressors, but it also could apply to ruthless businessmen who took advantage of the poor and the weak as easily as hunters dragged away their prey. The biblical description is generalized, allowing the psalm to be used by worshipers in a variety of difficult settings and situations. But whoever the "wicked" were, their sin was disregard for the law of God, and its effect was injustice.

Ps 11 In this lament David was faced with the temptation to flee for safety because he was surrounded by people who wanted to destroy him. The story of David's life offers many occasions when this psalm could have been composed, such as 1 Sm 26:20.

11:2 The arrows that the wicked shot from the darkness or shadows could be literal, or they could be figura-tive of slanderous and abusive words hurled at him (57:4).

11:3 The "foundations" referred to the stability of the created order, symbolized in the sanctuary of God (46:1-5), but by extension could also refer to the institutions and order of society (75:3; 82:5). The question seems to convey hopelessness, but it is answered in the rest of the psalm—the righteous can trust the Lord who rules from heaven, even if things may appear unsteady on the earthly scene.

11:4-5 The omniscience of God is here described in human terms (anthropomorphic language): God is sitting on His throne in heaven and His eyes are closely examining what everyone is doing (see 2 Ch 16:9).

11:6 The psalmist drew on the language of the destruction of Sodom in Gn 19:24 to anticipate divine judgment on the ungodly. David desired that God would destroy the wicked with such force, for he knew that is what God would do eventually (Ezk 38:22; Hab 2:15-16).

11:7 David may have meant that seeing the face of God was to realize divine favor, for Israelite worshipers did not believe a person could see God and survive(Ex 33:11; Nm 12:8). In this life it would refer to deliverance from adversity and the awareness of the presence of God in the worshiper's experience (Ps 27:4; 42:2; 63:2). In the life to come, it would refer to a greater reality of communion with the living God (perhaps as in Ex 24:9-11; Ps 17:15).

Ps 12 "According to Sheminith" in the superscription may refer to a popular song that was to be used as a pattern for performing this psalm in the sanctuary.

12:5 The figurative expression "I will now rise up" refers to God beginning to act on behalf of the weak and the needy. The Lord will protect the victims of the arrogant and deceitful words of the wicked. For God to "rise up" (Hb qum) was an expression used whenever the ark of the covenant set out in the wilderness (Nm 10:35); it conveyed the image of the Lord's leadership and His defeat of the enemies of His people. David's words here bring this picture to mind (Ps 68:1).

12:6 To emphasize the purity and truth of the word of God, David used the simile of a refining fire. It was as if God's words had been purified in the furnace, seven times (the number of perfection). There is no falsehood, deception, or propaganda in God's Word; it is completely trustworthy.

Ps 13 This psalm falls into the category interpreters call the "lament." Its words convey the honest feelings of frustration and abandonment by a believer whose prayer for deliverance has not been answered. His cry is urgent ("how long?") and bold ("will You continually forget me?"). Most believers have felt this way at times; the faithful are not afraid to say it, but they say it to God in prayer and are careful not to express such despair in the presence of weaker believers (73:15).

13:4 David "reminds" the Lord of the reason why He should respond to the king's plea for help: If deliverance did not come, the enemy would gloat over his defeat.

13:6 Lament psalms end with what interpreters call the vow of praise. David promised to sing to the Lord because he trusted that God would be good to him ("He has treated me generously," the "prophetic perfect" of anticipation).

14:1 Of the several words for "fool" in wisdom literature (see Pr), the fool here (nabal) is neither a simpleton nor an ignorant dullard, but instead is a practical atheist. His denial of God may not be overt, but in his heart he lives as if God doesn't exist. This psalm is repeated, with minor alterations, as Ps 53.

Ps 15 This psalm is an "entrance rite," a brief ceremony to qualify worshipers for entering the holy precincts of the temple. It lists 10 characteristics (paralleling the Ten Commandments) of the person who is fit to come into the sanctuary and fellowship with the Lord, using the metaphor of "dwelling," (23:6; 27:4). The purpose of such an "entrance rite" was to remind people to examine themselves before worshiping; in so doing they would realize their need of forgiveness through sacrificial atonement. The substance of this psalm is repeated in 24:3-4.

15:5 Lending money at a high interest rate (lit. "with a bite") would disqualify the person from worshiping; no Israelite was to take advantage of others in hard times (Ex 22:25-27; Lv 25:35-36; Dt 23:9). One who is faithful to the Lord's covenant would give to the poor without any plan to have the money repaid, let alone to profit.

16:6 The psalm is a meditation on the Lord's blessings. (The meaning of the designation miktam in the superscription is unknown.). This verse compares one's lot in life to an inheritance of land with boundaries (Nm 18:20; Dt 10:9; 18:1).

16:10 David was confident of his deliverance from Sheol and "the Pit"; that is, from death. The Lord will protect his faithful worshiper from it. In its Israelite application, the context could be the struggle against the adherents of false religions, "those who take another god" (v. 4). Still occupying enclaves within Canaan, these peoples ignored the "boundary lines" (v. 6) by which the Lord allocated the promised land to the tribes of Israel (Jos 13–17). Opposition from these polytheistic groups often took the form of open warfare, endangering the king's life. But the psalm has a prophetic application to the coming King, the Messiah ("Faithful One"). At Pentecost, Peter quoted these words with reference to the resurrection of Jesus (Ac 2:8-31); Paul used the psalm the same way in a sermon at Antioch in Pisidia (Ac 13:25). If David's words stopped short of affirming a bodily resurrection, they were certainly consistent with that hope. Because Christian believers participate in Jesus' resurrection (e.g., Rm 6:4,8; 8:29; Col 3:1; Rv 1:5), the words of the psalm apply to the "faithful ones" of all ages—we will not be abandoned to the decay of the grave.

17:15 When the psalmist says he will see God's face, he probably meant a spiritual experience in the sanctuary in which God would reveal Himself more fully (11:7; 27:4; 42:2; 63:2), possibly a visionary experience similar to that of Ezekiel (Ezk 1:1-28). To "see God's face" is to experience the reality of His presence (Ps 24:6). In view of the later revelation of the believers' resurrection in Christ, these words took on greater meaning (1 Jn 3:2; Rv 22:4). But that fuller meaning does not nullify the original reference to a spiritual experience.

18:8 The language of this verse is clearly poetic, not scientific. Verses 7-15 describe a theophany, or manifestation of the Lord, expressed in terms of awesome natural phenomena. To people in ancient cultures, smoke and fire might call to mind a dragon-like or volcanic image evoking a thunder deity. Here it is a description of the God's readiness to avenge His enemies. The language is picturesque, like that of Rv 19:15 depicting a sword coming from the mouth of the exalted Christ. When the Lord comes to deliver His people, He will judge His enemies, and sometimes He will use the elements of nature to do it (see Ex 15:4-6).

18:34 David credited God with giving him the ability to be successful in battle. Warfare was, and is, an unfortunate reality of human life. David, as military leader of the nation, had to secure the land and protect the people. God prepared him for that task in a special way, both physically as a warrior and spiritually as a believer (see 1 Sm 17:34-37). Today Christians find themselves in a spiritual warfare, all the more difficult because the enemy is not visually apparent (Eph 6:12). But God still trains His people for the battle by providing the armor and the weapons we are to use (Eph 6:13-18) to champion righteousness and truth in a fallen world.

19:1 The first few verses form what is called natural revelation (Rm 1:19-20), meaning that the observation of creation calls for an acknowledgment of God's existence. The wisdom and power and glory of God are displayed in what He has made; it is a continuous revelation in the skies (vv. 1-4) dominated by the sun (vv. 4-6).

19:5 The poetic description of the sun as a groom was intended to undermine a false belief in the sun's divinity. In the ancient world the sun god, who was also the god of law (later worshiped in Israel, 2 Kg 23:11), was described in a similar way. The psalm, however, places the sun in a subordinate position within God's creation, as does the Gn account of creation (see Gn 1:14-19, where the heavenly lights appear only on the fourth day). The sun is not a divinity; instead, with its energy it dominates the skies as a testimony to its Creator.

19:7 The second part of the psalm extols specific revelation; that is, revelation in verbal form through divine inspiration (e.g., Ex 20:1; 1 Co 2:9-10; 2 Pt 1:21). The law did not come from a sun god, but from the Lord, the sovereign Creator. His revelation is open to all, to guide them in righteousness; the full revelation of the Godhead will come in Jesus Christ (Heb 1:1-3). Critical interpreters have suggested that this psalm is a composite of two psalms because of the sudden shift here from the realm of nature to the realm of Israelite law. Such a view ignores that God's moral law—His principles for human behavior—are grounded in the structure of the universe (Rm 1:17-25). The creative power of God underlies the integrity of the law. The relationship of the created and moral orders was aptly expressed by Immanuel Kant: "Two things fill themind with ever new and increasing admiration and awe, the oftener and more steadily we reflect on them: the starry heavens above me, and the moral law within me."

20:1-4 The first part of this psalm records the intercession of the people on behalf of David, who was also praying in the sanctuary for victory in the war. They prayed that God would grant him the desires of his heart, i.e., what he was praying for specifically (21:2-6).

20:6 Whereas the people prayed for help from the Jerusalem sanctuary, the localized place of God's presence on Mount Zion, David expected the help to come from heaven—the holy dwelling of God behind the earthly sanctuary. The sanctuary was viewed as a microcosm of the world, the place where heaven and earth met, and where God chose to reveal His presence most dramatically and continually. The NT understanding is that the temple will soon be done away with (Mk 13:2) and worship there will come to an end (Jn 4:21). The body of Christ—the community of believers—will be the new temple of the Spirit (1 Co 3:16; 6:19).

20:7 David was confident of victory because he did not trust in military might (see 33:16-18) but in the "name of the Lord our God." Since the "name" refers to the attributes (see Ex 34:5-7; Is 9:6), the object of David's faith was the person and works of Yahweh. The word translated "take pride" is literally "keep in remembrance, make mention of, ponder"—he built his confidence by meditating on the nature of God.

Ps 22 This was David's prayer for deliverance from his enemies who surrounded him to put him to death, but it was also indirectly prophetic of the prayer of Jesus from the cross. While the words of David may be highly figurative for his experience, they became historically precise in the suffering of the Savior. David's prayer to be delivered from death (22:20) was eventually answered, prompting him to praise God in the assembly (vv. 22,25). Jesus' prayer, using the words of this psalm, was answered in the resurrection, for Heb 2:12 quotes the Davidic words of praise in v. 22 as the word of the risen Lord.

22:1 The most lamentable condition is the feeling of being forsaken by God in the time of suffering or danger. David's cry expressed that sense because of unanswered prayer. For Jesus to cry these words from the cross (Mt 27:46; Mk 15:34) is usually taken to mean that He believed the Father had abandoned Him to die for the sins of the world. However, passages of Scripture were not referenced in ancient times by chapter or verse but by their opening words; the Gospels may be indicating that Jesus recited the entire psalm, which ends on a note of victory. "The Deer of the Dawn" mentioned in the superscription was probably a secular song used as a pattern in performing the psalm.

22:8 The words of this taunt were used by the enemies of Jesus at the crucifixion (Mt 27:43), in a remarkable example of spiritual blindness. They did not realize that in doing this they were fulfilling the Scriptures, as were those responsible for sending Jesus to the cross (see Ac 3:17; 13:27).

22:16 The reading "they pierced my hands and my feet" follows the Greek OT (Septuagint). The Hebrew MT has what appears to be a senseless reading: "like a lion, my hands and my feet." However, grammarians have suggested that the Hebrew reading is an unusual, though possible, form of the verb kur, "bore, pierce." By revocalizing (i.e., altering the vowel sounds, which are not written as letters in Hb) the letters k'ri could be made to mean "as a lion."

22:18 The garment was the sufferer's one remaining possession; to divide his clothing before he was dead was the last indignity inflicted on him (Jn 19:24).

22:26 In the praise service in Israel's sanctuary, the poor actually could eat when someone offered praise. The law prescribed the peace offering (Lv 3:1-17; 7:11-21) for praise; it was to be a communal meal for all present who heard the testimony.

Ps 23 This well-known psalm is a psalm of confidence. The meditation uses the settings of the shepherd in the field (vv. 1-4), the host in the banquet hall (v. 5), and finally the sanctuary itself (v. 6).

23:1 The metaphor of the shepherd was a common figure for religious and political leaders of antiquity (2:9). It therefore became a powerful image for the coming Messiah (74:1-4; 80:1; Is 40:11; Ezk 34; Mc 7:14). The NT confirms that passages like this point to the ministry of Jesus Christ, the good Shepherd who lays down His life (Jn 10:14), the great Shepherd who equips thesaints (Heb 13:20), and the chief Shepherd who comes in glory (1 Pt 5:4). The descriptions of the shepherd here portray how the Lord teaches, heals, guides, and protects.

23:4 The "darkest valley" (sometimes translated the "valley of the shadow of death") does not mean that the psalmist died, only that he might find himself in a situation where death was a distinct possibility. The phrase "the darkest valley" alludes to the deep canyons in the wilderness into which one might fall and not escape unless God intervened.

23:6 The "house of the LORD" is the sanctuary where people worshiped. (The temple, in the Hebrew OT, is usually called beth Yahweh, "the Lord's house.") After his meditations, David desired to return to that holy place where he could avail himself of the blessing of God's presence. In the Christian application of the psalm, the hope is for complete communion with the Lord in the abundance of His blessing. While popular thinking often relates this verse to heaven, the phrase "in the presence of my enemies" (v. 5) suggests an earthly setting, since the believer's enemies are not present in heaven.

24:1-2 The psalm begins as a hymn of praise. God is King by creation and by victory over the forces of evil. The poetry suggests that He tamed the primeval waters and founded the earth (136:6). The language is a disparaging reference to pagan worship; the Canaanites venerated gods "Sea" and "River," perhaps as forces of chaos. In the biblical perspective the Lord has complete control over the forces of nature.

24:3-5 The psalm incorporates the "entrance rite" found in Ps 15 into a ceremony for a procession entering the gates of the sanctuary. The pilgrim worshipers ask who may enter the sacred area to fellowship with the Lord, and the doorkeeper priests respond that only those who have done no wrong and have pure motives may enter. The ceremony was intended to remind worshipers that they needed not only a sacrifice but also a life of sincere obedience to God to enter His courts.

24:7-8 The triumphal procession made its way through the gates into the sanctuary to offer praise for victory in warfare—as the phrases "mighty in battle" (v. 8) and "the LORD of Hosts" (v. 10) suggest (see Ex 15:2-3; Dt 10:17; Is 10:21). The title "Yahweh of Armies" (usually "the LORD of Hosts" in English) was always associated with the presence of the ark of the covenant, which went before the Israelites in the wilderness and also in warfare to occupy the land of Canaan. This, together with the epithet of "King of glory," suggests that the worshipers were following the ark of the covenant in procession (1 Sm 4:21-22). Apparently the ark was occasionally removed from the sanctuary and then triumphantly returned to Zion, symbolic of Yahweh's enthronement as King (Ps 47:5). (That the ark was carried outside the temple until the time of Josiah seems clear from 2 Ch 35:3.) The psalmist might be addressing the gates themselves, as if to say the King of glory should not have to stoop to go under the gateway. Or he might be addressing the people in the gates, urging them to rejoice and welcome the victors and not be depressed (see Is 14:31).

Ps 25 This is an alphabetic, or acrostic, psalm; each line begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet in sequence. At the heart of the psalm is the appeal that God should remember His mercy and not our sins (vv. 6, 7). The verb "remember" includes the idea of acting upon what is remembered.

26:2 The psalmist asked God to test him, try him, and examine him. He wanted to be sure of his loyalties to God so that he might find vindication and blessing.

26:4-5 The use of the word "hate" underscores his intense loyalty to God; the verb includes the idea of rejecting the assembly of the wicked hypocrites (5:5-6).

26:9 Despite his failures, David tried to live a life separated from "men of bloodshed" (see 2 Sm 1:13-16; 4:9-12) and did not want to die in the judgment upon them. He did not see himself as one of them, so he prayed for divine protection (see 1 Sm 15:6; Ps 28:3; 104:29; Zph 1:2-3; 3:8).

27:4 The psalmist hoped to visit the sanctuary on his pilgrimage (84:5); his desire was to gaze on the beauty of the Lord—to seek Him in His temple and experience the favor of His presence.

27:8 Seeking the face of God is seeking His favor. If God hides His face, there is no blessing (22:24; 30:7; 143:7).

Ps 29 This praise psalm extols the power and majesty of the Lord by telling of His powerful control of the weather. The psalm also countered Canaanite beliefs; the location of the storm was Lebanon and Syria, the domains of the storm god Baal. It was Yahweh, not Baal, who "flashes flames of fire" (v. 7). In the Canaanite religious texts, Baal caused the storms with a sevenfold peal of thunder; but in this psalm we are told seven times that it was "the voice of the LORD" (or the voice of Yahweh).
29:1 "You heavenly beings" is literally, "sons of the mighty" or "sons of gods" (Hb 'elim, a shorter form of 'elohim). This could be a reference to the angels (see Gn 6:2-4). In the Canaanite religion, these heavenly beings were members of the company of the gods; in Israel, they were angels in the heavenly court (see Ex 15:11; Jb 1–2; Ps 89:6-8; 138:1). David summoned them to praise, just as they did at the creation.

29:5-6 Lebanon and Sirion are mountains north of Israel, the latter being Mount Hermon. The poetic language of skipping refers to earthquakes.

29:9 The Hebrew MT has the word for "deer," referring to premature births caused by the storm. Some modern versions have changed the word slightly to make it read "oaks." There is no manuscript support for such an emendation. The psalm is viewing the world from the perspective of the sanctuary (76:1-9), hence the cry of "Glory!" from the congregation in the temple.

29:10 There is a double meaning to the word "flood." It may refer to the chaotic waters of the ocean that the Lord controls, but it may also form an allusion to the flood in Genesis. In either case, God sits sovereignly enthroned over such things.

Ps 30 The superscription ascribes the psalm to David but calls it a "song for the house"; that is, the temple. David did not build the temple, but he arranged the preparation for it and wrote this dedication psalm as well. The contents of this psalm indicate it was written after David's sin of numbering the people (1 Ch 22:2-19).

30:3 David rejoiced in being brought up from Sheol. Clearly he did not die, and so he was not in the grave or in the realm of departed spirits—the other meanings of Sheol. The word is used here as a poetic expression for deadly danger.

30:4-5 Two attributes of God, His anger and His favor, stand for what they produce: discipline and blessing. Believers always must keep these in perspective, singing their praises to Him (34:1; 84:4; Eph 5:18-20). God's discipline is short compared to a lifetime of enjoying His blessing. That is the point of the psalm.

31:5-6 This is a psalm of trust, in which the psalmist abandons himself to God in contrast to those who trust "worthless idols." Jesus quoted the words "into Your hands I entrust my spirit" when His suffering on the cross was finished (Lk 23:46). Perhaps, in view of the context here, His prayer carried the implication that those responsible for His execution were putting their trust in something "worthless."

Ps 32 In this penitential psalm, the king praises God for forgiveness of sin and warns others not to refuse to confess their sins.

32:1-2 Paul cited this passage (Rm 4:6-8) to show that when God forgives sins He does not "charge" them to our accounts; they are removed from the record. God will never bring them up again. That is why the forgiven worshiper wrote of such joy and happiness (Hb "blessedness"). In the OT as well as the NT, when aperson truly repents and confesses sin, the Lord forgives because He has promised to do so (Ps 103:8-12; 130:4).

32:3 The "bones" are used figuratively for the bony framework that houses the spirit, and so the heavy discipline was felt in the spirit.

32:6 The authors of Scripture exhort people to seek God while He may be found (see Is 55:6). He works through human affairs to convince people of their sin and provide opportunities for them to find His favor. To refuse Him again and again may jeopardize the opportunity as a person becomes more and more hardened in sin; there may come a time when such hardness is part of God's judgment on an individual (see Is 6:8-12; Rm 1:24).

33:3 Several other psalms speak of "a new song" coming forth from the worshipers (40:3; 96:1; 144:9; 149:1). While this could be taken metaphorically to refer to a renewed attitude of joy, it may also refer to singing and instrumental playing (here, "on the strings") by the sanctuary musicians.

33:16-17 A country's leaders may organize military action from time to time to deal with threats to national security, but such efforts do not guarantee ultimate safety and success. Victory comes from the Lord; He may use the instruments of warfare, or He may not, depending on His purposes. Whatever the situation, the people of God must acknowledge that there can be victory only if the Lord wills.

Ps 34 This is an acrostic psalm of confidence, successive lines beginning with the next letter of the Hebrew alphabet. The superscription's mention of Abimelech is a reference to Achish, king of Gath (1 Sm 21:10-15).

34:7 There is protection from the Lord for those who fear Him. The "angel of the LORD" may stand for the Lord Himself, but certainly could refer to one of His angelic messengers who do His bidding. The angel of the Lord guards the faithful so that they can do God's will (see Gn 32:2; 2 Kg 6:17; Ps 91:11; Mt 4:5-6).

34:20 In his Gospel, John saw this passage fulfilled in Christ who, even though dead on the cross, did not have one of His bones broken (Jn 19:33-36). The Father so guarded the death of His Son that He made the perfect sacrifice, that of the unblemished Lamb of God (Jn 1:29).

36:1 The first line of the psalm is difficult to translate, and English versions word it differently. The Hebrew reads, literally, "There is an oracle about the transgression of the ungodly in my heart." The psalmist received a revelation from God about those who disregard Him.

36:7-8 The language is figurative but refers to the believers' fellowship with God in the sanctuary. There they feast on the sacrifice and drink from the "refreshing stream" of His presence. The word translated "refreshing" (Hb 'adaneika) is related to "Eden" (Gn 2:8,10); the phrase could perhaps be translated "Your Edenic streams." The psalm depicts the restoration of the blessings of the garden of Eden (cp. v. 6, "You preserve man and beast") through the worship of the Lord. The faithful saw the sanctuary, where the wings of the cherubim (v. 7) overshadowed the ark, as a reflection of paradise—the place where God dwelt with His people on earth.

37:1 It is easy to say "do not be agitated," but it takes a strong faith to reach this level of confidence in the Lord. The cause for anxiety in this case is envy of wrongdoers who prosper in the world. A deep trust in the Lord enables people to delight in Him, and He will give them the desires of their hearts. Those desires, however, will be in harmony with God's will.

37:25 The psalmist says that he has never seen the righteous abandoned, nor their children reduced to begging. This is a general observation of God's faithfulness; it does not mean life will be easy or trouble-free for the righteous. Since God will never forsake the righteous, He will ultimately rescue them, but in His time. Through periods of difficulty it will seem as though God has forsaken people (22:1), but in such cases He is calling upon them to exercise a deeper trust and commitment.

40:6-8 The psalms were performed by Levitical singers who did not serve at the altar of sacrifice; the Levites may also have fulfilled the function of "teaching priests" (2 Ch 15:3; cp. Neh 8:7,8). This section may reflect the scope of their activities—not sacrifice but instruction. But all devout worshipers would acknowledge that God made them for obedience; they expressed a desire to live according to His Word. The spirit of sacrifice was surrender, and the Lord was more interested in the worshiper's obedience than the performance of ritual (1 Sm 15:22). Verse 6 in the Hebrew reads literally, "ears you have dug for me," meaning that God gave the speaker the capacity to hear and obey (cp. "Anyone who has ears to hear should listen," Mk 4:9). The Greek OT translators apparently found the idiom obscure and tried to clarify it with the reading, "you prepared a body for me" (perhaps there was some confusion over the Gk letters for "ears" and "body"). The writer to the Hebrews recognized that this reading applied most fully to Jesus, who was more dedicated to do the will of the Father than anyone else (Heb 10:5-7). The Father prepared a body for Him in the womb of the virgin (see Gl 4:4), He came to do the Father's will, and the will of God for Him was prescribed in the Bible in great detail.

41:9 The psalmist was betrayed by a close friend (lit. "a man of my peace") who joined his enemies in speaking evil of him (vv. 5-7). While many people could appropriate these words to their experiences, the greatest act of betrayal was that of Judas (Mt 26:23; Mk 14:18; Lk 22:21; Jn 13:21).

41:13 The book of Ps is divided into five books; this doxology (expression of praise) marks the end of Book I.

Pss 42–43 These were originally one psalm, sharing the repeated refrain (42:5,11; 43:5). These psalms begin a section of the book (Pss 42–83) in which it appears that "God" (Elohim) has frequently been substituted, in textual transmission, for the divine name Yahweh. This is evident, for example, in comparing Ps 14 with its repetition in Ps 53. Scholars sometimes call this section the "Elohistic Psalter."

42:2 On seeing God's face, see note on 11:7. The speaker was a priest from the family of Korah (see superscription; Ex 6:24) who for some reason was prevented from leading the people in worship as he formerly did (cp. v. 4).

42:5-6 In meditation the devout speak to themselves concerning the pain they are experiencing. Here the psalmist used a rhetorical question to replace his despair with hope.

42:6-7 The location is in the north of the country, where the waterfalls pour out of the base of Mount Hermon and become the Jordan River. The identification of Mizar in that region is unknown.

43:3-4 Light and truth are metaphors for full redemption (36:9) and covenant faithfulness respectively. The worshiper vowed that if God so restored him to Zion ("Your holy mountain," v. 3), he would joyfully resume his duties as a musician.

Ps 44 This is a national lament over the problem of suffering. The writer, speaking on behalf of the nation, recorded how the Lord abandoned them in a war for no reason—they had not broken faith with Him. Paul quoted from this psalm (v. 22) in Rm 8:36 to affirm, as the psalm does, that such suffering does not separate us from the love of God.

44:20-21 The psalmist knew that if they had sinned to deserve this suffering, the Lord would have sent a prophet to uncover their sin and force them to deal with it. But God did not condemn them at all.

44:23 The command "wake up" is a bold anthropomorphism calling God to action, as if He has been asleep on the job. It is a desperate cry of suffering; rightly did Paul explain this by saying we do not know how to pray as we ought, but the Spirit intercedes for us (Rm 8:26). Only a people with a supreme confidence in their God—such as faithful Israel—could use such bold, even demanding, language in prayer, fully confident that He can handle it.

Ps 45 This royal psalm focuses on the wedding of the king. As with all the royal psalms, the apostles saw that they ultimately spoke of Jesus the Messiah; He is the only King who loves righteousness and hates wickedness (Heb 1:8-9). Furthermore, the parallels between the motifs of this song and Rv 19:6-18 are striking.

45:6-7 Varied translations of this section appear in English versions: "Your [Thy] throne, [O] God" (KJV, NIV, HCSB) or "your throne is like God's" (NEB). It was not a problem in the OT to call a king or ruler "god," for he was God's representative (Ex 7:1; Is 9:6). The word 'elohim conveys the basic meaning of "strength, might" and need not always refer to "divinity" as commonly understood today; it could refer to a powerful person. The phrase "therefore God, your God" sounds redundant, but in the "Elohistic Psalter" (see Pss 42–43) the personal name Yahweh has sometimes been replaced by the title "God."

45:10-12 This section records the pastoral advice the poet (cp. v. 1) gives the bride before her wedding day. In the expression "and the king will desire your beauty," he refers to the beauty of her entire being, which would include her submissive demeanor. (In Hebrew thought the "beautiful" is that which functions properly, not just whatever has a pleasing appearance.) This was not a "normal" marriage but a royal one, and the queen, no matter how important, had to serve the king because he was her lord. In a similar way, the bride of Christ is instructed to make herself ready for the marriage (Rv 19:7).

Ps 46 This psalm, ascribed to the Levitical singers ("sons of Korah"), is called a song of Zion because it focuses on the security of the holy city, the place of God's presence. The theme of "God is with us" recalls "Immanuel" in Is 7:14; 8:8.

46:2-6 The language of these verses seems at first glance to be describing natural phenomena such as an earthquake. But the lines could be: (1) countering pagan mythology in which the forces of nature were thought chaotic; the psalmist declares they have no power against the holy city and the people of God; (2) looking ahead (eschatological) to the end of the age when the world will be in chaos but God's people preserved; (3) referring to warfare and not natural phenomena at all (metaphorical, cp. Is 8), since the second half of the psalm is about warfare. Both parts of the psalm speak of safety in the time of turmoil, whatever its cause.

46:4 There is no river, properly speaking, in Jerusalem; the river mentioned here could be a metaphor for the life-giving influence of worship and service flowing from the sanctuary of God (see Ezk 47:1-12; Rv 22:1-2). Alternatively, the psalmist could have in mind the water flowing from the Gihon spring under the city of David into the pool of Siloam. In a time of warfare such a steady water supply inside the fortified city would certainly make the people glad. The river in the holy city may also allude to the garden (Gn 2:10-14; cp. Ps 36:9). In time of war or natural upheaval, God's presence would guarantee protection and provision.

46:4 God is called "the Most High" ('el 'elyon). This may be a reference to the tradition of Melchizedek, the earlier king of Salem (Jerusalem), "priest to God Most High" (Gn 14:18). That ancient tradition influenced the language used to describe the kings who reigned in Jerusalem (Gn 14:18-24; Ps 110:4; Lk 1:32) and the NT description of Jesus' priesthood (Heb 7:1-28).

Ps 47 The writer celebrates the kingship of Yahweh. The language of this and other so-called "enthronement psalms" (Pss 93–98) indicates that the passage is eschatological; it will be fulfilled at the coming of the Lord in judgment (see "the Day of the Lord" in the prophecies of Jl and Am). He will reign as the great King over all the earth (see Mal 1:11,14).

47:5 To say God ascended means that He ascended to the heavenly throne where He reigns as King over all the earth. His ascension (lit. "going up") may have been dramatized in a procession of the ark of the covenant (24:7; 68:18), accompanied by the war cry and battle alarm—"shouts," "sound of trumpets" (Hb shofar). The colorful picture painted here, in word or pageantry, was directed against the Canaanite god Baal who was believed to ascend into the heavens.

47:8 To describe God as seated on a throne is to speak of His absolute sovereign rule over all the earth, His footstool (e.g., 103:19; Is 66:1; sometimes the "footstool" appears to be localized in the ark of the covenant, Ps 99:5; 132:7). The language of God's throne, symbolic of His reign, is carried over in the NT (Rv 4:9-10; 5:1,7,13).

48:2 Mount Zion is not in the north (Hb zaphon) of the land of Canaan (Palestine), but in the center, close to the tribal area of the southernmost tribe of Judah. This psalm from the Korahite priests may have been intended to counter Canaanite religion, in which a god Baal-zephon was prominent. Worship of Baal-zephon was centered on the coast of northern Syria. The psalmist may have been saying, in effect, that Zion is the mountain of God.

Ps 49 Wisdom psalms often probe the inequities of life. Here the Korahite psalmist wrote of the man who lives for all the pomp and glory this life offers, but dies like everyone else.

49:7 No one can give the necessary price to redeem himself or others from the grave, for everyone dies. The Bible is not opposed to the possession of wealth; the psalm explains, rather, that with regard to destiny beyond the grave such wealth is worthless.

49:12 In the matter of death and decay humans are no better off than beasts, for all die and return to the dust. The writer was not denying the believer goes to be with the Lord; he was contrasting the dust of death with the pomp of this life.

49:14 The psalmist used irony and personification to say that death will feed on the wicked in Sheol. Death leads the sheep to slaughter. In contrast, the upright will triumph "in the morning," after the night of suffering.

Ps 50 Asaph, probably David's chief musician (1 Ch 16:5), portrays the appearance ("in radiance," i.e. shining) of the Lord. He comes in all His glory and beauty to judge the people, particularly with respect to their worship practices. This "prophetic psalm" is cast as a trial; God is the Judge (v. 6), His covenant people are the defendants (v. 5), and the heavens and earth are witnesses(v. 4). God is a devouring fire (v. 3), for He does not tolerate anything that does not meet His standards.

50:7-15 Asaph records the words of a sanctuary prophet declaring God's indictment. The people's worship was merely an outer form that lacked the right spiritual motivation. God declares that He does not need them—they need Him. This declaration of the word of God may be the heart of His "appearing" that is taking place.

50:16-21 The second indictment is for hypocrisy in conduct, the breaking of some of the Ten Commandments (vv. 18-20). The wicked were present in the congregation, speaking the words of Scripture and the covenant (v. 16) as ritual but with no inner commitment. They assumed God's silence about their sin meant His approval—that He was just like them (v. 21; cp. Mal 2:17; 3:14-15).

50:22 To "forget God" is to live as if He had no claims on their lives—no repentance, no obedience, no proper worship. This is the description of fools (14:1).

Ps 51 Often referred to as David's confession of sin, this passage is a meditation on what it means to be aware of sin and the need to be forgiven. The superscription describes it as a sequel to Nathan's confronting the king with taking Uriah's wife, Bathsheba (2 Sm 12:1-15).

51:4 David had sinned against Uriah and Bathsheba, but the confession acknowledged that sin is, first of all, against God; the expression "You alone" simply intensifies that thought.

51:5 David was not saying that his birth was illegitimate, or that his parents sinned when they performed the sexual act at his conception. He was acknowledging that there never was a time when he was without sin. He was born in the state of sin, or rebellion against God, which is common to all humanity until reconciliation with God occurs. David's statement is a poetic expression of the biblical teaching about this pervasive, inborn or "original" sin (see Rm 3:23).

51:8 Because of the seriousness of his sin, David could not go into the sanctuary to join God's praises. Here he asked for forgiveness so that he could do that, with his petition implied: "[Tell me I am forgiven so that I may] hear joy and gladness."

51:10 The heart is the spiritual nature of a person, the center of the will, the capacity for making choices. The prayer is for God to re-create (renew, as the parallelism in the verse shows) that spiritual side, lest he continue to make wrong choices. Forgiveness may not be enough to solve the problem; there must be a complete spiritual renewal. The forgiven worshiper is not the old person cleaned up; he is a new person (Ezk 18:31; 2 Co 5:17).

51:11 At Pentecost the risen and ascended Christ sent His Holy Spirit (Ac 2:32-33) to abide with every believer. But before the incarnation and resurrection of the Son of God, the Spirit appears to function differently in the life of the people of God. The Spirit "came upon" or "indwelt" people responsible for administering the rule of God: prophets, priests, and kings. The presence of God's Spirit set them apart and enabled them to lead (see Is 61:1), but His indwelling was not always permanent as it is in the NT. Thus, when Saul sinned against the Lord and was rejected from kingship, the Spirit left him(1 Sm 16:14). David the king probably had this possibility in mind. His prayer is a typical OT petition that he not be removed from service because of his sin. Christians would not express this thought in the same way; since Jesus Christ lives and reigns, His Holy Spirit indwells them permanently as the seal of eternal life. Still, NT believers can pray the same thing David meant: "Do not remove me from service." (On the Holy Spirit in the OT, see Jdg 3:10; 1 Sm 18:12.)

51:12 David was not praying for his salvation to be restored; he was praying that the joy of that deliverance be restored. Psalm 32 describes the kind of spiritual depression that results from unforgiven sin.

51:15 The request "Lord, open my lips" is a metonymy, or the use of one aspect of an action or thing to represent the whole. The full request would say: "Forgive me so that I can open my mouth and praise."

51:16-17 The psalm is not repudiating sacrifice; the rites of the altar were the heart of Israel's corporate worship. Because of the nature of David's sins, there was no sin offering he could bring—those offerings were for sins of ignorance. Without a sin offering, he could not offer the atoning whole burnt offering. And he certainly could not offer a peace offering because his peace with God had been compromised. He could only plead for mercy with a broken spirit—that is, a will that had been stripped of all rebellion and pride.

51:18-19 If the expression "build the walls of Jerusalem" is understood figuratively, the walls stand for the moral defense of the city and the worshiping nation it represents (the NT also uses words like "edify" in a figurative or spiritual sense). The speaker here was a king, and immorality at the highest level of government weakens a nation's defensive posture.

Ps 53 This psalm repeats Ps 14, substituting "God" for "the Lord" (see Pss 42–43).

54:5 The psalmist declares that God will annihilate his enemies. His words are in line with divine justice; God destroys the wicked by causing their evil to recoil on them.

55:15 This is a psalm of imprecation, or cursing (Pss 69; 94; 109; 139), in which the worshiper calls for God to severely punish his enemies. David had been betrayed by a former friend (vv. 12-14), which made his anguish even deeper. If the sentiments expressed here seem unworthy of a worshiper of a loving God, they are at least honest. God's answer is to "cast your burden on the LORD" (v. 22), and not to take matters into your own hands.

56:8 In the ancient world, people sometimes saved their tears in small bottles as a remembrance of the sorrow. The psalmist wanted God to remember every aspect of his plight.

58:1 The MT reads "will You speak righteousness in silence?" (Hb 'elem), but other ancient versions differ. Most modern translations emend the text to 'elim, "rulers" or "judges" (see 82:1,6).

58:10 The imagery of the feet in the blood of enemies is graphic and gruesome, but it is the imagery of certain victory (see Is 63:1-6; Rv 14:19-20; 19:13-14).

59:8 The psalmist used bold anthropomorphic language (God laughing) to stress that evil is utterly ridiculous to God (2:4; 37:13).

59:10 The psalmist was saying that God will let him "look" (ra'ah) on his foes, but the force of the Hebrew verb here is stronger: to "look down" (HCSB), "look in triumph" (RSV) or "gloat." God will let him see victory and enjoy it. But since the victory is God's, the praise also must be His. Therefore, the boasting must be in Him and not in oneself (vv. 16-17).

60:6-8 The psalm is describing God's sovereignty over the nations. In that light, Moab becomes a place for the warrior to wash his feet, a sign of its reduction to the status of servitude. All nations must submit to the authority of God, or they will be dispossessed.

63:2 To "gaze" on the Lord in the sanctuary (to "see" Him or "see His face") may be figurative language for the inward vision of God's glory and His help (see 17:15). It may also refer to some specific action of the priests during the sanctuary rites, when the Lord was understood to be "seen" in a special way.

63:4 The physical act of raising the hands was one custom of ancient Israel while praising (141:2); the Apostle Paul commends it for Christian men (1 Tm 2:8). Posture and gestures can intensify prayer and praise if the action is natural and the intent sincere. Ancient Near Eastern monuments depict rulers lifting the hand in supplication before a deity, and Israel followed the same practice toward the Lord.

64:3-4 The psalmist pictured his enemy's words, intended to hurt and destroy, as sharpened swords and swift arrows. Then he turned the image around (vv.7-8); God's arrows will destroy the wicked as their own words turn on them and bring them to ruin (62:12).

68:1 This psalm takes up the cry of Moses during Israel's march through the wilderness (Nm 10:35) whenever the ark of the covenant set out to move forward. The setting may be a procession of the ark up Mount Zion into the sanctuary (vv. 24-27; 24:7).

68:4,33 The picture of God riding on the clouds and across the heavens was directed against Baal, Canaan's storm god, who was said to mount up to the heavens. But it is the Lord who rides victoriously through the heavens (104:3). That Elijah, the great opponent of the worship of the false Baals, was taken up in a whirlwind accompanied by chariots of fire (2 Kg 2:11) would also undermine such pagan beliefs.

68:7-18 The psalm is a prayer for the Lord to come as a warrior. It portrays the divine warrior moving from Sinai in the wilderness to Zion in Jerusalem in a triumphant march. Historically, this occurred in the movement of the holy ark over several generations; the psalm provides a summary picture.

68:11 At the Lord's command, a great company of women (the Hb word is a feminine plural form) celebrated His victory ("brought the good news"). Young women appear later in this psalm in celebration (v. 25; cp. Ex 15:20-21; Jdg 5:1-31; 11:34; 1 Sm 18:6-7). Some Christian interpreters of this psalm see in this verse a foreshadowing of the women who came to the tomb to anoint Jesus' body only to discover that He had risen from death. Portions of this psalm are chanted in the Orthodox celebration of Christ's victory over death.

68:13 The meaning of the verse is uncertain; the text may have been corrupted in transmission. Except for the reference to a "dove," one might visualize the wings of the cherubim on the ark of the covenant. The context of warfare adds to that possibility.

68:16 The poetry describes the great mountains of the land as jealous when God chose Zion for the resting place of the ark of the covenant. Although other mountains are higher, they were not chosen. Possibly there was an intended slight of other elevations that were sites for the worship of pagan gods (48:2).

68:17 "Chariots" represent angelic forces in this poetic imagery (see Dt 33:2; 2 Kg 6:15; Zch 6:5).

68:18 The psalm celebrates how Yahweh ascended on high and received gifts from men, just as a victorious sovereign in the ancient Near East would receive gifts in tribute. The line is appropriate as a description of the Lord's conquest of the land and the ascension of His presence to Zion, represented by the ark. In the NT, Paul used this psalm with reference to Jesus' triumphant ascension to heaven, in which He gave spiritual gifts to His people (Eph 4:8; cp. 2 Co 2:14). When the conquering king received the spoils of war, he distributed them in turn to his loyal subjects. Paul, following the Greek OT reading "gave" (Hb "took"), omitted the thought of receiving the tribute, and went right to the point of the distribution of gifts.

69:2-9 Deep waters ("floodwaters," v. 15) and the other images here are metaphors for trouble. Because the psalms were generalized for the use of the community's worship, the psalmist's particular trouble is difficult to gauge. It appears that he was persecuted by faithless people, including family members (v. 8) because of his zeal for the worship of the Lord (v. 9). The psalmist had a burning passion for the Lord's cause. In the NT, zeal for the house of the Lord consumed Christ, for like the psalmist, He desired to please God above all else (Jn 2:17; Rm 15:3).

69:12 The gate complex with its plaza is best known as the place where the elders of the city sat to make decisions. But everyone going into or out of the city had to pass through it, so it was also a place where drunkards would be found.

69:21 Gall is a poisonous herb; the psalmist used it, with bitter vinegar, as a picture of the treatment he was receiving from his enemies. They made fun of his grief (vv. 10-11) over both his own sinfulness (v. 5) and the godlessness of others. The application of these words to Christ's suffering (Mt 27:34) is more intense in view of the death He died.

69:22-28 These verses form an imprecation, or curse,on the wicked (Pss 55; 94; 109; 139). It was the psalmist's holy zeal that compelled him to call for divinejudgment. In the final analysis, wrongs must be righted.

70:5 The terms "afflicted" (or "poor") and "needy" have both economic and spiritual connotations. Economically poor people will normally be humbled by their condition and more likely to acknowledge their dependence on the Lord. In the psalms, the "poor" were often those most devoted to the Lord, who were therefore despised by the less faithful segments of the community. Similarly in the NT, Paul's mention of "the poor"(Gl 2:10) referred to the persecuted Christians of Jerusalem, for whom he was collecting an offering (Rm 15:26; 1 Co 16:1).

Ps 72 This "Solomonic" psalm recalls the glory of the Davidic kingdom. Its geographical extent is specific (v. 8): "from sea to sea" (i.e., the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea), and from the Euphrates to "the ends of the earth" (lit. "ends of the land"; the word is 'erets, as in v. 16). Other rulers will bow down to the son of David (v. 11), and through him the Lord will bless all nations (v. 17).

72:4 The rule of the ideal king is righteous and just (v. 1),he will be a champion for the afflicted and the needy, and have pity on the weak and the poor (vv. 12-14). Thus, the psalmist petitioned God for the prosperity of the anointed king and his realm (vv. 15-17).

72:18-20 This passage, with its doxology (ascription of praise), marks the end of Book II of Ps, and also of the collection called "the prayers of David," although Davidic psalms appear later in the book.

Ps 73 The psalmist (Asaph, according to the superscription) reports he had serious doubts (v. 13) about the value of his faith when he saw the prosperity of the wicked all around him (v. 3). But he handled his doubts correctly; he did not publicize them to other people who might have been disillusioned by them. Rather, he went to the sanctuary (v. 17) where, in the presence of God, he saw things in eternal perspective.

73:24 In contrast to the realization that the wicked face the judgment of God, the psalmist was comforted by the hope of his glorious destiny. The words "take me up in glory" could refer to his entrance into glory after this life is over; but the Hebrew word (kavod) also means "honor" and could refer to the approval conferred on a life guided by God's counsel. In the broader scope of the Bible, these words certainly harmonize with the doctrines of resurrection and glorification.

Ps 74 The psalm laments the complete destruction of the temple (vv. 4-8) in words that, if taken literally, could only fit the Babylonian invasion in 586 B.C. But the superscription, "A Maskil of Asaph," relates the psalm to David's music director. The psalm may have originated among the musicians descended from Asaph, or may have been composed as a "maskil" in his style (the meaning of maskil is uncertain).

74:13-14 The psalm uses the language of Canaanite myths to affirm the absolute sovereignty of God. "Leviathan" and the "sea monsters" were the pagan's way of deifying the uncontrollable force of nature in the sea. But God defeated the sea at the exodus (114:1; Is 51:9-10), meaning He controlled the sea to destroy the Egyptian army. In defeating Egypt, and later Assyria and Babylon, He also defeated the gods they worshiped (see Nm 33:4; Jb 26:12; Ps 89:9-10; 104:26; Is 27:1; Ezk 29:3).

75:5 The imagery of the "horn," taken from the animal world, signifies the power and autonomy of the person.

Ps 76 This psalm, like Pss 46 and 48, celebrates God's presence in Jerusalem. It may be a psalm of David commemorating the defeat of the Philistines at Baal-perazim (2 Sm 5:17-21).

76:2 Salem, the ancient name of Jerusalem, first appears in Gn 14:18; Melchizedek was king of Salem and priest of God Most High. It is related to Hebrew shalom, "peace."

76:3 The psalmist states that God defeated His enemies and destroyed their weapons, "there"—i.e., in "His dwelling place in Zion" (v. 2). This is a picture of spiritual warfare; God's victory takes place in the sanctuary, which is a microcosm (miniature model) of the world, before it occurs in the earthly battlefield.

Ps 78 This long "historical psalm" is essentially a retelling of Israel's record of disobedience and unbelief in the face of all that God had done for His people. Yet, despite their sin, He "awoke as if from sleep" and defeated their enemies (vv. 65-66).

78:67-72 The psalm pointedly mentions God's choice of Judah, Mount Zion, and David in place of Ephraim, which stood for the northern Israelite tribes. This suggests that it was composed after the breakup of the kingdom, when northern Israel rebelled against the Davidic dynasty and went its own way (1 Kg 12:16).

80:1 The Lord sits enthroned "on the cherubim." The reference is to the presence of the Lord in the most holy place in the sanctuary, where the ark of the covenant was considered the footstool of his invisible throne (see 132:7-8). Molded on the lid of the box at each end were the cherubim, powerful composite figures with both human and animal features (see Ezk 1:5-11). The glory of the Lord hovered above this cover (sometimes called the "mercy seat" in English versions).

80:3 The refrain of the psalm is drawn from the high priestly blessing of Nm 6:22-27. If God's face shines on the people—if He, their Shepherd (Ps 80:1), is gracious to them—they will be saved.

81:1-5 The psalm describes a festival ceremony, or a portion of one. These verses invite the worshipers to gather "on the day of our feast" (v. 3).

81:7 Meribah was the name of the station in the wilderness where the people complained to Moses about the lack of water (Ex 17:1-7; Nm 20:1-13; Ps 95:8). The name means "striving" or "disputation."

81:8-10 A spokesman for the Lord, perhaps a prophet functioning at the sanctuary, reiterated Israel's basic obligation under the covenant: to worship no "god" other than Yahweh. He repeated the beginning of the Ten Commandments (v. 10; cp. Ex 20:2). The invitation, "Open your mouth wide, and I will fill it," may signify that the congregation was to recite the covenant commandments at this point in the ceremony.

82:1,6 To describe the Lord as presiding over the "divine assembly" of the "gods" sounds like a borrowing of Canaanite polytheistic themes. Since the Bible affirms there is only one true God, any such borrowing can only be for the purpose of opposing false religions. The Bible frequently mentions other "gods" the pagans worshiped, but makes it clear that they were lifeless, powerless idols (e.g., 96:5; 115:4-7; Is 46:1-2; 1 Co 10:19; 12:2). The term "gods" ('elohim) in this psalm could be taken in its generic sense of "strength, might" to refer to powerful men (see Ex 7:1; Jn 10:35-36), in this case corrupt judges who were not dispensing justice as they ought (Ps 82:2-4). Or it could refer to pagan deities whose false worship was supplanted by the truth of the one God. Such "gods" might have a divine assembly, but Israel's God is sovereign and so they are all subject to Him. Whether these "gods" were powerful men or false deities, their end was certain—they would die like men (vv. 6-7). God, the real Judge (50:6) has condemned them.

Ps 83 This is the last psalm in the 42-psalm "Elohistic Psalter" (Pss 42–83) in which the title "God" often appears where one would expect the divine name Yahweh. Various theories have been proposed to explain this phenomenon, but there is no consensus regarding why it occurs.

84:6 This psalm may have been used by pilgrims on their way to the sanctuary to attend the annual festivals. The location of a "Valley of Baca" is unknown. The word means "weeping." The name could have been given to a valley where balsam trees grew, for they "weep." In this psalm the expression takes on a metaphorical meaning, perhaps describing the sorrows borne by the worshipers or the hardships along their pilgrim way to the holy city. Yahweh takes even our Baca Valleys and transforms them by His presence—the presence experienced at His temple but not limited geographically.

86:8 The expression "among the gods" refers to pagan deities, which usurped the place of the one true God (see note on 82:1,6).

86:16 In this Davidic psalm, the worshiper speaks of himself as "the son of Your female servant," traditionally, "handmaid" (see also 116:16). Since the speaker was the king, the reference was to the "queen mother" who evidently could exercise considerable influence in the Judean and Israelite courts (1 Kg 2:19; 2 Ch 22:3). The records of the reigns of David's descendants on the throne of Judah usually mention the name of the king's mother (e.g., 1 Kg 14:31; 15:10; 22:42). Roman Catholic theologians sometimes point to these facts in support of the attention paid to the mother of Jesus, the Messiah, who also calls herself "the Lord's slave" (Lk 1:38), or handmaid.

87:4-6 There were people from the countries that oppressed Israel, especially Egypt (called here by the mythological name Rahab), who came to faith by acknowledging the Lord. They were therefore recorded as "born" in Zion, and were numbered as citizens of the city of God. This passage is the background for Paul's statement that "the Jerusalem above is free, and she is our mother" (Gl 4:26); it is spiritual birth, not ethnic descent, that determines who belongs to the people of God.

88:10-12 The psalmist (according to the superscription, Heman the Ezrahite) committed himself to giving God the glory for the answer to prayer. Abaddon is synonymous with Sheol, the place of the dead (see Jb 26:6;Pr 15:11; 27:20).

88:15-18 The suffering psalmist attributed his life-long affliction to God ("Your wrath," "Your terrors"). This is the realism of the faith—God is sovereign, even over difficult circumstances His people must endure. Everything has a purpose in the outworking of God's plan, even though in the time of pain it is hard to appreciate this. If the psalm seems to end on a negative note, two considerations apply. First, however much the speaker felt God had deserted him, he was still talking to Him. Second, the psalm, as it is given, may not reproduce the entire scene; when it was used in worship, another speaker not quoted here (e.g., a priest or a prophet) may have responded with an answer affirming the Lord's help. There are many places in Ps that suggest there was an unrecorded response from another speaker, in the Lord's name.

Ps 89 The Davidic covenant of 2 Sm 7 was the basis for this psalm, but the psalmist complained that its promises seem not to be fulfilled (vv. 38-45). In granting the covenant, the Lord had warned David that his descendants' disobedience would result in their chastening(2 Sm 7:14).

89:10 As in 74:14, Rahab may have been the equivalent of Leviathan or a similar mythological figure. It represented opposition from the pagans, primarily Egypt (87:4; Is 30:7). But God crushed Rahab—Egypt was defeated at the Red Sea (Ex 14:28-30; Jb 26:12; Is 51:9-10).

89:26-27 According to the Davidic covenant, the king was designated God's son or firstborn (2 Sm 7:14) because he inherited the kingdom (Ps 2:7-9). The relationship between Jesus the Messiah and the Father is far greater, because He is the divine Son (meaning that He shares the nature of the Father). He alone can be called son of David and Son of God in the full sense.

89:52 This brief doxology brings Book III to a conclusion. Book IV begins with Ps 90.

Ps 90 The superscription attributes this song to Moses, and the contents of it certainly do fit the wilderness experience. The idea that God swept the people away in His anger is a strong way of saying that they died in the wilderness because of their unbelief (95:11; Heb 4:1-5).

90:12 To number our days is to measure the time left in life and make every day count. It is based on the recognition that life is short and God's anger swift. Thus, the goal of such numbering is a heart of wisdom. Conscious of life's brevity, we learn to make choices through which God can establish the work of our hands (v. 17), producing something valuable to those that follow us (v. 16) and honoring to God.

91:1-2 The first two verses use the images of "protection" (Hb sether, "hiding place") and "shadow" from the world of birds, and "refuge" and "fortress" from military settings, to express confidence in divine protection. While most of the psalms are either prayers to God or hymns to His praise, this psalm (except v. 2) is entirely God's word of assurance to the worshiper (see Pss 50; 81; 82).

91:4 The idea of God's covering people with His feathers and wings is a figurative way to express divine nurture and protection (see Mt 23:37; Lk 13:34). It may be that the psalmist had in mind the ark of the covenant, and its accompanying winged cherubim, in the sanctuary.

91:11-13 The Lord may permit things to happen in life that are troubling and painful, but nothing is ever out of His control. God dispatches His angels to ensure that His will is safeguarded. In the NT, Satan used this reassuring passage to tempt Jesus to dramatize His identity as the messianic Son of God. Jesus countered this misuse of Scripture with another that warns against putting God to the test (Mt 4:6-7; Lk 4:10-11).

91:16 The promise of long life to the believer must not be taken for an automatic guarantee of longevity in this physical world. Wisdom literature acknowledges that, even among the righteous, life may be cut short. Still, God's purpose is that the righteous live till their life has been "satisfied" in His sight. Ultimately He will fulfill His promise both in this life and in the life to come(1 Tm 4:8-9).

Ps 93 The expression "the LORD reigns," common in the enthronement psalms (47; 93; 95–99), can also be translated "Yahweh has become King." The expression could be taken in several ways. It could express the general truth that, as Creator, He is sovereign over all things. It could be the celebration of some great victory that has revealed His rule. It could be an expression associated with a festival celebrating Yahweh's enthronement. Or it could be eschatological, as in Is 52:7 which refers to the salvation or deliverance to come. The imagery of the Lord's reigning corresponds to phenomena that accompany the coming "Day of the LORD" (Jl, Am), often called the second coming. The psalmist lavishly praised God's sovereignty with poetic language, and all these options could apply simultaneously; it is not necessary to choose between them.

93:3 The reference may be to the victory at the Red Sea; it could also be directed against pagan religions that feared the power of the seas. In Canaanite literature Baal's great victory is over Yam ("Sea"). But in the biblical perspective only the living God can control the chaos of nature, or the nations that the "seas" symbolize (Is 8:7-8; Jr 46:7-8).

94:2 "Pride" in the psalms is rarely, if ever, referring to ordinary pride in appearance or achievement. It is pride that oversteps God's boundaries and acts autonomously against God, His people, and His institutions. This psalm, directed against the "arrogant" and "evildoers" who oppress the faithful (vv. 4-7), belongs to the category of "psalms of imprecation," or cursing.

94:12 The psalm echoes Ps 1, "happy is the man." The Hebrew word here, however, is different: not the generic 'ish "man," but gever, "strong man."

94:14 The Lord will not reject His people, those who have entered into covenant by faith. Thus, the psalm is not entirely about condemnation of the wicked; it is a prayer for God's kingdom.

95:3 The Lord is "a great King above all gods." On "gods" in the psalms, see note on 82:1,6.

95:8-9 Massah means "testing" (on Meribah, see note on 81:7).

95:11 Because of their faithless challenge of God at Meribah, the Israelites were not permitted to enter the rest, i.e., the promised land (Heb 4:7). On the psalm's ending on a negative note, see note on 88:15-18. Jesus gives rest, spiritual rest now and eternal rest in the world to come (Mt 11:28).

96:1 On the "new song," see note on 33:3.

96:4 On "gods" in the psalms, see note on 82:1,6. The Lord God made the heavens and everything in them, even those things the pagans venerate.

97:1-5 Here the declaration that the Lord reigns is followed by the poetic language of theophany or epiphany—descriptions of spectacular natural phenomena in the heavens and on earth that reveal God's presence. Much of the imagery goes back to Sinai (Dt 4:11,24), but it also anticipates the coming "Day of the LORD." Thick, dark clouds (Ps 97:2) usually refer to judgment from the Lord, whose decisions are always right and just. Lightning, fire, and earthquakes all speak of the penetrating nature of divine judgment. The psalm refers, ultimately, to the future coming of the Lord (the verb is prophetic perfect). When He comes to establish His kingdom on earth, generations will see Him and be overwhelmed by the power.

98:8-9 The psalm says that the rivers clap, the mountains sing, and all nature echoes and reverberates in anticipation of the coming of the Lord. In Rm 8:19-22, Paul described the longing of creation to see the fulfillment of God's purpose.

100:1 The "shout" ("make a joyful noise," KJV, RSV) was the war cry; the Hebrew verb is the same as that of the shouting of the Israelites at the capture of Jericho (Jos 6:20). This psalm takes the worshiper into the realm of spiritual warfare.

100:3 Translations of this verse differ ("not we ourselves," KJV, NASB; "we are his," RSV, NIV) because of textual emendation by some translators, supported by a marginal note in the MT. The Hebrew text reads literally, "He made us and not we." However, the negative particle lo' is usually used with verbs; another form of negation is used for nouns or pronouns. It is likely that the original reading was lo (without the unvoiced final letter aleph), meaning "His," which sounds the same as the negative particle. An error could have crept in when a copyist misunderstood what was being dictated to him. The psalm refers to the Lord's covenant loyalty (hesed, "love," v. 5) so the worshipers are His; the other reading, of course, is also theologically correct since they did not create themselves.

Ps 101 This Davidic psalm is the charter of the king. He should shun all forms of evil in court and punish the wicked in the land. If the psalm is also prophetic of the reign of Christ, it indicates there will be people to be punished during His reign, suggesting that this is the messianic reign which will in the end be delivered up to the Father (1 Co 15:24).

102:10 The psalmist suffered under divine discipline, which he called God's "indignation and wrath." In the NT the wrath of God is the effect of His judgment on sin (Rm 1:18, 1 Th 1:10). It is this also in the OT, but in this psalm the speaker did not ascribe his suffering to his personal sin. Though he wrote that God had unleashed His anger on him in words that suggest both physical affliction and persecution (vv. 3-9), the psalm may have come out of the experience of the exile in Babylon in which it seemed that God had judged Israel harshly. The writer shared in the punishment due all Israel for its corporate sin against the Lord (see Is 6:5). And yet the writer also knew that God had not rejected His people but had promised a glorious future (Ps 30:5; Is 50–55). The full revelation of the NT reassures believers of their secure relationship with the Lord. But the NT also affirms that God's wrath is poured out on sin, and that divine chastening even of the believer (Heb 12:7) comes from that same attribute of God.

102:25-27 These words praise the Lord as the eternal, unchanging God of creation. Hebrews 1:10-12 quotes them and applies them to Jesus.

103:6 The psalm praises God for the kinds of things He does; the verbs used provide general truths (as with wisdom literature). To say that the Lord "executes acts of righteousness and justice for all the oppressed" does not mean that there are no oppressed people. It means that this is how the Lord consistently acts, so the oppressed who are faithful to His covenant (vv. 17-18) can look to Him to work in their behalf. Deliverance will come—if not in this life, certainly in the life to come. In the meantime, the people of God are to join the hosts of heaven and all God's works of creation (see 19:1) in declaring His praise (Ps 103:20-22).

104:1-9 The psalmist used vivid word pictures to describe the sovereign Lord's work of creation. The imagery was drawn from the making of a palace with tent coverings, private upper stories, and a solid foundation. The Lord uses all the elements recognized in the ancient world—wind, clouds, fire, and water—and controls them for His purpose. The Creator-King is surrounded by His servants, whether they be angels, forces of nature, or creatures of earth.

104:26 Leviathan was the sea creature the Canaanites feared; it was portrayed in myth as a seven-headed dragon (see 74:13-14). Here it was described as merely a large animal that God put in the water to frolic. What to the pagans was a terrifying force is to God a plaything. The Bible typically divests the natural world of its "religious" aura, and ascribes such a quality of awe only to the Lord and those persons and articles specifically dedicated to His service. Such a view of the world, so different from that of paganism, was essential for the development of modern science.

106:48 This doxology brings Book IV to a close; Book V begins with Ps 107.

108:6-13 These verses are parallel to 60:5-12.

109:6 This prayer is a psalm of imprecation, calling for the evil man to be punished. The writer asked that another wicked man would be the accuser who finds him guilty. The word "accuser" translates the Hebrew satan, origin of the name Satan, also called the adversary and "the accuser of our brothers" (Rv 12:10; cp. Zch 3:1-2). The psalmist apparently hoped that human institutions of justice, however corrupted, would eventually result in condemnation of the wicked (see Pr 14:32); in the process the righteousness of God would vindicate His faithful one.

109:7 The psalmist asked that the wicked person, now at the mercy of other godless men, should find his last-minute prayer to the Lord to be viewed by the Lord as sin.

109:8 The psalmist had leveled a curse against those who unjustly attacked him (vv. 2-5). The curse was that the attacker's life be shortened and his place taken by another. The apostles used this passage to authorizereplacing Judas among the Twelve (Ac 1:20). The psalm's application was clear to them. Judas was accursed; he had betrayed the Lord and then hung himself, so another must fill his position among the disciples as a witness to Jesus' ministry and resurrection (Ac 1:21-22).

109:8-10 The psalmist's petition sounds unjust—that his attacker's children should suffer because of his sins. In reality, the psalmist was only describing the normal effects of the judgment to be meted out on his evil enemy. When a guilty man was condemned to death, his wife and children would be without the resources they had formerly enjoyed. Under ordinary circumstances widows and orphans were to be cared for by the people of Israel, no matter how they had become destitute (Dt 10:18; 24:17; Ps 82:3; Is 1:17; Jr 7:6; Ezk 22:7). But their welfare depended on their faithfulness to God. The sins of the fathers would be visited on the children who hate the Lord (Ex 20:4-6), but for those who love the Lord, He would extend His loyal love (Ps 103:17-18).

If, in including his attacker's family in his curse, the psalmist seems to be excessively vengeful, his passions were motivated by a desire for God's justice to be fully effected. In OT thinking, a person's life, or "soul," did not end at the surface of his body but extended to his family, his property, his "name" or reputation, and all that pertained to him. The NT teaches believers to have compassion, to forgive, and to pray for their enemies. Jesus prayed, on the cross, "Father, forgive them, because they do not know what they are doing" (Lk 23:34). Christian use of the psalms of imprecation, in corporate worship or personal devotion, is always aimed at the conversion of those who do evil and persecute the faithful. That is the ultimate aim of God's own passion for justice (Ezk 18:23).

109:16-20 These verses show that the imprecation simply called for this man to reap what he had been sowing. The psalmist's attacker had a habit of cursing, or condemning, others; instead of blessing people with his words, he sought to defame and destroy.

Therefore no blessing should come his way, but only cursing. This reciprocity is a principle of God's kingdom; as Jesus told His disciples, "with the measure you use, it will be measured to you" (Mt 7:2).

Ps 110 This Davidic psalm is the one most often quoted in the NT as being prophetic of the coming of Jesus the Messiah. It looks forward to the coming of the King to defeat the wicked and to reign as a royal priest.

110:1 David received an oracle ("The LORD declared to my Lord") about the decree of God. David, being a prophet, foresaw that one of his descendants would be his Lord. That Davidic king would rule over the people of God by divine authority. He pictured Him seated at God's right hand as a co-Ruler, corresponding to ancient royal practice. Daniel would later indicate that this King, the Messiah, would come in clouds of heaven to receive dominion over all nations (Dan 7:13-14), as declared in Ps 2:7-9. David knew his descendant would be truly great (see 2 Sm 23; 1 Kg 2:19, 1 Ch 28:5; 2 Ch 9:8; Ps 72), but he did not foresee that the Lord Himself would come and take on mortal flesh—Immanuel, "God with us." Jesus asked His opponents to explain how the Messiah could be the son of David, since David called Him his Lord (Mk 12:35-37); they had no answer for Him. The implication is that Jesus was calling into question the religious leaders' view of the Christ as a revolutionary leader.

110:1 The psalm pictures the sovereignty of the Messiah in terms of the Middle Eastern culture. Making one's enemies a footstool was a poetic expression for defeat and subjugation (Jos 10:24; 1 Kg 5:3; Is 51:23). The NT relates this passage to Jesus' ascension to the right hand of the Father (Ac 2:33-34; Heb 1:3; 12:2) to await the time of the second coming (Ac 3:19-21). Having subjected all other authorities, He will hand over the kingdom to the Father (1 Co 15:25).

110:3 The translations of this difficult verse vary. The picture is the sudden appearance of the army of the Lord, His willing servants (as with Jdg 5:2,9). The servants will be as numerous as the dew fresh at dawn(2 Sm 17:12). They will be youthful, strong, numerous, and willing to fight. In the fulfillment, the Lord Christ will come with saints and angels to judge the world, but it will be the powerful word of the Lord that will destroy the enemies (see Rv 19).

110:4 The decree of God makes this king a priest, not after the order of Aaron and the Mosaic law but the order of Melchizedek, priest-king of ancient Jerusalem (Salem, Gn 14:18). The Davidic king was from the tribe of Judah and his priesthood, which was not for service in animal sacrifice, was to come from a different origin. Thus David wore the priestly ephod when celebrating the installation of the ark of the covenant in Jerusalem (2 Sm 6:14). Once the sacrifices were fulfilled in the death of Christ (Rm 3:25), the temple rites were no longer required. Only then could another order of priesthood be installed. Melchizedek, priest of God Most High, blessed Abraham—ancestor of all Israel—and received his tithe; he was the ideal pattern for this new priesthood (see the discussion in Heb 5:6-10; 7:22).

110:7 The reference to drinking from the brook may be an allusion to Gideon and his chosen warriors (Jdg 7:6-7)who would crush the enemies of the Lord's people. To have one's head lifted up by a superior was an expression of approval, vindication, and help from that source (Gn 40:13; Ps 3:3).

111:1 Psalms that are hymns of praise often begin, and sometimes end, with "Hallelujah" (106; 113; 135; 146–150). The Hebrew word combines the verb meaning "praise, boast about, celebrate" with a shortened form of the name Yahweh. The verb hallel gives the book its name in Hebrew (tehillim). The English name comes from the Greek word for a stringed instrument used in worship (psalterion; cp. the name "Psalter" for the collection of psalms). The Greek word is a translation of the Hebrew word found in the superscription of many psalms, directing their performance "with stringed instruments" (mizmor, e.g., Ps 4).

111:10 The first half of this verse, drawn from Pr 1:7, reminds people that the proper response to all that God has done is reverential fear. To fear the Lord is to trust in Him, obey Him, and worship Him as God and Savior. The word indicates both a shrinking back from something, out of a sense of awe, and an attraction to it in adoration and wonder. The OT has no expression corresponding to our general concept of "being religious," but uses phrases that relate specifically to Yahweh, such as knowing the Lord, being faithful to the Lord, and fearing the Lord.

Ps 112 This psalm continues the wisdom motifs begun in Ps 111 (see Ps 1), pronouncing blessings on the life of the one who fears the Lord. The blessings enumerated flow from the obedient life of the righteous. In other words, the wise man will produce children who will be mighty in the land (v. 2), or who will labor with wisdom and industry to produce wealth (v. 3).

Pss 113–118 These six psalms form a group known as the "Great Hallel," or Great Praise, traditionally sung during the Passover celebration. Psalms 113–116 were sung before the meal, with Pss 117–118 sung afterward.

113:1-3 The psalm, like many hymns of praise in this book, begins with an invitation to the faithful to enter into the celebration of the Lord. The expression "from the rising of the sun to its setting" is a way of saying that praise should be lifted all day long—dawn to dusk—and everywhere, from east to west.

113:7-9 The grace of God is seen in His characteristic actions on behalf of the poor and needy: He raises them up to sit with princes. In God's economy the poor will be exalted and fulfilled (1 Sm 2:8; Jb 36:7). In this life God expects the righteous to meet the needs of the poor on His behalf (Pr 19:17)—this requires moving people from indifference to compassion. Likewise, God is able to resolve the condition of the barren woman (see Gn 16:2; 20:18; 1 Sm 1:6; Lk 1:25). Verses 7-8 are taken from the song of Hannah—who was childless before the birth of Samuel—in 1 Sm 2:8, adapted by Mary in the Magnificat (Lk 1:52-53).

114:5-6 The psalmist used sarcasm, addressing the sea, the Jordan River, and the mountains and hills as though they could respond to his question: Why did you recoil before the Lord's action in delivering His people? Of course, the natural phenomena personified here could make no response but were totally under the Lord's control. The crossing of the Jordan is paired with that of the Red Sea as almost a second exodus event. It was just that, in fact, for the new generation born in the wilderness that had not passed out of Egypt with Moses.

115:8-12 The psalmist invited three different groups of worshipers to put their trust in the Lord and receive His blessing. "Israel" was the covenant people as a whole; the "house of Aaron" was the priesthood; "you who fear the LORD" could be non-Israelite worshipers present at the festival. The description "you who fear God" (Ac 13:16,26; cp. 10:2) occurs in the NT as a designation for non-Jewish worshipers of the God of Israel.

116:13 The allusions are to a drink offering (Nm 28:7) and a thank offering (Ps 116:17) that would be given to God as the thankful worshiper proclaimed the name of the Lord in the congregation. To do this was to fulfill the vow of praise that he vowed while praying for deliverance (see 50:14).

116:15 The psalmist confessed that the love of God would not easily permit adversity (4:3) or an early death for His saints (79:11; 102:20). That which is "valuable" is rare and highly treasured. Some scholars argue for a meaning "grievous" for the word yaqar, interpreting the line to mean that the deaths of His saints grieves the Lord, but that makes Him into a mere observer. No saints die untimely deaths in God's plan; their deaths are precious to Him.

Ps 117 This, the shortest chapter in the Bible, is a complete hymn of praise. It includes the invitation for all people—not just Israel—to celebrate the Lord. It also gives the reason for praise: the Lord has been faithful to His covenant with His people ("faithful love" translates Hebrew hesed, loyalty based on a covenant relationship). Finally, it speaks of His enduring "faithfulness" (Hebrew 'emunah, "truth" in the sense of reliability, the root of the English word "amen"). All of this is bracketed between the cries of praise, "Hallelujah!"

Ps 118 The psalm has no superscription positing a historical occasion for its composition. In one view, it fits the return from Babylonian captivity. The nation (represented by the speaker) had been severely disciplined for sin, being surrounded almost to extinction by the nations. But the Lord delivered His people, and the nation returned to building God's program and came to praise Him for letting them live. In another view, this psalm was a ceremony celebrating a victory of the king in battle; the flavor is that of the Davidic psalms. The king, who represented the entire nation, had been in great danger, but was delivered from death and vowed to tell of the Lord's great deeds (vv. 10-17). An "entrance rite" followed (see Ps 15) in a dialogue between the sanctuary doorkeepers or choir (vv. 19-20,26) and the speaker and those in procession (v. 27) with him. The worshiper confessed his loyalty to the Lord (v. 28) and reiterated his promise to praise Him. The entire psalm is framed by a traditional hymn celebrating Yahweh's hesed, His faithfulness to the covenant (vv. 1-4,29; see 1 Ch 16:34,41; 2 Ch 5:13; 7:3,6; 20:21; Ps 107:1; 136; 138:8). Much of this psalm became part of the liturgy of church worship, and remains so to this day.

The psalm is part of the "Great Hallel" (see Ps 113) designated for use at the festivals of Israel. Pss 117–118 were sung after the Passover meal. These would have been the psalms ("hymn" in many English versions) that Jesus and the disciples sang in the Upper Room after the institution of the Lord's Supper, before they went out to the Mount of Olives (Mt 26:30).

118:2-4 After the opening hymn, the speaker invited the same three groups mentioned in 115:8-12 to confess the Lord's enduring faithfulness to His people.

118:5-12 In recounting his distress, the psalmist reported that all the nations surrounded him (the Israelites, whom he represented), but that he destroyed them in the name of the Lord. The verb in verses 10-11 is literally, "cut off," not a military word but the word meaning "to circumcise." The psalm could refer simply to military action in the Lord's cause. The reference to circumcision could also mean that the enemies were "converted" to a respect for the Lord, in a change of heart, through His powerful intervention (His "name"). Historically, the Jews were released from their captivity by the kindness of the Persians rulers, who supplanted their Babylonian captors.

118:19 The "gates" bring to mind the gates of the temple, through which the righteous would enter to praise the Lord for delivering them from death. The speaker approached the sanctuary voicing the "thanks" of the people he represented. His thanks were not simple gratitude; the Hebrew verb yadah signifies the lifting of the hand, in a gesture affirming loyalty to the Lord's covenant.

118:22 This familiar verse is the heart of the worshipers' praise. In one view, the stone was Israel, represented by its king, and the builders were the world empires—Egypt, Assyria, and Babylon—who could move puppet states around at will. Judah, which they considered trivial, had again become the capstone of God's building program. Alternatively, one thinks of David who was not considered a likely candidate for Israel's anointed ruler (1 Sm 16:1-12). Because the psalms were generalized for community use, the language could apply to a variety of situations in which a faithful worshiper had been passed over in the search for leadership. In the NT Jesus expounded on this passage (Mt 21:42; Mk 12:10; Lk 20:17): He, the true Israel, is the stone that the builders—the Judean religious authorities and the Roman occupiers—rejected. Now, in the light of His resurrection and ascension, He is the centerpiece of God's new structure for His kingdom (see Ac 4:11).

118:24 The day the Lord made is the day He granted victory over powerful enemies or brought deliverance from the oppression of the nations (see 126:1-3). In the NT fulfillment, it is the day of God's new creation, the resurrection of Jesus, with its promise of deliverance from "the last enemy," death (1 Co 15:26).

118:25 The prayer of the worshipers entering the sanctuary was that the Lord would bring them full and complete salvation or deliverance. Their words "LORD, save us," in Hebrew, are hoshi'ah na', which came into the liturgy of the church through Greek as "Hosanna."

118:26 The priests in the temple blessed the worshipers, especially the one leading the procession: "Blessed is he who comes in the name of the LORD." In the NT the followers of Jesus applied the words of this psalm to Him as He entered Jerusalem, linking them to the arrival of the Davidic kingdom (Mk 11:9-10). They understood that Jesus was no ordinary worshiper approaching the temple but the Messiah whose coming would change the order of things.

118:27 The Hebrew text reads, "Bind the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar." This would have been the text used in the Passover liturgy and by the people at the holy city. The Septuagint rendered it, "with boughs in hand join the festal procession up to the horns of the altar," a reading that fits the Festival of Booths better than other festivals. The issue turns on the meaning of the word 'abotim, "ropes" or "boughs." The RSV ("branches") and NIV {"boughs") follow the Septuagint.

Ps 119 This, the longest psalm, is a meditation on the word of God in its many forms and functions. The entire psalm is alphabetically arranged (acrostic). The first stanza is labeled alef because each of the eight verses starts with a word that begins with that letter, the first of the alphabet. The second stanza follows with the same arrangement using the second letter of the alphabet, bet; the rest of the psalm follows the same pattern through the alphabet. This scheme certainly aided in memorizing the meditation (a "mnemonic" device); but it also was a way of ordering the thoughts to provide a complete meditation on the word of God—the "ABCs" about the law of the Lord. Commentators have called the composition of psalms of this type "learned psalmography"; that is, inspiration combined with intense scholarship and literary skill.

Pss 120–134 These 15 psalms have the heading "a song of ascents"; that is, "going up" to Zion for the festivals; hence they are also called "pilgrim psalms" or "psalms of Zion." Older English versions thought of the "ascents" as graduated steps of the sanctuary, and called the psalm "a song of degrees."

120:5 Meshech is in Asia Minor near the Black Sea; Kedar is a word for the desert area in which Arab tribesmen wander (see Is 21:16-17; Ezk 27:21). How could the psalmist be in both places at the same time, even if they referred to widely scattered areas? The language is figurative; the psalmist lived among people who hated peace (v. 7), and they were like the hostile barbarians in these places.

121:1-2 The psalmist was contemplating ("I raise my eyes") the dangerous journey ("toward the mountains") and was concerned for his safety ("Where will my help come from?"). Alternatively, he thought of the mountains as sites for the worship of pagan deities, who were no help to anyone. He supplied his own answer: The One who made all things, including the hills, was his Protector.

121:3-6 The psalm concludes with a pronouncement of blessing in another voice (note the change in personal pronouns from "my" to "your"). Someone accompanying the pilgrim on the journey, such as a priest, was speaking. Or the setting for the psalm is not the pilgrimage to Zion but the sanctuary itself, once the worshiper reached it; the expression "coming and going" (v. 8) suggests that the speaker was at the site of the festival.

121:6 In a poetic image, the sun and the moon are not the literal heavenly bodies but represent what takes place under them—events occurring during the day and night that could, potentially, be harmful.

121:7-8 These verses could be translated as a "bidding prayer" ("May the Lord protect"). They can also be translated as a promise for the future, "The LORD will protect you from all harm" (most Bibles have a similar rendering). The immediate context was concerned with divine protection for the holy mission to the temple in obedience to the law, but the words in any rendering express a general belief of the faith, only occasionally cast into doubt (Ps 44).

122:1 The pilgrim psalmist reflected on the joy he felt when it was time to go to the holy city to observe the annual festivals. These times of celebration could extend for a week or more. Now the pilgrim found himself standing in the city, marveling at all its features.

122:4 The purpose of the people going to the festivals to worship was "to give thanks," expressing their loyalty to the Lord and reaffirming their gratitude for His covenant blessings (on the meaning of "giving thanks" in the OT, see note on 118:19).

122:5 The mention of "thrones of the house of David" indicates that there was probably a high court of appeals in the royal city. Local elders could handle routine cases, but the most difficult cases had to be brought to the leader of the nation or his representatives (72:2; cp. Ex 18:13-23; 1 Kg 3:16-28).

124:1-2 What appears to be a redundancy is actually a glimpse into the way the psalms may have been performed. First the leader, or choirmaster, announced the title of the psalm (in biblical times, Scripture passages were identified by their opening words). Then, at his invitation, the congregation joined in to recite the entire piece.

124:4-5 The image of water is used for the threat to life (Lm 3:54; Jnh 2:3-4). Such language always brings to remembrance Israel's escape from Egyptian slavery, the great "saving" event that lies at the heart of OT faith.

Ps 125 The security of the true believer is like the security of Mount Zion that is surrounded by mountains; but those who turn aside to sin have no security in the Lord (see Heb 6:4-8; 1 Jn 2:19).

125:3 The scepter is the symbol of rule; "the scepter of the wicked" would refer to a corrupt and unjust rule by either a Gentile or an unrighteous Israelite or Judean king. Either situation was a threat to the righteous.

126:1 Any occasion when Jerusalem was restored to a position of peace and prominence would be a time for great celebration and recognition of what the Lord had done for his people. This could have occurred after some foreign threat had diminished (e.g., 2 Kg 18:9–19:36) or at the restoration of the Judeans to their homeland after the Babylonian exile. An alternate reading of the clause "we were like those who dream" occurs in the Greek OT and the Dead Sea Scrolls: "we were greatly comforted."

126:4-6 The psalmist prayed for the restoration of the land to its fruitfulness; "watercourses in the Negev" could refer to irrigation that made agriculture possible in southern Judah. A foreign invasion would force all local residents into the fortified cities, and a siege might last for several years during which time the land could not be worked. This would also have been the case during the Babylonian exile when depopulation of Judah meant that much of its farmland lay fallow. Getting it back into productivity required great effort; the psalmist described the labor of sowing and reaping and the joy of a successful harvest. In the context of return from exile, by "sowing" the psalmist could mean the effort to convince people still in the East to return and join in God's program to restore the community centered in Zion. "Reaping" would then refer to their response to this appeal. This figure of sowing and reaping was well known when Jesus used it in His parable of the sower, a picture of spreading the message of the kingdom (Mt 13:1-23). In many ways, Jesus was calling Israel back to the Lord from an "exile" of false religious hopes that centered on throwing off Roman domination.

127:2 It is not necessarily pointless, or vain, to rise early or stay up late. The key to understanding this verse is the phrase "eating food earned by hard work." The expression "hard work" translates the same word that is rendered "painful labor" in Gn 3:17; it stresses anxieties as well as painful experiences. The Bible commends the diligent worker (Pr 24:33-34; 2 Th 3:10-13; cp. Col 3:17), but to lengthen the day with anxious toil and stress only leads to greater problems of body and spirit. By contrast, the Lord gives sleep to the person He loves—the one who trusts Him (Ps 4:8). The psalm's words may apply equally to literal sleep and to the rest and peace of mind that sleep symbolizes. Anxious toil burns the candle at both ends. One can work hard at worthwhile projects (e.g., building a house—cp. v. 1, where "house" could even referto the place of worship), but it is the Lord's involvement that makes the effort worthwhile and successful.

127:3-5 The verse reminds parents of their duties. Children are the Lord's gift, to be sure, but also a heritage that must be developed and improved. Having a strong family, with many sons, gives a man influence in the community—"at the city gate" (v. 5), the place of business and legal transactions. Before Israel had arrived at an understanding of the resurrection of the dead, a man's children were viewed as the instruments ("arrows," v. 4) of the continuing influence of his life.

129:3 The agricultural analogy of plowing is applied to the painful oppression of the psalmist's enemies: they plow his back. The image stresses their persecution and his suffering. Perhaps the speaker is referring to wrongful flogging because of the testimony of false accusers (Dt 25:1-3).

129:6 The roofs of houses in antiquity were often made of branches packed with mud, layer upon layer. In the spring, as people rolled the roof flat and packed more mud on new branches to repair it from winter damage, grass would immediately grow on the roof. But as soon as the summer heat bore down, with no rain forthcoming, the grass died as quickly as it sprang up. The psalmist uses this image to voice his hope that the wicked would be quickly removed.

130:3-4 This penitential psalm stresses God's forgiveness apart from our deserving (103:10-12). If God took our sins into account, no one could withstand His judgment. But the good news of the Bible, throughout, is that there is forgiveness with God. When He forgives sins, He no longer remembers them (Jr 31:34) and will never bring them up again—not in this life, nor the life to come.

130:6 The psalmist waited eagerly for the word from the Lord, most likely the word of forgiveness through the prophet or the priest (2 Sm 12:12-15). In the OT God often communicated forgiveness through an oracle; such a word may have been uttered in this case, but not recorded, between verses 6 and 7. In the NT believers do not have to wait for a specific word from the Lord, for the word stands once and for all that if we confess our sins He is both faithful and righteous to forgive (1 Jn 1:9).

Ps 131 This short psalm contains an implicit warning not to become too involved in trying to understand the mystery of God (see Dt 29:29; Ps 139:6). It is enough to rely on Him as His child—the psalmist dared to use the picture of a mother to convey his thought (see Hs 11:1-4; Lk 12:34). The speaker saw himself as a member of his larger worshiping community (Ps 131:3).

132:1-5 This psalm is constructed around two vows: David's vow to find a resting-place for the ark (vv. 2-5; see 2 Sm 7:1-2; 1 Ch 28:2), and the Lord's vow that David's family line would rule forever (vv. 11-12; see2 Sm 7:11-13). The psalm's language is hyperbole, or exaggeration; it does not mean that David literally never slept until he had provided for the Lord's dwelling, but that the project constantly occupied his mind. This poetic passage is an inference from the historical record, or is based on annals now lost; David's specific vow, as quoted here, does not appear elsewhere.

132:6-8 Verse 8 quotes Nm 10:35, words used whenever the ark of the covenant set out during Israel's march through the wilderness. This passage may reflect a ceremony reenacting the ark's transfer from the fields to the tent David had set up for it in Jerusalem ("we found it in the fields . . . let us go," see 2 Sm 6:1-17). The ark is the footstool of the Lord's invisible throne; the people wanted to go to its "resting place," where they might worship in the Lord's presence.

132:17 The psalmist looked to the fulfillment of the Davidic covenant. Messiah is compared to a horn (power) and a lamp (guidance) and will flourish (grow) in Zion ("there," v. 13).

134:1-2 The psalmist invited worshipers to praise the Lord, using the word barak, which means "bless" or "enrich." If God is in possession of all, how can a worshiper further enrich Him? Yet the psalms are full of such expressions (e.g., 34:1; 63:4; 68:26; 96:2; 103:1-2,20-22; 104:1,35; 135:19-20). Praise is the worshiper's obligation under the covenant, his expression of homage to the great King. By praising Him, people extend His reputation in the world and open themselves to receiving His blessing in return. The worshipers in this psalm were priests, offering their praise in the sanctuary continuously ("at night"), as David instructed Asaph and his musicians to do (1 Ch 16:5-7).

Ps 135 This psalm has been called "an anthology of praise" because it is based entirely on material rearranged from other psalms or Scripture passages. Among the most obvious: verses 1-2 = Ps 134:1-2; verse 4 = Dt 7:6; verse 5 = Ex 18:11; verse 6 = Ps 115:3; verse 7 = Jr 10:13; verses 8-12 = Ps 136:10,18-22; verse 13 = Ex 3:15; verse 14 = Dt 32:36; verses 15-21 = Ps 115:4-6,8-11.

Ps 136 This psalm develops as a recitation of Israel's history of deliverance, with each statement answered by the refrain "His love is eternal." The Hebrew word is hesed, which refers to God's faithfulness to His covenant. His loyalty to His people is seen in what He has done for them in delivering them from their oppressors and sustaining His creation (v. 25). The response of the worshiping community is to pledge its faithfulness to the Lord in return, as seen in verses 1 and 26 (on the meaning of "giving thanks" in the OT, see note on 118:19).

Ps 137 The setting for this psalm is the exile in Babylon, the greatest judgment upon Israel in the OT. In 586 B.C. the Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem and its temple and carried tens of thousands of people into captivity in Mesopotamia (modern Iraq). Those who remained alive could only lament the devastation.

137:2-3 The image of hanging their stringed instruments on the trees dramatically captures the feeling of the speakers. They saw no point of singing the "songs of Zion"—the music associated with worship in the sanctuary—on foreign soil. Their pagan audience in Babylon considered these songs mere entertainment (see Ezk 33:32), and to perform them would have been degrading and humiliating. While older English translations used "willow" trees, perhaps to capture the idea of weeping, the trees in the region were probably poplars.

137:5-6 The captives swore an oath never to forget Jerusalem. Such an oath bound them to plan for the restoration, because the covenant promises made by the prophets held out the hope of a re-gathering to the land (see Is 54; Jr 31; Ezk 36 among others). The terms of the oath, which mentions the skill of the "right hand" and the "tongue," would apply especially to the Levitical musicians of the sanctuary, with their instruments.

137:7-9 The language of these verses jars the sensitivities of the modern reader, especially one who has never seen war. The captives of Israel had suffered such grief at the cruelty of the Babylonians (see Hab 1:6-11) that they called on God to visit the wicked with divine judgment in the only way that they would understand—to inflict upon them the horrors that they had inflicted on the Israelites. This God had said He would do (Hab 2:6-20), so they were simply praying for His word to be fulfilled. The severity of the expression brings to mind the complete annihilation of the pagan enemies that was commanded for the Israelites' occupation of Canaan. There are people in today's world—not Christians—who hold this same view regarding "infidels," but the NT gives the Christian a different way of praying for enemies. But the NT also declares that God will avenge His people when He judges the world.

138:1 On the "heavenly beings," see note on 82:1,6.

Ps 139 This is a profound meditation on how the Lord knows everything about His human creation (vv. 1-6) and how He is present everywhere in His creation (vv. 7-12). It was the Lord who made us and planned for our lives (vv. 13-18). The meditation prompts the immediate response of loyalty to God (vv. 19-24).

139:2 God knows not only every move we make in our daily routines, but also the motives behind our actions. The expression "from far away" can be temporal or spatial; in this context it is probably temporal—beforehand, and not from a distance (see v. 4).

139:5-6 David felt trapped by this knowledge: God placed His hand (kaph, the palm) on him, so to speak, and so besieged him with "extraordinary knowledge" beyond his reach.

139:7-12 The speaker's first impulse was to flee—but where? God is present everywhere. There was no place he could go to get away from this penetrating knowledge—not even to the abode of the dead (v. 8). But he began to see that God's "hand," which formerly seemed to entrap him, was really leading him (v. 10) into His presence. Wherever he went—even to remote places of the earth or to Sheol, where it seemed God would not follow him—he did not want to be there without the light of His presence.

139:15 The psalmist used "the depths of the earth" poetically to describe the womb because it is similarly hidden from the eye. The reference to being hidden ties this stanza back to the previous one (vv. 8-9).

139:16 The verse declares that, even in the womb, the child was being formed under the supervision and by the active involvement of God who already had planned the course of his life. This statement has much to say about how people must give human life in the womb the same loving care that God—whose Spirit gives life (2 Co 3:3)—bestows upon it. The passage is poetry, but is still revealed truth. The passage also stresses the sovereignty of God more than any other psalm; people are not the masters of their own destiny, but are in the hand of the Lord.

139:21-22 David affirmed his complete loyalty to the Lord and His cause. The psalmist's "hate" was not a violent, self-centered attitude; it referred to the complete rejection and detestation of the ways of those who disregard God. The psalmist could not be loyal to God and still associate with His enemies.

Ps 142 The historical superscription says that David wrote this psalm when he was in the cave. David was in a cave on two occasions when he fled Saul (1 Sm 24; 26).

143:12 The translation sounds contradictory: "in Your faithful love destroy my enemies." This is the word hesed, meaning God's faithfulness or loyalty to His covenant with Israel. Under the covenant, which is like a treaty, the Lord has "contracted" to defend His people and destroy the wicked. His hesed is the basis on which the worshiper, faithful in turn to the Lord, can appeal for His help.

Ps 146 This psalm praises the Lord for His wonderful deeds, offering a catalog of the kinds of things God does. But the history of the faith revealed in the Bible shows that these are not absolutes—He has not vindicated all who are oppressed, or fed all who are hungry, or given sight to all who are blind. But it is His intent to do all these things, and He will; the Bible affirms that all the promises of God will be fulfilled, if not in this life, surely in the life to come. Everything will be put right. But the fact is that God has done these things again and again, and His greatest fulfillment has been in the work of Christ (2 Co 1:20). The mighty works of Jesus show that He is able, and willing, to do the things listed here (see Lk 7:22; Ac 10:38). Moreover, a psalm like this summons the people of God to be active in doing the work of God on earth—what He wants done. Too often believers fail to understand what God can do, and how He does many of His works through them.

147:14 The psalmist extolled the Lord, who brought peace and prosperity to His people. The passage is saying that whatever peace and prosperity the people of God enjoyed came from God. These blessings may not be fully realized in this life, but the fact that God is their source leads the faithful to pray for them and to expect them. When they do not occur, wisdom literature will probe the possible reasons (e.g., Ps 44, and the book of Jb).

148:4-5 How do the sun, moon, and waters praise the Lord? Their very existence attests to the glory and majesty and power of God (19:1-5; Rm 1:20). To call on natural phenomena using the device of personification (Ps 114:5-6) is a way of drawing attention to their witness to God's greater power.

149:3 For the Israelite it was natural to celebrate before the Lord with dancing (150:4), as well as singing and praising. In a culture where dance has become associated with immorality, it requires discretion for this art to be brought into the praise of God. The dance of Israelite worship was of the type called "folk dance" today, involving groups of worshipers in procession (68:25). Such dancing was never meant to call attention to the individual dancer, but was part of the colorful pageantry of a community festival.

149:6-9 The psalmist called for the Lord's people to employ dual weapons of spiritual warfare: the praise ("exaltation," often translated "high praises") of God and the "two-edged sword." The passage brings to mind the events that occurred when the Judean King Jehoshaphat was attacked by several foreign armies; he sent singers out ahead of his forces lifting a hymn of praise to the Lord, and the enemy armies fell into confusion and destroyed themselves (2 Ch 20:18-26). In the hands of OT warriors, the sword was a literal weapon; in the hands of Christians, it is the Word of God (Eph 6:17; Heb 4:12; Rv 1:16). The praise of God, combined with the proclamation of the Word, make up the believers' dual weapon in carrying out the Lord's decree of judgment against evil authorities (Ps 149:7-9).

Ps 150 This hymn, which invokes all the instruments of the sanctuary in the praise of the Lord, is the doxology that brings Book V, and the entire collection of psalms, to its conclusion.

Proverbs Articles

What is a Worldview?

by Ronald H. Nash

Worldview thinking has become an important tool to help Christians understand, explain, and defend the Christian faith. Every human being has a worldview, even though many are uninformed about what a worldview is and the power that worldviews have over the way we think and behave. A worldview is the total of answers people give to the most important questions in life. According to some, the five most important elements in any worldview are what people believe about God, ultimate reality, knowledge, ethics, and human nature.

Worldview thinking has important links to religious belief. Instead of viewing Christianity as a collection of theological bits and pieces to be believed or debated, people should approach it as a conceptual system, as a total world-and-life view. Once people understand that Christianity and its competitors are worldviews, they will be in a better position to judge the relative merits of the competing systems.

The case for or against Christian theism, then, should be made and evaluated in terms of total systems. Some people reject Christianity not because of their problems with one or two isolated issues, such as the virgin birth, but because their worldview encompasses beliefs that are the opposite of Christian thinking. Opponents of the Christian worldview disagree with Christianity because they hold to competing worldviews.

People can and do change their worldviews. Saul of Tarsus was one of early Christianity's greatest enemies. He was fanatically committed to a system that seemed to rule out any possibility of his change or conversion to the Christian faith. Saul's conversion encourages us with the confidence that even those with the most opposing worldviews to Christianity may be capable of total change. People who used to be humanists, naturalists, atheists, or followers of competing religious faiths have found reasons to turn away from their former worldviews and embrace Christianity. Conversely, people who used to profess allegiance to Christianity sometimes reach a point where they feel they can no longer believe.

It seems unlikely that a single set of conditions will always be present when people change a worldview. After all, many people remain unaware that they have a worldview, even though the sudden change in their lives and thoughts resulted from their exchanging one worldview for another. In many cases the actual change is triggered by a significant event, often a crisis of some kind. But in other instances an event or piece of new information led them to think in ways that were totally different for them. Quite unexpectedly, these people saw things they had overlooked before, or they suddenly saw matters fit together in a pattern that brought meaning where none had been discernible before.

People change their minds on important subjects for a bewildering variety of reasons (or for no reason at all). When faced with a choice among competing worldviews, we should choose the one that, when applied to the whole of reality, gives us the most coherent picture of the world. And that most coherent worldview is the Christian worldview. Helping people see the importance of their worldview and leading them to realize the coherence in the Christian worldview is one of the most important tasks of apologetics.

Is Logic Arbitrary?

by David K. Clark

Logic involves principles that govern how humans should think and speak. Studying logic means investigating correct reasoning. Traditionally, logic is said to begin with three basic laws: identity, noncontradiction, and the excluded middle. According to the law of identity, if a statement is true, then it's true. Noncontradiction says that if a statement is true, then it can't be false. The excluded middle asserts that a statement is either true or false. Logic includes such laws, but there is more to it as well.

People observe various kinds of laws—moral, natural, mathematical, legal, and logical laws. Some laws declare what ought to be. Moral and legal laws say what a person should do, although it is possible to violate them. (For instance, people should tell the truth but often don't.) Other laws describe what actually is. Natural laws assert what does happen under certain natural conditions. Theoretically, natural laws are consistent and reliable (although it's possible for a stronger opposite force to overcome a weaker force as in a tug-of-war.)

Logic has an ought component. This makes logic somewhat like math. If a shopkeeper wants to make a profit and regularly gives $50 in change to customers who pay with $20 bills, she violates logic. But this isn't a moral transgression; it's a logical blunder. She's not acting immorally but irrationally. It's wise to think logically.

What is the ground or foundation of logic? Human logic is patterned after reality. The Creator built logic into the structures of the physical and spiritual worlds. The principles of logic reflect a deep reasonableness that characterizes both God and God's creation. Because the logic of human thought and speech is grounded in God and God's work, logic is not arbitrary.

People suggest in several ways that logic is arbitrary. Some say logic isn't a discovery of the human mind detected in reality but an invention of the human mind imposed on reality. They claim that logic is arbitrary because it's grounded in how humans choose to think.

This position yields a problematic consequence: it disconnects human thought from reality. It implies that human interaction with the real world fundamentally distorts that world. The human mind recalibrates the input of the real world to fit its own inward configuration. So there's no telling whether human thinking has any connection with reality. That is troubling, for life and action require knowledge of the real world. (In addition, someone stating this position is likely refuting himself. He is probably saying that the truth about the real world is that human thinking is imposed on reality.)

Others say that logic is grounded in culture, not in objective reality. Different cultures have different logics. For example, people commonly say logic is a Western invention that Asians successfully ignore. Logic is arbitrary because it's rooted in random cultural habits.

This is a misunderstanding. While people of various cultures may think about different content and begin at varied starting points, the deep reasonableness that governs human thinking is the same. Consider an analogy. An African tribesman counts lions. An Eskimo with no knowledge of lions counts seals. Both count according to mathematical principles. Similarly, the content of thought obviously differs from place to place, but the underlying reasonableness built into the creation will govern human thought regardless of culture.

How Should a Christian Relate to a Scientific Naturalist?

by J. P. Moreland

I"'m too scientific for religious superstition. Science is the only way of gaining knowledge of reality, and it tells us the physical world is all there is." This claim, espoused by scientific naturalists, is called scientism, the view that science is the paradigm of truth and rationality.

There are two forms of scientism: strong and weak. Strong scientism implies that something is true if and only if it is a scientific claim that has been successfully tested and used according to appropriate scientific methodology. Within this view there are no truths apart from scientific truths, and even if there were, there would be no reason to believe them.

Weak scientism allows for truths to exist apart from science and grants them some minimal rational status without scientific support. Still, weak scientism implies that science is the most authoritative sector of human learning.

If either form is true, drastic implications result for theology. If strong scientism is true, then theology is not a cognitive enterprise at all and there is no such thing as theological knowledge. If weak scientism is true, then the conversation between theology and science will be a monologue, with theology listening to science and waiting for its support.

What, then, should we say about scientism, and what should Christians say to those who hold this belief?

Note first that strong scientism is self-refuting. Strong scientism is not itself a proposition of science but a proposition of philosophy about science to the effect that only scientific propositions are true and/or rational. And strong scientism is itself offered as a true, rationally justified position. Propositions that are self-refuting do not just happen to be false; they are necessarily false—it is not possible for them to be true. No future progress will have the slightest effect on making strong scientism more acceptable.

Two more problems count equally against strong and weak scientism. First, scientism does not adequately allow for the task of stating and defending the necessary presuppositions for science itself to be practiced. Thus scientism shows itself to be a foe and not a friend of science. Science cannot be practiced in thin air. Scientism has many assumptions, each has been challenged, and the task of stating and defending these assumptions is a philosophical one. The conclusions of science cannot be more certain than the presuppositions it rests upon and uses to reach those conclusions.

Strong scientism rules out these presuppositions altogether because neither the presuppositions themselves nor their defense are scientific matters. Weak scientism misconstrues its strength because it believes that scientific propositions have greater intellectual authority than those of other fields, such as philosophy. This would mean that the conclusions of science are more certain than the philosophical presuppositions used to justify and reach those conclusions, and that is absurd.

Here are some of the philosophical presuppositions of science:

- the existence of a theory of an independent, external world
- the orderly nature of the external world
- the knowability of the external world
- the existence of truth
- the existence of the laws of logic
- the reliability of our cognitive and sensory faculties to serve as truth gatherers and as a source of justified beliefs in our intellectual environment
- the adequacy of language to describe the world
- the existence of values used in science (e.g., "Test theories fairly and report test results honestly")

Second, there are true, rational beliefs in fields outside science. Strong scientism does not allow for this fact, and it is therefore to be rejected as an account of our intellectual enterprise.

Moreover, some claims outside science (for instance, "Torturing babies is wrong" or "I am now thinking about science") are better justified than some believed within science (for example, "Evolution takes place through a series of very small steps"). It is not hard to believe that many of our currently held scientific beliefs will and should be revised or abandoned in a hundred years, but it would be hard to see how the same could be said of the nonscientific propositions just cited. Weak scientism does not account for this fact.

In sum, scientism in both forms is inadequate, and it is important for Christians to integrate science and theology with genuine respect for both.

Notable Christian Apologist: Thomas Aquinas

by David A. Horner

Thomas Aquinas (1225–1274), one of the most influential thinkers of all time, was a medieval theologian, philosopher, professor, priest, poet, adviser to popes and kings—and apologist. Because he is considered a doctor of the Roman Catholic Church, his influence has at times been largely limited to Catholic circles. In recent decades, however, there has been a revival of interest in Aquinas's thoughts, among Protestant philosophers and apologists as well as among secular thinkers.

Some theologians have criticized Aquinas for dividing faith and reason and thus unwittingly planting the seeds of modern religious irrationalism. Yet most Aquinas scholars see this as a misunderstanding of his thought, which actually emphasizes the opposite—the unity of truth, knowledge, faith, and reason. Apologists can learn much from Aquinas in both attitude and approach.

Aquinas wrote over 100 titles on a wide variety of subjects. Only a few were specifically apologetic works, the best known being Summa Contra Gentiles, which was written to equip Christian missionaries evangelizing Muslims. However, all that Aquinas wrote was broadly apologetic. His vision was to think out a fully Christian worldview, in all of its aspects, and to articulate and defend it rationally against alternative views.

In his writing Aquinas considered some 10,000 objections against his own positions. He knew what others believed and why they believed it, especially the most influential views of his day. He treated these other positions accurately and fairly, and he responded with gracious but rigorous reasoning and argument. Above all he was interested in truth. (In this regard he appealed to Pr 27:17, saying that "iron sharpens iron.") He had no room for apologetic arguments that used cheap shots, caricatures, or shoddy reasoning, which are unfair and unloving to people and do not serve the truth.

Some of Aquinas's opponents appeared to hold to a two-truth view, believing in truth arrived at by philosophical reasoning and religious truth arrived at by faith. To them, these truths were independent and could be incompatible with each other. Aquinas passionately opposed this wedge between faith and reason as being incoherent, destructive, and unbiblical. Since God is the Creator of all that exists apart from Himself, all truth—however and wherever it is discovered—is from God. It is unified and consistent and ultimately points back to God Himself. Aquinas was ready to accept genuine truths discovered by non-Christian (Jewish, Muslim, pagan Greek) thinkers, and he sought to show them to be ultimately rooted in and best explained within a Christian worldview.

According to Aquinas, some truths about God (e.g., that God exists) can be known by anyone who carefully reflects on the natural order, while other truths about God (e.g., that He is triune) are known only because God has disclosed them to humanity by special revelation. But all of these are truths—they correspond to reality (who God really is and what He really is like). Although the latter truths cannot be philosophically demonstrated from nature, for Aquinas they can and should be rationally defended against objections to their truth. Truth is unified, knowable, and defensible, which makes apologetics both possible and crucial.

Aquinas did not deny the distorting effects of the fall on human thinking, but he emphasized that the fallen creation is a fallen creation. That is, fallen creation still bears the rational and moral marks of its Creator, and it still reflects, though in marred form, His creative intentions. Because all people are created in the image of God and live in a God-created world, believers and unbelievers share considerable common ground. And on that basis we can articulate reasons to believe in God that non-Christians are able to grasp, thus building bridges for the gospel.

Introduction to Proverbs

AUTHOR

Proverbs consists of different collections of wisdom sayings. While several of these collections are associated with King Solomon, his exact role in their preparation is uncertain. Solomon's interest in wisdom is clear from 1 Kings 4:29-34, which indicates that he authored 3,000 proverbs. It is likely that many of the proverbs in the book originated with Solomon, but given his interest in wisdom and the similarities between Proverbs 22:17–23:14 and a collection of proverbs from Egypt, it is also likely that some of the material in the book was collected by Solomon rather than authored by him. According to the statement in Proverbs 25:1, one of these collections was copied by the scribes of Hezekiah, and so our present book could not have been put into its present form until after 700 B.C. Certain literary features make it likely that the book was compiled prior to the Babylonian exile.

A BOOK OF WISDOM

The literary forms designated by the Hebrew word translated "proverb" are considerably broader than what is conveyed by the English word proverb. They include concise sayings and riddles as well as longer poems such as the alphabet acrostic describing the excellent woman in Proverbs 31:10-31. Similar literary forms are found throughout the history of civilization and in virtually every culture. Apart from some explicitly theological material (for example, Pr 1:7; 2:5-8; 3:5-12; chap. 8; and 16:1-11,20), the material in Proverbs seems to reflect the conclusions of people as they carefully observed the world in an attempt to identify the basic patterns that operate in life.

According to Israelite thinking, the basis for such observations is the fact that God created the world and designed order into it, as Proverbs 3:19-20 and 8:22-31 make clear. Thus the Israelites were able to recognize the legitimacy of wisdom that came from sources outside Israel, as is clear from passages such as 1 Kings 4:30-31 and from references to non-Israelites noted for their wisdom. The Israelites would have had no innate objection to accepting the observations of non-Israelites into their wisdom tradition.

At the same time there are two qualifications Israel would have affirmed as essential. First, some "wisdom" that came from other cultures was derived from their religion and from practices we would describe as occult. Such activity was prohibited by the law, and Israel rejected the "wisdom" that resulted from such methods. Second, the fundamental context for the pursuit of wisdom is established by verses such as Proverbs 9:10: "The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding." The fear of the Lord involves recognizing who God is (the sovereign Creator of all things) and who we are (creatures made by God and accountable to Him) and then living all of life with that awareness.

Israel also believed that the order designed into the world by Yahweh (God) extended to the theological, moral, and ethical realms, and a failure to acknowledge God and His revelation in such matters had the potential for leading to significant error. Yahweh had revealed Himself to Israel through the Law and the Prophets, and Israel's search for wisdom was set in the context of that special revelation and faith. Thus the seeker of wisdom must at the beginning recognize God as the Creator and Designer of the order in the world and acknowledge God's authority over him. It is knowledge about God known through God's self-revelation to Israel that puts a person into a right relationship with the reality he is trying to understand. It is also the wisdom, knowledge, and understanding that come through God's revelation in the Law and the Prophets that allow people to know important aspects of God's order, especially as it pertains to truth about God, morals, and the like. Thus wisdom, whatever its origin, had to be consistent with God's special revelation to Israel.

INTERPRETING PROVERBS

Some have raised objections to material in Proverbs because it seems to command a certain behavior but then commands a different, incompatible behavior elsewhere or because it makes a general promise that the Bible appears to contradict or qualify elsewhere. Proverbs also makes what appear to be comprehensive statements that seem to be contradicted by the realities of life (for example, proverbs that promise long life to the wise and righteous but a premature death for the wicked). An interpreter must be careful to interpret this material in a way that appropriately considers the nature of a proverb and the way its original audience would have understood it. Many objections reflect a failure to understand what a proverb is and how proverbs function in cultures that use them regularly.

The types of sayings found in Proverbs reflect a way of thinking and teaching that has been largely abandoned in modern Western culture. Proverbs are general statements of truth rather than invariable promises or laws, and an individual proverb normally captures a tiny cross-section of truth rather than making a comprehensive statement about a topic. For example, "A gentle answer turns away anger" (15:1) constitutes one component of the broader topics of using words wisely and dealing with angry people. This single principle is one small piece of a much larger mosaic, and the task of the student is not only to put together the broader mosaic piece by piece but also to learn to apply these principles skillfully to the complexities that one encounters in life. The goal of the wisdom in Proverbs is to develop skill in living according to the order that is embedded in God's creation.

Most proverbs state a single general truth with little attempt to note exceptions and qualifications. Such an approach effectively emphasizes the principle taught by avoiding the distraction of qualifications. The authors of proverbs also emphasized the points they wanted to make through the use of idealized examples and hyperbole. While the sluggard, for example, is a real character, he is described in exaggerated terms that set his basic characteristics in clear relief. One would probably never find someone who perfectly fits the descriptions of a sluggard, because the person whose picture emerges from putting together the various pieces of the sluggard mosaic in the book is a stereotypical character. The same is also true for the excellent woman in Proverbs 31 and for the wise man and for the fool described throughout the book.

When a pair of proverbs seems conflicting or even contradictory, the first proverb moves the reader in a certain direction, then the contrasting proverb provides a balancing principle to point the reader toward another dimension of the skill of living in a complex world. For example, Proverbs 26:4 says, "Don't answer a fool according to his foolishness or you'll be like him yourself," while the next verse says, "Answer a fool according to his foolishness, or he'll become wise in his own eyes." The student of wisdom recognizes that encounters with a fool require responses appropriate to that particular situation. The student also recognizes that a variety of other approaches between those extremes may be the wise response, and the student's goal is to become the kind of wisdom craftsman who can frame the appropriate response no matter the situation he faces.

Likewise, the ambiguity that often characterizes proverbs reflects the same pedagogy and goals. The student of wisdom is challenged by the ambiguity to explore the possibilities for understanding the proverb along with the variety of situations in which the principle appropriately applies. The ambiguity also promotes ongoing reflection as to the legitimate limits for applying the principle.

While the book addresses a wide variety of issues, it gives considerable attention to matters such as the contrast between the wise person and the fool, the importance of virtues such as diligence and self-control, the importance of using words wisely, warnings about sexual immorality, the responsible use of money, priorities, and advice about proper behavior in a variety of social settings. Most proverbs deal with the general and the typical, but their goal is to equip people with the skills to apply wisdom to the particular experiences of life.

Proverbs Study Notes

1:1-6 Proverbs promises practical benefits that include skill in living, insight, the ability to plan wisely, common sense, and guidance. Verse 3 makes it clear that the wisdom in view is not just pragmatic but includes ethical and moral dimensions.

1:7 This is the central theme of Pr. The "fear of the LORD" involves worship of the Lord and respectful submission to His authority in every area of life. It is this reverence of the Lord, according to Pr, that constitutes the only sure foundation for the pursuit of knowledge.

1:8 The teaching in chapters 1–9 is regularly presented as instruction from a parent to a child, and this shows that obedience is one important aspect of honoring one's father and mother (Ex 20:12; Lv 19:3; Dt 5:16). Proverbs sees parents as agents through which God's wisdom comes to a child. These exhortations presuppose that the parents' instruction reflects God's truth.

1:10-19 Young people will sometimes receive input that conflicts with the instruction of parents, and they must choose which advice to follow. Frequently "sinners" (v. 10) may claim that benefits can be achieved more easily and quickly by following their way. But Pr tells us that the way of "sinners" is not all it promises to be. That way actually leads to destruction and death.

1:19 Critics claim that statements such as v. 19 are not actually true. But these critiques reflect a failure to understand ancient proverbs and the world in which they functioned. Proverbial material deals with the general and usual principles of life, rather than presenting invariable laws. Careful observation of life, both ancient and modern, supports the general truth of statements such as verse 19. Though it is not the focus of OT wisdom literature, it should also be noted that God's justice will ultimately prevail, and the inequities that are a part of life in a fallen world will be finally rectified.

1:20-33 Wisdom is available to anyone who seeks it, as 2:1-5 and 8:17 make clear. To get wisdom the disciple must choose wisdom and the fear of the Lord (vv. 23,33). Those who reject wisdom and refuse her invitation (vv. 24-25,29-30) will reach a point of no return where the consequences of their folly are inevitable and inescapable. Wisdom's response in vv. 26 and 28 does not conflict with the idea that those who seek wisdom will find it. The context makes it clear that the difficulties described here result from peoples' failure to seek wisdom and their rejection of it.

These verses reflect the wisdom doctrine of retribution: people reap what they sow, and often in proportion to what they sow. In v. 26 wisdom responds in kind to those who mocked her when she spoke from the entrance of the city gates. Her response in verse 28 reflects the reality that there are consequences to behaviors that are not turned aside, even by repentance. While clearly recognizing the sovereign providence of God (16:9), Pr also describes people as able to make genuine choices and as being responsible for the outcomes of those choices.

2:1-4 While wisdom is readily available to all, the active words such as "accept," "store up," "call out," "search for" make it clear that the disciple must be focused and diligent in the quest for it.

2:5-6 The search for wisdom begins with an attitude of reverent submission to God ("the fear of the LORD"). It continues with the disciple's persistence and diligence, and it actually leads to the knowledge of God. This outcome is assured because God reveals Himself to those who diligently seek Him. The rest of chapter 2 describes the benefits and outcomes that result from this serious pursuit of wisdom.

2:12-19 Wisdom delivers the disciple from both men and women whose ways are evil.

3:3 The goal of wisdom is not external adherence to a body of rules; rather, it is to internalize the principles in a way that produces character. In the OT the "heart" is the central core of a person, and it controls the thoughts, words, and actions of an individual much as a computer controls a system. A heart programmed with wisdom's values produces thoughts and behaviors consistent with God's order.

3:5-7 This statement of trust is set in the context of a book that both implicitly and explicitly affirms the importance of carefully studying the world and society to discover elements of God's order. The book also presupposes that people have the insight and rational abilities to succeed in those endeavors. These verses do not stand in tension with those endeavors; rather, the statement is a call to live life in the fear of the Lord. We are to do our work of discovery always mindful of who God is and bowing to His legitimate authority over us. When God has clearly spoken in His special revelation to us (the Bible) and our conclusions (or the results of the most respected scholarship) seem to stand at variance to that revelation, we are to defer to God's special revelation and submit to God's authority in our thinking and behavior.

3:9 Proverbs suggests that one practical test of whether one is trusting the Lord or one's own judgment can be found in how we view our possessions and finances. In the ancient agrarian society, the "first produce" would have meant the choicest and best portions of the harvest. Today, this might mean giving to God the "first produce" of your paycheck, rather than waiting to give after all the bills have been paid.

3:10-12 By including v. 12 in this context, Solomon makes it clear that honoring the Lord with the first of the produce is not simply a way to become rich. Outcomes in life are complex and unpredictable and may cover a broad continuum from great prosperity to discipline. God's purpose for us is not to make us rich, but rather to develop in us godly character, and His responses are designed with that goal in mind.

3:13-18 This section begins and ends with the happiness that wisdom brings. The Hebrew word translated "happy" normally reflects a quality in a person that observers of his life find commendable and even desirable. This term has a similar range of meaning as makarios, the Greek word translated "blessed" or "happy" and found in the Beatitudes of Jesus (Mt 5:3-10). The idea is that the person who embraces wisdom and lives by it will, in both good and bad times, experience the kind of obvious benefits and blessings that will cause others to consider him happy, blessed, or fortunate.

3:17 Many people view God's instruction as restrictive and burdensome, but this verse claims that wisdom's ways are pleasant and freeing. The paths of wisdom are peaceful, and the Hebrew word shalom suggests not just the absence of hostility, but rather whole-ness and well-being. The claim is that life lived according to Yahweh's order brings delight.

3:21-26 Critics claim that wise people do not always experience the benefits that this section promises, but the intention of the author is to emphasize the fact that wisdom enables a person to avoid many difficulties that foolish people frequently encounter in life. Diligence, careful planning, self-control, and the like allow people to avoid many obstacles that they otherwise might experience. The book of Ec, as well as our personal experience, make it clear that the picture presented here is only one tiny cross section of truth about the reality of living in a fallen world, and that difficulties arise for many reasons other than personal folly. Even so, responding to circumstances based on wisdom will provide safety and protection and minimize the difficulties we experience in life.

4:1-19 The key to gaining understanding is a focused determination to get wisdom. The disciple must be open to the teaching and respond to it obediently, as is suggested by the phrases used here, "get wisdom," "don't turn away," "don't abandon," "love her," "hold on to instruction," "guard it," and so on.

4:23-27 The values that are programmed into the heart determine how it will control the individual, and thus, it is essential to guard the heart to ensure that God's truth is inscribed there. In addition, every faculty (eyes, feet, mouth) must be focused on the goal of wisdom and God's truth. There is no place for compromise; all one's energy must be focused on attaining the goal.

5:1-14 This is the first of three major sections in Pr that warn young men about the dangers of sexual immorality. Critics sometimes claim that these passages are demeaning to women and depict them negatively. However, the specific woman described in these passages is a prostitute or an immoral woman. While the passages are gender specific, the principles taught here are not. Sexual immorality and marital infidelity often lead to disaster and are to be judiciously avoided by both men and women. There are also men who tempt young women and try to lead them into sexual immorality, and the principles presented in these chapters must be equally applied by women. In this first section the young man is warned of the power and subtlety of the temptation ("lips . . . drip honey"; "words are smoother than oil," v. 3) and the disaster that can result from this kind of involvement. He is instructed to stay far away from her house. Openness to instruction is a basic characteristic of the wise person, and failure to listen to instruction about proper behavior in this realm can lead to disgrace and disaster.

5:15-19 Critics sometimes argue that passages extolling the pleasures of sex are inappropriate and should not be in the Bible. The book of Pr, though, sees sex as a gift from God that is to be enjoyed in the context of the commitment of marriage. An intimate relationship with one's spouse and the physical delight such a relationship can bring is commended by Pr and is seen as a powerful antidote to the temptations that can lead to unfaithfulness and immorality.

6:1-5 Becoming responsible for someone else's debt is the epitome of folly because the person does not know how much such a commitment may cost him. Given the serious risk that this involves, Pr exhorts the person who has made this mistake to do whatever he can to extricate himself from the unwise commitment. It is unlikely that Pr means this as an absolute prohibition against ever cosigning for another person's loan, but given the risks, it should always be entered into with extreme care.

6:15 One of the themes of OT, beginning with Noah, is that sudden and quick judgment will come on the wicked. Sometimes the evil person, characterized by the qualities listed in vv. 12-14, is so consumed by his own arrogance that he does not see the danger clearly evident to those wiser than he. There are exceptions to this quick retribution. This caused great distress for the righteous (for example, Jr 12:1-4; Pss 37; 73; and the book of Hab).

6:20-22 Some claim that the statement of protection in verse 22 is not true, but that claim is absurd. Verse 23 makes it clear that the parents' teaching involves God's commandments. The point here is that the person who receives God's truth and is immersed in it, will find that it provides guidance and protection in all of life's activities.

6:28 The fact that there are people who can walk on coals without burning their feet does not negate the truth of the proverb but rather reflects a lack of understanding of what a proverb is. The point of the statement is that certain behaviors, such as holding fire against one's body (v. 27) or walking on hot coals, involve innate and significant risks, and wisdom dictates that such behaviors should be avoided. Clearly adultery and sexual immorality belong in that category, and as verse 32 points out, they are self-destructive.

7:1-5 Again the point is made that treasuring God's truth, reflecting on it, and regularly putting it into practice helps a person internalize wisdom and build godly character. What we think about regularly affects what we do, and what we do regularly produces habits, and ultimately determines our character. A regular focus on God's truth provides protection against adultery and sexual immorality, while a regular focus on sexual images leads a person closer to the behaviors that Pr condemns.

8:17 Wisdom is available to all. See note on 1:20-33.

8:22 Throughout history critics have denied the deity of Christ, arguing from this verse that Jesus (identified as "God's wisdom" in 1 Co 1:24, and as the Creator of all things in Jn 1:3 and Col 1:15-17) is a created being Himself. This is based on a possible translation of the verse, "The Lord created me at the beginning of His creation," found in some ancient and modern translations. However, the basic meaning of the Hebrew word for "made," qanah, means "to possess" or "acquire" rather than "to create." Of even greater significance is the fact that the context suggests that the passage about wisdom is not a description of Jesus, but rather a personification of the wisdom by which the Lord created the universe. (This is common in the early chaps. of Pr and is something that will again occur in chap. 9, where both Wisdom and Folly are personified.)

Wisdom is the application of knowledge in order to accomplish one's goals or purposes, and God brings forth His wisdom as He applies His omnipotence to the task of creating the world. The point of the passage is that if God used wisdom to create the world, then success in all our endeavors is greatly enhanced if we also choose wisdom and live according to God's order. The NT authors see Jesus as the embodiment of God's wisdom both in terms of who He is, and in terms of His ministry in successfully accomplishing God's redemptive purpose.

8:32-34 Again the author, King Solomon, affirms that the person who keeps God's ways and lives according to God's order will be blessed in ways that will cause others to declare, "How fortunate (or happy) is that person." See note on 3:13-18.

9:7-9 According to Pr, the basic difference between the fool and the wise person has far more to do with attitude than with intelligence. The wise person is open to advice and correction and welcomes it, while the foolish person rejects counsel, even to the point of directing anger and hostility toward anyone who offers advice.

9:11 Proverbs makes the point that, in general, wise people will live longer than foolish ones. This is in part because they are careful and refuse to take inappropriate risks, while the foolish person rushes into danger with little thought about consequences. Books such as Jb and Ec, along with careful observation of how things work in the world, make it clear, however, that the length of a person's life involves more variables than just wisdom or fear of the Lord (see 11:27).

9:13-18 These verses are not demeaning to women in general, but apply to a certain type of woman, the foolish and immoral woman.

10:3 This is a typical proverbial statement affirming the doctrine of retribution. The point of the proverb seems to go beyond food and provision for one's physical needs, to also include satisfaction and fulfillment in life. The books of Jb and Ec present the other side of this proverb (that sometimes the wicked flourish and the righteous suffer), revealing that life is more complex than this single proverb might suggest. God's purposes are sometimes best fulfilled through means other than physical abundance. Even in the presence of such difficulties God's people regularly testify to peace, fulfillment, and satisfaction that God gives them even in trying experiences.

10:6,11 Because of the concise and cryptic nature of proverbs, it is not unusual to have difficulties in understanding and translating a proverb. That is the case here and accounts for differences among English translations of these verses. Verses 6 and 11 are similar, and both proverbs contrast the "mouth" (words) of both righteous and wicked people. The righteous and their words bring blessing and refreshment to themselves and others; they can be trusted. They are a fountain of life. The wicked and their words cover or conceal violence; they cannot be trusted. The violence intended by the wicked is often concealed by deceptive words and is not always apparent on the surface.

10:18 Proverbs often refers to people as "fools." The basis for this has to do with how these people think and live. They behave foolishly rather than wisely, and their behavior shows disregard for Yahweh's order. Proverbs identifies a person as a fool without reflecting contempt for that individual. The context of Jesus' warning in Mt 5:22 about calling another person a fool makes it clear that He is warning us about viewing others with contempt. All people, even those who behave foolishly and badly, are people made in the image of God, and they have value and worth. The way we view others and treat them should reflect their innate worth.

10:27 See note on 9:11.

10:30 This proverb probably reflects the teaching of Lv and Dt that says the righteous will flourish in the promised land while the wicked will be taken away into exile.

11:19 This proverb is somewhat ambiguous in that the meaning of "life" and "death" are not spelled out. On one level, these terms have to do with quality of life here and now. On another level they have to do with length of life (see note on 9:11). While the afterlife as seen more clearly in the teachings of the NT is normally not in view in Pr, the NT (Lk 16:19-31) makes it clear that the principle expressed in this proverb is also true in terms of what happens beyond the grave.

11:22 This proverb is not an insult to women, but is rather a statement about priorities and what is to be valued in a woman. Proverbs values "good sense" (literally, "taste" or "discretion") above beauty, and according to this proverb a beautiful woman who lacks good sense is as bizarre and ludicrous as a pig wearing a piece of valuable jewelry in its nose.

12:21 This typical proverbial statement emphatically affirms that, in general, things go better for the righteous than for the wicked. The balance to this truth is found in Ec, where the author (perhaps also Solomon) observed that in a fallen world righteous people sometimes suffer difficulty because of injustice. Job also suffered because of his righteousness. Job's friends failed to understand the intention and limits of proverbial statements like this and inflicted great pain on their friend.

13:24 Critics often point to verses like this as examples of cruelty and abuse of children. Such verses must be understood in the broader context of wisdom's teaching about discipline. The Hebrew word for "discipline" (musar) is also used for "instruction," "rebuke," and "physical punishment." The goal of musar is always to change attitudes or behavior, and the methods for accomplishing this goal range from giving gifts and providing for needs to offering instruction, rebuke, and even corporal punishment. When God's discipline of His people is taken as the model, it becomes clear that discipline should begin with the least painful and severe methods and escalate to harsher ones, only when the more gentle methods fail to bring about the desired changes. Wisdom also recognizes that children do not, by nature, gravitate toward wisdom and God's order, and that left to themselves children will move toward folly and self-destruction. Discipline is seen as a good and necessary thing in order to move children toward God's truth. Thus appropriate, not abusive, discipline is seen as an act of kindness and love. Only a parent who does not love his child will allow him to destroy himself through folly.

13:25 In a way typical of proverbial literature, this verse states in an unequivocal way the general truth that the righteous prosper while the wicked do not. That the wisdom tradition recognized that there were other cross sections of truth besides this one is clear fromv. 22, where people's produce is lost through injustice. All the cross sections of teaching must be brought together to construct a balanced picture of truth and reality.

14:15 The inexperienced person in Pr is gullible and naïve. He believes whatever anyone tells him. Unlike the sensible or prudent person, this person rashly commits himself to things without sufficient knowledge of what is involved or the limits to his own abilities and resources. The sensible person is deliberate and careful to acquire sufficient information, and then make wise decisions that take into account the reality of the situation.

15:29 The worship and prayers of the wicked are unacceptable to God while those of the righteous are His delight. The one exception is when a wicked person turns to God in genuine repentance.

16:4 This proverb does not contradict the idea that those who turn to God in repentance will be welcomed by him. Rather, the proverb makes two points: God is sovereign and His purposes are not thwarted by the wicked. The verse also affirms that deeds have consequences, and the sovereign God sees to it that there is just retribution. Every act of the wicked has its appropriate consequences.

16:7 This is a proverb and thus it does not constitute a comprehensive statement about human relationships. The NT teaching and life-experience make it clear that people who follow God are sometimes persecuted precisely because their ways are pleasing to the Lord. This proverb recognizes that a life lived according to Yahweh's order will commend itself to others. It will be characterized by compassion, forgiveness, kindness, and civility. Such virtues have the power to restore broken relationships.

16:9 While the book of Pr clearly shows the importance of human responsibility and choice, this proverb recognizes that outcomes are determined by God's sovereign providence. Proverbs makes no attempt to resolve the tension between the two ideas. Both human responsibility and God's sovereignty are affirmed, and the mystery of their interaction is allowed to remain.

16:32 Self control, especially control of one's temper, is an important characteristic of wisdom in Pr. Here it is commended above physical power.

16:33 For discussion on God's sovereignty, see note on 16:9.

18:22 While the proverb does not say, "He who finds a good wife," that is clearly presupposed, since Pr contains many proverbs that illustrate the benefits of having a good wife and the consequences of having a foolish or bad one. The good wife is wise and she fears the Lord. Thus she is able to function as the appropriate or complementary helper that Gn 2:18 says man needs. A wise husband and a wise wife can function together in the way this "one flesh" relationship was designed to work.

19:5,9 These are general statements not universal ones, unless we take into account God's final judgment.

19:18 For more on discipline, see note on 13:24.

19:21 For more on God's sovereignty, see note on 16:9.

19:23 This proverb makes the same point as 3:23-26 or 14:26-27. Those who live in the "fear of the LORD" can live securely because they are confident of God's protection and guidance. The NT offers the further assurance that nothing that happens can separate a righteous person from God's love or thwart God's purposes for them.

20:1 This proverb warns against the dangers of drunkenness, which Pr views as folly. Under the influence of alcohol, a person loses the ability to make wise and carefully considered decisions. While wine was seen as one of God's benefits to man (Ps 104:15), warnings about the dangers of intoxication were an important part of Israel's wisdom tradition (Pr 23:20-21,29-35). In certain instances it appears that the better course of wisdom was to refrain from alcohol entirely (31:4-7).

20:9 The book of Proverbs clearly recognizes human depravity.

20:24 This verse recognizes what Ec affirms as well. The work of God in human affairs is beyond human understanding. The implication of this is that people should recognize their dependence on God and trust Him. See note on 16:9.

20:30 Proverbs recognizes that whether the context is the family, society, or one's relationship with God, painful methods of discipline are sometimes the only thing that will get a person's attention and get them moving along the path of wisdom. Presupposed in this is that the discipline is wisely and appropriately administered. See note on 13:24.

21:12 There is an ambiguity in the proverb in that it is unclear whether the "Righteous One" is God or a person. Such ambiguities are a reflection on our interpretive ability rather than a reflection on the truth of God's Word or its authority. No one argues that our ability to interpret Scripture is inerrant, and the inerrancy of the Bible is in no way undermined by the ambiguity of a proverb or by interpretive difficulties.

22:6 This is a general statement about an important aspect of raising children. Children who grow up in an environment where God's truth is modeled and where they are encouraged to live according to God's order will likely end up embracing those values and living by them. There will be exceptions to the general rule. Proverbs recognizes that there are other important variables besides the parents' teaching. Young people will often receive input from their peers (1:8-19) that can lead them away from God's truth. The early chapters of Pr regularly exhort the young person to choose the parents' teaching. This makes it clear that the will of the child and his ability to choose also play decisive roles in how the child turns out.

22:10 The "mocker" or scoffer is the most deliberate and intentional of the fools described in Pr. While there is more to dealing with strife than this, it is often the case that a divisive and disruptive person must be removed from the group before any real progress can be made.

22:15 See note on 13:24 about discipline.

22:17–24:22 Similarities exist between this section of Pr and an Egyptian composition called the Instructions of Amenemope, and the similarities suggest some sort of literary influence. Present evidence seems to indicate that the Egyptian piece is older than Pr, and it may well be that the biblical material was influenced by the Egyptian composition. The theology of this biblical section is thoroughly Israelite, and it is clear that the influence did not extend into that area. People made in the image of God have the ability to discover some of God's order, and no theological problem is created if sages in Israel were influenced by Egyptian observations about wisdom. In this case the divine inspiration of the biblical material relates to the way the material was selected and modified for inclusion into inspired Scripture.

23:13 For more on discipline, see note on 13:24.

23:29-35 See note on 20:1 about drunkenness.

24:11-12 God expects His people to respond to those who are in mortal danger. These verses apply to situations where a person has a casual awareness of a situation where a brother or sister is in danger or in great need and dismisses the need. It may also apply to situations where one should have known of the need. Responsibility for failing to help cannot be escaped by claiming that one did not know.

26:3 Some people refuse to respond to gentler means of discipline, and as 27:22 makes clear, some refuse to respond to even the harshest discipline. See note on 20:30.

26:10 This is another proverb that is very difficult to translate and interpret. See note on 21:12.

28:3 This is another difficult proverb whose translation and meaning are not certain. See notes on 10:6,11 and 21:12.

28:16 The proverb states the general principle that the oppression of his people sometimes practiced by an unwise ruler often has in it the seeds of destruction for his reign. Rehoboam is an example of the principle at work (1 Kg 12:12-14).

28:21 Far from being absurd, as some critics claim, this proverb shows the extent to which some people will take injustice, and how little it takes to buy some people's favor. They will allow the favoritism and injustice to continue for no more than a piece of bread. Greed and lust for power drive people to amazing injustice.

29:15 This restates the importance of parental guidance. See note on 13:24.

29:19 For more on effects of discipline, see notes on 20:30 and 26:3.

30:21-23 The point of riddles like this is to determine the thing that ties all the examples together. The "three things . . . four" formula reflects a Semitic poetic convention when numbers are used in parallel poetic lines. The first line uses a certain number and then the second parallel line uses that number plus one. The examples given here involve individuals who have experienced a significant reversal in their fortunes. The thing they have in common is that in each instance they forget their previous circumstances and become unbearable in their new situations. Verse 23 is sometimes taken by critics as illustrating a demeaning attitude of the OT toward women. It should be noted, however, that of the four examples given in the riddle, two involve men and two involve women.

31:6 Perhaps the verse recognizes a medicinal use for alcohol. See note on 20:1.

31:12 The verse, in typical proverbial language, describes a woman who brings benefit to her husband throughout their married life. To suggest, as some have, that the verse claims that she never makes a mistake or does anything that works to her husband's disadvantage flies in the face of what the author intended and reflects a misunderstanding of the characteristics of a proverb.

Ecclesiastes Articles

Intellectuals Who Found God

by Chad Owen Brand

C. S. Lewis (1898–1963)

Lewis's parents taught him the proper faith and religious life of an Englishman, but troubles awaited the young man. His mother died when he was a boy, after which his father sent him to boarding schools. Though early on he tried to be a good Christian, he came to resent religion and developed instead a fascination with myth and fantasy literature. His great concerns were with whether Christianity was unique and how it could solve (or not solve) the problem of evil. When he entered Oxford in 1917, Lewis was a convinced agnostic. He had sought through logic to debunk religion in general and Christianity in particular. Yet his favorite authors—Dante, MacDonald, Herbert, Plato, Milton, and Virgil—were all people who held some sort of religious understanding of the world. In reading George MacDonald, and through personal acquaintance with J. R. R. Tolkien and Owen Barfield, Lewis eventually abandoned his nontheistic view of the world. In 1929 he threw in the towel, conceding that "God was God," and he knelt and prayed—perhaps the "most reluctant convert in all England."

Aurelius Augustine (354–430)

Augustine was born at a time when Christianity was just beginning to become a dominant faith in the Roman empire. Though his mother was a strong Christian, she did not have him baptized as an infant. By age 15, Augustine had abandoned the faith of his childhood and had adopted the cult known as Manicheeism as his own.

His biggest problem with Christianity was its failure to deal adequately with the problem of evil. If God is all powerful and all good, how can evil exist—and exist so prevalently and powerfully in the world? The Manichees taught that two spirit beings exist, the one good and the other evil. They believed this explains how one can find a mixture of both good and evil in the world. For a decade or so, the young Augustine, eventually a professor of rhetoric at several Roman universities, believed this to be a better solution. But eventually the young intellectual came to realize that this "solution" was unsatisfactory.

Augustine despaired and began reading skeptical philosophers, such as Cicero and Porphyry, who taught that everything is a matter of doubt. Perhaps there is no solution, he thought. Yet here, at the end of hope, Augustine was transformed. He heard the preaching of the famous Ambrose and began reading Scripture. Ambrose's apologetics helped Augustine understand that the Bible really does present the solution to the problem of evil.

Though his intellect was satisfied, his heart, filled with sin and with no answer to the problem of sin, was still empty. One day Augustine read Paul's words in Romans 13:14: "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no plans to satisfy the fleshly desires." The key to life lay not in trying to live the moral life but in putting on Christ, who satisfies both the intellectual and existential dilemmas humans face. Augustine's writings went on to lay the foundation for the political and intellectual developments of the next 1,500 years in the Western church.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1918–)

olzhenitsyn was born into the new Russian Revolutionary system. In 1945 he was arrested for writing disparaging comments about Stalin in his letters and was sentenced to a "mild" eight years in the S Soviet Gulags (labor camps). Upon his release, he was exiled to the desert in Kazakhstan and then in 1974 was exiled to the West. During this period, Solzhenitsyn became an orthodox Christian. He came to recognize that only Christianity provides both a realistic understanding of the human condition of sin and the one solution to the human condition that makes any sense. His works on the Soviet Gulags and on Russian history have become classics that have given the West a clear picture of life in the repressive Soviet system.

Francis Schaeffer (1912–84)

Schaeffer grew up in a liberal Protestant home. As a teenager, he began to read the Bible and was surprised to find that it contained answers to life's greatest problems. He gave his life to Christ and, contrary to his family's wishes, determined to enter Christian ministry. In 1948 he and his wife, Edith, moved to Switzerland. There they gave their lives to talking to and witnessing to young people, mostly disaffected youth from America and Western Europe.

Schaeffer was never afraid to confront modernity and postmodernity on their own grounds. His writings demonstrate a dialogue with the key intellectual and cultural developments of the last two centuries. If there is one important thing to be learned from Schaeffer, it is that a person can face the best (and worst) that the nontheistic world can offer and still have confidence that God is there and that He is not silent.

J. S. Bach (1685–1750)

Bach entered the world as one of the most gifted musicians of all time. The sheer amount of work he turned out is almost unbelievable, amounting to nearly a thousand compositions, many of which have since been lost. He set the Christian faith to music in a way that no one before or since has done. He read the Bible faithfully and sought to give accurate presentations of its truths not only in lyrics but in musical composition as well. Bach also demonstrated that one could serve God by producing music that was not specifically Christian in orientation, such as his Brandenburg Concerti, but which, by their very structure, still demonstrate a conviction that God has made a well-ordered universe. Bach's commitment to Christ can be seen in his telling his students that unless they committed their talents to Jesus they would never become great musicians.

Lewis Wallace (1827–1905)

Wallace was a Union general during the Civil War. Later he sat on the court-martial that dealt with the Lincoln assassination conspirators, then became governor of the territory of New Mexico. His life began to change when he had an extensive conversation with the well-known infidel scholar Robert Ingersoll. In the conversation he was unable to refute Ingersoll's arguments. So he set himself to learn everything he could about the life, setting, and historical context of Jesus Christ. Wallace was not overawed by the reputation of Ingersoll, but he believed that investigation of the facts of the gospel message could lead one to the truth about Jesus. Wallace's investigations led to his writing the novel Ben-Hur.

In the novel a Jewish man named Judah Ben-Hur encounters Jesus and hears him say, "I am the resurrection and the life." Later Ben-Hur returns to Rome and gives all his wealth to promote the Christian faith.

Introduction to Ecclesiastes

AUTHOR AND RELIABILITY

Two basic apologetics-related questions arise from the book of Ecclesiastes: first, whether the book was written by Solomon; and second, whether the book is orthodox. Regarding the first question, many scholars consider Ecclesiastes to be a late book, written between 400 and 100 B.C., and therefore obviously not by Solomon who lived in the tenth century B.C. Regarding the second question, many readers are troubled by the book's apparently cynical attitude ("Everything is futile," says 1:2), by its apparent denial of afterlife (e.g., 3:19-20), by its recommendations to eat, drink, and enjoy life (e.g., 5:18; 10:19), and by its seemingly indifferent attitude about morality (e.g., 7:16-17). This second question will be addressed in the notes on Ecclesiastes.

The main argument against Solomonic authorship of Ecclesiastes is that the book contains a few words that do not appear in any other texts until several hundred years after the time of Solomon. This is not insignificant, but arguments based on linguistic evidence are notoriously difficult to make. Since we have a limited number of texts from the ancient Near East, it is hard to say when a given word may have entered the common speech.

We do have evidence that the author of Ecclesiastes was familiar with certain classic texts from Mesopotamia and Egypt that were written before the time of Solomon (see note at 9:8-9). But the book shows no familiarity with later literature, such as the classic Greek texts from the fifth century B.C. and following. This lends weight to Solomon's being author of Ecclesiastes and creates problems for the position that Ecclesiastes was written between 400–100 B.C.

Ecclesiastes Study Notes

1:2 The word translated "futile" could be rendered "fleeting." It literally means "breath," and implies that something only has fleeting value and then evaporates, like a puff of air. In Hebrew the word appears five times in this verse, twice in a construction that is translated into English as an intensification ("breath of breaths," or "absolute futility"). This is not the same word used for the "breath of life" (Gn 2:7). The verse is not saying that everything is worthless, but that everything is short-lived and quickly passing. Nothing under the sun lasts forever. This passage illustrates the unique character of OT language; where Western writers would use an abstraction ("futility"), the biblical author uses a more concrete expression.

1:8 We long for truth and knowledge but are never satisfied with the explanations given us. We are unable to voice what we cannot comprehend. Taken in its full context, this is not an expression of cynical distrust in all belief systems. It is, rather, a humble recognition of our limitations as mortals. Unable to explain the world, we can only turn to God Himself as the source of truth (Pr 30:1-4). Again, the concreteness of Hebrew thought is seen in the way the writer expressed our inability to understand; it is the eye and ear that fail, not the invisible intellect (see Mk 9:43-45).

2:3 It seems absurd that the author claimed to have sought out "how to grasp folly" while asserting that his mind was still guiding him "with wisdom." He was saying that he experimented in pleasure but never lost his perspective. In the process he came to a clear understanding that a life of refined self-gratification did not satisfy.

3:19-20 Ecclesiastes appears to be rejecting the idea of an afterlife. What the author was questioning, however, may have been the materialistic notions of afterlife that predominated in ancient Egypt, where people thought that after death a powerful man could continue to enjoy his possessions, his women, and the services of his slaves. In short, this theology did not take seriously the finality of physical death (the great pyramids of the pharaohs were expressions of this view). The Egyptian "Harpers' Songs," written about 1,000 years before the time of Solomon, criticized this refusal to face the significance of death, and reveals some striking parallels to Ec. (Solomon had cultural ties with Egypt, being married to the daughter of an Egyptian ruler, 1 Kg 3:1.) Biblical theology, by contrast, takes death seriously as "the last enemy" (1 Co 15:26); it is only by an act of God, the resurrection of Jesus, that we can overcome its finality (1 Co 15:55-57).

4:2-3 The author expressed his dissatisfaction with the wretched human situation in extreme terms, using hyperbole (exaggeration) to drive home his point. Statements such as "better than either of them is the one who has not yet existed" are not to be taken as literal assertions that the world would be a better place if people were never born. Nor are such declarations an indication of a depressed or suicidal state on Solomon's part. Hebrew wisdom literature operates by encircling an issue and approaching it from a variety of viewpoints (cp. the dialogues of the book of Jb). Later, Solomon came to a clear affirmation of the value of life (9:4-5).

4:5-6 These two proverbs illustrate the dialogue-like method of Hebrew wisdom literature (cp. Pr 26:4-5). Verse 5 attacks the fool for his laziness (cp. Pr 24:33-34), and verse 6 teaches that a life of vexation through overwork is miserable (cp. Ps 127:2). The proverbs are set side by side to force the reader to consider the folly both of laziness and of working to exhaustion. Instead of going straight toward his point, the writer moved toward it from one direction, then another. The proverbs are not contradictory, but complementary.

5:8-9 The translation of these verses varies considerably among English versions because the Hebrew is obscure, especially in verse 9. Verse 8 suggests that when governing officials (Solomon had appointed such officials, 1 Kg 4:7) conspire with one another up the chain of command, it is not surprising that the commonpeople are treated unjustly. Verse 9 appears to continue the thought, extending the corruption to the king himself. But that passage could be translated differently: "An advantage for the land in every respect is a king for a cultivated field," see footnote). This could imply that a strong central authority is able to hold regional corruption in check, even in the agricultural areas. In any case, these verses neither advocate passive acceptance of bad government nor the overthrow of all governmental authority.

5:18 In saying that it is appropriate for a person to eat, drink, and find enjoyment in life "because that is his reward," the author did not mean these are life's only rewards because there is no afterlife (see 3:19-20). These are the rewards of a person's labor, and one should not neglect to take time out for some simple pleasures.

6:4-5 In verses 1-6, Ec says that a wealthy man who never learns to enjoy life is no better off than a "stillborn child." The description of the stillborn child is bleak: The child will have no experiences, no identity, and no place in the world. This was a rhetorical comparison to make the point that a life without joy is futile; the promise of the unborn child's life is frustrated by his premature death in the same way that an outwardly successful man might never come to experience the benefits of living. This is not a teaching about the nature of life in the womb or a statement that abortion is morally insignificant because the fetus has no personhood. To the contrary, it is the futility of a stillbirth—in which the child at least has "more rest"—that exposes the equal absurdity of the man who has received life's benefits but "aborts" his enjoyment of them.

7:16-17 The text explicitly tells us not to be "excessively righteous" or "overly wise," just as it tells us not to be "excessively wicked." This would seem to say that a little wickedness and folly are acceptable, and even preferable. Ecclesiastes is concerned with the wise man's efforts to gain control of life. Diligence is generally rewarded with prosperity and health, whereas those who are carefree or careless can quickly lose both. But the quest for prudence can go too far; a severely austere life can be joyless. By the same token, turning away from the constraints of a disciplined life can bring trouble—even premature death. No one can avoid sinning to some degree in this life; it is part of our human condition (v. 20; Rm 3:23), but the wise person will avoid such foolishness where possible, just as he or she will avoid carrying supposedly prudent behavior to a ridiculous extreme. The discussion here is not about God's final judgment upon our lives, but about our daily conduct; in typical wisdom style the writer played one pole of behavior against another. If part of the book's advice here seems to question what Jesus would later say about the need to "be perfect" (Mt 5:48), it is well to recall how Jesus illustrated that perfection in even-handed treatment of others reflected God's love for all people. Nothing Ecclesiastes says in these verses contradicts that teaching; if anything, in its balanced approach to living, it reinforces it.

7:26 Solomon wrote here out of his bitter personal experience with marriage. As a Near Eastern potentate he had a large harem, and his foreign wives led him astray (1 Kg 11:4). He was not a hater of women, but realized that an unwise marriage can become a trap. Like most Israelite wisdom literature, Ec was written for a male audience of educated elite, young men being trained for government service. Solomon viewed marriage from that perspective. Had the book been written for women, it would have spoken of the misery of the woman married to a cruel and brutal man. Much of Ec is taken up with reflections on Gn 3, the account of the first sin, which is one reason that the book is so concerned with death and the brevity of life (see Gn 3:19). It was the woman's being deceived—in which her husband, standing by ("with her," Gn 3:6), failed to intervene—that brought sin to the human scene, a condition in which all people now participate (Ec 7:20-29). In effect, Solomon urged his readers not to repeat Adam's mistake. But he was not devaluing marriage as such; indeed, a good, lifelong marriage is one of the great joys of life (9:9).

9:2 This verse does not deny that righteousness is important. It asserts that right living cannot free us from mortality (see Heb 9:27). Seen from the Christian perspective, this verse drives us to the grace of God, since nothing we can do will save us from the power of death.

9:8-9 These verses resemble passages in the Babylonian Epic of Gilgamesh and the "Harpers' Song" from Egypt. Both were composed long before the time of Solomon, and it seems clear that he knew them. It is not troubling to find that a biblical text reflects knowledge of other well-known literature of antiquity; this international character is a feature of Israelite wisdom. Because of Solomon's extensive international contacts we would expect him to be familiar with such literature, and the similarities to these other passages reinforce the Solomonic authorship of Ec.

10:7 Some would say that this verse shows prejudice in favor of the aristocracy and against people of humbler backgrounds. But 4:13 shows respect for a lowborn person who has drive and ability. The "slaves" in this verse were people who had neither dignity nor competence and yet were in a position of authority (see Pr 19:10). They may be highborn, but in their character they were fit only for menial service. Another possibility is to view this verse against the background of Israel's military ventures, in which the king's servant might be mounted while a defeated and captured prince of some subjugated nation must walk.

10:19 "Money is the answer for everything" looks like the ultimate expression of cynical greed. In reality, it only makes the point that people do need some mon-ey in order to get along in life. Ecclesiastes 2:1-11 and 6:1-6 have already shown that wealth is not the answer. But this verse gives balance to this picture: Affluence is not the source of happiness, but abject poverty is not a blissful condition (see Pr 30:8-9).

12:13 Some argue that these words, "fear God and keep His commands," are inconsistent with the rest of the book and that they must have been added by a later editor who wanted to make Ec appear more "orthodox." This view requires the interpreter to see the bulk of the book as the work of a cynical skeptic. In reality, Ec is not "cynical" at all. It calls on us to face the significance of mortality: We will die, and all our accomplishments will die with us. Because life is short and we are weak, we should enjoy the time we have. But we should also abandon excessive and prideful efforts to control life; it is in the hands of God, not our own, and ultimately our mortality drives us to Him as "the spirit returns to God who gave it" (v. 7).

Song of Songs Articles

Is the Bible Sexually Oppressive?

by Josh D. McDowell

Let's clear up one misconception. God is pro-sex! He invented sex and thinks it's beautiful when enjoyed within the correct framework.

Proverbs tells us, "Take pleasure in the wife of your youth . . . let her breasts always satisfy you; be lost in her love forever" (Pr 5:18-19). The context here is speaking of sex within the parameters of a lifelong marriage commitment (i.e., "the wife of your youth"). Another example of God's perspective on sex is the Song of Songs, an OT book that uses the beauty of the sexual experience to express one's spiritual experience.

I haven't been able to locate a single verse in the Bible that decries sex as sinful, dirty, or wrong. It's only the misuse of sex (when it is experienced outside a loving, intimate commitment between a husband and wife) that is so often spoken against in the Scriptures. Sex as God intended it is a beautiful thing.

So, why the limits? Simply put, it's because God loves us. Love is described in Eph 5:28-29 as providing and caring, which suggests the ideas of nurturing and protecting. God's motivation behind every command in the Bible is to protect us and provide us with His best. Even in the "do nots" (commandments that may, at first glance, seem imposing and prohibitive), we can know that God has our best interests at heart. How can we be sure of His loving intentions? We need only look at the life of Christ as recorded in the Gospels. Everything He did—from healing the sick and teaching the multitudes to giving His life on the cross to pay for our sins—was a clear picture of God's love in action.

True to His loving nature, God gave His instruction to reserve sex for marriage out of love for us. In this case His boundaries protect us from unwanted pregnancies, agonizing and even deadly diseases, unhealthy emotional attachments, feelings of guilt, and many other dangers. They provide us with good health and safety, freedom from fear, true intimacy and trust in marriage, and many other benefits.

Just as the lanes in a swimming pool protect swimmers from running into one another and give them every opportunity to win a swimming race, so God's laws are intended for our good. They are not there to frustrate us but to reflect the freedom we have in Christ. Without the parameters, one cannot experience sex in the way God intended. And when we recognize His loving plan for us—a positive plan for our good and not a negative plan to limit us unfairly or frustrate us—our response should be one of loving obedience.

Introduction to Song of Songs

AUTHOR

Although Song of Songs (otherwise known as Song of Solomon or Canticles) is one of the shortest books in the OT, no biblical text has produced more controversy throughout the history of interpretation. The majority of scholars agree that the Song, comprised of several love poems woven together to form a unit, describes conjugal love between a bridegroom and a bride. The underlying marriage metaphor plays an important role in various interpretive models of the text.

Traditional scholars affirm Solomon as the author of the Song based on 1 Kings 4:29-34, dating the text to approximately 900 B.C. In the OT, Solomon is commonly associated with poetry, wisdom, and horticulture, further supporting the traditional view of authorship. Yet, although Solomon's name occurs six times in the book, the question of the authorship of the Song remains uncertain.

INTERPRETATION OF SONG OF SONGS

Three interpretive strategies stand out from the wide and often eclectic variety of approaches to the Song: the allegorical, typological, and literal approaches.

Allegorical approach. Throughout the first half of the first millennium A.D., religious leaders in Judaism and the early church questioned the religious value of the book, noting the absence of theological themes or references to Yahweh (God) in the Song. Furthermore, the extensive use of figurative language, often erotic, prompted both early Jewish scholars and the church fathers to adopt an allegorical approach to the interpretation of the Song.

In order to compensate for the explicit, often sensual language of the text, the Talmud, Targums, and Midrashim (Jewish rabbinical writings) responded by claiming that the bride represents Israel, while the groom represents Yahweh. In this view, the context of the Song describes the love of Yahweh for Israel, using imagery normally reserved for the intimate conversations between marriage partners.

Similarly, Christian scholars such as Hippolytus, Origen, and Jerome argued that the Song of Songs depicts the love of Christ for His church. The church thus sought to interpret the text in a way that would deflect or eliminate the focus on natural desires, transforming the message through allegory to extol celibacy as the ultimate expression of holiness and purity. Origen argued that the Song illustrates the union of the earthly and physical with the divine and spiritual. The allegorical interpretation helped to give rise to the mysticism of monks and celibate scholars of the twelfth century. Later, Luther attempted to revise this view somewhat by proposing that the Song figuratively describes Solomon's monarchical rule over Israel. Other early attempts to correct an allegorical approach met with resistance in Jewish and Christian circles.

What are we to make of this interpretive approach? Allegory relies on extensive symbolism, and only those privy to the code language of the book can understand the theological meaning of the imagery. Yet the book itself reveals no deliberate attempt by the author to create an allegory, and the terminology contained in the text is not specific enough to warrant allegorical interpretation. The often inscrutable figures of speech open many sections of the book to the uncontrolled imagination of the reader, who may be unfamiliar with euphemistic phrases and the culture of ancient Palestine.

Typological approach. The second approach finds correspondence between Yahweh's intimate relationship with Israel (as in the book of Hosea) and the marriage analogy. It also finds affinities with NT texts that portray the church as the bride of Christ (Eph 5). This approach recognizes the legitimate interpretation of the work in its original context as a series of love poems celebrating matrimony while maintaining the propriety of the marriage metaphor and the application of conjugal imagery in describing the relationship between God and His people

Literal approach. A strictly literal interpretation to the Song became prominent under historical criticism in the late nineteenth century and remains the predominant view in contemporary times. A number of literary studies produced on the Song understand the book as a celebration of a blissful, healthy marriage, adopting a positive attitude toward human sexuality within the confines of the nuptial relationship blessed by God. Robert Lowth, Bishop of London and Oxford professor, proposed that the Song describes an actual wedding feast of Solomon. A comparison with ancient Near Eastern documents reveals several wedding compositions, which compel some commentators to suggest the Song belongs to a well-established genre of matrimonial poems.

The apologist who seeks to interpret the Song in light of its theological significance and contributions to the biblical text must address the problem of conflicting interpretation strategies as the reader encounters unusual imagery and distinctive language. The writer frequently used rare words that occur only once in the Song. Furthermore, almost all scholars disagree concerning the structural divisions of the Song. Any accurate interpretation of the text must take into consideration stylistic features common in biblical Hebrew poetry, such as parallelism, brevity, and wordplay.

Song of Songs Study Notes

1:4 The reader cannot take for granted the identity of the "king." Some commentators suggest the epithet referred to Solomon, while others propose that the royal title "king" reflected wedding festival language, in which the bridegroom was accorded the status of "king." The "king" could have been an unidentified third party, although this option seems unlikely. An allegorical reading correlates the "king" with God, or Jesus. In a literal reading, the Song is a celebration of the tenderness of marriage which is, after all, a serious biblical concern (e.g., Eph 5:21-33).

1:5 The uncertain meaning of the Hebrew term shechorah, "dark" yields several opinions. The word could have reflected the natural pigment of the bride's skin, or referred to skin overexposed to the sun as a result of outdoor labor (v. 6). It remains unclear whether the bride was uncomfortable with her darkened complexion or whether she associated the color of her skin with beauty. Most translators render the conjunction as "but," suggesting that the bride, self-conscious that her skin color identified her with the lower class, affirmed her attractive appearance despite outdoor work. Eager to avoid any racial misunderstandings, other scholars translate the simple conjunction "dark, and beautiful." Later in the book (5:10), health and beauty are described as white and ruddy skin, further substantiating the possibility that the term shechorah designated a sunburn or tan.

1:5 Controversy surrounds the identity of the "Daughters of Jerusalem," mentioned several times in the Song (elsewhere, "young women," 2:7; 3:5,10; 5:8,16; 8:4). Those who maintain an allegorical approach associate the daughters with followers of the church, the population of Jerusalem, the nations of the world as enemies, or members of the synagogue. The "daughters" could refer to the female members of Israel, to friends of the bride, or, as contemporary scholars suggest, the sheltered, pampered, curious young women of aristocracy. But the Song is a drama, with various spoken (or chanted) parts, and the "daughters" may have been included simply as dramatic foil for the other speakers, especially the bride.

2:7 The phrase in this verse recurs in 3:5 and 8:4. Each refrain follows a description of the consummation of the marital relationship. The bride sought to discourage the young women from engaging in a sexual relationship prematurely. The admonition promotes chastity and self-control. It seems strange that the bride swore by the gazelles and the wild does of the field. The word for "gazelles" resembles the Hebrew word tseva'ot "armies" which was used in the traditional identifier "Yahweh of Hosts." Perhaps this was a circumlocution to avoid swearing by the name of the Lord.

2:14 The bridegroom referred to his bride affectionately as "my dove." The gentle characteristics of the dove make the white bird a universal symbol of peace, prosperity, and love. In other ancient Near Eastern cultures, the dove represented the goddess of love. Classical Judaism equated the "dove" with Israel, while early Christianity understood the reference to "my dove" as a picture of the church as a bride "in Christ," innocent and without blame. The inaccessibility of the dove as it hides in the rocks also allegorically depicts the church hiding in "the Rock" of Christ, or the eager pursuit of Christ as he seeks out the church and draws her to Himself. A literal reading takes the phrase "my dove" as simply a term of endearment expressing the perfection of the bride.

2:15 Commentators disagree over the identity of the "little foxes" that ruin the vineyards. Traditional Jewish interpretation understands "foxes" as the enemies of Israel. Christian allegorical interpreters argue that the "foxes" represent pagan people, who, once seized, make good candidates for conversion. Other opinions suggest that the raiding of the vineyard by the foxes figuratively describes obstacles that threaten to interfere with the development of love.

2:16 The phrase "my love is mine and I am his," closely resembles the covenant formula, "They will be My people, and I will be their God" (Jr 24:7; cp. 11:4; Ezk 34:30).

3:7 Solomon is mentioned three times in this chapter alone, compelling some scholars to associate the bridegroom with the king of Israel. A dramatic interpretation sees the character of Solomon as a poetic symbol of the groom, celebrated as a "king" on his wedding day. Allegorists claim that Solomon represents the Messiah or God.

3:10-11 The parallelism of Hebrew poetry suggests that the "young women of Zion" and the "young women of Jerusalem" are identical groups.

4:1-7 If this word-picture of the bride's beauty is taken as a visual image, the effect is grotesque—hair like goats' hair, teeth like shorn sheep, lips like string or rope, brow (or cheek) like sliced fruit, neck like a tower strung with shields, breasts like immature gazelles. But Hebrew word-pictures are not static photographic images; they attempt to convey the impression of dynamism, or strength and movement, in what is being described. It was the rich flow of the bride's hair that the poet compared to a flock of goats streaming down the pastures of prosperous Gilead. The uniformity and cleanliness of her teeth and the richness of her lips were what those images sought to convey. The symmetry and smoothness of pomegranate halves made a fitting analogy for the bride's cheeks; the pomegranate was used to decorate the robes of the high priest (Ex 28:33-34) and the capitals of the temple's pillars (1 Kg 7:18-20). The bride wore an elaborate necklace that reminded the poet of the shields hung on the battlements of Jerusalem—a symbol of her pride and strength of character, and perhaps of her inviolable virginity. Her breasts were not obtrusive, but shyly hid themselves like fawns feeding under the watchful eye of their mother.

4:5 The explicit reference to "breasts" prompted early interpreters to treat the term as symbolic. The Targum (Aramaic translation and explanation of the OT) correlated two breasts with two Messiahs, or with Moses and Aaron. Historically, Christian interpreters offered a variety of explanations. Some argued that the two breasts referred to the two Testaments, spiritually nourishing the church. Another perspective correlated the breasts with the dual commands to love God and to love one another. A third view believed the breasts symbolized Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim (Dt 27:11-13), located north of Jerusalem, from which the Israelite tribes proclaimed the curses, or sanctions, of the covenant. It is not likely that mention of the breasts is especially intended to suggest the bride's sexual appeal to the male, even in a literal reading; they were listed here along with other features of the bride that equally impressed the poet (4:1-7). It is only in modern times that women's breasts have a "suggestive" connotation in Western culture. In ancient and medieval times they were symbols of their function: providing nourishment or nurture. Medieval illustrations exist, for example, of the Virgin Mary supplying milk from her breasts to the baby Jesus.

4:12 Clearly, "garden" (v. 15; 5:1; 6:2) is a euphemism, a polite expression used to refer to delicate subjects. The fertility and lushness of the garden figuratively illustrates the woman's most intimate physical characteristics. Significantly, the garden is "locked," emphasizing chastity and therefore, inaccessible to anyone except her husband.

6:8 While many scholars understand the three categories of women, "queens," "concubines," and "young women" as status distinctions within the structure of Solomon's harem (1 Kg 11:3), the text offers no evidence to support the view. One example of an allegorical reading proposes that they represented states of holiness; the queens were "perfected souls," the concubines symbolized "those who are progressing in their sanctification," and the young women represented "those who are seeking God." This interpretation depends on reading the Hebrew 'almah as "virgin," in the restrictive sense (cp. Is 7:14); normally it simply means a young woman up to the age of marriage. The groom mentioned three classes of women for comparative purposes, drawing on the images of stateliness, royalty, and beauty to describe his beloved.

6:11 "Walnut grove" is literally "garden of nuts" (or "nut orchard"). The word "nut" (Hb 'egoz) may here be a euphemistic term denoting either male or female sexual organs. The context, in the words of the bride, suggests that the verse referred to the male's private parts in a subtle description of sexual intimacy. The wording prompted the early church fathers to suggest that the hard outer covering of the nut signified the Mosaic law, and the wholesome, nutritious center Jesus Christ. In considering passages of this sort, it is well to recall that the composer of the Song discreetly substituted colorful poetic images for any explicit sexual language that may be inferred, allowing for interpretation at a variety of levels.

6:12 In what is perhaps the most enigmatic verse in the book, the wide variety of interpretations and suggested emendations fail to yield a scholarly consensus. The mention of chariots seems awkward in the broader context, and the structure of the last phrase (Hb ammi-nadib) makes it unclear to whom the chariots belong. The Greek OT and Vg read the proper name Ammin-adab. However, the biblical text does not establish any connection with love and a character named Amminadab. Possible translations include "like the chariots of Amminadib" (KJV), "among the chariots of my people of a prince" (footnote), or "in a chariot beside my prince" (RSV). The word translated "my noble people" can be vocalized as the preposition "with me," contributing to the uncertainty of the rendering.

8:6 A mention of death may seem out of place, but in the context of Hebrew wisdom literature issues of life and death are never far from the writer's concern. The comparison between the permanence and the inevitable force of death and the bride's love for her mate emphasized the intensity and transcendence of her emotions, and characterized her love as an irresistible power. The affirmation that "love is as strong as death" looks forward to the love of Christ, from which even death cannot separate those who belong to Him (Rm 8:35-39).

Isaiah Articles

Does the Bible Support a Just War?

by Norman L. Geisler

While the Bible doesn't approve of war for every cause, and while it encourages peace with all persons (Rm 12:18), it nonetheless indicates that peace and justice sometimes require war (Mt 24:6). This is made clear from many considerations. First, the Bible does not prohibit all taking of life. For instance, killing in self-defense is justified (Ex 22:2), as is killing in capital punishment (Gn 9:6). Government is divinely authorized to use "the sword" (Rm 13:4), as Jesus Himself recognized (Jn 19:11). Second, under the law, God spelled out the rules of warfare for Israel (Dt 20). Third, while Jesus forbade His disciples from using a sword for spiritual purposes (Mt 26:52), He urged His disciples to buy a sword if necessary for protection (Lk 22:36-38). Fourth, John the Baptist did not say that armies should be abolished and did not call for repentance from serving in the office of soldier (Lk 3:14).

The Bible commands Christians to obey their government (Rm 13:1-7; Ti 3:1; 1 Pt 2:13-14). However, there are limitations to such obedience. When the government commands worship of idols or a king (Dn 3:6), forbids preaching the gospel (Ac 4-5), or orders the killing of children (Ex 1), then it is a believer's duty to disobey. Likewise, if government engages in unjust warfare, believers may dissent. However, like Daniel (Dn 6), the three Hebrew young men (Dn 3), and Peter (Ac 4–5), those who disobey government must accept the consequences meted out by the state.

Several conditions for just war are given in the Bible. First, it must be declared by one's government (Rm 13:4). Second, it must be in defense of the innocent and/or against an evil aggressor (e.g., Gn. 14). Third, it must be fought by just means (Dt 20:19).

In addition to the above reasons for a just war policy, biblical arguments for total pacifism are flawed. For example, Jesus' command to turn the other cheek (Mt 5:39) refers to a personal insult (like a slap in the face), not to bodily harm. Indeed, even Jesus refused to turn His cheek when smitten unjustly (Jn 18:22-23). The exhortation to love our enemies does not preclude the use of force to restrain them from killing us (cp. Paul's instigation of government intervention for his protection in Ac 23).

Can God's Actions Be Detected Scientifically?

by C. John Collins

I"'ll believe in God if you can prove scientifically that He does things!" How can we respond to such a challenge?

The first thing we must do is disentangle the questions involved here. First, what do we mean by "God's actions"? Second, what do we mean by "science"? And third, can science detect events as God's actions? Let's take them one at a time.

To begin with, we recognize that, after the creation, God works in two ways. First, He maintains the things He created, along with their powers to cause things. Apples keep on tasting good and nourishing us because God keeps maintaining their properties. A soccer goalie deflects the ball because God maintains the properties of the ball, the air, and the goalie's body. Second, God is not limited by the powers of created things. Sometimes He goes beyond their powers if it suits His purpose. We can call the first kind of action the natural (since it works with created natures) and the second the supernatural (since it goes beyond natural powers). Let's be clear about this: Both kinds are God's actions and both serve His purpose.

The sciences study aspects of the world around us in hopes of understanding how they work. Some scientists study the regularities of the world (such as "the angle of incidence equals the angle of reflection"), while others study specific events, trying to reason backward from effect to cause (like Sherlock Holmes, the "scientific detective").

Can God's actions be detected scientifically? It depends on which ones. Because God made His world "very good" (Gn 1:31), it needs no tinkering to keep in operation, so we don't expect that the sciences will "detect" God's natural actions. The reason that an atom's electrons don't crash into the nucleus is not that God holds them apart by a miracle but that He made their properties so that they don't crash.

On the other hand, the sciences may sometimes help us detect a supernatural event because in knowing the properties of natural things, we can tell when these have been transcended. For example, the more we know about how babies come about, the more clearly supernatural becomes the conception of Jesus: There is no natural explanation for it. As C. S. Lewis put it, "No doubt a modern gynecologist knows several things about birth and begetting which St. Joseph did not know. But these things do not concern the main point—that a virgin birth is contrary to the course of nature. And St. Joseph obviously knew that." Advances in medical science have only sharpened the point. We could say the same about Jesus' resurrection: Dead bodies stay dead unless someone with extraordinary power interferes.

This kind of detection works best when it's based on knowledge, not ignorance. It's not just that we don't know how it could happen; rather, we have every reason to believe that it can't happen unless something else is added. The sciences can help us to know better the natures of the things involved and thus to know when "something else" is needed to explain what we see.

How Can the Bible Affirm Both Divine Sovereignty and Human Freedom?

by Bruce A. Ware

God is the sovereign ruler over the universe and all human affairs, and human beings are responsible before God for the moral choices and actions they make. Yes, the Bible teaches both divine sovereignty and human freedom, and both are true.

What does the Bible teach about God's sovereign rulership?

Consider Daniel 4:35, where we are instructed that God "does what He wants with the army of heaven and the inhabitants of earth. There is no one who can hold back His hand or say to Him, 'What have You done?' " In light of this verse, three observations are needed. First, God's rulership is the exercise of "His will." That is, He decides in advance what He wants to happen, so that His will precedes and directs all that occurs. Second, He exercises His will universally—over those in heaven and all the inhabitants of earth. There is no place where His will does not pertain or is not exercised. And third, no creature of God can thwart the fulfillment of God's will or charge God with wrongdoing. In short, God's rulership by His will is absolute, universal, and effectual.

Consider further the kinds of reality over which God reigns. The Bible contains a number of "spectrum texts" that display God's ultimate control of both good and evil, light and darkness, life and death. In Is 45:6-7, God announced, "I am the LORD, and there is no other. I form light and create darkness, I make success and create disaster; I the LORD do all these things" (see Ex 4:11; Dt 32:39; 1 Sm 2:6-7; Ec 7:13-14; Lm 3:37-38). And, while we gladly affirm that God is good (only!), and that God neither approves evil nor has any evil residing in Himself (Ps 5:4), yet we must affirm with Scripture that He reigns over all of life, both its good and evil, and that in all that occurs "the decision of His will" (Eph 1:11) is fulfilled.

What does Scripture teach about human moral responsibility?

From page 1 of the Bible, all humans are put on notice that God holds us accountable for the moral choices we make and actions we take. The law of God—whether the simple law not to eat of one tree in the garden (Gn 2:16-17), the law given on Sinai (Ex 20), or the law of Christ (1 Co 9:21; Gl 6:2)—establishes the moral framework within which human lives are to be lived. God will "repay each one according to his works" (Rm 2:6), and this judgment will be based on whether we persevere in doing good (Rm 2:7) or whether we do not obey the truth but obey unrighteousness (Rm 2:8). There is no denying that God considers humans as being responsible for the choices and actions we make, and the final judgment day will bear testimony to how we have chosen to live our lives.

So God is the sovereign ruler over all, and human beings are responsible before Him. But just how can both be true?

We cannot understand fully how both are true together, but that they must work together is demanded by Scripture's clear teaching. Consider one illustration from Scripture where both are seen—namely, a lesson from Joseph's story (Gn 37–45).

Joseph's brothers were deeply jealous of him and grew to despise him. When the opportunity presented itself, they sold him into Egypt (Gn 37:25-36), where Joseph was misunderstood and mistreated. Despite this, God's hand was on Joseph and he was elevated to second in command in Egypt (Gn 41). During a famine, his brothers traveled to Egypt to purchase grain, and there Joseph made himself known to his brothers. What Joseph told them is as incredible as it is instructive: "It was not you who sent me here, but God" (Gn 45:8).

"Wait!" we might protest. "Surely they did send Joseph to Egypt!"

So they did, and so Joseph previously acknowledged (Gn 45:4). But to get at the full reason he was sent to Egypt requires looking not just to the brothers but also, and more importantly, to God.

So it is clear: Both God and the brothers were responsible for sending Joseph to Egypt. Both God's sovereign rulership and the brother's moral actions were active. As Joseph put it later in speaking to his brothers, "You planned evil against me; God planned it for good" (Gn 50:20). The brothers acted for evil, and God acted in the same events for good.

Not every question is here answered, but we see that we must affirm both the sovereign rulership of God and the genuineness of our moral responsibility. Both are joined together in Scripture, and what Scripture has joined together, let no man separate.

(For another perspective, see the article in 1 Peter 1, page 1850.)

How Does Christianity Relate to Hinduism?

by Ravi Zacharias

I often think back with nostalgia to growing up in India and the late-night conversations we would have about a Hindu play or some event that featured Hindu thought. Now, through the lens of Jesus Christ, I have learned to see how deep-seated culture and religion can be and how only the power of the Holy Spirit can reveal the error of an ingrained way of thinking. Consequently, whenever we speak with someone from another faith, it is essential to remember that we must not attempt to tear down another's belief system but rather to reveal the hungers of the human heart and the unique way in which Christ addresses them.

For the Hindu, karma—the moral law of cause-and-effect—is a life-defining concept. Life carries its moral bills, and they are paid in the cyclical pattern of rebirth until all dues are paid in full. Hinduism here conveys an inherited sense of wrong, which is lived out in the next life, in vegetable, animal, or human form. This doctrine is nonnegotiable in Hindu philosophy. Repercussions of fatalism (that is, whatever happens will happen) and the indifference to the plight of others are inescapable but are dismissed by philosophical platitudes that do not weigh out the consequences of such reasoning. Thus it is key to bear in mind that although karma is seen as a way of paying back, this payback is never complete; hence life is lived out paying back a debt that one cannot know in total but that must be paid in total. That is why the cross of Christ is so definitive and so complete. It offers forgiveness without minimizing the debt. When we truly understand that forgiveness, we develop a loving heart of gratitude. There is a full restoration—in this life and for eternity.

The Christian should also understand the attraction of pantheism, the Hindu view of seeing the divine in everything. It superficially appears more compatible with scientific theorizing because it presents no definitive theory of origins. Life is cyclical, without a first cause. Pantheism also gives one a moral reasoning, through karmic fatalism, that one is trapped in the cycle until one escapes, without the need to invoke God. But in the final analysis, it is without answers when one needs to talk about the deepest struggles of the soul. Hindu scholars even admit this in their creation of a path of bhakti (love, devotion) to satisfy the inescapable human hunger for worship.

It is here that a keen understanding is needed. Krishna's coming to earth as an avatar—that is, one of the incarnations of the Hindu god Vishnu—in a way brings "God to man." But a huge chasm still remains. How does one bring man to God? For this, there is only one way—the way of the cross. A profound and studied presentation of the cross, and what it means, is still the most distinctive aspect of the Christian faith. Even Gandhi said it was the most unexplainable thing to him and was unparalleled. For the Christian, the cross of Jesus Christ is the message "first to the Jew, and also to the Greek" (Rm 2:9)—to the moralist and the pantheist, to the religious and the irreligious. We can communicate this message with a Hindu acquaintance or friend only through a loving relationship. The love of Christ, a patient listening and friendship, and the message of forgiveness provide the path to evangelism.

Introduction to Isaiah

AUTHOR

Despite claims to the contrary, the book of Isaiah contains many indications that it was written by the prophet Isaiah, who ministered in Judah during the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah and during the early years when Manasseh was a co-regent with Hezekiah (1:1). The introductions to chapters 1, 2–12, and 13–24 all begin with superscriptions that identify the content of these chapters as the words, visions, or oracles of Isaiah. In addition, these chapters describe events in Isaiah's life: his call to ministry (6:1-8); his interaction with Ahaz at the pool in Jerusalem (7:3-9); the events surrounding the birth of a child to Isaiah and his wife (8:1-4); a three-year period of functioning as a sign by walking around nearly naked (20:1-6); and his encouragement of Hezekiah during Sennacherib's siege of Jerusalem in 701 B.C. (36:1–39:8).

However, some commentators suggest two or three different "Isaiahs" wrote these messages. They provide three primary arguments for their position: (1) the theology of chapters 1–39 differs from the theology of chapters 40–66; (2) the style of writing and vocabulary shows considerable variation across the book; (3) chapters 1–39 predict the fall of Jerusalem sometime in the future, while chapters 40–66 assume Jerusalem was already in ruins and the people were getting ready to return from the exile. Some use these different historical circumstances and theological emphases to argue that another prophet (called Deutero-Isaiah) wrote chapters 40–55 in the exilic period and that a third prophet (called Trito-Isaiah) wrote chapters 56–66 in the postexilic era.

In response to these concerns, recent studies have shown a significant thematic unity throughout Isaiah. Furthermore, we now know that an ancient author might use all sorts of different styles according to the point he was trying to make. The main point of contention, then, remains the historical setting of the prophet. However, if one believes that a prophet can predict events in the distant future (such as the ruin of Jerusalem and the return from exile) without actually living in that time period, then the historical problems with the book of Isaiah do not require additional authors writing in the exilic and postexilic eras.

The prophet Isaiah probably wrote his book in sections over several years and may have used source material, such as in his account of Sennacherib's attack on Jerusalem (cp. 2 Kg 18–20 with Is 36–39). Most messages are not easily dated, but chapters 2–5 appear to record Isaiah's sermons during the prosperous reign of Uzziah; chapters 6–12 relate to the Syro-Ephraimite war during the reign of Ahaz; and many of the oracles against the nations in chapters 13–39 are connected to Sennacherib's attack on Jerusalem during the reign of Hezekiah. Stories connecting chapters 40–66 with the reign of a specific king are missing, thus it is impossible to give an exact date for them. It would appear they were spoken in the years after Isaiah's announcement that Judah would be defeated by Babylon (39:1-8).

THEOLOGICAL THEMES

Numerous important theological themes in Isaiah's preaching set his messages apart from those of other prophets. One of the key themes in Isaiah is the call for people to trust God. During the era of Uzziah, Judah was rich and powerful, so there was a temptation to trust in the nation's military power and economic strength (2:7-8) rather than trust in God. Later, during the time of Ahaz (chaps. 7–11; cp.
2 Ch 28) and Hezekiah (chaps. 28–39; cp. 2 Kg 18–19), Judah was not as strong and the Assyrians were exerting their sovereignty over all the nations in the Near East. In these circumstances there was a temptation to trust in political alliances with Assyria (2 Ch 28), Egypt (Is 30:1-6; 31:1-9), or the Babylonians (39:1-8) rather than trust in God. So, to encourage his audience to trust God, Isaiah recorded a hymn proclaiming that he would trust in God (12:2). And an opportunity to model this trust came later when the Assyrian general questioned Hezekiah's trust in God (36:7). Although facing great difficulties, Isaiah and Hezekiah asked Him to deliver them (37:16-20). Rather than surrendering, they put their trust in God.

This theme stands in tension with its opposite: the tendency of Israel and the nations to rebel against God and not trust Him. From the first chapter, God's people are pictured as rebellious sons (1:2-4) who sinned against God, did not offer sacrifices that pleased Him (1:11-15), were unfaithful, were murderers, oppressed the weak, and worshiped pagan gods (1:21-23,29-31). Isaiah taught that everything proud and exalted will be humbled and brought low and that God alone will be exalted (2:9-17). Pride will lead to divine judgment, so Isaiah exhorted his readers to humble themselves.

What God wants are servants who exalt God and follow his instructions. Ahaz was not willing to bend his knee and serve God (7:1-12). Even the righteous King Hezekiah struggled with serving God completely and not leaning on other nations (chaps. 30–31). The rationale for serving God involves His sovereignty over the affairs of the world. His exaltation above all other gods and nations is confirmed in the many passages about wooden idols that cannot talk, walk, speak, or predict the future. God was vastly superior to these pieces of wood (44:6-20). He is the first and the last; there is no other God beside Him (45:5-7,14,18,21). Even the Babylonian gods would be powerless to protect the Babylonian people (46:1-11). Also, the people of Israel were blind servants who did not follow God (42:18-22), but God would raise up a true Servant who would establish justice in the earth (42:1-4; just like the Messiah in 9:6-7) and serve as a light and covenant to the nations (42:6-7; 49:6-7). This servant would be abused and suffer for the sins of others (50:4-9; 53:1-9), bearing their sins in order to bring forgiveness for many others (53:5,10-12). Later, through God's transforming grace, Israel and the other nations will join to worship God and function as His faithful servants (60:1-9; 65:1-16) in God's glorious kingdom.

Throughout this book the pagan nations of this world are seen as rebellious and proud opponents of God (chaps. 13–23). But Isaiah proclaimed that there will be a future day when the nations will come to Zion to worship God (2:2-4; 14:1-3; 19:18-25). They will come with gifts to praise God (60:4-14), and some of them will even serve as priests and Levites (66:18-20). Those nations that do not submit to God and worship Him will experience the terrible effects of God's wrath (34:1-15; 63:1-6), and instead of enjoying the new heavens and the new earth, they will endure the torments of a place where fire and worm never die (66:22-24). These themes inform the reader about God's ways, motivate the trusting soul to exalt God, and warn the sinner to turn from pride. God's kingdom plans are established, so everyone must choose whom they will serve.

Isaiah Study Notes

1:11-15 The Lord directed the people of Israel to build the tabernacle (Ex 26–31), established the theological significance of the sacrifices (Lv 1–6), and appointed the nation's festivals (Ex 34:18-26; Lv 23). But here Isaiah, speaking in the Lord's name, appears to condemn these God-ordained institutions. Israelite prophets typically expressed themselves in extreme language, so attuned were they to the Lord's sense of betrayal by the people He had chosen. The institutions of Israelite worship were designed so that the people could sense God's presence in their midst, confess their sins, and renew their covenant relationship. They were to participate in these feasts in a heart-felt celebration of His past acts of grace. But the nation had grown careless; its worship had become shallow, carried out as popular custom—a casual "trampling" (v. 12) of the courts of the Lord. There was a profound disparity between the people's professed loyalty to the covenant and the "iniquity" (v. 13) and injustice (v. 15) they tolerated in violation of that very covenant's precepts. Under such conditions, it is hardly surprising that the Lord found their offerings "useless" (v. 13) and was disgusted by their prayer, incense, festivals, and other religious practices. God does not condemn the practices of worship He, Himself, has instituted, only the false motivation that distorts them. He welcomes worship from those who repent of their sins and come to His house to glorify His name.

1:16-20 Isaiah provided God's list of correctives for the social evil and inequality that rendered Israel's worship repugnant to him. These admonitions about just relationships do not imply that following them, alone, would bring God's blessing. The scarlet stain of sin can only be made "white as snow" (v. 18) through divine forgiveness. This happens when people have "willing and obedient" hearts and do not "refuse and rebel" against God (vv. 19-20).

2:2-5 Isaiah declared that war between nations would end "in the last days" (v. 2); the Lord would bring about that peaceful situation among nations through His arbitration (vv. 3-4). A precondition for peace is worldwide acceptance of God's instruction (v. 3), as His Word would prepare people to follow His path of justice and forgiveness. Peace will never result from the efforts of sinful humanity. Apart from the Lord's doing it is only the political slogan of anti-war protestors, the optimistic dream of national diplomats, or a nebulous religious ideal.

2:9 Why would the prophet pray, "Do not forgive them"? First, Isaiah may have been aligning himself with God's holy hatred of sin; divine justice would require that sinners not be excused without suffering the consequences of their disobedience. Second, the verb "forgive/bear" (nasa') is often translated "lift up." The prophet might simply have been asking God to humble these proud people.

2:22 God created humanity in His image (Gn 1:26), and the psalmist affirmed that God crowned man with glory (Ps 8:5). Isaiah was not speaking about a person's intrinsic worth or importance in God's eyes. The issue here was reliance on other people who might not be realizing the dignity God had conferred on the human race. Isaiah was only reminding people that they should not trust in gold, armies, idols (vv. 7-8), other proud people (vv. 11,12,17), or the structures people erect to give them security (vv. 15-16). God alone is worthy of trust; relying on human devices is a waste of time.

3:10-11 God's covenant with Israel established a broad relationship between obedience and blessing, disobedience and curse (Lv 26:1-45; Dt 27–28). The book of Proverbs is based on this fundamental relationship between right actions and beneficial consequences, and the converse. Isaiah reaffirmed this principle, that "it will go well" for the righteous but badly for the wicked. This does not mean that righteousness or innocence, even when consistent, bring an immediate earthly reward—as the Bible's examples of Joseph (Gn 37–45), Job (Jb 1–2), the man blind from birth (Jn 9:1-4) and Jesus' own unjust execution (Mt 27) make clear. But the long-term biblical view (in those instances, and many others) affirms that the principle is valid. In the end, the righteous person is vindicated, in the resurrection (see Ac 10:36-41) if not before.

3:16-24 Isaiah portrayed the judgment of the proud women of Jerusalem in graphic and gruesome word pictures. His description was a realistic portrayal of what would happen should the army of another ancient Near Eastern nation conquer Jerusalem. The enemy would respect neither men, women, nor children, but would savagely abuse and slaughter them. Such would be the Lord's judgment if the wealthy women of Jerusalem, with the leaders of Judah, failed to repent of their pride and oppression of the poor

(cp. vv. 13-15). In seeking to move them to repentance, the prophet did not gloss over the possible consequence of continuing disregard for the ways of the Lord. Jerusalem's women would not be excused from punishment, for they participated with their husbands in the corruption of the culture (cp. the women of Samaria, Am 4:1). God will humble the proud and He alone will be exalted (Is 2:12,17).

4:1 So many men in Jerusalem would be killed in battle (3:25) that there will be no husbands left for these rich women. In their desperation to avoid the disgrace of not having husbands, they will stoop to the shameful state of sharing a man with other wives. Isaiah's words were no endorsement of polygamy or multiple sexual partners; he was warning these people of the dire consequences of maintaining their evil ways. His word picture was intended to motivate the people to repentance before this sad condition befell them.

4:2 Some interpreters view the phrase "branch [tsemach] of the LORD will be beautiful and glorious" as a sign of the land's fertility. They view it as a parallel to the next phrase, "the fruit of the land will be the pride and glory of Israel's survivors." Others take the "branch of the LORD" as a messianic title based on other occurrences of the word, used in the sense of the springing forth of salvation (2 Sm 23:5) or "a horn" (Ps 132:17) for David. These passages, because they speak of the continuing line of David, carry a messianic implication. Isaiah, a prophet of Jerusalem close to the royal court, likely knew these songs. Later he called the Messiah "a shoot" (choter) that will come up from the stump of Jesse, even a "branch" (netser) that will bear fruit (Is 11:1). Jeremiah referred to the "righteous Branch" or "Branch of righteousness" from David (Jr 23:5; 33:15) and Zechariah (Zch 3:8; 6:12) used the term "Branch" with a messianic meaning.

5:12,19 Isaiah identified a person who is blind to spiritual realities as one who cannot "perceive the LORD'S actions" or has refused to "see the work of His hands." While claiming to welcome the Lord's redemptive action (v. 19), they are unable to understand what He is already doing to enact His judgments. They insist on seeing the Lord at work, according to their own idea of what He is supposed to do, before they will believe in Him. Jesus rejected the idea of doing another miracle, or sign, to prove who He was (Mt 16:1-4). The people already had the Law and the Prophets (Lk 16:29-31). Isaiah understood that, eventually, God would blind the eyes of persistent unbelievers so that they would not be able to see the truth (Is 6:9-10; see Mk 4:11-12; Ac 28:27).

6:1,5 In Ex 33:20 the Lord told Moses that no man could see His face and live; Jn 1:18 confirms that no one has seen God. His eternal essence is invisible (1 Tm 1:17; 6:16); He is Spirit (Jn 4:23-24). Yet Isaiah claimed to have seen "the Lord seated on a high and lofty throne. . . the King, the LORD of Hosts." There are other places in Scripture where people see the Lord; for example, He revealed Himself to Moses and the elders of Israel on Mount Sinai (Ex 24:9-18), and to Ezekiel and John in glorious and mysterious visions (Ezk 1; 10; Rv 4:1-11). These "theophanies" (appearances of God) were typically accompanied by features drawn from the world of nature, such as storm or volcanic activity, and often included the manifestation of God's "glory," an awesome weight or radiance that both revealed and hid His presence. They could be internal visions—experiences of one person not shared by bystanders. Or they could be "literary visions," poetic expressions of the Lord's appearance composed in order to add force to the words of His spokesman. Isaiah's vision occurred in the temple (Is 6:4) and was described in terms of the worship conducted there. The chanting (v. 3) of the seraphim (lit. "burning ones") mirrored the antiphonal singing of the Levitical choirs, while the smoke of the altar (vv. 4,6) filled the air, suggesting a sacrificial ceremony in progress. Whatever the particular nature of Isaiah's vision, it was a pivotal event in his prophetic ministry.

6:9-10 The Lord summoned Isaiah to preach to the people so that they could not hear and see the truth and repent. Negating the possibility of their repentance seems to contradict Isaiah's call for the people to repent in 1:18-20, or his appeal to Ahaz to trust God in 7:9. The prophetic summons to repent had a double function; it invited people to return to the Lord, but also exposed those who, having hardened their hearts to God's appeal, were destined for judgment. Moses, similarly, was told to deliver his message to Pharaoh (Ex 3:1-10) although he would not listen to it (Ex 3:19). The Lord, through Isaiah, gave Ahaz the opportunity to follow His will (Is 7:3-9), but like Pharaoh, Ahaz hardened his heart and refused to follow the Lord's instructions (Is 7:10-13). The Lord is glorified not only by the response of those who heed His call to repent, but also by the consequences that follow for those who ignore His appeal. The NT writers saw the same principle at work in the response to the gospel of Jesus Christ (Mk 4:11-12; Jn 12:37-40; Ac 28:25-28).

7:3-9 Isaiah promised that Ahaz, king of Judah, had nothing to fear even though the armies of Rezin of Aram (Syria) and Pekah of Israel were attacking Judah. On the other hand, 2 Ch 28:5-8 indicates that Judah was defeated, losing 120,000 soldiers with 200,000 people taken captive. Isaiah's prophecy was based on the condition that Ahaz would trust God (Is 7:9), which he failed to do. Thus the consequences of the war were more serious than what they would have been if Ahaz had acted in faith. Consideration of the Syro-Ephraimite War, on the whole, shows that while Judah lost some battles, it did not lose the war. Ahaz foolishly called on the king of Assyria, Tiglath-pileser III (2 Ch 28:16,20).

7:14 The Hebrew word 'almah refers to a young woman before the age of marriage, and is sometimes translated "virgin." Some interpreters claim that Matthew misappropriated this verse (Mt 1:23) in applying it to the birth of Jesus. They believe Isaiah was referring to a woman in the time of Ahaz—either a son born to an 'almah in Ahaz's harem or a son to Isaiah's wife (8:1-4), and that this "Immanuel" was a sign of hope for the future when "God will be with us." Others accept this immediate application, but also view the passage as prophetic of Christ (a "double fulfillment" approach). But Ahaz's good son Hezekiah was already born at this time; and Isaiah already had children, so his wife would not be called a "virgin" at this point in her life. Thus, many believe this prophecy only referred to the future birth of the Messiah. If so, this messianic application was expanded and verified through progressive revelation in 9:6-7, which announced that "a child will be born for us . . . He will reign on the throne of David."

8:6 Why would the people of Judah have "rejoiced with Rezin," the Syrian king who was attacking Jerusalem and whom God had promised to destroy (v. 4)? Some hypothesize that this referred to a group who wanted to join Rezin's revolt against Assyria, and were therefore happy to see the invader's military progress. Other translations emend the text to read "melt in fear" (RSV), picturing the fearful people of Judah terrorized before the Syrian onslaught. The best option is to interpret the people rejoicing over the announcement in verse 4 that the "wealth of Damascus . . . will be carried off," implying Rezin's defeat.

8:14 Paul (Rm 9:32-33) and Peter (1 Pt 2:6-8) applied this verse, together with Is 28:16, to Jesus Christ, who was rejected as Messiah by many of those to whom He came. Some interpreters object that their use of these passages is not consistent with what Isaiah meant when he spoke to his Jerusalem audience. Isaiah was speaking about Israel's attitude toward the Lord. If, in the NT perspective, Jesus is the revelation of the Father and His activity (e.g., Jn 1:1; 14:9; 2 Co 5:19; Php 2:6), then what Isaiah said about God could also be taken in a messianic sense, as applicable to Jesus.

9:6 Although Mt 4:16 applies the passage as a whole (vv. 2-7) to Jesus Christ by implication, the NT does not specifically apply to Him the names, or titles, listed in this verse. Some commentators believe Isaiah was describing a Judean ruler to come during his own time; thus, these names were applied to the reigns of Hezekiah, Josiah, and even Ahaz. But even if the names do not recur, as such, in the NT, they fit the ministry and messianic role of Jesus. As a "Wonderful Counselor," He is a doer of "miracles, wonders, and signs" (Ac 2:22) who sends the Counselor, the Holy Spirit, to continue His work (Jn 14:26). Hailed as "My Lord and my God" (Jn 20:28) in His resurrection, Jesus has been given "all authority . . . in heaven and on earth" (Mt 28:18). As one with the Father (Jn 10:30), He is eternal—"alive forever and ever" (Rv 1:18). As a member of David's royal line (Rm 1:3) He is the Prince who brings peace between Jew and non-Jew (Eph 2:14), whose rule over all kingdoms (Rv 1:5) brings an end to wars.

10:5-7 The Lord summoned the Assyrians to perform His work of judgment against Judah during the Syro-Ephraimite War, while at the same time proclaiming His "woe" upon the northern enemy, whom He will punish for its arrogant acts (v. 12) in despoiling Judah. God appointed Assyria to a specific task, but that nation failed to follow His plan (v. 7), became proud (vv. 8-14), and boasted about its false gods (v. 10). Therefore, even the instrument of the Lord's judgment came under that judgment.

11:6-7 Some interpreters view this prophecy as an exaggeration of the peaceful times under the rule of "the stump of Jesse" (v. 1), meaning the rule of Hezekiah. Since nothing close to these conditions ever characterized Hezekiah's reign, these critics allege that Isaiah's prophecy failed. But it was not uncommon in the ancient Near East to expect the rise of a new political leader to produce an idyllic time of peace (e.g., the Egyptian Prophecy of Nefer-Rohu, and certain Mesopotamian documents) and a return to Garden-of-Eden like conditions. Such a vision for an eventual restoration of paradise is consistent with Hosea's claim that in the last days God will make a covenant with the animals (Hs 2:18), or with the original covenant blessings predicting peace with animals (Lv 26:6). Psalm 36:6-9 speaks of the Lord's preserving both "man and beast" in the context of the "refreshing stream" of God's presence, a phrase that could be translated "Your Edenic streams." Similar promises of restored Eden-like conditions appear in Is 51:3; Ezk 34:25; 36:35.

13:8-16 Isaiah presented a picture of "the day of the LORD" that is coming for the destruction of sinners (v. 9). Although the context was the warfare of Isaiah's time, the prophet described it in cosmic word-pictures: darkness of the sun and stars (v. 10), the shaking of the earth (v. 13). Equally extreme, in typical prophetic rhetoric, is the description of the cruelty to be inflicted upon men, women, and children (vv. 15-16). In reality, such horror was typical of ancient warfare, as ancient Assyrian war records illustrate, and is not unknown in medieval and modern times as well. To describe these pitiless acts, even in the name of the Lord, is not to claim that He approves of them. The prophet merely predicted what sinful people will do to each other.

13:17 Isaiah predicted that the Medes would defeat Babylon, while the historical records indicate that the demise of the Babylonians was not the doing of the Medes alone. Isaiah was not claiming that the Medes were the sole conquerors. The exact date of this conquest is unknown, and some commentators hypothesize that Isaiah was referring to the defeat of the Babylonians by the Assyrian king Tiglath-pileser III (in 729 B.C.), who had Median soldiers in his army. Some point to Sennacherib's attack on Babylon in 689 B.C., while others believe this passage refers to Cyrus's defeat of Babylon in 539 B.C. If Isaiah delivered this prophecy around 701 B.C. when Babylon was tempting Hezekiah to rebel and form an alliance with them, then Isaiah would be condemning the Babylonian kingdom of Merodach-baladan that Hezekiah was trusting. That kingdom fell in 689 B.C. when the Assyrian King Sennacherib besieged Babylon (23:13), tore down its walls, depopulated the city, and made the location into a meadow. The Medes may have joined the Assyrian army in defeating Babylon.

14:4-21 Isaiah offered a "song of contempt," or taunt, against the king of Babylon. Because the king's name was omitted, commentators have speculated that this passages refers to (1) Tiglath-pileser III, the Assyrian king who declared himself king of Babylon; (2) Nebuchadnezzar or Nabonidus, the last king of Babylon (Dn 5); (3) Merodach-baladan, the Babylonian king who made a treaty with Hezekiah (Is 39); or (4) a symbolic representation of any tyrant, not a specific king. If Isaiah was trying to dissuade Hezekiah from trusting the Babylonians (Is 39), Merodach-baladan is the most likely candidate. This passage has also been taken as a metaphorical reference to the fall of Satan (Lucifer), the "shining morning star" (v. 12). This interpretation is suggested by the Latin translation of "shining star" as Lucifer (lit. "light-bearer"). This later Latin identification has nothing to do with Isaiah's original reference to a real king who would die and be powerless in Sheol, the place of the deceased spirits (v. 15). Calling the Babylonian ruler the "morning star" may have been a sarcastic reference to his pretense and arrogance.

15:1-5 Isaiah's laments in chapters 13–23 were most likely uttered before a Judean audience, not in the lands to which they referred. It may seem that Isaiah laments the demise of Judah's enemies, and some interpreters have suggested that parts or all of chapters 15–16 were ironic laments intended to taunt or mock Moab, Judah's long-time enemy. That view is probably incorrect in light of Isaiah's personal declaration of deep sorrow in verse 5 and 16:9. Isaiah lamented that the Moabites had rejected the possibility of finding refuge from their enemies in Judah's hope, the enduring throne of David (16:4-5). It is worth noting that the Davidic royal family had, in Ruth the wife of Boaz, a Moabite ancestry (Ru 4:13-22). Perhaps the prophet reflected God's sorrow over Moab so the Judeans would recognize the hopelessness of following Moab's path.

16:5 Some commentators assert that the judge who will sit on the throne "in the tent of David" was Hezekiah, who would come to the aid of the Moabites during their time of oppression by the Assyrians. Since this Davidic ruler will "execute justice" and "will sit on the throne forever," his characteristics coincide with those of the Davidic Messiah in 9:6-7 (see 2 Sm 7:12-16). Thus, Isaiah was pointing to someone much greater than Hezekiah.

17:1 Damascus continued to be a city in the OT era (Ezk 27:18), the NT (Ac 9:19-27), and today. This does not negate Isaiah's prophecy, which referred to the destruction of Damascus as the powerful capital of Syria during the Syro-Ephraimite War. His words were consistent with his prophecy about the fall of Damascus in 7:7-8 and 8:4, and the announcement that Assyria defeated Damascus and exiled its inhabitants to Kir (2 Kg 16:9). After many years in ruins, it later became a small city in the Assyrian province of Hamath. Isaiah was not claiming that it would remain a ruin for all time.

18:7 This prophecy came to Isaiah approximately 705–701 B.C. when the Cushite dynasty of Shabaka was in control of Egypt. Isaiah gave a word for the Cushite messengers to relay to their leaders about God's plan to defeat their enemy (compared to pruning branches in v. 5) and leave their dead soldiers for the birds to eat (v. 6). Although the enemy was not identified, the context of this section and historical sources pointed to Assyria. This was the nation that would "roar like the roaring of the sea" (17:12) and then be suddenly gone (17:14), a prophecy that pointed to God's destruction of the Assyrian army that surrounded Jerusalem in one night (37:36). Although no historical documents relate the Cushites' coming to Jerusalem to give gifts to the Lord, this idea is consistent with other prophecies about all nations coming to worship God in Zion (2:2-4), and the specific prophecy that the Egyptians would worship God (19:18-25).

19:18-25 Were there ever five cities in Egypt that swore allegiance to Israel's God, was there ever a Jewish altar in Egypt for worship, did God miraculously send a Savior to deliver the Egyptians, and was there ever a highway connecting Jerusalem, Egypt, and Assyria? Some suggest that the prophecy was fulfilled after the exile when a group of Hebrews fled to Egypt, settled in four Egyptian cities (Jr 44:1) and later built a temple in Leontopolis around 170 B.C. This approach is problematic since most of those who fled to Egypt rejected the Lord or worshiped Him along with pagan deities. Another approach sees these words fulfilled after the spread of Christianity to Egypt during the Byzantine era. A third view is that this prophecy awaits fulfillment during the future eschatological period (Is 2:2-4).

20:2-4 Around 711 B.C. the Assyrians captured Ashdod, the Philistine city that depended on Egypt for help. Isaiah's symbolic act of nakedness was a warning to the people of Judah not to trust Egypt, as the people of Ashdod had done, because before long Egyptians also would be taken away naked as prisoners to Nineveh. The term "naked" can mean one has no clothes on at all (Gn 2:25; 3:7; Jb 1:21), but can also be used in situations where one is almost, but not totally, naked (Is 58:7;Jb 22:6; 24:7). This instruction did not require Isaiah to be "naked" the entire day, but at various times during those three years his dramatic presence would communicate a vivid warning that was more powerful than a verbal message. The text does not reveal what Isaiah said to people as he went about naked.

21:2-9 Some critics who admit that the feasting at the fall of Babylon (v. 5) may coincide with Belshazzar's feast (Dn 5) still see a contradiction between the anguishing battle for Babylon described in Is 21:2-5 and the Cyrus Cylinder that indicates that Babylon fell without a fight in one evening. These contradictory pictures of the fall of Babylon suggest that Isaiah was not prophesying about the future fall of Babylon in 539 B.C. mentioned in Dn 5. Isaiah's mourning over the fall of Babylon also does not fit the 539 B.C. events, for the Jews at that time would be glad to hear that Babylon was being punished. It seems more appropriate to relate this prophecy to Hezekiah's intent to form a coalition with the Babylonian ruler Merodach-baladan (39:1-8). This prophecy about the near fall of Babylon would demonstrate that Babylon was not a trustworthy treaty partner; so Hezekiah should put his trust in the Lord instead. This prophecy fits these events because (1) Merodach-baladan was from the marshy lowland (cp. "desert by the sea," v. 1); (2) Babylon was an ally of Judah at this time, and its defeat would explain the anguish Isaiah expressed in verses 3-4,10; and (3) the Elamites and Medes (v. 2) were allies of Babylon, fighting against the Assyrian King Sennacherib to save it. Thus Isaiah was looking ahead to the conquest of Babylon in 689 B.C. at the hands of the Assyrians.

22:12-14 Why would the people of Jerusalem celebrate (vv. 2,13) when the city of Jerusalem was in danger of being destroyed? Isaiah's description fits the events connected with Sennacherib's attack on Judah in 701 B.C., not the fall of Jerusalem to Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C. The people in Jerusalem had prepared their weapons, repaired the walls, and dug a tunnel from the Gihon spring, outside the wall, to the Pool of Siloam within (vv. 8-11; 2 Ch 32:3-4). Now they were celebrating the completion of their preparations for siege (Is 22:2,13). Instead of trusting in God their Creator (v. 11), they were depending on their own efforts to save them. Isaiah found this false confidence appalling. Many people outside Jerusalem had already died, fled, or been taken captive (v. 3) and the land was still occupied by foreign troops (vv. 6-7). Isaiah wept in despair over those who had already lost their lives (v. 4), and those who would soon lose their lives on the day of the Lord (v. 12). If there were no change in the people's trust, God would hold them accountable. Their sin would not be "wiped out" (v. 14), but they would be.

22:15-20 When Sennacherib was about to attack Jerusalem (36:3), Shebna was scribe and Eliakim was steward of the palace, but in this passage Shebna is named as steward. Accordingly, some believe this Shebna is a different man. But in verse 19 Isaiah predicted that Shebna would be demoted. It appears that Shebna was the king's steward during the preparations for Sennacherib's attack, but that Eliakim replaced him before the attack.

23:8-9 The city of Tyre was situated on an almost impregnable island in the Mediterranean Sea (v. 4). It was wealthy (v. 3) and had many colonies to trade with (v. 8). It considered itself invincible. But God's plan was to destroy Tyre (v. 9), and this occurred when Sennacherib overcame Sidon in his third year and put Tyre under siege for five years. An unbeliever may attribute defeat in warfare to poor judgment by leaders, a weaker military, inferior equipment, freak accidents of nature, or the superior strategy of an opposing general. But the believer credits God with planning the defeat of evil nations.

23:15-18 Many doubt that Tyre suddenly reappeared as an important power in exactly 70 years or that the people of Tyre ever dedicated their wages to the Lord. It is impossible to say exactly when this 70-year period began or ended, but if the Assyrians humbled the Phoenicians around 702 B.C. the 70 years would extend to around 630 B.C., when the Assyrian Empire collapsed after the death of Ashurbanipal. Since there are few historical documents about Tyre, no one knows if the city ever sent gifts to Jerusalem. Shortly after the end of the 70 years (630 B.C.), the Judean King Josiah rebuilt the temple in 621 B.C. (2 Kg 22; 2 Ch 34). While there is no specific mention that Tyre assisted in this project, Phoenicia was the normal source for the timber used in the temple's reconstruction (2 Kg 22:6; 2 Ch 34:11), and it is possible that Josiah depended on masons from Tyre, as had Solomon (1 Kg 5).

24:14-18 Some interpreters see an inconsistency between the rejoicing described in verses 14-16 and the context, which pictures the devastation and treachery of war. As a result, they assume Isaiah was mocking those who were praising the Lord. Isaiah was moved to weeping because he foresaw that "terror, pit, and snare" (v. 17) were awaiting the people of Jerusalem because of Sennacherib's attack. But there is nothing in Isaiah's words that would condemn people from the east and west for extolling the Lord's majesty. Though Judah was in dire straits in the present circumstance (vv. 16-18), a day of victory and joy would come.

25:6 Some commentators find Isaiah drawing on ancient Near Eastern mythology when he mentioned a worldwide pilgrimage to Zion (2:2-3) where people will present gifts to God (60:1-22) and celebrate God's kingship at a coronation banquet. This event is not similar to the enthronement of Baal at a feast of the gods on Mount Zaphon or the coronation feast for the Babylonian god Marduk, for these verses in Isaiah make no reference to a pilgrimage, bringing gifts, offering sacrifice, or the crowning of a king.

25:7-8 The theological doctrine about the end of death is often relegated to late postexilic texts (e.g. Dn 12:1-2) and reinterpreted as a simple way of saying that death resulting from warfare will end. If the shroud people wear to mourn their loved ones will be taken away(2 Sam 15:30; 19:5), this implies that death will not happen. Since death is the punishment the enemies of God justly deserve because of sin, once His enemies in heaven and earth are vanquished no one will deserve to die. Other early eschatological passages refer to the life God will provide for His people forever (2 Sm 7:16; Is 51:6; 60:21; Mc 4:7). The complete removal of death will be a central sign of God's reign.

26:14,19 In verse 14 Isaiah declared that "the dead do not live, departed spirits do not rise up." Then, in verse 19 he stated that "your dead will live; their bodies will rise." This apparent conflict vanishes when the statements are placed in context. He referred to past oppressors of Israel, the "wicked" who act "unjustly" (v. 10), the "other lords" who had ruled over God's people and whom God had already "visited and destroyed" (vv. 13-14). These oppressors could no longer attack God's people. The situation changed with verse 19; in the future God's people who die will live. Some interpret this to refer to the revival of Israel after the exile, similar to Ezekiel's description of God's revival of the dry bones (Ezk 37:1-14). The lack of any supporting background in this passage—such as a return from Bab-ylon, reconstruction of ruined cities, or restoration of Davidic rule—renders this interpretation less likely. It is possible to see this as deliverance from Sheol (Ps 16:10-11; 18:5-6; 49:14-15), or never having to experience death. A third approach understands this passage to mean that a person can have life after death. The fact that Elijah and Elisha brought to life two boys who had died (1 Kg 17:17-24; 2 Kg 4:18-37), and that a dead man came back to life when his body touched the bones of Elisha (2 Kg 13:20-21), indicates that individual resurrection from the dead was known and experienced long before the time of Isaiah.

27:1 The name Leviathan is found elsewhere in the Bible (Jb 3:8; 41:1-32; Ps 74:14; 104:26) and appears to refer to a sea creature parallel to Rahab, which symbolized Egypt (Jb 26:12; Ps 87:4; 89:10; Is 30:7; 51:9). The Israelites and the prophet Isaiah were well aware of ancient Near Eastern beliefs about monsters that battle one another (Baal and Mot; Marduk and Tiamat). Biblical use of these mythological creatures as literary symbols does not indicate that the inspired authors believed in them. To the contrary, Isaiah's use of Leviathan as a metaphor for the strong nation of Assyria amounts to divesting the name of any mythological or religious significance attached to it.

28:7-13 Verse 10, often cited favorably in support of the value of consistent teaching, has a virtually opposite meaning. In Hebrew it has the repetitive, monosyllabic tone of baby talk, as the preceding verse ("infants . . . babies," v. 9) suggests. It mimics the babbling of drunken priests and prophets (v. 7) who were mouthing useless instructions to the people. When the word of the Lord came back with the same babbling message (v. 13), the reference was to the undecipherable words of the would-be Assyrian conquerors ("stammering speech and in a foreign language," v. 11). Isaiah was warning the Judeans that if they were receiving only the most infantile, incoherent teaching from their spiritual leaders, they would fall into the hands of an equally incoherent enemy. Paul cited verses 11-12 with reference to speaking in tongues (1 Co 14:21), indicating that while the practice may be beneficial for believers, it is repellent to unbelievers, for whom a direct prophetic word is more convicting.

28:15,18 It makes little sense for anyone to "cut a deal with Death" (lit. "make [cut] a covenant with death") or to say "we have made falsehood our refuge." Isaiah was mockingly putting words in the mouths of his audience. Hezekiah's ill-considered political agreement with Egypt to gain protection from the Assyrian attack of Sennacherib in 701 B.C. was stylized as a "deal with death" because the rulers of Judah were hoping that Egypt would rescue them from Assyria. It was a false and deceptive hope, because historically Egypt was always an unreliable ally. The phrase "deal with Death" may be the background for Paul's phrase "ministry of death" in 2 Co 3:7, where he applied it to a false reliance on the old covenant, or law of Moses, which cannot give life (see 1 Co 15:56-57).

28:16 Paul (Rm 9:33) and Peter (1 Pt 2:6-8) applied this text in the Greek version, together with Is 8:14, to Jesus Christ. Isaiah, here, said that God and His promises are a sure foundation for the believer, who "will be unshakable." The Greek translation takes the Hebrew verb yachish "have haste, anxiety" in a different sense; the NT texts, following the Greek, have "will not [or never] be put to shame" and apply the idea of the "cornerstone" to Christ. Hebrew verbs are typically rich in their range of meanings, depending on their forms, and translators into another language (e.g., English or Greek) often have to choose words that may not incorporate the same nuances. On the application of the "precious cornerstone" to Jesus, see Ps 118:22.

29:9-10 Although people shut themselves off from God's truth, in the larger perspective the understanding of God's sovereignty required the prophet to recognize their refusal to hear as the action of God Himself for purposes of judgment. Isaiah was confronted with the same issue in 6:9-10. When people, even supposed prophets and seers, blind themselves to the genuine message from the Lord and fall into a drunken-like stupor, eventually God will shut their eyes to the truth and judge them (see Rm 1:21-25).

29:15-16 The ancient Israelite skeptics were people who tried to hide from God, imagining that God did not really see what they were doing (v. 15). They set themselves up as equal to God, the master creative Potter, denying that God made them and rejecting His sovereign knowledge and control over their world.

30:7 On references to ancient Near Eastern mythological monsters in the Bible, see note on 27:1.

30:18 The prophet clearly indicated that Judah was sinful in relying on Egypt (30:1-5) and in rejecting God's message to them (30:12-14). In view of this, it did not seem "just" for the Lord to have compassion on these sinful people (30:18). God's justice, in the OT, is not an abstraction, but an aspect of His covenant with His people. First, the nation will experience God's judgment through the attack of the Assyrians, pictured as the collapse of a wall and the shattering of a jar (30:13-14). But once the people had suffered the consequences of their lack of faith, the Lord would "show you mercy" because the covenant, grounded not in their obedience but in His grace, still stood.

30:26 If the sun were, literally, to burn seven times brighter than at present, everything on earth would be burned up. The prophet was using a poetic image to affirm that instead of darkness, destruction, and lack of fertility, there would be abundant water (v. 25) and light for the healing of the land (see Mal 4:2).

30:28 How is it just for God to deceive people? The Assyrians were brought by God to carry out His judgment against Judah (10:5); they were likened to a destructive torrent of roaring flooding water from God's mouth (cp. 8:8; 28:2,15,17 where Assyria was pictured as a mass of water). But the Assyrians did not follow God's plan; instead, they acted in pride (36:4-20; 37:21-29). In a picturesque image, Isaiah compared the results of God's action against the people of Assyria to putting a bridle in the mouth of a horse to lead it astray. This implied that God was leading Assyria on a path that would result in its own destruction because of its sins (see1 Kg 22:22-24).

31:8-9 The event that caused the withdrawal of the Assyrian king and his army was not military action byJudah or Egypt, but the intervention of angel of the Lord who slew 185,000 fighters in one night (37:36). It was fear that motivated the Assyrians' "rock" (their king) to flee back to Nineveh with his forces.

32:1-20 The description of a coming righteous king fit Hezekiah, but it would be an exaggeration to claim that features described in verses 15-20 were fulfilled in Hezekiah's time. The promise of God opening the eyes of the blind (v. 3; 35:5; 42:18), pouring out His Spirit (11:1), transforming nature (30:23-26), and inaugurating a new age of security and peace (2:2-4; 9:6; 28:12) are all associated with the time when the Messiah will reign in Zion. These features indicate the messianic thrust of this passage.

34:1-17 The prophet was one who had been admitted to the counsels of God, to whom the Lord had opened His heart. He saw that, while the Lord was grieved over His people's lack of trust in Him, He was equally incensed at the hostility pagan nations—in this instance, Edom—had displayed toward Zion (v. 8). Isaiah painted a vivid word picture of the wrath to come upon the enemies of Judah because of the Lord's anger. His poetic imagery extended even to cosmic phenomena ("the heavenly bodies will dissolve," v. 4). Once the Lord's sword had "drunk its fill in the heavens" (v. 5) it would move on to a "slaughter" in Edom, whose land would be "soaked with blood" (vv. 6-7). Isaiah drew on the mineral resources of the adjacent Dead Sea region to portray the land as "burning pitch" (v. 9). So great would be the devastation that Edom's territory itself would become barren, fit only for a catalog of desert creatures (vv. 11-15). Only such highly charged language could begin to hint at God's wrath in store for those who reject the truth (Rm 1:18; 2:5). New Testament writers (e.g., the book of Rv) borrow OT prophetic imagery of this sort to portray the destiny of sinful people and cultures. God loves the world (Jn 3:16) and, through Christ, has made it possible for those who have rejected His way to be reconciled to Him (2 Co 5:19). But persistent opposition to His program of redemption will eventuate in judgment, whether in the literal terms described in this passage or in some other, but no less devastating, form.

35:1-10 A shift of scene occurs here. The desert that Edom had become (34:8-15) was no longer in view; this passage was a poetic image of the wilderness of Judah coming to life again, with the return of "the ransomed of the Lord" to Zion (v. 10). Jerusalem did not fall during Isaiah's time, so a "return" did not occur then; therefore, many interpreters consider that, in this passage, Isaiah was looking ahead to the time of the Jews' return from exile in Babylon more than a century and a half later. Some commentators consider this passage the work of an inspired, but unnamed, disciple of Isaiah (his disciples were mentioned in 8:16) who wrote during the exile, though there is nothing here that specifically points to a later date of composition. Other interpreters view this passage as a picture of the time when God will establish His kingdom (2:2-4), and His people "will see the glory of the Lord" (35:2). The promise that "God Himself will be with them" (Rv 21:3) and "they will see His face" (Rv 22:4) is reinforced at the end of the NT; the same writer also affirmed that, in Christ, "we observed His glory" (Jn 1:14).

36:1 Chapters 36–39 duplicate 2 Kg 18:13–20:19, with variations. Isaiah 36:1 says that Sennacherib captured all the fortified cities of Judah, while verse 2 indicates that the fortified city of Jerusalem was not yet captured. The verb taphas means to "lay hold of, seize." Although Sennacherib's forces had surrounded Jerusalem and seized control of its surrounding territory, they never entered the city itself to capture it.

36:7 The Rabshakeh, Sennacherib's representative, claimed that Hezekiah had removed the high places (rural sanctuaries) and destroyed the altars of Yahweh. Being ignorant of the religious history of Canaan, he was unaware that the altars of the high places were pagan altars, not places where Yahweh was worshiped. Hezekiah had removed the high places (2 Kg 18:4) but had not destroyed altars of the Lord.

37:7,38 Isaiah's prediction of the elimination of Sennacherib by the sword did not have immediate fulfillment, but eventually two of his own sons killed him (v. 38). The Babylonian Chronicle records that this occurred about 20 years later, in 681 B.C., when Sennacherib's son Arad-ninlil assassinated him and Esarhaddon became king of Assyria.

37:9 Two historical problems exist in this verse: (1) Tirhakah did not become king of Egypt until 690 B.C., more than ten years later than this event; (2) Sennacherib's Assyrian records indicate a battle with the Egyptians at Eltekeh before the siege of Jerusalem, not after it started. It is true that Tirhakah was only the military commander of Egyptian forces in 701 B.C., but since he later became king the prophet refers to him by this better-known title. As to the second problem, possibly there was a second Egyptian conflict with the Assyrians; or perhaps Tirhakah threatened war, but the two armies never actually fought.

37:26,28 Some question whether God knows the future and doubt that He has planned what will happen in history. The Lord revealed to Isaiah the comforting news that all of Sennacherib's past and future actions were known and planned, so that He is sovereignly in control of history, not Sennacherib (vv. 24-25).

37:36 Some find the claim that 185,000 fighters died in one night unbelievable, particularly since it is unconfirmed by any Assyrian document. But it was standard practice for Assyrian rulers like Sennacherib to omit mention of embarrassing defeats in their annals. This was a large number of soldiers, so some prefer to interpret the word 'eleph not as a numeral but a term for a military unit, not necessarily equaling a thousand men in strength. Whatever the case, the incident was a clear demonstration of the Lord's power over the Assyrians.

38:1 The introductory phrase "in those days" was probably a general time marker covering the earlier reign of Hezekiah; verse 6 seems to indicate that Hezekiah's illness occurred shortly after Sennacherib's attack on Jerusalem, although the text had already narrated the Assyrian withdrawal (37:37). Isaiah's narrative followed the same order as 2 Kg.

38:1,5 The Lord's word to Hezekiah, that "you are about to die; you will not recover," was modified by His later word, "I am going to add 15 years to your life." It is not always easy in Scripture to distinguish between conditional and unconditional predictions or promises. However, Jr 18 indicates (as does the story of Jonah) that God will sometimes have compassion and not carry out His threats if people repent and intercede for divine mercy. A prophet's announcement of judgment was often intended to motivate people to avoid that judgment by correcting their disobedient behavior.

38:8 The text does not say that the sign involved the stopping of the sun or the interruption of the earth's rotation. The sign involved the reversing of the shadow on the sundial built onto the palace steps. No explanation is given for how this occurred. Today one can only speculate about a miraculous interference in the refraction of the sun's rays, or the introduction of a new source of light in a location different from that of the sun. Whatever the cause, that which seems physically impossible is not so for God.

38:21 Was Hezekiah's healing from this sickness real-ly a miracle or was it just the result of some common ancient medicinal practices? Both Isaiah and Hezekiah understood that it was the Lord who spared the king's life. The application of a common remedy to healthe skin did not undercut the miraculous nature of the deed any more than Jesus' application of mud on the eyes of the blind man (Jn 9:6) reduced the nature of that miracle.

39:1 This verse comes after the Assyrian threats against Jerusalem were resolved through God's miraculous defeat of the Assyrian army in chapters 36–37. The phrase "at that time" appears to place these events after 701 B.C., but Merodach-baladan was king only from 721–710 and 704–703 B.C., so a date after 701 is unlikely. Some suggest that Hezekiah's sickness should be dated as early as 711 B.C. while others maintain a date around 703 B.C. All that is certain is that the events of chapter 39 occurred after those related in chapter 38, for the letter and gift came after the Babylonian king heard that Hezekiah had recovered from his sickness. The same order of events occurs in 2 Kg.

39:7 The defeat of Judah and exile in Babylon took place in 605, 597, and 586 B.C., so how could Hezekiah's son go into exile? Manasseh, Hezekiah's son, was taken to Babylon (2 Ch 33:11), but the term "son" can also refer to grandsons and subsequent descendants.

39:8 Hezekiah seems to be saying that since God's judgment did not affect him personally, the future consequences for his actions were acceptable to him. Such an attitude seems self-centered and uncaring about those who would follow him. It is possible to take his words this way, but some interpreters understand them as Hezekiah's submissive and a reluctant acceptance of the long-term results of his mistake.

40:2 Some interpreters view Jerusalem's "time of servitude" that would end as the 70 years of the Babylonian exile, a century and a half after the time of Isaiah. Accordingly, they conclude that the following chapters were the work of one or more later disciples (8:16), whom critics sometimes call Deutero-Isaiah or Trito-Isaiah. Nevertheless, since Isaiah was a prophet, God could reveal to him that the nation's exile would end long before it occurred (see Am 3:7). On the other hand, the word tsava' can mean "warfare," a translation that relates the prophecy to the end of Sennacherib's attack on Judah.

40:3 The writers of the NT Gospels (Mt 3:3; Mk 1:3; Lk 3:4) connect these words with the ministry of John the Baptist. Isaiah saw a general picture of someone making preparation for the Lord's coming (v. 5), while Malachi later specified that this person would be "My messenger" (Mal 3:1). Although Isaiah and Malachi were not given the messenger's name, John the Baptist fulfilled the role in preparing the way for Jesus, the Son of God. The announcement that "all humanity will see" God's glory (v. 5) suggests that Isaiah was talking about an event of greater scope than the Jews' return from exile—that is, an event of universal significance for the coming of the kingdom of God.

40:3-11 Comparisons between Isaiah's call in these verses and in 6:1-8 have convinced some that another prophet, perhaps a later unnamed disciple of Isaiah (8:16), was here relating his call to proclaim the Lord's message. There are verbal similarities: a voice was calling (the seraphim in 6:3, unspecified in 40:3); all flesh would see the glory of the Lord, similar to His glory filling the earth (6:3; 40:5); and the "good news" (v. 9) reversed the terrible news in Isaiah's call (6:9-10). Although someone was instructed to speak "good news," this message was not contrary to what Isaiah had already spoken (2:2-5; 4:2-6; 9:1-7; 11:1-6; 14:1-3; 19:18-25; 32; 35). There is no indication that a different prophet was being called to ministry in this passage, and the oldest Isaiah manuscripts (from the Dead Sea Scrolls) show no break between chapters 39 and 40. Those who were summoned to proclaim the good news were the people of Zion and Jerusalem (v. 9), not a new prophet.

40:10-11 Isaiah depicted the salvation to come for Jerusalem with two metaphors for the Lord's action: the warrior-king bringing gifts to his people, and the shepherd who cares tenderly for his flock. This is not a mixed metaphor; in the ancient Near East kings were often compared to shepherds, a connection made in the original prophecy of David's enduring dynasty(2 Sm 7:7-8). The NT saw this prophecy realized in Jesus Christ, who is both the good shepherd (Jn 10:11-15) and the mighty warrior King (Rv 19:11-16).

40:12-26 In a passage celebrating the surpassing power and wisdom of the Creator God, Isaiah ridiculed man-made objects of worship (vv. 19-20). In pagan religions the idol was a symbol of a divinity—not the deity itself. The image stood for the mythological qualities and abilities of the "god" it was supposed to represent. In their critique of idolatrous religions, Israelite writers never mention that fact. Instead, as in this passage, they focus on the idol itself as a product of human artifice and imagination (see Ps 115:4-8; Is 41:7; 44:9-19; 46:1-2,6-7). It is a way of pointing out that the whole polytheistic religious system —like the block of stone or of wood overlaid with precious metal—is only a human creation. The sincerity of the idol-maker cannot make his religion valid, for no real divinity is behind it. Only the God who has revealed Himself in His creation, and His redemptive acts in the history of His people, is worthy of trust and worship.

40:22 Isaiah spoke of God who "is enthroned above the circle of the earth." Some commentators have cited this as evidence that biblical writers were aware that the earth is a globe, not a flat surface. While the shape of the planet was not Isaiah's concern here, his phrase is a reminder that modern critics should be cautious about ascribing a "primitive" or "pre-scientific" outlook to Scripture, as a way of discounting its relevance to contemporary cultures.

41:8-9 Although God's choice of one nation to be His special people may seem unfair to other nations, that choice came with the heavy responsibility for the people in that chosen nation to live holy lives and function as God's servants in this sinful world. It was through the seed of Abram that God would bless the rest of mankind (Gn 12:3). The people of Israel frequently failed to be God's servants, for they were not always faithful to His calling to be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation—one that would obey Him and keep His covenant (Ex 19:5-6). Israel's past failures did not nullify God's love (Dt 7:6-8), nor did His judgments for their disobedience nullify God's plans for His people.

41:14 Genesis 1:28 and Ps 8:5-8 present a picture of mankind as created in God's image and given charge of the management of the earth. Calling Jacob (Israel) a "worm" appears to negate humanity's exalted status. In this poetic context, the prophet was not stating that people are worthless; he was merely comparing a weak and fearful people to the glory and power of their holy God, who is able to redeem them. Some interpreters have suggested that "worm" was not a belittling expression, but a term of endearment.

41:17-20 On the surface, these words appear to promise a topographical transformation of the land, either of the Judean wilderness or the Arabian desert through which the returning exiles would travel. (Since no location is specified, Isaiah may have been speaking of a world transformed in the kingdom of God.) Warfare and depopulation turned much of the land of Palestine (ancient Israel and Judah) into unproductive wilderness, but—as modern Israeli reforestation and agriculture have demonstrated—the land is capable of greater productivity when well managed. Nevertheless, Isaiah may have been speaking metaphorically about the effect of the "water" of renewed worship of the Lord on the spiritual productivity of His people (cp. Ezk 47:1-12; Jn 4:10; 7:37-39; Rv 22:1-2).

41:22-26 The Lord gives insight to His prophets, who in His name are able to interpret the past and see into that which is to come. Israel's God has declared from the beginning what would happen. Other "gods" are powerless; they can neither describe the distant past nor predict the distant future. Those who choose to worship them are as "detestable" as they are (v. 24).

42:1-7 The chosen "Servant" was identified as Israel in 41:8; therefore, many commentators would identify Israel as the "Servant" in this passage also. There are similarities between God's servants as Isaiah described them, and the prophet may have been purposely leaving his hearers with some ambiguity (he was called to preach in such a way that they might not understand, 6:10). But in contrast to Israel, God's blind servant (42:19), this Servant will establish justice in the earth, a theme associated with the role of the Messiah (9:7; 11:3-5; 32:1). In addition, the role of this Servant does not fit what Israel did. In Mt 12:18-21 Jesus applied these words to Himself.

42:21 The future glorification of God's "instruction" in the law (torah) does not contradict NT reference to the limited value of the law of Moses (e.g., 1 Co 15:54; Gl 3:1-23). The instruction of God is not limited to what He revealed on Mount Sinai. In this context God's people were blind to what God said to them (Is 42:18-20), but in the future the righteousness and justice of God's way of dealing with people will be understood, as the deeper meaning of His instruction becomes clear (Mt 5:17-20). Even the NT upholds the "law of Christ" (Gl 6:2) and the "royal law" (Jms 2:8).

43:2 These promises were metaphors of God's protection and help as His people passed through times of difficulty. In the same way, God had helped their ancestors pass through the waters of the Red Sea when they were suffering oppression in Egypt.

43:3-4 There is no record of a time when God gave Egypt, Cush, and Seba as a ransom for Israel—and surely God does not need to pay off anyone to redeem His people. Some believe this verse referred to the Persian defeat of Egypt, but this occurred in the reign of Cambyses, after Cyrus had already decreed that the Israelites could return home (Ezr 1:1-3). This passage can be taken as a symbolic affirmation that, because of God's great love for His people (Is 43:4), He will do anything to redeem them.

43:11-13 The Lord offers a clear statement of His oneness; Judah has no other Savior, because He alone is God. The theme is reminiscent of the Ten Commandments: "I am the LORD your God . . . Do not have other gods besides Me" (Ex 20:2-3). Some critics have suggested that the Ten Commandments and the Sinai covenant were traditions associated more with northern Israel than with Judah. A passage of this type reveals how even a Judean prophet stood firmly on the covenant commandments given to Israel. Reference to the people as "witnesses" (see Jos 24:22) strengthens the association of this passage with covenant language.

43:14 Was this prophecy ever fulfilled? Since Cyrus was welcomed into Babylon without much resistance when he defeated the nation, why would the Persians need to take away defeated Babylonians as fugitives in ships? There is no record in the Bible or secular history of this taking place when Cyrus defeated Babylon, so one could: (1) take this as symbolic picture language of defeat that was applied to the future situation of Babylon; or (2) conclude that the prophet was predicting a different defeat of Babylon, not the Persian conquest of the area in 539 B.C.

43:20 While wild animals would not be aware of honoring God, Scripture in several places mentions them in connection with the created order's testimony to His greatness (e.g., Jb 38:39–39:30; 40:15–41:24; Ps 104:10-30; cp. the "living creatures" of Ezk 1:5-11; Rv 4:6-8).

43:23-24 It was not literally the case that the people never brought the Lord sacrifices; Isaiah had earlier indicated that, from the Lord's standpoint, they had brought too many (1:11-14). But a right sacrifice requires a pure heart, repentance of sin (see Mal 3:3), and devotion to the Lord alone (see Am 5:25), or it is no sacrifice. Isaiah was saying that, because these were lacking, all God saw in their sacrifice was their sin.

44:6-8 On the covenant associations of this passage, see 43:11-13.

44:9-19 Worshipers of idols bow down to artifacts of their own making because the Lord "has shut their eyes so they cannot see" (v. 18). Of course, the makers of images can see perfectly well to perform their craft; what they cannot "see" is its futility, because their idols represent false religious concepts. On the Lord's being responsible for their lack of understanding, see 6:9-10; on the OT critique of idols, see 40:12-26.

44:28–45:1 Because this prophecy refers expressly to the Persian ruler Cyrus, some interpreters argue for its composition by a later disciple of Isaiah (8:16) who was active at the time of the return from Babylonian exile. It is possible that God would give specific information about distant events to one of His prophets (40:2). This phenomenon is unusual in Scripture, but not unknown. Other instances in the Bible include the specific prophecy about Josiah more than 300 years before he was born (1 Kg 13:2) and the prophecy of the Messiah being born in the city of Bethlehem (Mc5:2-3).

45:1 Ordinarily the OT reserves the idea of being "anointed" for Israelite leaders—priests, kings, and prophets (Isaiah himself, 61:1). Anointing, however, was the Lord's commissioning for a special task. In this case Cyrus, though a pagan ruler, was "His anointed" for the purpose of releasing the Lord's servant people ("Jacob," v. 4) from exile.

45:7 The Hebrew word for "evil" (translated "disaster") represents natural calamity as well as moral evil. God, in His perfection, does nothing morally evil. But, since all events are subject to His control, He is ultimately responsible for all events in history and nature. Moral evil derives from the choices of human beings and angels.

45:15,19 The claim that God hides Himself is the opinion of the nations (v. 14) before their conversion. The Lord corrected their false understanding: "I have not spoken in secret" (v. 19). Warped worldviews and false beliefs cause people to misunderstand what is really happening in the events of history; God's activity is hidden from them and misunderstood until they are exposed to His word of truth.

45:20-23 Isaiah returned to his expression of the basic principles of Yahweh's covenant with Israel (43:11-13; 44:6-8). Here, he added the treaty-like aspect of swearing allegiance in the form of an oath and of bowing down in homage to the great King. Paul borrowed this language in speaking of Jesus' exaltation after His humiliation on the cross (Php 2:9-11). The affirmation of covenant loyalty and obedience is the fundamental theme of biblical worship.

46:1-2 History records that when Cyrus subjugated Babylon without a battle, the Babylonian people welcomed him because he reestablished their traditional worship of Marduk (Bel). When Isaiah spoke of the Babylonian gods' going into captivity, this should be seen as a general picture of defeated gods that could not protect Babylon; being subject to a foreign power, they were still in "captivity" even if not removed from the territory. In any case, the Babylonian deities eventually dropped from the scene.

47:6 For the Lord's chosen people, Israel and Judah, to be defeated might be taken as evidence that the Lord is powerless to protect His own, or even that He does not exist. In this passage, the Lord explains that He allowed the Babylonians to destroy them because He, Himself, was angry with them. In so doing He showed no approval of Babylon. That nation, steeped in pride and false religion, was not the judge of Judah but would itself be overthrown because of its sin. God, alone, controls the historical circumstance of His people and of all nations.

47:13 The tendency to look to astrology—interpreting the movements of heavenly bodies—for advice is a rejection of God's revelation in His Word. Astrology had a long history in Babylon; the Tower of Babel, "with its top in the sky" (Gn 11:4), may have been planned as an elevated map of the heavens for the purpose of seeking advice from the stars. Isaiah reaffirmed the biblical view, that prophecies and predictions based on astrology are useless (see Dt 4:19).

48:8 Isaiah used the metaphor of birth to describe Israel's rebellion against the Lord from its earliest days. His reference was to the complaining of the people soon after they left Egypt (Ex 15:24; 16:2; 17:2) and the sin of making the idolatrous golden calf at Mount Sinai (Ex 32). The prophet was not speaking of the Judeans as individuals, or suggesting that newborn infants can make moral choices.

49:1-7 In this passage, Isaiah seems to be using the word "servant" with several simultaneous meanings. Verse 3 identifies the servant with Israel (41:8; 44:1,21), which was called in Abraham to bring blessing to all nations (v. 6; cp. Gn 12:3). Yet this servant has been called, even before birth, to bring Israel back to God (v. 5); the prophet here spoke of his own role as the spokesman of the Lord (see Jr 1:5). Then, like the messianic Servant of Is 42:1-7, this servant will experience rejection and suffering, and in the end the servant will be honored (49:7). All these meanings overlap in Jesus Christ. As the Servant who suffers for the redemption of Israel, He is also a prophet seeking Israel's return to the Lord, and in His resurrection He incorporates the true, renewed Israel into Himself. In this sense, Isaiah's words here were a messianic prophecy. Nevertheless, in Ac 13:47 Paul and Barnabas applied Is 49:6 to themselves, as proclaimers of the gospel to the Gentiles.

49:19-21 Isaiah suggested that the land would be "too small for the inhabitants," with an abundance of children seeking land for themselves. Ezra 2 indicates that only about 50,000 people returned from the Babylonian exile, so the land of Palestine (Judah) was hardly overpopulated at that time. It is not clear from the context when Isaiah expected this prophecy to be fulfilled, but it need not apply exclusively to the period of the return from exile. The dramatic changes in nature and in people's hearts, and the inclusion of foreigners (vv. 22-23), suggest that this was a prophecy about some future fulfillment of the kingdom of God. Another possibility was the use of a dramatic, exaggerated word-picture on the prophet's part to underscore the certainty of the Lord's redemptive action in days to come.

49:26 In a vivid metaphor, God declared that He would cause Judah's oppressors to eat their own flesh and drink their own blood. The meaning seems to be that the oppressive, vile, and vicious enemies who slaughtered the people of Israel would end up expending their bloodthirsty savagery upon each other. This statement does not approve of brutality, cannibalism, or the drinking of blood. It was a graphic description of the destiny of Judah's enemies, intended to encourage those who were feeling hopeless.

50:1 The Lord asked His people, rhetorically, to produce the legal evidence that He had divorced them and sent them away; then He declared that they "were sold for [their] iniquities." This appears to be a contradiction, yet the context of the passage makes clear that any such breach of the covenant was not the Lord's purpose ("Do I have no power to deliver?" v. 2). The Lord demanded to be shown the hypothetical certificate in order to verify that it was not He who was to blame for this divorce; the separation was the result of Israel's own rebellion, acting as an unfaithful "wife."

50:4-11 As in 49:1-7, the prophet spoke of the servant of the Lord in language capable of more than one simultaneous interpretation. In verses 10-11, the servant could be viewed as the people of Israel who suffered by being sent into exile. Yet in the earlier verses, this servant's obedience stood in contrast to Israel ("I was not rebellious," v. 5), and the suffering is consistent with the picture of the "messianic" servant in 49:7 and 53:1-10. The description in verse 6 resembles what happened to Jesus during his crucifixion (Mt 26:67; 27:30).

51:3 The land of Israel, though capable of outstanding productivity when well managed and supplied with water, has never seen anything close to the fertile and lush topography ascribed to the Garden of Eden. This promise appears to apply not the period when the Jews' return from captivity in Babylon, but to a later time in the future fulfillment of the kingdom of God. A Christian interpretation must take into account that in the NT, the territory of Canaan had been replaced, as the inheritance of God's people, by the life of resurrection power (Eph 1:18-23), of which the Holy Spirit is the earnest or guarantee (Eph 1:14). This new life is the Edenic "restoration of all things" (Ac 3:21) which Christ brings; it will be experienced in "Zion," the assembly of Christian believers (Heb 12:22). Isaiah's words can be taken as a geographic description of a spiritual reality.

51:9-10 On references to ancient Near Eastern mythological monsters in the Bible, see note on 27:1.

51:22-23 The final line of verse 22 claims that the people of God will never drink the cup of God's fury again. History is filled with occasions when the Jews suffered greatly at their enemies' hands after the return from Babylonian exile, from the time of the Syrian ruler Antiochus IV Epiphanes (second century B.C.) onward. Christians, likewise, as "the Israel of God"(Gl 6:16), have seen repeated persecution. The prophetic statement can be viewed in several ways. (1) God was indicating that they would not drink any longer from the Babylonian cup of God's wrath, since He would remove that cup from their hands. (2) This promise could be seen as a promise for God's fulfillment of His kingdom. (3) The statement could be interpreted to mean that the Judeans did not need to drink from this cup again, implying that a close walk with God would prevent it from ever happening again. That, indeed, was the thrust of Jesus' warning, "Unless you repent, you will all perish" (Lk 13:3).

52:3 To be "sold for nothing" (see Ps 44:12) is an expression of the people's utter worthlessness, as to their ability to consistently obey the Lord. Isaiah used it to show the Lord's grace in redeeming them at no cost to themselves.

52:13–53:12 Some commentators have identified this servant with personified Israel, with Moses, or with one of the prophets who suffered (Jeremiah, or Isaiah himself). But the servant's acts of suffering were in behalf of God's sinful people, similar to His role in 42:1-7, 49:1-7, and 50:4-11. Philip, one of the seven (Ac 6:5), applied this prophecy to the death of Jesus in Ac 8:30-35, and that has been the usual Christian understanding of the passage. Isaiah's "suffering servant" concept has little or no follow-up in later Jewish interpretation; only the understanding that "God has made this Jesus, whom you crucified, both Lord and Messiah" (Ac 2:36) could bring clarity to these words.

52:13,15 If this passage refers to Jesus, when was He "greatly exalted," and when did kings "shut their mouths because of Him" or ever really understand who Jesus was? Jesus was not exalted during His earthly ministry, but after His death and resurrection He was exalted to the right hand of God (Mt 22:41-45; Ac 2:33-35; Php 2:9; Heb 1:3). Revelation calls Him "ruler of the kings of the earth" (Rv 1:5). Scripture often speaks "proleptically," or in anticipation, of things yet to be fulfilled.

53:3 In the Gospel narratives, Jesus was not "despised and rejected" by everyone; until the events just before His crucifixion He was regarded by many as a popular teacher and miracle worker, and even as the "Son of David" (Mk 10:47-48). It was the religious leaders of the community—the scribes, Pharisees, and priests—who, on the whole, despised Him (Mt 12:14; Mk 14:1; Jn 11:53) as well as those who beat and crucified Him (Mk 14:65; 15:15,19).

53:7 Jesus did not always remain silent before His accusers, for He did answer Pilate's questions (Mk 14:62; Lk 23:2; Jn 18:33-37). But Jesus was silent when the chief priest made accusations against Him (Mt 27:12-14; Mk 15:1-4) and His few words to Pilate did not refute His accusers. The silence was concerning those who would accuse Him (see 1 Pt 2:23).

53:9a Isaiah saw, in generalities, what would be more precisely revealed in the circumstances of Jesus' death. The two clauses of this half-verse should be understood as poetically parallel phrases, intended to suggest the same idea about the servant's death. In the view of the prophets of Israel, the rich were often equated withthe wicked. The authorities no doubt intended to dispose of Jesus' body in a common pit with criminals. But, though He died with "the wicked" (two brigands or revolutionaries, often erroneously called mere "thieves"), His burial was in the tomb of a rich man, Joseph of Arimathea (Mk 15:45-46).

53:9b The servant "had done no violence," although Jesus drove the money changers from the temple (Mt 21:12-13; Mk 11:15-18; Jn 2:14-16). The two clauses of this verse are in poetic parallel; the "violence" of the first line is defined as speaking "deceitfully" in the second. Jesus was stern with those who defiled the temple, but His words on that occasion—being a quotation, in fact, from the books of Is (Is 56:7) and Jr (Jr 7:11)—were anything but deceitful. But since the temple was a major financial institution under watchful Roman supervision, Jesus' disturbance of its activities was perceived as "violence" and a threat to an already unstable political situation. In Roman eyes it might have been enough to justify His execution, even without the accusations brought by the Jewish authorities.

53:10 Isaiah declared of the servant that the Lord "will prolong His days." Clearly, the servant of this passage was being persecuted to His death (v. 9). His days could be prolonged only through being raised from the dead. Isaiah's words describe the outcome of Jesus' passion, His vindication by the Father (Ac 2:23-24).

54:1-3 On the spread of the Judean population through the land of Israel, see note on 49:19-21.

55:8-9 The statement that God's ways and thoughts are different from those of human beings does not mean that people can never expect to understand anything about Him or follow His ways. He reveals what His people need to know to return to Him (vv. 6-7) and to obey Him (see Dt 29:29), and what He has in store for those who love Him (1 Co 2:9-10). The statement needs to be understood in the light of where Isaiah was carrying this thought: Unlike human ways and thoughts, God's will produce the results He desires in the restoration of His people (Is 55:12-13). It is through His word that He will accomplish His purpose; it will "return to Me" (v. 11). God's word does not coincide with human worldviews which are all off center. But when His people return God's word to Him, they are changed people. They have received God's word and it has done its work within them. It has transformed both heart and mind.

56:3-7 The Lord's word to Isaiah here in effect canceled the directives of Dt 23:1-8, which excluded eunuchs, Ammonites, and Moabites from the congregation of Israel. The law of Moses was given when Israel was about to occupy the land of Canaan, a time when strict separation from pagan religious practices and from anything symbolic of spiritual imperfection or rebellion against the Lord, was of highest priority. The law (torah) is "instruction" or "teaching," not legislation in the modern sense. It was given through a prophet, and while its commandments were in general "holy and just and good" (Rm 7:12) the Lord can reinterpret the specifics of the law through a word to a later prophet. (In the NT, Paul cited the book of Is as "the law," 1 Co 14:21.) What God originally sought of His people, through the law, was purity of heart and righteous behavior, Now, hundreds of years later, He graciously allows anyone who loves Him, regardless of physical or ethnic characteristics, to enter the temple and worship Him.

56:9-12 Isaiah leveled a general indictment of Judean political leaders (shepherds, v. 11) and religious leaders (watchmen, v. 10) as selfish, lazy, and greedy. Some interpreters consider these words a later prophet's criticism of corrupt leaders in the postexilic Jewish community. While Ezr 1–6 and the prophecies of Hg and Zch reveal that Zerubabbel the governor and Joshua the high priest were not the most effective leaders, their evaluations of them do not fit the accusations of this passage. This text is not sufficient evidence to support the "Trito-Isaiah" hypothesis of some modern commentators.

57:1-2 How can the righteous perish because of evil leaders in verse 1 and then the righteous be at peace in verse 2? Isaiah said that they were "swept away from the presence of evil." This change could refer to a future hope of peace when God establishes His kingdom (2:2-4;57:13,19), or to the peaceful sleep of death that the righteous will enjoy.

57:17-18 On the one hand God was angry and wanted to punish His people for their disobedience (v. 17), but on the other hand He wanted to heal and comfort them (v. 18). The prophet was sensitive to the "pathos" or deep feelings of the Lord; His people's rebellion grieved Him to the point that He spoke of judging them, yet because of His love for them He recoiled from that judgment (see Hs 11:1-9; Am 7:1-5). The context brings out that God's purpose was to revive His oppressed and humble people (Is 57:15), judge the wicked who did not repent (vv. 20-21), and transform and heal those who would return to Him through His grace (vv. 18-19). That God seemed to act alternately out of love and wrath reveals the extent to which He had revealed His "feelings" to the prophet.

58:1-8 The people who had been fasting questioned its value since it seemed to have brought no result (v. 3). In spite of their supposed "delight" to know God's ways (v. 2) and their desire for His righteous judgments, He had not responded. The prophet's explanation suggested that their fasting was a religious ritual that made no difference in how they conducted their lives; they continued to quarrel and to oppress the weaker members of their community (vv. 3-4). The "fast" the Lord wanted, and to which He would respond, was to deal with the inequities that had broken the solidarity of the covenant community (vv. 6-7). God is not to be coerced by rituals that seek to bend His will to that of the worshiper, as pagan rites were intended to do. He responds to heartfelt commitment to His purposes, as defined in the covenant. The law had said, "There will be no poor among you" (Dt 15:4).

59:1-3 The Bible encourages people to seek God in prayer, but also explains that some prayers go unheard because of barriers people erect (see 1 Pt 3:7). God does not listen to the prayers of sinful, unrepentant people (Is 59:2-3), because their trust is not truly in Him but in their own empty words (v. 4).

59:16 In context (vv. 1-15), the description of sinfulness in the land shows how depraved the nation had become and how far it had strayed from God. Isaiah did not excuse himself from this picture (6:5); "no man," not even the prophet, was standing up against injustice and ungodliness and interceding for the sinful community. The "man" God looked for, but did not find, could be (1) a righteous king like Hezekiah, (2) some other leader, besides Isaiah, who might respond to His messages through the prophet, or (3) no "man" at all, since the nation's problems were beyond human solution and God must bring salvation Himself (vv. 16-21).

60:1-3 It is difficult to see this passage as reflective of conditions in the postexilic era, as some interpreters hold. The period after the return from Babylon was not a time of great glory but of difficulty. The people struggled economically, and did not finish rebuilding the temple until about 22 years later (Ezr 1–6; Hg 1–2). The nations did not flow to Jerusalem; in fact, only a small group of Israelites returned from captivity in Babylon. Because of these factors, it is best to see this chapter as descriptive of eschatological (2:2-4; 14:1-3), rather than postexilic, events. The NT understands the coming of the "light" to be fulfilled in Jesus Christ and His followers (e.g., Mt 5:14; Lk 1:79; Jn 1:5; 3:19; 8:12; Ac 13:47; 26:23; 2 Co 4:6; 1 Th 5:5; 1 Jn 2:8-10; Rv 22:5). The popular tradition that the wise men from the East who visited the infant Jesus were kings riding camels probably owes its origin to verse 3, which mentions kings coming to the light, together with verse 6 which mentions caravans of camels carrying gold and frankincense. There is no mention of eastern kings or of camels in the Gospel text (Mt 2:1-12).

60:14 Bowing down, in the OT, was not necessarily a gesture of worshiping a deity; it was an act symbolizing respect and humility before a superior authority, which may have been a human agency. Bowing in worship was borrowed from secular practice, because the deity was a "king" or greater authority. For the descendants of Judah's oppressors to bow to the Judeans would not be worship. It will be the recognition that those who are faithful to God, whom their enemies had dishonored or afflicted, had now been vindicated. Further, those who come to submit to God's people are fundamentally coming to God's light (vv. 1-2), coming to honor the Lord with the tribute due a King (vv. 6,9). They are really submitting to God, for Zion is His holy city.

60:16 In a metaphor for receiving sustenance and support from a nurturing authority, Isaiah spoke of God's people nursing on "the milk of nations" and "the breast of kings." The help the people will receive was compared to the care of a nursing mother, even if the kings and their regimes were not feminine. Whereas kings and foreign nations formerly destroyed God's people, one day they will look out for their needs. It is possible to see some historical fulfillment in the provisions Cyrus, and other Medo-Persian rulers, made for the community of returned Jews.

60:19-20 Taking this expression literally, Isaiah would be picturing a major disruption of the solar system in which life on the planet would not survive. The sun, moon, and other heavenly bodies often have a symbolic function in Scripture. Isaiah was comparing God's light and the light of these bodies; their radiance, in the physical sense, cannot compare with the holy radiance of the presence of the Lord. The same thought recurs in the Bible's final pages, where the Jerusalem from heaven is illuminated not by the sun and moon but by "God's glory" (Rv 21:23). Isaiah was looking ahead to that time.

61:1-3 This song has many similarities to other "servant songs," though it does not use the word "servant." The one spoken of here and in 42:1 were both filled with the Spirit to bring a message of hope, justice, and restoration (42:7; 49:6; 11:2-5). It is not necessary to attribute this passage to a hypothetical "Trito-Isaiah," as do some commentators. Jesus took this passage as referring to Himself in a declaration that "the year of the Lord's favor" had finally arrived (Lk 4:16-21).

62:6-7 Isaiah used a figure of speech calling on the city's watchmen to remind the Lord of His promise to restore Jerusalem. It was a poet's colorful way of communicating the assurance that God would never forget to do what He had promised. Jesus used similar literary devices. Although He taught that the Father knows our needs before we ask Him (Mt 6:8), He still told a parable comparing God to a judge who grants a widow' pleading because of her persistence (Lk 18:1-8). Such comparisons in the Bible are not intended to answer questions about the nature of God, apart from His relationship with His people; they are given for the purpose of encouraging faith in God as it operates at the human level.

63:1-6 If God is a God of love (1 Jn 4:8,16), it seems out of character for Him to express such anger and wrath against people, in this case the Edomites. In raising this issue, what tends to be overlooked is what the Bible means by "love." In Scripture this is a covenant-related concept; God's love (Hb hesed is the most important word for it) is His faithfulness to a relationship He has granted to those who have pledged themselves to Him. The NT concept of agape love depends on this covenantal idea (e.g., 1 Jn

4:20-21). God loves His world in a general way (Jn 3:16) but His faithful love extends especially toward those who belong to His covenant; because of His faithfulness to them, His judgment falls upon their enemies. Edom was a long-term enemy of Israel, and all such enemies (Edom represents them here) need to know that God's wrath is real and will come upon those who reject His truth and stubbornly refuse to repent (see Rm 2:5). God's anger flares precisely because of His love, not in spite of it.

63:9 Interpreters have had difficulty with the idea that God suffers, which seems to contradict His divinity. The Hebrew text is difficult, so several solutions have arisen. (1) The written Hebrew text has "He did not (lo') afflict." (2) The Targum (Aramaic translation) has "He did not (lo') afflict him/them." (3) The Hebrew text was read, with a marginal scribal note, to say "there was affliction for him (lo')" (HCSB follows this reading). This refers not to the suffering of the Servant of the Lord (chap. 53) but to God's own tender identification with His people's troubles and sorrows during their oppressive slavery in Egypt (Ex 2:22-25; 3:7; 6:5). The Lord cares for His people, and the prophet was sensitive to His grief when they suffer.

63:10 Jesus told His disciples that the Holy Spirit would be given after He left them in bodily form (Jn 14:16; 15:26; 16:7-13) and promised a special outpouring of the Spirit that was fulfilled at Pentecost (Ac 2). This does not mean the Holy Spirit was inactive before that time. The NT mentions His activity in relation to John the Baptist before his birth (Lk 1:15), Mary's virginal conception of Jesus (Mt 1:18), Zechariah's prophecy (Lk 1:67) and the song of Simeon (Lk 2:25). Jesus' ministry was a ministry of the Holy Spirit from His baptism onward (Mt 3:16; Lk 4:18; Ac 10:38). In the OT, Bezalel was given the ability to make the tabernacle through the Spirit (Ex 31:3), the Spirit caused Balaam to prophesy good things for Israel (Nm 24:2), and Samuel anointed David to be king and he was filled with the Spirit (1 Sm 16:13). The Spirit of God was active throughout the OT period, even from the creation (Gn 1:2), though there is a limited amount of revelation about His work in OT texts.

63:11,14 The account of the exodus contains no reference to the Holy Spirit under that name, but apparently Isaiah understood the "Angel of God" (Ex 13:21; 14:19) who was in the pillar of fire and cloud to be the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit that guided them may refer to the "Angel" that went before them (Ex 23:20; 32:34; 33:2); the Angel was identical to "My presence" (Ex 33:14). Paul stated, expressly, that "the Lord is the Spirit" (2 Co 3:17), so such exchange of terminology should not be considered problematic.

63:17 Isaiah apparently quoted a prayer of the people—or ascribed it to them as a literary device—who complained that the Lord caused them to stray and hardened their hearts. It is possible to interpret this complaint in several ways: (1) God eventually hardens the hearts of those who continually reject Him through their own choice (see 6:9-10). (2) The people, in their prayer, were inappropriately blaming God rather than taking responsibility for their poor choices. (3) The verb could be translated in a tolerative sense, "Why do you allow us to stray?" rather than in a causative sense. God gives people freedom to obey or disobey Him; when humans choose to ignore Him and run counter to His directives, it is not primarily God's doing. But God may eventually give them over to their own sinful inclinations simply by withdrawing His hand from the situation (Rm 1:18-25).

64:6 Isaiah strikingly compared the "righteous acts" of the people to a "polluted garment"; that is, a cloth used by women to receive their menstrual discharge. Ritual uncleanness kept a person from entering the place of worship or from beholding the face of the Lord (cp. "You have hidden Your face from us," v. 7). Even despicable human beings can do a few good things for people they care about, but God does not look on their good deeds with favor because their motivation is corrupt and self-centered. In this passage, the people were confessing their sins, admitting they did not listen to God (v. 4) or call on his name (v. 7). They realized that the good things they did—their own righteousness—could never compare with the righteousness of a holy God, which is infinitely greater.

65:5 God wants people to be holy, separated from evil and dedicated to Him, but these people who claimed to be holy were involved with pagan religious practices (vv. 3-4,7). They considered themselves holier than others. In reality, however, they were not separated from falsehood and dedicated to the Lord, but dedicated to pagan practices and separated from the true worship of the Lord.

65:17-25 Isaiah presented a word picture of the restoration of God's creation, with some features drawn from the Bible's description of conditions in Eden and humanity's early history—long lifetimes, animals living together without being carnivorous (Gn 1:30; cp. 2:19), the serpent crawling in the dust (Gn 3:14). At the same time, the prophet incorporated terminology from Israel's covenant structure. He referred to a new heaven and a new earth—the witnesses to the covenant (Dt 4:26; 30:19; 31:28).

He described the undoing of the covenant curses—such as building a house but never living in it (Dt 28:30), planting vineyards but not enjoying the fruit (Dt 28:39), begetting children who will be taken as prisoners (Dt 28:41). This renewal of both creation and covenant centers in Jerusalem, to be created anew (Is 65:18), the site of God's "holy mountain" (v. 25). Elements of Isaiah's vision for the future are taken up in the NT, especially in the description of the Jerusalem from heaven, as "a new heaven and a new earth" (Rv 21:1-2).

66:21 According to the law, only Israelites could serve in the temple, but Isaiah envisioned people from a list of pagan nations (v. 19) becoming priests and Levites in the Lord's house. These people could be understood as faithful Israelites who had lived dispersed among the nations for many years (see Ac 2:5-11). More likely, Isaiah saw God giving the non-Israelites in His kingdom equality with Israelite believers. That is certainly what the apostles believed and taught in the NT; Paul celebrated how Christ has broken down the division between Jew and non-Jew (Eph 2:13-16), who together make up the new temple of the Lord (Eph 2:19-21). Just as God took the Levites from among the Israelites and gave them as gifts to the Israelites (Nm 8:6-19; 18:6) so God will choose non-Israelite believers in the future, taking them "into captivity" in Christ (see Eph 4:7-8).

Jeremiah Articles

How Does Christianity Relate to the Baha'i Faith?

by Douglas R. Groothuis

The Baha'i religion began when a Persian man calling himself Baha'u'lah (Arabic for "the glory of God") declared in 1863 that he was the latest revelation of God. Indeed, today several million Baha'is worldwide believe that Baha'u'lah (1817–1892) was the latest in a long line of "manifestations" of God and that he fulfilled prophecies from the world's religions, including the biblical prophecies concerning the second coming of Christ.

Baha'is assert the unknowability and oneness of God, the unity of all religions, the unity of humanity, and the unity of science and religion. They believe that Baha'is will eventually lead the world into a state of global harmony. Baha'is claim that all major religions were inspired by God and that they develop in a progressive manner. Baha'u'lah, they say, will not be succeeded by another manifestation until a thousand years after his death.

The Baha'i religion, despite its lofty goals, is incompatible with biblical Christianity and lacks evidence to support its claims. All religions cannot be from God, since they contradict each other on essential truth claims. The teachings of Buddha, for example, exclude a personal God. But Judaism, Christianity, and Islam all believe in a personal deity. Baha'is attempt to account for these discrepancies in two ways.

First, they claim that religious truth is relative to historical periods. This argument fails because it makes God unable to reveal even the most basic divine truths consistently. Moreover, if God is unknowable, as Baha'is claim, then there is no basis for any divine revelation (knowledge), Baha'i or otherwise.

Second, they argue that the original teachings of the world religions (except the Baha'i religion) have been corrupted. For example, Christianity never taught that Jesus was uniquely divine and that He physically rose from the dead. These were later distortions. Baha'is deny these well-attested facts because the facts would place Jesus in a position far beyond what Baha'is allows for a manifestation of God (Rm 1:4; 1 Tm 2:5). But neither history nor logic supports these revisionist claims.

Christians should challenge Baha'is to read the New Testament for themselves and to investigate the many reasons for its reliability. They should also challenge Baha'is to consider that their doctrine of the progressive unity of all religions has no logical or factual basis and can be held only on the purported authority of Baha'u'lah, who, unlike the resurrected Jesus, died and remains dead.

How Has Archaeology Corroborated the Bible?

by Walter C. Kaiser Jr.

The past century or so has witnessed some of the most remarkable archaeological discoveries of the Christian era. No single discipline has contributed as much as archaeology to the interpretation and delight of reading the Bible.

However, the discipline has had its embarrassing moments as well. For example, in 1929 Sir Leonard Wooley declared while excavating in Mesopotamia, "I have found the flood!" Unfortunately for him and for the discipline of archaeology, there were embarrassed faces when other layers of flood sediment turned up at various strata throughout the area. Others have claimed to have found the location of the garden of Eden, the ark of the covenant and the like, but such claims must not be confused with real and legitimate discoveries throughout the ancient Near East.

The real role of archaeology is not to "prove" the Bible, for that kind of "proof" is available only in certain deductive sciences such as mathematics and logic. On the contrary, the role of archaeology is: (1) to supply cultural, epigraphic, and artifactual materials that provide the background for accurately interpreting the Bible,
(2) to anchor the events of the biblical text in the history and geography of the times, and (3) to build confidence in the revelation of God where the truths of Scripture impinge on historical events.

Over the last century or so, archaeology has strengthened the case for biblical reliability. Missing individuals, peoples, places, and obscure customs, historical, and political settings have been helpfully identified.

Missing Individuals

It had been fashionable in some circles for many years to ridicule Isaiah 20:1 for its allusion to "Sargon king of Assyria." Excavations of Nineveh had seemingly revealed all the kings of Assyria, but there was no Sargon. The Bible must have gotten it wrong. However, in 1843, Paul Emile Botta found a virgin site northeast of Nineveh, later excavated by the University of Chicago with details published in the 1930s. Sargon had built his own capital there in 717 B.C. His son, however, moved the capital back to Nineveh, so the site was lost as was Sargon's name. Now Sargon is one of the best known Assyrian monarchs.

Likewise, the Bible contended that King Belshazzar was the final ruler of Babylon (Dn 5:1,30), but until A.D. 1929 the extra-biblical evidence pointed to Nabonidus as king at the fall of Babylon in 539 B.C. This apparent conflict was solved when documents were discovered revealing that Nabonidus spent his time in Arabia, leaving the affairs of the kingdom to his eldest son Belshazzar, who reigned as co-regent for a decade or so.

Discoveries of other biblical names have confirmed biblical reliability, including King Jehoiachin's presence in Babylon, Sanballat as governor of Samaria along with some of Nehemiah's adversaries such as Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arab (Neh 2:19). Other discoveries confirm well-known biblical individuals such as Balaam, David, Ahab, Jehu, Hezekiah, Menahem and others.

Missing Peoples

Until Hugo Winckler discovered the Hittite Empire in 1906, many unbelievers doubted the Bible's insistence that the Hittites were part of the land of Canaan (Gn 10:15; Jos 1:4). Now they are so well documented that a score of volumes has been necessary to build a Hittite dictionary based on the tablets left in their civilization.

Another mystery group were the Horites, descendants of Esau from Edom (Gn 36:20; Dt 2:12,22). But in 1995 Giorgio Buccellati discovered the Horite capital city beneath the modern Syrian city of Tell Mozan.

Missing Places

First Kings 9:28 claimed King Solomon brought back 16 tons of gold from Ophir. But where was Ophir and did it really exist? In 1956 at Tell Qasile in Israel, broken pottery was found with an inscription referring to a shipment of "gold of Ophir for Beth-Horon, thirty shekels." Thus, Ophir was confirmed as known in the world of commerce with its trade in gold. Ophir is identified today as a port some 60 miles north of Bombay.

Another example is the disputed list of sites along the route of the exodus in Numbers 33. But Charles Krahmalkov noted three ancient Egyptian maps of the road from Arabah to the Plains of Moab, with the earliest of the three maps inscribed on the walls of Karnak in the reign of Thutmosis III (c. 1504–1450 B.C.). According to this list, the route from south to north follows precisely the way the Israelites listed in Numbers 33 with four stations especially noted: Iyyim, Dibon, Abel, and Jordan.

Other Sensational Finds

Discovered by Grenfeld in Egypt in 1920, the "John Rylands Papyrus" yielded the oldest known fragment of a NT manuscript. This small scrap from John's Gospel (Jn 18:31-33,37-38) was dated by papyrologists to 125 A.D., but since it was so far south into Egypt, it successfully put an end to the then-popular attempt to late-date John's Gospel to the second century rather than to the traditional first century date of A.D. 85–90.

The Dead Sea Scrolls, found in 1948 in caves at Qumran, near the northwest end of the Dead Sea, gave us some 800 manuscripts of every book (in part or the whole) of the OT except for Esther. Prior to that, the earliest Hebrew texts dated to around A.D. 1000, but the scrolls at Qumran are generally more than one thousand years older! These Hebrew texts illustrate that a thousand years of copying had provided us with an amazingly pure text, with one of the best examples being the book of Isaiah where only three words had slight modifications.

In 1990, a bone chest was discovered accidentally during work in Jerusalem's Peace Forest. This "Caiaphas Ossuary" belonged to the high priest from A.D. 18–36 (see his cynical words in Jn 11:49-53). The inscription, found in two places, read: "Caiaphas" and "Joseph, son of Caiaphas." First-century Jewish historian Josephus provided the full name, "Joseph, who is called Caiaphas of the high priesthood."

Space precludes discussion of the many more archaeological corroborations, such as the Pontius Pilate Inscription, the Pool of Siloam excavated in 2004, and the amazing Ketef Hinnom Amulets discovered in 1979 (with inscriptions of Nm 6:24-26 and Dt 7:9 perfectly matching the biblical Hebrew text—amazing since these seventh to sixth century B.C. amulets contain OT texts skeptics argued could not have been written until the 400s B.C.).

Archaeology, then, has illuminated and corroborated the Bible in numerous ways. The interpreter finds in archaeology a good friend for understanding and substantiating Scripture.

Introduction to Jeremiah

AUTHOR

Jeremiah is the second longest book of the Bible, next to the Psalms. It is the only book of the OT that tells us some details of its origin. According to 36:1-26, Baruch had written a first version at the dictation of Jeremiah. The scroll was read first in public and then again for the state officials and for the king. Because the words in the scroll angered the King Jehoiakim, he cut up the scroll and burnt it piece by piece. Jeremiah therefore dictated a second and enlarged edition of the first book to Baruch (36:32). Additional references to Jeremiah's own writing activity (30:2; 51:60; cp. 25:13) suggest that the scroll of 36:32 is not identical to the present form of the biblical book. Third person references to Jeremiah after chapter 25 suggest that perhaps the scroll of 36:32 may be confined to chapters 1–25.

STRUCTURE AND CONTENT

Biblical scholars have struggled to explain the arrangement of Jeremiah's prophecies. The book is not arranged chronologically as a whole, although some chronological arrangement is apparent. No theory has achieved a consensus, but various devices (such as theme, style, audience, and rhetoric) are summoned to explain certain connections. The book is often considered an anthology of prophetic units that were collected and combined at various times with little intentionality.

A useful proposal recently made by Richard Patterson is that the prophecies were arranged according to the prophet's divine call to be a prophet to the nations (1:4-19) and to Judah in particular (1:13-19). He identifies a twofold structure to the book that reverses those emphases: chapters 2–24 focus on Jeremiah and his people; chapters 25–51 focus on Jeremiah and the nations. On either end are the description of the prophetic call and commission in chapter 1 and the historical appendix in chapter 52. The two main sections each begin with a subsection that sets forth the theme (2:1–3:5 and 25:1-38), followed by a subsection that develops the theme (3:6–23:40 and 26:1–51:58), and concluding with a sign (24:1-10 and 51:59-64).

The so-called confessions of Jeremiah (11:18-23; 12:1-4; 15:10-21; 17:14-18; 18:19-23; 20:7-18) are scattered through chapters 11–20. Oracles of hope (chaps. 30–31) interrupt the stories about Jeremiah (chaps. 26–45). Words against kings (21:11–22:30) and against prophets (23:9-40) appear to be independent collections.

TEXT OF THE BOOK

The earliest Greek version of Jeremiah, dating back to pre-Christian centuries, is more than 12.5 percent shorter than the Hebrew text (although it adds about a hundred verses not found in the Hebrew). Only a few longer sections are missing (33:14-26; 39:4-13). The Greek text rather uses less titles and epithets, and single words and verses are missing throughout the book. More than 2,700 words of the Hebrew text do not have Greek equivalents. Fragments of Hebrew manuscripts from Qumran show that a longer and a shorter Hebrew text existed side-by-side in the time of Jesus.

THE RELIABILITY OF JEREMIAH

It is common these days for critical scholars to dismiss the idea that God might speak directly to someone. They consider prophetic utterances to be mere literary devices, and they assume predictions are impossible. They don't even consider the possibility that what Jeremiah had to say might be true.

Such accusations, however, are nothing new. Jeremiah himself faced significant opposition during his time as a prophet of God, and he saw little or no fruit for any of his labors. His words were discounted by everyone almost as soon as he said them. And yet, despite everything, he persisted in his ministry.

Jeremiah strongly believed that he was delivering a message from God (1:2-3; 2:5; 34:1). When he was imprisoned (32:2; 37:15) and even threatened with death (26:8), he did not recant his prophecies nor reverse his claim that they were messages from God (26:12). A man may be willing to die for something he mistakenly thinks is true, but one will seldom die for something he knows to be a sham. Jeremiah was in a unique position to know whether or not his words were a revelation from God. Given the way he lived his life in the face of such opposition, we can be sure that these words are not the rantings of a madman.

The words about Jeremiah's call to ministry—"I chose you before I formed you in the womb; I set you apart before you were born. I appointed you a prophet to the nations" (1:5)—have caused some to think that the date of Jeremiah's call and birth is one and the same. However, this is not likely to have been the case. The plain sense of the text is that God was thinking about Jeremiah and planning his life before he was born, and He had already designated Jeremiah as a prophet, but Jeremiah's commissioning took place when he was "a youth" (see v. 6; this Hb word most commonly refers to men in their teens). The important points to note are that God alone chose Jeremiah and that God spoke through His chosen prophet.

Jeremiah Study Notes

1:1-3 This introduction is in the third person and mentions the beginning and end of Jeremiah's ministry. It was probably written by the later compiler of the book. That would not diminish the authority of this paragraph as part of the inspired word of God. The book of Jeremiah was both inspired and inerrant in its final, canonical form as Baruch or others wrote it, whether under Jeremiah's direct oversight or subsequently. For other third-person references to authors within their books written mostly in the first person, see Dt 1:1-5; 34:5-12; Ec 12:9-10; Am 7:12,14. Other biblical authors refer to disciples or scribes who actually wrote, or preserved, their words (Is 8:16; Rm 16:22).

1:5 This passage could be understood to mean that God interacted with Jeremiah before he was born (see Ps 139:16) as an affirmation of the personhood of the pre-born. More likely, it means that God determined to make Jeremiah His spokesman before he ever existed, and brought about that design after he was born. These words can also be taken as Jeremiah's expression of the fact that he could never get away from his calling as a prophet—it was "inborn" in him—even though he sometimes wanted to (20:6-9,14-18).

2:11 The Bible occasionally refers to the gods of pagan peoples, but it is clear that they are not really gods, only images or idols (Dt 32:21; Ps 96:5; 115:4-8; Is 40:12-26; 41:7; 44:9-19; 46:1-2,6-7; Jr 10:5,14; 1 Co 8:5; 2 Th 2:4). In spite of this, Jeremiah was contrasting the loyalty of other nations to their false deities with the Israelites' lack of loyalty to the true God. On other "gods" in the Bible, see Ps 82:1,6.

3:1 Jeremiah referred to the provision in the law of Moses that forbids a man from taking back a wife he has divorced if she has married another man in the interim (Dt 24:1-3). His question implied that Israel (the "wife") was asking to return to the Lord (her first "husband") after being espoused to false gods. But the first husband, in such a case, would not be likely to take the wife back. This passage does not issue a teaching about divorce and remarriage, but is using the Mosaic instruction to make a point about Israel's status with the Lord.

3:7 The Lord's rhetorical question did not imply that He lacked foreknowledge of Israel's refusal to return. God knows when people will refuse to repent (see Ex 4:21). His question simply built on the question of verse 1. For God to speak to Himself is a literary device found elsewhere in Scripture, from Gn onward ("Let Us make man in Our image," Gn 1:26).

3:18 The kingdom of Israel had fallen to the Assyrians a century and a half earlier, yet Jeremiah's prophecy referred to the "house of Israel" as a current entity although only the kingdom of Judah remained at the time. "Israel" is the name for the covenant community of the Lord, which includes Judah; its use for the northern kingdom, as a political entity, was a secondary application. The prophet was concerned with his people as a religious community, so he used the name Israel. An additional factor is that Josiah had restored to Judah much of the territory that had formerly been part of northern Israel, so the kingdom's extent had come to approximate that of David and Solomon's united Israel.

3:19-20 The Lord's words suggest that His plans for Israel did not materialize as He expected because the people turned from Him. A totally programmed response of obedience from His people would have brought Him no honor or pleasure; God "took the risk" of allowing them a choice, as He did in creation with man and woman in the garden. Scripture looks at the question of humanity's response to God realistically, from the human side of the equation. To ask whether God could have ordered events differently, compelling Israel to remain loyal, is to introduce a hypothetical concern foreign to the biblical perspective. On "I thought," see note on verse 7.

4:2 Some people believe the Bible forbids the taking of oaths. Scripture permits oaths in certain cases and explains how they should be taken (Dt 6:13; 10:20). Paul often emphasized his statements with oaths (Rm 1:9; 2 Co 1:23; Gl 1:20; Php 1:8; 1 Tm 5:21; 2 Tm 2:14; 4:1). The Bible does warn against misuse and abuse of oaths, however. Some passages caution against taking oaths because, once uttered, they cannot be taken back (Lv 19:12; Nm 30; Dt 23:21-23; Pr 20:25; Ec 5:4-5), but these texts do not prohibit oaths entirely. Jesus dismissed the idea that different oaths carry different standards for truthfulness (Mt 23:16-22); no believer should have to swear an oath to authenticate his or her truthful testimony (Mt 5:33-37; cp. Jms 5:12). Here Jeremiah declared that the Lord is to be the only God in the hearts and minds of the people. He does not want them to turn to other gods for any reason: for inquiry (2 Kg 1:3), for prayer (1 Kg 8:48; Is 45:20), or for oaths.

4:10 See note on 6:21.

4:28 God said He would not relent in His devastating judgment, but later in the prophecy (26:3; 42:10) He indicated a willingness to relent if the people would return to Him. Where God's own people are concerned, the prophetic announcement of God's judgment is always conditional; upon their genuine repentance, He will relent. Here this possibility of forgiveness is raised in 5:1.

5:1 The Lord promised to forgive Jerusalem if the prophet could find one faithful person in the city. The terms are reminiscent of those given to Abraham in the case of Sodom (Gn 18:32), when ten righteous people would have spared the city. Jerusalem was given more generous terms yet could not meet them.

5:22 Some commentators hold that the Lord restraining the sea was an idea borrowed from ancient Near Eastern mythology. According to this view, the Jews adapted a Babylonian myth about the god Marduk's defeat of the chaotic sea-god Tiamat, incorporating it into the Hebrew monotheistic perspective. This theory presupposes that the Babylonian story is older than the biblical account of the creation of the world by the one true God. It is more probable that the biblical account was originally widely known, passed down orally from generation to generation in many cultures. Eventually, through the guidance of the Holy Spirit, Israel committed the account to writing and it became Scripture, but in other cultures it became distorted, under Satanic influence, into pagan myths. The narratives have points of similarity, but the biblical version preserves the original.

5:30-31 Jeremiah saw a "terrible thing" in the land. The sources of divine revelation had become corrupted; neither prophets nor priests were giving words that come from the Lord, but only their own ideas. Even worse, the people liked it that way and shared in the guilt of their leaders. They would have no recourse when the Lord's judgment came "at the end of it" (6:16-17; 29:31-32; see note on Lm 1:5).

6:6 God commanded Jerusalem's attackers to cut down trees to build siege works. In Dt 20:19, He commanded that trees not be cut down during a siege, but Dt 20:20 makes it clear that this applied to fruit trees; others could be used to construct siege works. In any case, the directive of Dt was addressed to Israel, not to her enemies.

6:20 In the Pentateuch, the Lord gave instructions for sacrifices and offerings, but in other places He said that sacrifices and offerings were not pleasing or acceptable (see Is 1:11-15). The consistent teaching of Scripture is that nothing done to please God —whether deeds of right living or acts of worship—is effective unless it is motivated by genuine faith (Rm 9:31-32; Eph 2:8-10; Heb 11:6; Jms 2:22). In 1 Sm 15:22-23 Samuel explained that the Lord had rejected Saul, in spite of Saul's offering, because what was most important to the Lord was heartfelt obedience and paying attention to Him—the opposite of rebellion and rejection. David, confessing his sin with Bathsheba, acknowledged that burnt offerings would not please God unless a humbled heart preceded them (Ps 51:16-19; cp. Hs 6:6; Mc 6:6-8).

God did not request the offerings mentioned here because He needed spices or food. God does not need anything people can supply (Ps 50:9,12; Ac 17:24-25) since He has made all things to begin with. He prescribed sacrifices as a means through which His people could publicly demonstrate and commemorate their faith and trust in Him. But the OT sacrificial system did no good for those who merely went through its motions without exercising faith (Heb 10:4). In the same way, Christ's sacrifice does not benefit those who make a pretense of being Christians (2 Tm 3:5) but do not come to Him in faith.

6:21 The Lord said He would place "stumbling blocks" before the people, a metaphor for situations in which they were likely to choose an unwise course of action with damaging consequences. When God places stumbling blocks, deceives (4:10; 10:7; 2 Th 2:11), or sends false prophets (1 Kg 22:19-23), He is merely letting people follow their own disobedient inclinations, even though He has clearly revealed His will for them. If we stumble, it is our own fault; if we do not, it is because in His mercy God has kept us from unwise choices. Jerusalem had, in effect, rejected God and His mercy, so God announced He would withhold His sustaining mercy and allow Judah to fall.

7:1-11 Jeremiah was preaching in the temple, countering Judah's false trust that its religious institutions would protect it from defeat (v. 4). The people's words were deceptive because, while they professed loyalty to the Lord, they were violating His covenant. The prophet referred specifically to several of the Ten Commandments (v. 9), and pointed out the disparity between the people's professed loyalty to the Lord and their disregard for His commands. Jesus quoted Jeremiah's words (v. 11) when He cleansed the temple (Mt 21:13; Mk 11:17; Lk 19:46).

7:16 Jeremiah was told not to pray for the people. This is not a generalized command that leaders should refrain from intercessory prayer for those committed to their charge. The Lord was telling Jeremiah that it was too late for Judah in this particular situation; judgment was at hand (v. 20). God knew their hearts and saw that they would not repent (v. 27). Under normal circumstances it is right for a spiritual leader to pray for his people (29:7; see also 1 Sm 12:23; Dn 9; 2 Co 13:9; Eph 1:17).

7:21-23 It was not literally the case that the Lord said nothing about sacrifices and offerings when He brought Israel out of Egypt; His words here were meant as sarcasm. At Mount Sinai, God did prescribe the method for sacrificing to Him. Jeremiah's point was that He did not request sacrifice for its own sake (see Hs 6:6) but as a sign of a deeper relationship that involved a total walk in the ways of God. Verse 23 repeats the summary of God's covenant agreement with His people that occurs frequently in Scripture (Ex 6:7; Dt 29:13; Jr 31:1,33; Ezk 11:20; 13:11; 36:28; 37:23,27; Heb 8:10; Rv 21:3). The people had broken this agreement. See note on 6:20.

10:5 On the Israelite prophets' critique of the worship of other "gods," see Is 40:12-26; Jr 2:11.

10:11 This verse is in Aramaic, the language the Jews adopted after the Babylonian exile. Portions of other OT books (Ezr 4:8–6:18, 7:12-26; Dn 2:4b–7:28) are in Aramaic, but this is the only example of a single Aramaic verse in an otherwise Hebrew book. Critical scholars suggest that an editor added this verse. If so, it would not invalidate this passage as part of the canon of Scripture; editors and compilers also worked under the Holy Spirit's guidance (see note on 1:1-3). Other possible examples of editorial additions include Nm 12:3; Ru 4:7; 1 Sm 9:9; Mk 7:19; Rm 16:22.

10:23 This statement of God's sovereignty is consistent with Pr 16:9; 20:24.

11:10-11 The biblical worshiper can appeal to the Lord for help on the basis of the covenant (e.g., Ps 25:7-10). When the covenant is broken through the people's unfaithfulness, there is no longer any basis for appeal even if they "cry out" to God. If this had been a sincere appeal based on genuine repentance, the Lord would have been open to hearing it (2 Ch 6:37-39; 7:14). But since the Judeans were still appealing to other gods, it was clear that the covenant remained broken.

11:14 On the prophet being told not to pray for the people, see note on 7:16.

12:1 The prosperity and success of evil and treacherous people has long been an impediment to faith in God. If God is just, it seems He would not permit that situation to continue. Other biblical writers have voiced the concern Jeremiah raises here (e.g., Ps 73:1-14; Ec 7:15; Hab 1:13). But Jeremiah applied a wider perspective, useful in apologetics: Because God is who He is, His righteousness is not measured by the complaints people bring against Him out of their personal circumstances. We might not understand how God is righteous, and we can even "bring a case" or demand an explanation (Jb 13:3) from Him. But since God is in charge of the universe, and not us, it is useless to suppose that any case we bring against Him will prove Him unjust.

12:7 See note on Lm 1:10.

12:8 How could the Lord say He hated His chosen people? The prophet used strong language to communicate that God's attitude toward Judah had changed as a result of the Judeans' disdain for Him; they could expect His actions to reflect that change. It is typical of biblical writers to express emphasis with extremes, or polar opposites, leaving no "gray area" between them (Mal 1:2-3; Lk 14:26); such expressions are sometimes called "rhetorical Hebraisms." Other passages, however, including Jr 12:15, make it clear that God continued to love His chosen people in spite of their unfaithfulness (e.g., Ezr 3:11; Jr 3:12; Hs 11:7-9; Mt 23:37).

12:16 On swearing oaths in the Lord's name, see note on 4:2.

13:4 Commentators are uncertain whether Jeremiah traveled all the way to the Euphrates River for the sake of an illustration, a distance in excess of 400 miles. Such a journey would have taken about four months each way, and the prophet also had to go there again to retrieve the garment (v. 6). Some interpreters suggest that Jeremiah went to the spring called Perath (the name is similar to "Euphrates" in Hb) near Anathoth, his family home. If Jeremiah in fact went to the Euphrates, this act would have made a greater impression on his hearers and it would have been a fitting analogy: Just as Jeremiah's garment was ruined at the Euphrates, so Judah's pride would be ruined in exile in Babylon by the Euphrates.

13:14 The thrust of these words is that judgment was so near at hand that it was virtually too late to ward it off through repentance (36:31). In typical prophetic style, the prophet declared the Lord's word in extremes. God may have been using such emphatic language to warn the people that they should not expect a reprieve unless the situation changed. Although God knew that the people would not repent, He offered the possibility of repentance to make clear that Judah's judgment was justified (18:6-12; 26:3). Other passages in Scripture make it clear that it is never too late to repent (Jl 2:11-14; Lk 23:43); see note on 7:16.

14:7-9 Although the prophet is ordinarily the spokesman for the Lord, uttering His words of judgment (and sometimes comfort), he is also an intercessor with the Lord on the people's behalf (see Am 7:1-6). Here Jeremiah filled this intercessory role, in words given to him by the Lord Himself.

14:11 On the prophet being told not to pray for the people, see note on 7:16.

14:14 This passage does not say that God was deceiving these prophets, but that they were lying and attributing it to God. Perhaps they were saying, "This is the Lord's declaration." See notes on Lm 2:9, 2:14.

14:16 The people were to be punished because they listened to the false prophets. It was their responsibility to test the prophets (Dt 18:21-22), not just to accept whatever they said without question, but they failed to do so. They may have known that what the prophets said was not in line with God's will, but because they liked what they heard, they condoned it (5:31; 23:16; 29:8; 2 Co 11:4; 2 Tm 4:3). We are also obligated to test the messages we hear and reject those who preach a false message in God's name (Ac 17:11; Gl 1:6-9; 1 Jn 4:1). See notes on Lm 1:5; 2:14.

16:6 That God mentioned people cutting themselves and shaving their heads in mourning does not mean that He condones it. These were pagan practices (41:5; 47:5) that are condemned in Scripture (Dt 14:1).

17:10 Many passages of Scripture teach that God judges people by their deeds, while others indicate that He judges people by their motives. There is no inconsistency, as this verse points out, because one's "heart" and "actions" are closely connected. Other passages clearly teach that God evaluates people based on their hearts (1 Sm 16:7; 1 Kg 8:39; Lk 16:15), but actions reveal what is in people's hearts (1 Sm 2:3; Mt 7:15-16; 12:33-35; 15:18-19; Jms 2:18). Whether one is judged by inward motivation or outward acts makes no difference. What a person actually does reveals where his or her heart lies (Mt 21:28-31).

17:21-24 Here the Lord called for observance of the Sabbath restriction on work and promised blessings if the people would keep the commandment. Their observance would be evidence that they were listening to the Lord and obeying Him. The first-century Pharisees observed the Sabbath restrictions in detail, yet Jesus did not commend them in this because their motivation was hypocritical. They were observing the minutiae of the law not because they wanted to obey God—though they may have thought they did—but because they wanted to separate themselves from "sinners" and non-Jews (the term "Pharisee" was probably derived from a word meaning "separated"). In this passage, God was not calling for works of the law of the Pharisaic type; He was asking the people to listen to Him. Observing the Sabbath is an indicator of a right relationship with God. The Judeans' ancestors were not condemned for their Sabbath practices but because they refused to accept the Lord's instruction and discipline (v. 23; cp. 26:4). That is, they did not have a right relationship with God.

18:6 In a parable, or illustrative story, the Lord says that he can deal with Israel, or any other people, the same way a potter handles a lump of clay: If it does not turn out to his liking, the potter can destroy it and start over. The biblical account of God forming man out of dust (Gn 2:7; cp. 3:19; Jb 10:9; Ps 90:3; Ec 3:20; 12:7) is not a parable; unlike this passage in Jeremiah, it makes no analogy to the realm of human activity. One should not confuse the two passages and insist either that God literally formed Israel out of clay or that Gn 2:7 is merely a parable.

18:8 See note on 13:14.

18:18 Some interpreters see in this verse a reference to the three sections of the Hebrew canon: the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings ("counsel from the wise"). If so, this is an indication that the three-part canon was already a recognized entity even while portions of it (e.g., Jeremiah's prophecy and that of later prophets) were still in process of formation. The Hebrew order of books differs from that of the Greek OT (followed by the English Bible), which places the Latter Prophets (Isaiah through Malachi) at the end. Interestingly, this verse follows the Greek order (cp. Ezk 7:26, which has the order Prophets, Law, counsel, i.e. Writings).

19:8-9 God does not condone cannibalism. The extreme situation described here would be the result of a prolonged siege of Jerusalem, the judgment to come because of Judah's faithlessness. Under such conditions the people would be forced to choose among options that are equally repugnant—in this case, cannibalism or slow death by starvation (2 Kg 6:28-30; Is 9:20; Lm 4:9-10; Ezk 5:10). The state into which Jerusalem will fall reflected the curses taking effect: The city will be an object of scorn (Dt 28:37) and its inhabitants reduced to eating their own young (Lv 26:29; Dt 28:53-55).

20:7 This is the language of prophetic exaggeration. God did not deceive Jeremiah; He had warned him that he would be opposed (1:8,19; 12:5).

20:8-9 Jeremiah is known for his "confessions," his honest expression of personal discouragement and distress because of his prophetic vocation. When he spoke a word from God, the people made fun of him and held him in contempt. Yet, if he tried to refrain from prophesying, he could not (v. 9); his call to prophesy was "inborn," part of who he was (1:5). He was frustrated, but in the end the Lord's power to deliver encouraged him (vv. 11-13).

20:11-13 Jeremiah's book reflects his internal struggle; the tone of these verses is a positive contrast to the dejected utterances of verses 7-10 and 14-18. Some critics believe these verses were added at a later time when Jeremiah was no longer so depressed, but given the course of his life as recorded in Scripture, it is not easy to identify when such a time might have arrived. Other scholars point out that such a mood swing could be a result of trying to understand what was happening: Jeremiah's prophecy reflected his ongoing internal struggle. In any case, his book was the result of an ongoing process of composition, in both oral and written form. His prophecy was composed orally and committed to memory so that when it was destroyed he could dictate it over again to his scribe, with additions (36:32). Today it is impossible to know, with any certainty, which verses might belong to the earlier stages of composition and which to the latter.

21:10 See note on Lm 3:37-38.

22:3-4 These stipulations were not a complete list of the just actions the Lord required of His people; they were emblematic of the whole law. The works, in themselves, would not deliver the Judeans, but they were indicators of a right attitude toward God

(17:21-24).

22:11-12 Shallum was another name for Jehoahaz (1 Ch 3:15). The fulfillment of this prophecy is reported in 2 Kg 23:31-33.

22:28-30 Why was Coniah (Jehoiachin) to be recorded as childless, when in fact he had seven sons and several grandchildren (he is called Jeconiah in 1 Ch 3:16-18)? He was effectively childless, as a king, because no son succeeded to his throne after his death. The last king of Judah was Coniah's brother Zedekiah (596–586 B.C.); when the Babylonians deposed him, they executed his sons. As the Messiah, Jesus was a "descendant of David" (Rm 1:3). His descent was reckoned through Joseph, who was legally considered His father (Lk 3:23; cp. Mt 1:16), but Jesus was not Joseph's biological son. (In a way Jeremiah's prophecy—that Coniah would be reckoned as "childless"—supports the virgin birth.) This passage, in any case, did not look ahead to a messianic era but had only Coniah's lifetime in view.

23:1-3 The Lord declared that the leaders ("shepherds") of Judah banished the flock (v. 2), but in the next verse He indicated that the banishment was His own doing. No contradiction is involved. The text views the same event from human and divine perspectives. God banished Judah for her sinfulness, but used her leaders to accomplish His will. See notes on Lm 1:5; 3:37-38.

23:6 Jeremiah prophesied that Judah and Israel would be saved during the days of the Branch, but most of the Jews rejected Christ (Mt 21:42-45; Ac 13:46). Paul pointed out that, in fact, the true Israel had been saved (Rm 2:28-29; 11:1,7; Gl 3:7; 6:16) in the faithful Christian community. In the NT, several major OT themes—the promised land, the temple, Zion or Jerusalem, the Messiah—receive a new interpretation, and Israel is another of these themes. It was not given to the OT prophets to see the fulfillment of their words in Christ and His church (see Heb 11:39-40). Paul also held out hope that in the future the "full number" of Israel would come to Christ (Rm 11:11-15,26; cp. Ezk 37).

23:16-18 The test for a true prophet is whether his prophecy comes to pass (Dt 13:1-3). The history of Israel reveals that the true prophets were those who proclaimed the Lord's judgment, not those who ignored the people's sin and prophesied well being. Those prophets had not "stood in the council of the LORD" (v. 18; cp. v. 22), and their message was not from Him. If the people listened to them anyway, they would be "worthless" and come under judgment. See notes on 14:16; 27:14; Lm 1:5; 2:14.

23:23-24 Some critics say this passage does not belong here; they do not see a connection with the context, which is concerned with false prophets. These three declarations all have to do with how a person is given access to the mind of the Lord; He is not "near"—i.e., not within the mind of the self-appointed prophet—but "far away," filling the whole world. The second declaration, or question, could mean that God is able to find the person through whom He chooses to speak, or else that the false prophet will not be able to escape being found out by Him.

23:28 Jeremiah said, in what may have been a piece of sarcasm—that the prophet who had a dream should tell it. He was not conceding that the false prophets' dreams were from God. On the contrary, they would be exposed as worthless straw compared to wholesome grain. In some cases, a dream is a valid way to hear from God (Nm 12:6; Jl 2:28; Mt 2:12,13,19,22; Ac 18:9-10).

23:39 How is it possible for God to expel someone from His presence (see Gn 4:16)? To be in God's presence in this sense is not merely to be where God exists—which is everywhere (Jr 23:24; Ps 139:7-10)—but to have an audience with God, to interact with Him. Thus in Jb 1:12 and 2:7, after Satan finished his audience with God, he left God's presence. And in 2 Kg 23:27, as in this passage, God refused to interact further with Judah.

25:11 See note on 29:10.

25:13 The Septuagint (Greek translation of the OT) inserts chapters 46–51 here. Because many surviving Greek OT manuscripts are as old as, or older than, those of the Hebrew text, it is uncertain which order of the chapters is original and which textual tradition has become corrupted. This question should cast no doubt on the reliability of the text since it does not affect important issues. While the differing context of those chapters may put a slightly different nuance on their meaning, the core message and theology of Jeremiah are clear: the nation of Judah went into exile because of its sinfulness, and God is sovereign over all nations.

26:1-6 This passage repeated the substance of the first part of Jeremiah's sermon in the temple (7:1-15), and the continuation narrated the Judean leaders' response to it. Since the book of Jeremiah was compiled by a later editor, this may be the compiler's third-person account of the incident that was reflected, in Jeremiah's own words, in chapter 7.

26:2 This passage presents one process of inspiration of a prophetic message: God gives the message to the prophet (vv. 4-6), and the prophet delivers the message publicly to the people (v. 7).

26:3 God appeared to be ready to change His mind, but it is not God who changes. The situation changed while God remained the same. God is consistently opposed to the one who does evil. If that person ceases to do evil, God will no longer oppose him (18:8; Ezk 18:21; 33:19). The Hebrew text may actually present a more positive possibility than the English translation ("perhaps") implies; the word 'ulai has the sense of "it may very well be."

26:4-6 See note on 17:21-24.

26:18 Here the elders of Judah quoted Mc 3:12, providing validation for the canonicity of Mc. The quotation shows that the words of the prophets were preserved and circulated during the pre-exilic period. This is the only place where an OT text quotes another OT passage verbatim and names the author.

27:8 The Lord used one nation to punish another; He is sovereign over all nations, not just Israel (27:5-6; Am 9:7). See note on Lm 3:37-38.

27:14 The Lord was warning the king not to listen to the false prophets. If he listened to them anyway, he would be held responsible for the consequences. See notes on 14:16; 23:16-18; Lm 1:5; 2:14.

27:15 Sometimes the Lord indicated that He sent deceptions to the prophets (6:21; cp. 1 Kg 22:19-23). But in this case, the Lord made it clear that He did not send these false prophets, even though they invoked His name in their sayings.

27:22 Here Jeremiah uttered a prophecy that would come true in the near future (52:17; see 2 Kg 25:13). The people could test him in this to determine if he was a true prophet (Dt 18:21-22; Jr 28:9; 32:7; 44:29-30). When this prophecy was fulfilled, they could conclude that he was a true prophet of Yahweh and that his long-term prophecies would also come true. Indeed, the temple articles were eventually returned (Ezr 1:7-11; 5:13-15). Some critics assume that this prophecy was written down after the fulfillment had already occurred (vaticinium ex eventu, a prophecy after the event). Such skepticism is grounded on the assumption that prophecy is impossible, either because God does not know the future, or because He cannot communicate with humans, or even that He does not exist. In these cases, one's worldview or presuppositions exclude fulfilled prophecy. No amount of evidence to the contrary will be convincing.

28:2 Hananiah contradicted Jeremiah's prophecies (cp. 28:3 and 25:11; 29:10). Though Hananiah represented himself as speaking in the name of the Lord of Hosts, he was a false prophet. Not everyone who claimed to be speaking in the name of God had truly heard from Him. The Lord made this point in 14:14 and 27:15.

29:6 Jeremiah was not advocating intermarriage with other cultural groups, in contradiction to Dt 7:3 and Jos 23:12-13. In fact, this admonition agreed with what he said in 16:2-4 and 29:28: Do not stay in Judah and try to raise a family; instead, go into exile in Babylon and make that your home.

29:10 The Neo-Babylonian Empire lasted somewhat less than 70 years (605–539 B.C.). Consequently, some critics contend that Jeremiah's prediction cannot be made to fit any literal 70-year period. Some interpreters consider this a symbolic number representing the "complete" period of Judah's punishment, or a round number representing the span of a lifetime or some period shorter than might be expected. But it is also possible that the number 70 refers precisely to the time from the fall of Jerusalem to the rebuilding of the second temple (587–516 B.C.) or from the establishment of the Neo-Babylonian Empire to the first return of exiles (605–536 B.C.). When some critics are shown that there are fitting events 70 years apart, they conclude that this is a "prophecy" written after the event (see note on 27:22). However, when Daniel referred to Jeremiah's prediction, he clearly referred to the date at which he thought of it (Dn 9:2). So Scripture says that Jeremiah wrote it, Daniel read about it, and then it happened. The prophecy was given before the event.

30:1-3 Some scholars contend that chapters 30–33 were written by another author, not Jeremiah. They argue that Jeremiah was a prophet of doom and judgment, not hope and reconciliation. However, such speculation ignores the clear intent of Scripture: Verse 1 attributes this prophecy to Jeremiah. Certainly it is not impossible for a prophet to speak of both judgment and hope—in this case, judgment in the near future and hope for the long term. Jeremiah had previously offered hope (2:1-3; 3:14-18; 23:1-8; 24:4-7). In fact, in calling him, the Lord acknowledged that Jeremiah was to be a prophet who would both "uproot and tear down" and "build and plant" (1:10; see also 31:38). Other prophets also offered messages of hope along with predictions of doom. Ezekiel spoke of God deserting Jerusalem but returning in the future (Ezk 10:18-19; 11:23; 43:4-5). Hosea said that in the near future Israel would be "Not My People" but in the far future once again "My people" (Hs 1:9; 2:23). Joel said that the Day of the Lord would be devastation, but in the future the Lord would bless His people and send them the Holy Spirit (Jl 1:15; 2:26-28). Amos juxtaposed judgment for sinners with the future restoration of Israel (Am 9:9-10; 9:11-15). The prophets' proclamations of judgment were always intended to move the people to repentance and their words rang with confidence in the Lord's ultimate faithfulness to His covenant.

31:4 Jeremiah appears to be contradicting Am 5:2, which says that Virgin Israel will never rise again. Several considerations suggest that no contradiction is involved. First, the verse in Amos was a lament, not a prophecy (it is in what some scholars identify as a "lament" meter). Second, the context in Am 5:4-7 was an appeal to Israel to return to the Lord, indicating that repentance remained a possibility. Finally, Jeremiah was taking the long-range view. Although Ephraim (Israel, the northern kingdom) had been defeated and overrun—and though Judah would also be defeated and go into exile—in the future the Jews will repent and be restored to the land, including territory formerly part of Ephraim (Jr 31:18-21).

31:15 According to Mt 2:17, this prophecy was "fulfilled" when Herod had the infants killed after the birth ofJesus. Jeremiah was not writing about the Messiah, but about the exile. This does not mean that Matthew did not understand Jeremiah's meaning. Rather, it has to do with Matthew's understanding of what it was to "fulfill" Scripture.

31:26 Critics propose that a later scribe accidentally inserted this verse, or that it was a fragment of a longer description of how these speeches came about, the rest of which has dropped out. However, there is no valid reason to doubt that the verse belongs here. Jeremiah would have found this message of hope "pleasant" after his other messages of judgment. And it indicated the method of revelation for the preceding material, either the previous three verses or the whole prophecy from 30:1. A dream was one method of hearing from God (see 23:28), even though Jeremiah prophesied against those who falsified the method.

31:29 The proverb Jeremiah quoted would be popular in the exile because the people would think they were being punished for their forefathers' sins. But the prophet was looking beyond, to the restoration of the Jews to their homeland. When that occurs, people will no longer view the proverb as appropriate. In that new situation, they will understand that God blesses those who trust Him and punishes those who do not, regardless of what their forefathers have done, in accordance with His word in Dt 24:16.

31:32-33 God said the new covenant will not be like the old one. This does not imply that the old covenant was inadequate, for the new covenant would involve the same core stipulation of full allegiance to God. Jeremiah used the same summary description for the "new" covenant ("I will be their God, and they will be My people") that the Lord gave for the "old" covenant (cp. Ex 6:7).

While the Bible speaks of a "new covenant," it is worth noting that the nuance, in English, between "new" and "renewed" may not be a feature of biblical languages; something that is "renewed" is simply called "new." What is different with this "new" covenant is that its law is written on the "hearts" of the people (v. 33). Keeping the covenant will not be through actions in conformity to an external standard but will arise from the inner motivation of a people bonded to their God. This agrees with Jl 2:28, where the prophet declared that the Spirit of God will dwell in people. The people generally failed to keep the old covenant, so in the new covenant God will, even more than in the past, take the initiative (31:18; 32:40; Ezk 36:24-27; Eph 2:4-5). Ultimately, He did this through the death and resurrection of Jesus (Lk 22:20; 1 Co 11:25).

31:34 That a just God would "never again remember" the sins that His people have committed may not seem right. But biblical language and thought are concrete; to "remember" something does not mean to entertain an exclusively "mental" process; it means to take action in accord with the memory. This is what the Lord declares He will not do. It is no injustice that He will not allow His people's past sins to influence His current and future relationship with them; it is the mystery of substitutionary atonement.

Scripture is consistent in its teaching. The sacrificial system of the OT was based on the premise that there is forgiveness of sins through the shedding of blood (Lv 17:11). But such sacrifices, involving the deaths of animals, were inadequate in and of themselves. They were to be fulfilled in Christ, the perfect sacrifice (Heb 10:1-10) which God Himself provided (Rm 3:24-25; Heb 13:11-12; 1 Jn 2:1-2). Thus, all who relied on blood for atonement in the OT were ultimately looking forward to Jesus the Messiah. Because of the sacrifice of Jesus, God is righteous in passing over the sins of people—past, present, and future (Rm 3:24-26). He removes our sin far from us (Ps 103:12; Jr 33:8; 50:20; Mc 7:18; Rm 11:27) and remembers it no more (Is 43:25; Heb 10:17).

32:7 This is another example of a short-term prophecy that validated Jeremiah's credentials as a prophet (Dt 18:22; see Jr 27:22; 44:29-30).

32:35 Though the Lord "never entertained the thought" that Judah's leaders would introduce Baal worship and child sacrifice, this does not mean He had no foreknowledge of their detestable actions. The statement is a way of emphasizing that such practices were never part of His plan for Israel. God is too holy to contemplate condoning evil (Hab 1:13; Jms 1:13).

33:16-18 This passage promises that there will always be a descendant of David on the throne in Israel (see 2 Sm 7:12-16) and a descendant of Levi as priest. God's promises are always conditional in some way, whether or not the condition is stated. Although the original promise of the endurance of David's dynasty was not contingent upon the obedience of his descendants (2 Sm 7:14), it was contingent upon there being an entity over which the dynasty would rule. In the same way, the endurance of the Levitical priesthood depended on the existence of an entity in which the priests would serve. Because of the community's unfaithfulness and resistance to the Lord, both entities ceased to exist. The kingdom came to an end with the exile, and any leadership role for the Davidic dynasty drops from the historical record after Zerubbabel (Hg 2:23). In the same way, the Levitical priesthood ended with the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70 and the cessation of its ceremonies. This text does not promise an unbroken line from the time ofDavid and Aaron until eternity; it says that "in those days" there will be an enduring king and priest. The time of which Jeremiah spoke need not be a continuation of the time period during which he was prophesying; it may well refer to the time when the faithful community of Israel will be restored. The NT sees this taking place in the appearance of Jesus Christ, the King in David's line (Rm 1:3) whose kingdom will never end. Moreover, Jesus Christ is the High Priest—though in the line of Melchizedek, rather than Levi (Heb 7:11-17)—who will never fail to serve.

34:4-5 Did Zedekiah die in peace? Technically, he did not die by the sword, but he was forced to witness the slaughter of his family. Then his eyes were put out and he was exiled to Babylon where he died in prison (52:8-11).He probably had no ceremonial burial as described here. The promise did not fail, but Zedekiah failed. The promise was conditional (38:17), but since he did not meet its conditions, he suffered the consequences.

35:2 When the Lord told Jeremiah to offer wine to the Rechabites, He was not tempting them (Jms 1:13 says that God does not tempt anyone) because He knew they would not accept the wine (Jr 35:6). The Lord used the Rechabites' faithfulness to a dead ancestor to illustrate Judah's contrasting unfaithfulness to the living God (v. 14). He blessed the Rechabites for their faithfulness (vv. 18-19). The Rechabites were a fitting subject for Jeremiah's illustration. They used no wine because they had remained nomadic, avoiding both permanent buildings and cultivated fields (vv. 8-10). They adopted this lifestyle as a symbol of Israel's faithful wilderness period, the time before the people took up the settled life of Canaan and became corrupted by its polytheistic religious practices.

It was not for their abstaining from wine or their nomadic lifestyle that the Lord blessed the Rechabites, but for their obedience. When a characteristic of a person or group is used as an illustration, it is that characteristic that is to be emulated (or avoided, in negative examples), not necessarily the entire lifestyle. For example, Jesus spoke favorably of a man who woke up his neighbor at midnight and persistently asked for bread to serve a guest (Lk 11:5-8). That does not mean that we should all wake up our neighbors at midnight; it means we should emulate his persistence, and perhaps his hospitality.

36:2 Even though God did not preserve this particular scroll as Scripture (the king destroyed it, v. 23), its contents were evidently preserved as Scripture within the book of Jr. What God communicated to His people (v. 3) as His revelation through the prophet (v. 2) was first committed to memory before being dictated to Baruch (v. 4). Therefore, Jeremiah could replace the text after the scroll was lost, and, in the meantime, the Lord gave him additional revelation (v. 32). This is an example of one process of revelation—how God communicates His word to His people through inspired spokesmen (2 Pt 1:21).

The scarcity of writing skills and materials in the ancient Near East required people to rely upon memory to a degree that is difficult to envision today within the technology of the modern Western world. As long as a culture remains stable, texts can be preserved through oral recitation and memorization with a high degree of reliability, especially if there is a group of people who share the tradition and can act as a check on errors that might creep in. The prophets of Israel did not work in isolation; they had disciples (Is 8:16)—in Jeremiah's case, Baruch at least—to help preserve their words (see Lk 1:1-2). Some portions of Scripture may have existed in oral form for long periods of time, being committed to writing only when it appeared that the community that preserved them was in danger of being disrupted. Jeremiah's scroll gives a glimpse of how this process operated in the short term.

36:12 The writer recorded the names of those involved in this event (vv. 10,14,20,25-26; cp. Mk 5:22; 15:21; Lk 23:50; Jn 3:1; 18:10). From this we can draw two conclusions. First, the writer was an eyewitness to the event or had contact with eyewitnesses. Second, the event must have been recorded correctly, since there is a record of people who could have corrected any errors (Ac 26:26; 1 Co 15:6). These facts support the reliability of this record as an example of the general reliability of the historical accounts in Scripture.

36:26 Jeremiah and Baruch hid themselves at the suggestion of court officials (v. 19), but when the king ordered them to be seized, the text says it was the Lord who had hidden them. There is no discrepancy here since God operates through human agents under His control (10:23; see Pr 16:9; 19:21; 20:24). The Lord told Jeremiah to hide, then hid his location from the eyes of those searching for him.

36:30 Jehoiakim's son held the throne for only three months, which by all reasonable measures would be considered a failure (2 Kg 24:8-15). Then Jehoiakim's brother ruled in Jerusalem, but only as a puppet of Babylon (24:18). The Bible does not expressly state that Jehoiakim's corpse was exposed, but while the account of the death of a king often includes a record of his burial (1 Kg 2:10; 11:43; 14:31; 15:8,24; 16:6,28; 22:50), Jehoiakim's does not (2 Kg 24:6; 2 Ch 36:8). There is no substantive reason to doubt that Jeremiah's prophecy about him was fulfilled.

36:31 The Lord's warnings about bringing disaster upon Judah were conditional: If they had listened to Him, He would not have done so. But here He was saying that there was virtually no time for Him to change His course of action; the judgment was immanent. There is no awkward redundancy in what the Lord was declaring through Jeremiah.

38:27 Although it appears that the king told Jeremiah to lie, and he did so, it is not certain that what he told the officials was a lie (though it was only a partial truth). It is possible that Jeremiah did make the request the king mentioned, but that it was unrecorded. Israelite culture held to a different view of the purpose of the spoken word. It was not only to give information (i.e., to state facts verifiable by some external standard), but also to establish a perception of a situation and thereby to motivate people to a certain type of behavior. The preservation of innocent human life is a value God upholds. Therefore He commands His people not to give false testimony that would put the innocent in jeopardy (Ex 20:16). But His word also records, without condemnation, instances where people gave misleading information to protect the innocent (e.g., the Hebrew midwives, Ex 1:19; Rahab, Jos 2:3-6). Jeremiah's "lie" comes under the latter category; if he had told the entire truth, the king would have had him killed or the officials might have turned the king over to the Babylonians to be tortured. In either case, a human life was in jeopardy, so Jeremiah acted in a way that, at least temporarily, spared it.

The Bible does not say that what Jeremiah did was commendable, or that God blessed him for it. In fact, Jeremiah remained in custody until the fall of the city (v. 28). But Scripture, in this episode, records a reality of life in a sinful world, just as it reveals Jeremiah's human weakness in his "confessions" (chaps. 11–20). When he remembered the suffering he had gone through in the cistern and when he faced the possibility of more suffering, he complied with the king's request. Jeremiah's compliance, in the face of death and suffering, contrasts with Jesus' determination in the garden of Gethsemene (Lk 22:42). Jesus resolved to continue to carry out God's will regardless of the painful consequences to Himself (Php 2:8). But Jeremiah was not the Messiah; his death, unlike that of Christ, would not have brought redemption to sinful humanity. It is hard to fault him for what he did.

39:2 Jerusalem did not fall because the Lord was not strong enough to protect it. As long as the people honored God, He promised to bless them and allow them to stay in the land (Dt 4:1; 20:4; 30:20; 32:47; Ps 37:3; see Nm 20:12). Jeremiah had told the people that they could not depend on the Lord defending them simply because His temple was in the city; they needed to show, by their actions, that they trusted in God (7:3-8). Their actions showed the opposite, however (17:24). Ezekiel saw in his visions that the glory of God had departed from the temple and was no longer protecting the city (Ezk 10:18-19; 11:23; see Jr 12:7). When God left Jerusalem, Babylon conquered Judah.

39:15 This account of the prophecy to Ebed-melech is given out of sequence; it belongs after 38:13. This is not a textual corruption; a compiler sometimes rearranged the order of material for effect. Here the editor may have wanted to show that God could allow the enemy to destroy Jerusalem and torture the king because of Judah's disobedience, yet He could spare Jeremiah and Ebed-melech because of their trust in Him.

39:16 How could Jeremiah "go" when he was confined in the guard's courtyard? The answer lies in the meaning of the Hebrew word translated "go": It functions to strengthen the command. It could be translated, "Be sure to tell Ebed-melech . . ."

40:1-5 The text has already related Nebuzaradan's release of Jeremiah from the guard's courtyard in Jerusalem (39:14); in this passage, he was releasing him at Ramah, where he had been chained with others awaiting deportation to Babylon. If Jeremiah was released only once, the first account summarized events from Jeremiah's imprisonment in Jerusalem until his release into the custody of Gedaliah, while this account provided the details of his final release at Ramah. Or Jeremiah was freed in Jerusalem, then in the general confusion, was taken captive again and finally released at Ramah.

40:2-3 It seems unlikely that a worshiper of the god Marduk would speak of the outcome of a battle in terms of the God of Judah. One possibility is that Nebuzaradan was willing to ascribe the outcome to Judah's God because Judah was defeated (see Jdg 11:24; Is 36:18-20). Another possibility is that he was quoting Jeremiah's own words that had been reported to him during the siege of Jerusalem.

41:5 Though the narrative relates that these pilgrims had "shaved their beards . . . and gashed themselves," that does not mean those practices were condoned; they were, in fact, forbidden (Lv 19:27-28; 21:5; Dt 14:1). In the chaotic conditions that prevailed in Judah, it is not surprising that some worshipers of the Lord were confused about what was acceptable as a sign of mourning.

42:10 The Lord declared, through Jeremiah, that He relented concerning what had befallen Judah. This does not mean that He changed His mind about the judgment He permitted. Now that the people's disobedience had been punished and a new situation existed. The remnant of the people had turned from disobedience and pledged to obey the Lord (v. 6); if they followed through on their promise, the Lord would reestablish them in the land (26:3). His requirement of faithfulness had not changed.

42:17 See note on 44:28.

43:8 Jeremiah had told the people of Judah not to go to Egypt (42:9-17), but when they did not listen to him, he went to Egypt with them. He may have felt it was his duty to help them, even though they had made the wrong decision, or he may have been taken to Egypt against his will (see vv. 5-6).

44:14 See note on v. 28.

44:25 Scripture consistently condemns the worship of false gods (e.g,, Dt 5:8-9; 2 Kg 17:35). In saying, "Go ahead, confirm your vows! Pay your vows!" Jeremiah was speaking sarcastically (cp. 25:28).

44:28 This is the third time Jeremiah prophesied that no Judeans would return from Egypt (42:17; 44:14). He had also predicted that Nebuchadnezzar would invade and destroy Egypt (43:11). History records that Nebuchadnezzar's invasion occurred in 568–567 B.C. while Egypt remained independent, but it is possible that the Judean population was decimated in the warfare. When the exiles return from Babylon (Ezr 2:1), there is no mention of a group returning from Egypt.

Both here in verses 27-28 and in verse 14 Jeremiah said that there would be no fugitives, then added that there would be a few fugitives. Some critics contend that a later editor added the mitigating statement. However, it is more likely that this is a Hebrew idiom (Jos 11:21-22; 1 Sm 30:17; cp. Gn 39:6; Dt 2:34-35,36-37; Jos 11:19; 2 Kg 24:14). Jeremiah did not intend for the existence of a few stragglers to weaken his strong oracle of judgment. The survivors would be virtually annihilated, their small number would even emphasize the extent of the devastation, and they would serve as witnesses to the power of God's word to bring about that which it declares.

44:29-30 Jeremiah offered a "sign" to demonstrate that what he said would come true. This sign was to confirm Jeremiah's status as God's spokesman (see Dt 18:22). When the first thing predicted took place, it could be assumed that the remainder of the prophecy would also come true. Hophra was indeed killed by his enemies; his general, Amasis, was made king by popular acclaim, and he assassinated Hophra around 570 B.C.

45:1 This episode is chronologically out of place; it belongs at chapter 36. Verse 4 implies that the destruction of Jerusalem was still in the future, which would not have been the case by the time Baruch was in Egypt. It fits the situation in the days of Jehoiakim, when Baruch might well have been in "misery" (v. 3) over the impending destruction of the city that Jeremiah had prophesied (35:17). But because this incident contains a message of hope after a dark message of doom—at least for one person—the compiler placed it here. In 39:16-18, the prophet offered a similar message to Ebed-melech. It might also be here to remind Baruch that, despite the disaster that that had just been pronounced against all the Jews in Egypt (44:27), the Lord had already promised an exemption for him and his life would be spared. The reference to Baruch's "[writing] these words on a scroll" might function as a literary device to conclude this section of oracles (25:13; 36:2-3,32).

Critical commentators have contended that a later editor put this episode in the wrong place, or that he mistakenly assigned the wrong date to the episode. But if the editor's purposes were the same as Jeremiah's (or Baruch's), the reliability of Scripture is not affected. God is the ultimate Author, whether He inspired Jeremiah, Baruch, or a later editor to put this episode here (2 Pt 1:21). It is not likely that an editor or compiler would have assigned an incorrect date; if the oracle was delivered in Egypt, he would have mentioned that or omitted the date entirely.

46:1 Certain critics argue that Jeremiah did not write the prophecies against the nations (see note on 25:13). But Jeremiah was called to be a prophet to the nations (1:5), and other prophets also announced judgments against other nations (Is 13–23; Ezk 25–32; Am 1–2). Such messages, preached in Israel to Israelites, made the point that God is the God of all nations, not just Israel, and no nation will escape His judgment, not even Israel. One argument against Jeremiah's authorship is that he would not call for Judah's submission to Babylon (38:17) and also announce judgment against Babylon (chaps. 50–51). However, there is no conflict in the two messages. Babylon was God's instrument of judgment on Judah but would be held accountable for its own sins (see 50:1; Lm 3:37-38; cp. Is 10:12-16; Hab 1:6; 2:16-17).

46:2 The battle of Carchemish occurred in 605–604 B.C. The reliability of the narrative in Jeremiah receives support from extra-biblical evidence, the "Chronicles of the Chaldaean Kings" edited by D. J. Wiseman.

46:13 Some scholars deny that Jeremiah wrote this section because Babylon did not invade Egypt until 568–567 B.C. when Jeremiah would no longer have been living. However, Nebuchadnezzar also threatened Egypt in 604, and fought a battle with Pharaoh Neco in 601. Also, the poem implies that its author had accurate knowledge of the geography of Egypt, which Jeremiah would have had.

46:26 This prophecy was fulfilled: Nebuchadnezzar's conquest of Egypt was only temporary, the destruction was minimal, and he soon withdrew without making it part of his empire.

47:1 Scholars disagree over when this defeat took place. Some deny that Egypt ever fought and defeated Gaza; they attribute the defeat to the Babylonians, known to have defeated Ashkelon in 604 B.C. However, the Greek historian Herodotus reported that after Pharaoh Neco defeated Josiah at Megiddo in 609, he conquered the city of Kadytis, generally believed to be Gaza. Neco had other occasions to defeat Gaza, in either 605 or 601 Those dates and occasions are speculative, but it is also speculative to contradict the text as it reads and suggest that something entirely different took place.

48:10 Some scholars contend that this verse is an editorial insertion. However, since the nation that destroyed Moab was doing the Lord's work (see note on Lm 3:37-38), this curse was fitting.

48:13 There is some question regarding what "Bethel" referred to. It could refer to the sanctuary in Israel where calf worship was practiced (2 Kg 10:29). Some scholars claim it could refer to a god worshiped by Jewish people in Syria, a suggestion that draws support from a passage in the Elephantine Papyri. Even if this ambiguity is allowed to stand, the impact of the verse remains: Whoever trusts in anything other than God will be put to shame.

48:21-24 Many of the cities mentioned here are also mentioned on the Moabite Stone (a monument set up by Mesha, king of Moab, in the ninth century B.C.), which provides outside verification of the reliability of Scripture.

48:29 Jeremiah 48:29-47 repeats material from Nm 21:27-29; Is 15–16; and other passages in Is. Critics contend that this means the writer was not a composer but a mere editor who needed to borrow material. However, changes and additions as well as the arrangement of borrowed material make it a new composition. The reuse of other passages of the Bible, with variations, is a well-known technique of biblical writers; it is a testimony to the authority and reliability ascribed to the inspired Scriptures even during the period of their formation. One could view this author as one intimately familiar with the Torah and the writings of Isaiah, who used those words to express a new thought the Lord revealed to him. This did not make the writer, or compiler, any less a creator of literature—perhaps more. The sayings of Isaiah were available to Jeremiah, or his editor, who considered them worth learning, repeating, and adapting as authoritative Scripture. Since God inspired both Isaiah's and Jeremiah's oracles against Moab, it is not surprising that they include overlapping material.

48:47 Some critics note that this verse is missing from the Septuagint (LXX) text and therefore argue that it was added to the Hebrew text after the LXX was translated. However, the LXX includes a similar message about Elam's restoration in 49:39. It is harder to explain how a copyist in the Hebrew tradition would add such a verse than to explain why one of the Greek translators might drop it. Only a true prophet is likely to prophesy welfare for the enemies of Judah, and only a faithful copyist would preserve such a statement. The presence of this verse supports the reliability of the Hebrew text.

Critics also contend that this message of Moab's restoration was out of character for Jeremiah. However, those who proclaim only good concerning their homeland and only bad about their enemies were likely to be false prophets (1 Kg 22:11-18). A prophet who had truly heard from the Lord would proclaim the truth, even if it was judgment for his own country and well being for his enemies (22:14,17; cp. Nm 22:38; Jr 1:7). At Jeremiah's commissioning (1:10), God told him he was "to uproot and tear down, to destroy and demolish, to build and plant," so it was not outside Jeremiah's job description to "build and plant," that is, to proclaim welfare. His messages of doom for Israel and Judah were also followed by proclamations of future restoration (30:3), as were his messages against Egypt (46:26), Ammon (49:6) and Elam (49:39). Further, words concerning the destiny of other peoples were consistent with what Jeremiah was teaching throughout the book and especially in this section: God is sovereign over all nations (27:5-6; cp. 23:23-24; 27:8; 46:13).

49:6 See note on 48:47.

49:9 This verse and v. 10 are very similar to Ob 5-6. Some critics suggest that editors gathered anonymous sayings and added them to Jeremiah's (and Obadiah's) prophecies. However, it is not hard to imagine Jeremiah being inspired to use existing sayings, whether from an anonymous source or from his contemporary, Obadiah (Jr 48:29).

49:10 During the exile and into the postexilic period, Arabs overran the land of Edom (descendants of Esau) and the Edomites retreated into Judah, where they became known as Idumeans. At the time of the Maccabees, John Hyrcanus compelled the Idumeans to become Jews and to submit to circumcision. Herod the Great, ruler at Judea at the time of Jesus' birth, was an Idumean. When the Romans subdued the Judeans in A.D. 70, the Idumeans ceased to exist although the Herodian dynasty ruled elsewhere until the death of Herod Agrippa II in A.D. 100. Jeremiah's prophecy that Esau would "exist no longer" was eventually fulfilled.

49:14 Verses 14-16 are similar to Ob 1-4 (Jr 49:9).

49:16-17 Petra in Edom is indeed still deserted except for tourists and passersby.

49:33 Did this prophecy come true? Hazor in Galilee was destroyed in 732 B.C. (2 Kg 15:29) and never again became a fortified city, but people did live there. This prophecy may refer to another city of the same name; there were several (Jos 15:23-25).

49:34-35 Zedekiah began his rule in 597 B.C., and the defeat of Elam occurred in 596–594 B.C. The text gives the date for Jeremiah's prediction of the demise of Elam, not for the event itself which occurred a few years later. In any case, Zedekiah was king for ten years so the "beginning" of his reign need not be restricted to the immediate period of his accession to the throne.

50:1 Critics argue that this message could not have been delivered until just before 540 B.C. when it became inevitable that Babylon would capitulate to the Persians; therefore, it was written not by Jeremiah but by a later writer in his tradition. However, this verse clearly attributes this prophecy to Jeremiah, and 51:64 indicates that Jeremiah's prophecy extended all the way through to that point. The critics' argument is based on the assumption that a prophet does not really hear from the Lord and, therefore, cannot tell the future.

Some critics question the consistency of Jeremiah. How could he recommend capitulation to Babylonian rule at one point (27:11-12) and prophesy the destruction of Babylon at another (50:2), or preach the judgment of Judah in one place (27:15) and restoration in another (50:19)? It appears that Jeremiah was taking a new direction here. All along he had proclaimed that the nation of Judah was being judged by God for her sinfulness (1:16), and that Babylon was God's instrument for her punishment (1:14-15; 27:6). But the Babylonians would in turn be punished for their wickedness (27:7; cp. Is 10:12-16; Jr 46:1; Lm 3:37-38), and when the Lord had dealt with the sin of the people of Judah, they would be restored (Jr 29:10; 48:47).

50:3 Babylon became a desolate place, though not immediately. When Cyrus arrived in 539 B.C., the city capitulated without resistance, and was not destroyed. But the last mention of Babylon as a city comes from 10 B.C., by which time it had become a ruin, and it has remained so. (For the nation from the "north" see note on v. 41.)

50:9 See note on verse 41.

50:29 Some critics point out that the use of the rare phrase "Holy One of Israel" (Jeremiah only used it here and in 51:5) shows a dependence on Isaiah, who used it frequently. It would not be impossible for Jeremiah to be familiar with Isaiah, and the phrase also occurs in some of the psalms as well as 2 Kg 19:22. On the biblical writers' reuse of material from other inspired authors, see note on 48:29.

50:41 Previously, the nation from the north was Babylon (1:14-15), but here Jeremiah employed an ironic twist. The nation that was once the feared enemy from the north was now threatened by another enemy from the north. Although Persia was east of Babylon, a strategic attack on the city may well have come from the north, down the Tigris-Euphrates basin. The mention of "many kings" reinforces this possibility; these would have been vassal kings of the Persian ruler, many of whose forces would have come from north of Babylon. In any case, from the geographic standpoint of Judah (or Egypt, where Jeremiah could have been when he uttered these words), both Babylon and Persia would be considered nations from the north. That is the direction from which their forces would have approached the region, and not from the east across the Arabian Desert.

Mention of "many kings" gives further insight into the nature of the biblical covenant, which is like an ancient treaty (see Dt 11:26; 13:5). In the ancient world a "great king," or emperor, did not make a treaty with common people or peasants but with other subordinate rulers or kings. Their main treaty obligation was to maintain unswerving loyalty to the overlord and to support him in warfare (Jr 51:27-28). By analogy, to be in covenant with the Lord was not to be in a position of abject servitude; it was, in a sense, a mark of high status (Ps 147:19-20) accorded people made in God's own image (Gn 1:26-27). Thus, those who belong to the new covenant are not commoners but "royalty" (1 Co 4:8;1 Pt 2:9; Rv 5:10).

51:11 Critics argue that this reference to the Medes must be a later insertion, since Jeremiah (writing in 594 B.C., see v. 59) could not have known that the Medes would arise as a major power in the ancient Near East. It was not until around 550 that the king of the Medes controlled many client rulers, but the Medes in turn were subject to Cyrus of Persia. Cyrus led an army of Medes and Persians when he conquered Babylon in 539. The last historical event reported in the book of Jeremiah is the release of Jehoiachin, which took place around 561. At that time Jeremiah, if still living, would have been about 90 years old (he was probably born around 650), though Baruch could have recorded the event after Jeremiah's death.

Some critics might define prophecy only as the prophet's God-given ability to predict future events based on a wise evaluation of current trends. Certainly such insight is a factor in biblical prophecy, but it cannot explain every prediction recorded in Scripture. Prophecy also comes into being as God reveals something that would otherwise be unknowable (27:22; Am 3:7; Ac 21:10-11; 1 Co 14:24-25; 2 Pt 1:21). God is able to reveal specific details of future events to His prophets, including names (Is 44:28; 45:1) and dates (Jr 25:12; 29:10). Those who deny the possibility that Jeremiah could have been given knowledge of events beyond his own time operate within a worldview for whom supernatural realities and actions are an impossibility. Evidence has no bearing on their view.

51:15 Verses 15-19 repeat 10:12-16. They were not placed here by mistake, for the same words in a different context can have a different literary effect. In chapter 10, these words were a treatise on the power of God and the impotence of idols; they served to shame Judah for having trusted in idols. In this passage, the same theological point was applied against Babylon: her idols were impotent to stop God, who would accomplish His will through His power.

51:27 Critics contend that the names of these nations, vassals to the Medes, were inserted later because Jeremiah could not have known that these particular nations would be involved in Babylon's downfall. However, see note on verse 11.

51:36 Babylon was not located on a seacoast, but Jeremiah's reference to "her sea" does not mean he was ignorant of geography (thus calling into question the inerrant inspiration of his writings). The term "sea" in Scripture does not always mean what the term designates in modern English (cp. the "bronze reservoir" of the temple, 52:17, where the Hb word is yam, "sea"). The language in these chapters is often figurative; Jeremiah was making a metaphorical reference in terms of Babylonian myth. Babylon prided itself in its "many waters" (v. 13). Besides the Euphrates River that supplied the city with its needs, there were marshes (v. 32) and moats that could be flooded in the event of attack. Babylonian myth taught that the waters arose from a subterranean sea. In this passage, God was speaking to the Babylonians in terms that they would understand: God would metaphorically dry up their "sea," cutting the city off from its precious source of water. Additionally, Babylonian creation myth taught that their god Marduk defeated the god Tiamat, who represented the chaos of the unrestrained sea (5:22). In Scripture, the "sea" can also stand for the pagan nations of the world (e.g., Is 23:11; Rv 21:1). The Lord God of Israel was about to show that He is the One who is in control of the sea. In effect, He would cause the "sea," with its turbulent, chaotic waves, to engulf Babylon and destroy it (Jr 51:42).

51:39,57 Some take this to teach annihilationism (that there is no resurrection). However, permanent sleep is merely a metaphor or euphemism for physical death (Ps 76:5). This verse does not teach about what happens after death; that is taught in passages such as Is 66:24 and Heb 9:27.

51:60 If this refers to "all these words" of chapters 50–51, according to this reference to the reign of Zedekiah they were written by 594 B.C. Some commentators cannot accept that date because they believe Jeremiah could not have known ahead of time the facts about how Babylon would fall, but see note on verse 11.

52:1 The similarity of certain portions of Jeremiah to the parallels in 1 and 2 Kg (cp. Jr 40:5–41:3 and 2 Kg 25:22-26; Jr 52 and 2 Kg 24:18–25:21,27-30) shows that the history recorded has not been substantially altered. This, in turn, supports the historical reliability of both books. One version is probably dependent on the other, or else they had a common source. In either case, they represent two affirmations of the same sequence of events. Critics attribute any differences to editors of subsequent editions, but an apologist could argue that the differences were intentional. Each version includes or excludes details, or otherwise shapes the accounts, to fit the historical context of the audience and the different purposes of the authors.

52:12 The record in 2 Kg 25:8 recorded that Nebuzaradan entered Jerusalem on the seventh day of the month, but Jeremiah stated that he entered on the tenth day. Such an apparent discrepancy would not affect the theological teachings of Scripture but might call into question its factual reliability. These passages do not need to be seen as conflicting. The Hebrew word translated

"entered" could also be translated "came," meaning that Nebuzaradan left Riblah on the seventh day and entered Jerusalem on the tenth. The Hebrew text provides an additional option; Jeremiah had a prefix on the word Jerusalem that means "in" or "into," but 1 Kg does not. So the apologist could also argue that Nebuzaradan came to Jerusalem on the seventh, waited for a time, and then came into the city on the tenth. This text indicates that Nebuzaradan conquered Jerusalem in the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, but verse 29 gives the time of the deportation from Jerusalem as the eighteenth year. This difference can be ascribed to the use of two methods of reckoning. This passage counts from Nebuchadnezzar's actual accession to power in 605 B.C., but verse 29 reckons from the following new year, the time of his coronation.

52:14 Archaeological excavations on the east side of Jerusalem overlooking the Kidron Valley verify this destruction.

52:18-19 According to 1 Kg 14:26; 2 Kg 24:13; and Jr 27:16, the articles of the temple had already been carried off, more than once. It appears that replacements had been made during the intervening years, and these were what Nebuzaradan's forces carried off (see 1 Kg 14:27).

52:28 Jeremiah recorded that 3,023 were exiled in the first group, but 2 Kg 12:14-16 give the total as 18,000. Probably the number in Jeremiah included only the men, while the round number in Kg included women and children (cp. Ex 12:37; 38:26; Mt 14:21; 15:38).

52:31 Independent archaeological evidence supports the imprisonment of Jehoiachin in Babylon. An inscription references Ya'ukinu, king of the land of Yahudi, and it lists the rations provided for him and his five sons.

52:33 If Jeremiah was still alive, he would have been about 90 years old when Jehoiachin was released. It is not unreasonable for a compiler or an editor to add a comment at the end of a book by, or about, some important person (see Dt 34). This does not affect the reliability of Scripture since God could inspire and superintend an editor just as He did the author of the main part of the book (see 1:1-3). The editor added this section to show that Jeremiah's prophecies regarding the restoration of Judah and Israel were moving toward fulfillment.

Introduction to Lamentations

AUTHOR

The place of the book of Lamentations in the Bible has never been in dispute. The Talmud (an ancient commentary on the Old Testament), the Septuagint (the early Greek translation of the Old Testament), the writings of the first-century Jewish historian Josephus, and the Latin Vulgate (an early translation of the Bible from Hebrew into Latin), all recognize Lamentations as part of the canon. Lamentations is found in the Writings section of the Jewish Scriptures, as part of the Megilloth—the five books of Ruth, Song of Songs, Ecclesiastes, Lamentations, and Esther, which are read during certain Jewish festivals. Lamentations is read during the ninth of Ab, a fast that commemorates the destruction of the first and second temples.

The book itself is anonymous, but the tradition for Jeremiah as its author is ancient. The Talmud and Josephus's writings both attribute the book to him, as do the writings of the church fathers. The Septuagint and Vulgate both have subtitles attributing the book to him. Further, the book appears to have been written by an eyewitness to the destruction of Jerusalem (2:6-12), and Jeremiah was such an eyewitness (Jr 39:1-14).

There are also three arguments for Jeremiah's authorship based on similarities to the book of Jeremiah. (1) There are similarities between the two books in tone, theology, themes, language, and imagery (cp. Lm 1:15 with Jr 8:21; Lm 1:2 with Jr 30:14). (2) Both books assert that, while Judah should have submitted because the exile was deserved (Lm 1:5; 3:27-28; Jr 29:4-10), there was hope for restoration (Lm 3:21-33; 4:22; 5:19-22; Jr 29:11-14). (3) Both books suggest the prophets and priests shared the blame with the people (Lm 2:14; 4:13; Jr 5:31; 14:14; 23:16).

So, on the one hand, there is no good reason to doubt that Jeremiah wrote the book. But on the other hand, the arguments in his favor are not absolutely conclusive. In any case, we can surmise that the author was an eyewitness to the destruction of Jerusalem, a skillful poet, and a person who deeply felt the distress of his people. The inspiration and canonicity of the book do not depend on the certain identification of its human author or authors.

Because of the highly emotional character of the book, it likely was written soon after the fall of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. Some critical scholars, however, date it much later—up to the second century B.C. But it is unlikely that a person so far removed from the event could have captured its mood as the author of this book did. The grief expressed in Lamentations also argues for a date before the release of Judah's King Jehoiachin in 562 B.C. (2 Kg 25:27-30) and certainly before the return of the exiles in 539 B.C. The evidence for Jeremiah as author also argues against a date beyond his time.

THE RELIABILITY OF LAMENTATIONS

One of the main arguments against an early date for Lamentations is its poetic style. Chapters 1–4 of Lamentations are alphabetic acrostics. That is, the first word of each verse starts with successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet (chap. 3 has three verses for each letter). Those who argue for a much later date question whether the people of Jeremiah's time were capable of such sophisticated formal poetry. They also question whether a person actually experiencing such emotions could force his words into such a restricted form (many scholars also perceive a poetic rhythm in Lm). For these reasons, they conclude that it was composed long after the events depicted. Further, since the last chapter is not an acrostic, skeptics question its inclusion.

Some scholars argue that there was not enough time between the invention of alphabetic writing early in the second millennium B.C. and the writing of this book for such sophisticated literary forms to develop. That is not necessarily the case. Sophisticated forms of literature and poetry would likely develop when stories and traditions were passed along orally. These forms would have been incorporated in writing.

Certainly the alphabetic acrostic is not a form that would have developed in an oral society, yet it would have been one of the first forms to arise as writing spread. Just as our books that teach the alphabet have an apple, a boy, and a cat, so the ancient writing lessons would have had an ox, a house, and a camel. Later lessons might feature sentences starting with each successive letter. From these lessons could arise alphabetic acrostic poetry, which appears frequently in the Bible (Pss 9–10; 25; 34; 37; 111–112; 119; 145; Pr 31:10-31).

But would a person overcome with grief express his feelings in such formal verse? One might expect a heart cry to come out in sentence fragments or free verse. However, deep emotions and formal poetry are compatible. Indeed, people turn to poetry precisely for its ability to express emotion. Consider Shakespeare's sonnets. Also, the form itself sometimes contributes to meaning: the acrostic may have been employed to express the completeness of the destruction and despair—from A to Z, as it were. This also suggests an explanation for why chapter 5 is not an acrostic (nor does it have the rhythm perceived in the other chapters): the lack of form expresses the chaos and despair of the time.

Lamentations Study Notes

1:1 Lamentations is written in the lament meter (three-beat lines alternating with two-beat lines); the first four chapters are in acrostic format, each unit beginning with a successive letter of the Hebrew alphabet. In the Hebrew Bible, Lm is not in the Prophets section but the Writings section, as the fourth of the five "Scrolls" or megillot (Ru, Sg, Ec, Lm, Est).

1:5 The people had rebelled against the Lord (v. 18) and He had warned them of the impending destruction of their city (Dt 28:36,63-68; 2 Kg 17:13-14; Jr 3:6-11). The verse refers to "children" being taken captive; the Hebrew 'olal can refer to small children, but here it seems to mean all the people of Jerusalem who had acted childishly in refusing the Lord's appeal. Under the OT concept of corporate solidarity (see Dt 2:34; 5:9), all members of a community participated in the sin of its leaders, including the children. If they turned away from their parents' sins, they would in the end be forgiven by God (Jr 31:29-30; Ezk 18:19-20; see also Dt 24:16; 1 Kg 15:11-13).

1:10 Unauthorized persons were not to enter the sanctuary, under penalty of death (Nm 3:10). The god of a shrine was expected to defend that shrine (Jdg 6:32), so, for example, when Uzzah touched the ark of the covenant, he died instantly (2 Sm 6:6-7). But this passage referred to non-Israelites entering the temple with impunity because the Lord was no longer defending His city and sanctuary (Lm 2:7; 4:12-13). Jeremiah told the people that they could not depend on the Lord's defending Jerusalem just because His temple was there; instead, they needed to show by their actions that they trusted in God (Jr 7:3-8). Ezekiel saw in his visions that the glory of God had abandoned the temple (Ezk 10:18-19; 11:23; see also Jr 12:7).

2:9 How could Jeremiah say that prophetic visions had stopped, when he was still prophesying? This poetic language only meant that most of Judah's prophets had failed to receive and pass on a word from God at that time. This corresponded with Jeremiah's observations that there were false prophets who spoke words that did not come from God (Jr 14:14; 23:16). It did not mean that true prophets, such as Jeremiah himself, did not receive revelation during that period. Other prophets also wrote of a scarcity of words from the Lord (Ezk 7:26; Am 8:11).

2:14 The existence of false prophets raises questions about the truthfulness of genuine prophets; some critics even question whether prophecy is possible, or even real. The Bible has clear guidelines to tell a true from a false prophet. If the prophet's short-term prediction came true, he was a genuine spokesman for the Lord; if not, he was a false prophet (Dt 18:21-22). Jeremiah offered short-term prophecies so the people could test him in this way (Jr 27:22; 32:7; 44:29-30; 52:17). Further, false prophets generally know that they are false. In 1 Kg 22:13 one of the "prophets" of Ahab told Micaiah how he should prophesy without regard for what the Lord said. However, in the same passage Micaiah revealed that God had determined to deceive the prophets (1 Kg 22:22). Ezekiel 14:6-9 gives an example in which the leaders, the people, and the prophets were corrupt before they were deceived (see Jr 5:31), and indeed in 1 Kg 22 it seems clear that the false prophets were not truly convinced they were speaking God's message. This demonstrates the principle that God's punishment is a result, not a cause, of corruption (Jdg 9:4-5,23; 1 Sm 15:13-19; 16:14; Rm 1:21-24).

2:20 The existence of cannibalism does not mean that God condones it (see Jr 19:8-9).

3:8 See note on verse 44.

3:37-38 The point of this passage is that there is no other god who can decree anything and make it come to pass. If anything at all happens, it is because the Lord has commanded and orchestrated it (Is 45:7; Jr 32:42; Am 3:6). But even if biblical figures implied that God brought adversity (Jb 2:10), to say that God is helpless to stop adversity would be to misread the Bible and destroy hope. God is all-powerful; if He can control adversity, it follows that any adversity that comes occurs only at His decree (Jb 2:10; Lm 1:5,12,21; 3:1-16) for the purpose of judgment or discipline.

But God is not the author of evil that comes as the result of poor choices people make. This passage was written against the background of the demise of Judah and Jerusalem, which Jeremiah saw as the consequence of the breaking of the Lord's covenant with His people. In giving the covenant, the Lord pronounced both blessings and curses (Lv 26; Dt 28), so that "both adversity and good come" from His mouth. God had not caused the enemies of His people to be evil; it was their own choice to refuse the Lord and His ways that made them so; God then channeled their evil (Ps 76:10) to accomplish His purposes of judgment against those who were unfaithful to His covenant. But His aim, all along, had been to move them to repentance (Jr 36:3; Lm 3:31-33; Am 4:10-11; cp. Heb 12:9-11). Jeremiah was dealing with a specific historical situation in which the covenant sanctions had been applied, not with the general question of where evil comes from. As to the Bible's answer to that question, it is clear that evil comes from Satan, "the evil one," and that people—made in God's image—have the ability to resist that evil if they are willing to do so (Eph 6:16; Jms 4:7; 1 Pt 5:8).

3:44 This outburst was not a denial of God's willingness to hear prayer; it was an emotional appeal from one to whom it seemed that God had turned a deaf ear (3:8; Ps 13:1). In the end, the Lord did hear him (Lm 3:55-58). However, it is the case that the Lord may refuse to acknowledge the prayers of the unrepentant (v. 42; Pr 1:24-28; Is 1:15; Jr 11:11; Zch 7:13; cp. 1 Pt 3:7).

4:4 See note on 1:5.

4:6 On the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, see Gn 19:24-25,27-29. Even if a "natural" explanation is proposed, this verse affirms that the Lord was the source of these events.

4:10 See notes on 2:20 and Jr 19:8-9.

4:12 See note on 1:10.

4:20 "Anointed" could refer to the king, who was ceremonially anointed when he became king (1 Sm 10:1; 16:13; 24:6; 1 Kg 1:39) or to the future Messiah (Ps 2:2; Jn 1:41). Here it referred to the current king, Zedekiah (2 Kg 25:7).

5:7 See note on 1:5.

5:13 See note on 1:5.

Ezekiel Articles

Don't Religious Beliefs Just Reflect Where One Was Raised?

by Paul Copan

B. F. Skinner declared, "My behavior at any given moment has been nothing more than the product of my genetic endowment, my personal history, and the current setting." If correct, then Skinner's philosophy, too, was the product of his genes and background—a purely accidental (rather than reasoned-out) conclusion.

Many apply this viewpoint to religion. "If you grew up in Saudi Arabia, you'd probably be a Muslim," claims the religious pluralist (who believes all religions are capable of saving or liberating). "Therefore, particular religious beliefs are just the arbitrary product of one's environment."

But the pluralist is in the same fix. One growing up in a pluralistic culture will likely believe in pluralism. Presumably, the religious pluralist's belief is just the product of his upbringing and is just as arbitrary as another's. What's more, if he'd grown up in medieval Italy, he likely wouldn't have been a pluralist. But the pluralist would have us believe his views are rationally concluded, not the accidents of history or geography!

If you'd grown up in the Soviet Union, chances are that you'd have been part of the Communist Youth. But should we therefore conclude that all political systems are morally equivalent (Communism vs. democracy, for instance)? Certainly not! Similarly, the diversity of religious systems doesn't mean that (1) all belief systems are equally plausible or (2) one religion can't be true vis-à-vis the others. Our ability to step back and reflect upon cultural influences, and even resist them, indicates that we are thinking, choosing beings made to seek truth, whatever our limitations. In both creation and conscience, God has not left human beings without a witness of Himself (Ps 19:1-6; Ac 14:17; Rm 1:20; 2:14-15). And if anyone is separated from God, it's because he freely resists God's grace, not because of his location.

If a good God exists, it's likely He would cut through the mire of sin and the haze of religious ambiguity by revealing Himself in human history. Jesus of Nazareth made radical claims of divinity that other world religious leaders never made. And He rose from the dead, confirming those claims. These are further reasons to reject pluralism.

Appealing to geographical statistics doesn't settle anything. History, philosophy, experience, and revelation are some important reasons for considering a religion to be true.

Is God a Male?

by Chad Owen Brand

When Scripture speaks about God, it invariably uses masculine imagery. God is King, not Queen. God is Father, not Mother. When Scripture uses pronouns in reference to God, it always uses male pronouns—He, Him, His. God is never "she" or "it." Even though the NT term for the Spirit, pneuma, is a neuter noun, the writers of the NT always used masculine pronouns to refer to the Spirit. It is "the Spirit, He," not "it" (e.g., Jn 15:26). In addition, the church is represented as the wife or bride of Christ, who is Husband (Eph 5:22-33). This is similar to OT imagery in which Israel was the wife of God (Hs 1–3; Ezk 16).

It is also important to recognize that this is not merely functional terminology. That is, it is not just language that is designed for us to use in our relationship to God, without reference to real conditions. God the Father actually is the Father of God the Son (Jn 17:1-5). Even in the internal relationships within God's being, the relationship between these two persons is that of a father to a son. Furthermore, we are not intended to use the human standard of a father or husband to interpret God's fatherliness or Christ's husband character, but rather we are to see God as the epitome of what those ought to be and then to measure our experience by the standard of the Father and Christ.

Is this patriarchal? Yes, it is. But as Christians, we are bound to take our theology from Scripture, not from the cultural standards around us. Most of the cultures surrounding ancient Israel had goddess figures, as did the Roman culture of NT times. But the writers of Scripture always treated this as among the most heinous kinds of idolatry. If we are to be faithful to our Christian heritage, we must stick to Scripture.

Does this patriarchalism mean that the Bible holds women to be inferior? Not at all. Scripture often depicts God as treating His people in the way a caregiver would treat a child. Jesus said, "Jerusalem, Jerusalem . . . How often I wanted to gather your children together, as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings" (Lk 13:34-35). Further, the Bible elevates women in ways contrary to the pagan cultures of the day. They are equal partners of the grace of God given in Christ (Gl 3:28).

But Scripture still speaks of God in a masculine manner. God is Father, and we ought to be eternally grateful for the fact that He is the ultimate model of what a father ought to be. Christ is Husband, and as such He reveals what a husband ought to do for his wife. Both women and men in our time ought to be grateful for the fact that God is the perfect example of what these roles entail. This enables both men and women to know the Father and Christ in ways that are life transforming.

Notable Christian Apologist: Blaise Pascal

by Ted Cabal

The mathematician, scientist, and philosopher Blaise Pascal (1623–1662) was born in Clermont-Ferrand, France. Though battling poor health his entire life, Pascal labored in intellectual pursuits from the precocious mathematical ability of his youth, to the scientific genius of his early adulthood, and on to the brilliant religious and philosophical twilight of his cancer-shortened life. As a young man he sought satisfaction in the things of the world, but he found himself unable to fill the "God-sized vacuum" in his heart. The awesome presence of God that he experienced in conversion to Christ profoundly impacted him. He wrote of the experience and sewed the note into the lining of his favorite coat, where it was discovered after his death.

Pascal's comprehensive Christian apologetic is outlined in the notes he was working on at his death. These "thoughts" (French title, Pensées), though fragmentary, reveal his strategy to counter the rationalism and skepticism of his age. Pascal championed the deep satisfaction obtained when the Christian heart and mind are at peace. Waging war between faith and reason, as did the secularists, can never gratify human longing: "The heart has its reasons which reason does not know." Harmony between Christian head and heart, however, did not mean that Pascal thought Christianity rationally indefensible. His notes revealed preparations to present the miracles and fulfilled prophecies of the Bible as a positive apologetic.

He also planned his now-famous wager argument. A person reaps infinite gain in wagering life on God should He exist but experiences no loss if He doesn't. On the other hand, a person suffers infinite loss in not wagering on God should He exist, yet reaps no real gain if He doesn't. Therefore, Pascal urged, wager on God. Only this wager obtains the heart fulfillment—even in this life—of knowing God personally.

Introducion to Ezekiel

AUTHOR

The last years of the kingdom of Judah were filled with all the tragedy and intrigue of a nation distintegrating. Josiah (640–609 B.C.) was Judah's last godly ruler. After Hilkiah the priest discovered the Book of the Law in the temple, Josiah instituted religious reforms in an attempt to bring revival (2 Kg 22:8,11-13). Upon his untimely death in 609 B.C., he was succeeded by his son Jehoahaz, who immediately set out to reverse the spiritual progress made by his father. After only three months, Pharaoh Neco took him captive (2 Kg 23:31-35; Jr 22:10-12) and replaced him with Eliakim, another son of Josiah, to whom he gave the throne name Jehoiakim. This son continued his brother's policy of reversing the religious reforms their father had initiated.

With Nebuchadnezzar's defeat of Pharaoh Neco in 605 B.C., Babylon became the dominant power in the region. In the same year Nebuchadnezzar brought Judah under his control and took captives from Jerusalem, signaling the beginning of the end of the nation. Among the captives was a young man named Daniel, who (along with Ezekiel) became one of the two great prophets of the exile. For the next seven years Jehoiakim remained publicly loyal to Babylon while privately plotting to ally with Egypt in hope of gaining independence for Judah. In 598 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar returned to Judah to overthrow Jehoiakim, replacing him with his 18-year-old son, Jehoiachin. After only three months, it was clear Jehoiachin wanted to follow his father's dream of independence. So in 597 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar replaced him with his uncle, Mattaniah, whom Nebuchadnezzar gave the throne name of Zed-ekiah.

Early in this second siege of Jerusalem (598 B.C.), Nebuchadnezzar took a second group of captives to Babylon. Among them was a young man named Ezekiel, who was from the priestly family of Buzi, a Zadokite priest (1 Kg 1:32; 2 Kg 24:17; Ezk 1:3; 44:15). Expectations were high that Zedekiah's reign would usher in a new era of peace, prosperity, and stability (Jr 28:1-9). It soon became evident, however, this would not be the case. In 598 B.C., Ezekiel was 25 years old and was just five years from beginning his priestly service in the temple.

Even after these first two groups were taken captive, strong crosscurrents of rebellion continued to flow in Judah. Egypt formed a coalition with Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, Sidon, and Judah. They planned to cast off the control of Babylon. Hopes were high both in Judah and among the captives in Babylon that the exile would be short-lived. They dreamed of an early return to Jerusalem and were convinced God would never allow the city to fall or the temple to be desecrated. But it was not to be so. Nebuchadnezzar returned for a third and final campaign that resulted in the fall of Jerusalem, the destruction of the temple, and the carrying off of the temple treasures to Babylon in 587 or 586 B.C. (2 Kg 25:1-21).

In 593 B.C., six years before the fall of Jerusalem, Ezekiel received the first of a series of 14 visions that comprise the 48 chapters of his book. His ministry continued for at least 22 years, until his last prophetic vision in 571 B.C. (29:17). Ezekiel was married, but no children are mentioned. In the midst of his ministry his wife died—a tragic loss that was the basis for one of his messages on the death throes of the nation (24:15-27). His name means "God strengthens." Indeed, he sought to be a source of strength to both warn and encourage the people of their need for repentance and faith. His 14 messages are arranged chronologically and each is dated, giving the year, month, and day. The messages commence with his call in 1:1, dated July 31, 593 B.C., and continue until his vision in chapter 40 of the new temple, new Jerusalem, and reunified Israel, dated October 22, 573 B.C.

The authorship of the book of Ezekiel has never been widely challenged. Even though Ezekiel's name is mentioned only at 1:3 and 24:24, there has always been a general consensus that the prophet wrote the book. It is autobiographical throughout, with a uniformity of language and style. Its chronological arrangement also attests to its uniformity and structural balance.

THEMES IN EZEKIEL

Growing up in a priestly family impacted Ezekiel's theological perspective. We can easily identify at least six themes in the book. Each theme builds on the previous ones as the message progresses.

1. Ezekiel's message opens with a vision of God's holiness and transcendence, which had been violated by Israel and Judah.

2. Yahweh's holy character demanded justice and judgment, which would bring about the imminent destruction of Jerusalem.

3. The transcendent God was concerned about and would judge the sinfulness of humanity. Earlier, Amos (c. 760 B.C.) had stressed the social injustices of the nation. Ezekiel took Amos's view of sin a step further and identified the spiritual root of sin as violation of God's holy character and commandments.

4. Growing out of Ezekiel's view of sin was his call for individual responsibility. He presented one of the clearest statements of personal responsibility found in the Bible in his message of 18:1-32.

5. When he had fully developed the idea of accountability and judgment, he balanced it with wonderful messages of hope and restoration, especially in chapters 33–37 and 40–48.

6. The theme that pervades all the other theological perspectives of the book is the prophet's consciousness of God's redemptive purposes in light of His nature and man's great need.

The eschatological (end times) perspective of Ezekiel has been a matter of much discussion. We must look at this perspective in its relationship to other biblical eschatological works, especially Daniel and Zechariah in the OT and Revelation in the NT.

Obviously, one's eschatological position will determine in large measure how one interprets the messages of Ezekiel. The view reflected in these notes follows the dispensational premillennial framework, which views the return of Christ as inaugurating a visible earthly kingdom for a thousand years. This view best complements the exegesis of the text and best correlates with the theology of Ezekiel and his understanding of the kingdom of God.

The message of the book is well organized and proceeds logically. The first section of the book begins with the reality of God's presence in the midst of days of turmoil in 1:1–3:27 by addressing the theological question, where is God in the midst of life's storms? Second, Ezekiel addressed the reality of judgment both for Israel and for the nations in 4:1–32:32. Third, Ezekiel revealed the reality of restoration and final defeat of Israel's enemies in 33:1–39:29. Fourth, the prophet's final message turned to the redemption and restoration that await all of God's people in 40:1–48:35.

Ezekiel Study Notes

1:1 Ezekiel "saw visions of God," a clue that he is about to relate a theophany, or an appearance of God. This one begins by introducing the attendant beings that surrounded Him.

1:2 Critics differ on the meaning of the "fifth year." Most likely this is a reference to the fifth year of the exile of Jehoiakim, who was taken captive in 597 B.C. He had been allowed to remain on the throne as a vassal to Nebuchadnezzar after the siege of Jerusalem in 605 B.C. This date would indicate that Ezekiel's ministry began in 593 B.C.

1:3 The Hebrew text uses an emphatic form of the formula "the word of the LORD [indeed] came," indicating that the prophet received a direct divine call that became the compulsion for his ministry to the exiles.

1:4 Many theological questions arose from the first attacks on Jerusalem and the subjugation of Jerusalem in 605 B.C. and 597 B.C. Why would God allow such an atrocity to be inflicted on His chosen people? The Judeans could not reconcile the thought of the impending destruction of the city where God had enshrined His name (Ps 48; cp. Jr 7:4). The thought that a pagan nation should gain control of, or utterly destroy, Jerusalem and plunder the temple presented a theological dilemma for the Judeans (see Dn 1:2; 5:1-4). Jerusalem was considered inviolable. That pagans could overthrow the nation was tantamount to admitting that their gods were greater than Yahweh. These issues also called their faith into question. It was to this time and to these circumstances Ezekiel was called to be God's prophetic spokesman.

Some would deny that Ezk 1 describes a theophany. Windstorms are common occurrences for desert dwellers. But this windstorm also displayed flashes of lightning, fire, and smoke—all elements associated with a theophany (see e.g. Ex 19:16-18; 1 Kg 19:11-13; Jb 38:1; 40:6; Ps 29:3-5). The description of spiritual beings and the vision of God that followed confirm that this was not a "natural" occurrence but a theophany. But the "model" for this theophany was clearly the "holy of holies," the inner sanctuary of the temple (Ezekiel was a priest, Ezk 1:3).

1:5 Spiritual beings, especially angels, often are presented as having a human form (e.g., Gn 18:1; Jos 5:13-15; Jdg 13:6) and here these unique creatures also are said to have the "form" (Hb demuth) of a human being. The verses that follow provide various descriptive details, including the appearance of their legs (v. 7), their hands (v. 8), their movements (vv. 8-9), their wings(v. 11), their relation to the "Spirit" (vv. 12,20), their color (v. 13), their swiftness (v. 14) and their sound (vv. 23-24).

1:10 Each creature had four faces: those of a human, a lion, an ox and an eagle. These creatures represent four major categories of life forms: human life, undomesticated animal life, domesticated animals, and winged creatures. A similar vision appears in Ezk 10, where the creatures are called "cherubim" (Hb cherub, sing. or cherubim, pl.) probably from an Akkadian root karabu which means "intercede," "be gracious," or "bless." These creatures appear elsewhere in the Bible as guardians of the holiness of God (Gn 3:24; Ex 36:35; 1 Kg 6:23-29; cp. Rv 4:6-7).

1:15-16 Each of the cherubim was associated with wheels described both in terms of their appearance and function. Their appearance was like beryl, a precious stone. The outer rims of these high and awesome wheels were inset with "eyes," a symbol suggesting God's omniscience (v. 18). The Spirit supplied both power and guidance for the wheels to allow the platform and throne-chariot to move anywhere at lightning speed, suggesting God's omnipresence. In fact everything in the vision is intimately related to the platform and throne-chariot described in verses 22-27.

1:22 The "expanse" is the same word as in Gn 1:6. Here it describes a platform located above the living creatures as the support for God's throne.

1:26-27 This theophany, in which God's visible attributes are described in terms of human characteristics, provided assurance to Ezekiel and the captives that God had not abandoned them, but was with them even in Babylon. Scholars usually classify such comparisons as "anthropomorphic accommodations," meaning that God accommodated people by describing Himself in human terms, but the "accommodation" theory does not conform to the biblical record.

According to Gn 1:26-28, human beings were created in the "image" (Hb tselem) and "likeness" (Hb demuth) of God (Gn 1:26). These two words are always used to refer to the physical appearance of an object. The same words are used in Gn 5:3 in relating that Adam had a son named Seth that looked just like him. These words appear in passages describing the appearance of idols (see Ex 20:4; Dt 4:16,23,25; 5:8). While God is a spiritual, and not a physical, being, it also is true that He and every spiritual being (e.g., angels) in the Bible have certain attributes or a "form" that is shared in common (see Gn 18:2; Jos 5:13-14; Dn 8:16; 9:21; 10:6; Lk 1:19,26).

In reply to the request to "show us the Father," Jesus said, "The one who has seen Me has seen the Father" (Jn 14:8-9). Hebrews 1:1-4 states unequivocally thatJesus is the "exact expression" of God the Father (see Col 1:15,19). Human physical form has the same form or appearance as God Himself. The image of God defines the dignity and worth of human life and explains why He intends to resurrect and glorify the human body (1 Co 6:19; 15:14).

1:28 The mention of the rainbow is an echo of God's covenant with Noah (Gn 9:11-13). Just as God restored the world after the flood, He promised to restore fallen Israel. This vision is an early hint that the message of Ezekiel would be one not only of judgment but also of hope and restoration. It was this message of hope that answered a crucial theological question for Ezekiel and every exile in Babylon—and Judeans still left in Jerusalem—namely: Is there any hope of restoration?

2:1 This is the first of 93 places where the name "son of man" was applied to Ezekiel. The Lord never called Ezekiel by his proper name as He did other prophets and leaders (e.g., Ex 3:4; 1 Sm 3:4,6,10; 1 Kg 19:9,13; Jr 1:11; Am 7:8; 8:2). In the Hebrew language the prefix "son of," was often used to mean "having the characteristics of" someone or something, or belonging to a certain class of things. "Son of man" in Ezekiel probably means "member of the human family" (i.e. the human race), pointing especially to the prophet's human frailty and mortality that made him dependent on God's power and wisdom.

2:3-5 What did Ezekiel's message reveal about the rebellious human heart? The Hebrew marad means "to rebel," "to revolt," related to a noun meri, "bitterness." A bitter spirit that is disgruntled produces a rebellious spirit, like Absalom (2 Sm 13:22). Other terms for rebellion include pasha' "to revolt," qeshe "obstinate" (lit. "hard of face") and chiqze "stubborn" or "hard-hearted." In addition the verb for "rebelled" is used six times in Ezekiel (2:3; 17:15; 20:8,13,21,38). The prophet's assignment was to preach to the exiles in Babylon who were bitter, rebellious, obstinate, hard-hearted, and hard-headed.

3:3 Did Ezekiel literally eat the scroll? He did in the visionary experience. By eating the scroll he consumed the unwelcome message of judgment he was to proclaim to those in captivity and in Jerusalem (see Ps 19:10; 119:103). John was given a similar command (Rv 10:8-11). The Lord commanded Ezekiel to eat a scroll four times in 2:8–3:3. Some rabbinic interpretations view this as a visionary experience or an allegory, while others take it as a literal but symbolic act. In either case the lesson is the same: The prophet was to consume the message, digest it, and proclaim its contents.

3:8-11 The Lord directed Ezekiel to deliver messages of judgment even though the people would be unresponsive. God's answer to the rebellious, obstinate, hard-hearted, stubborn attitude of the Judeans was to set the face of the prophet "like a diamond" (Hb shamir). His assignment was to present the message and leave the results to God, even if that meant certain judgment because of their unresponsiveness (see Is 6:10). He did not share the same level of compassion for the people as Jeremiah, who openly lamented the judgment of Judah (see Lm 1:1–5:22), but it would be incorrect to conclude that Ezekiel totally lacked compassion.

3:16-21 While the role of the watchman was well known in ancient Near Eastern culture (Is 21:6; 52:8; 62:6; Jr 6:17; Hab 2:1), Ezekiel's divine appointment was unique. The watchman was charged with the safety of the community; he was to warn the people of impending danger, especially enemy attack. Any watchman that failed in his duty was held personally responsible. Negligence resulting in loss of life was punishable by death. The prophet, therefore, was held responsible and accountable for bringing messages of judgment to the rebellious people.

4:1-8 Chapters 4–7 contain five messages of judgment against Jerusalem in which Ezekiel used dramatizations. This was not a new prophetic method. Earlier prophets also used dramatic methods (1 Sm 15:27-31; 1 Kg 11:29-33; 2 Kg 13:14-19), as did Isaiah (Is 20:2-3) and Jeremiah (Jr 13:1-11; 13:12-27; 19:1-13; 27:1-22). Ezekiel drew a recognizable map of Jerusalem on a clay brick or tile and then "played war," as a young child might do. He laid siege to the city using a siege wall, an earthen ramp to scale the walls, military camps around the city, battering rams and an iron plate that probably represented the unstoppable advancing army. With these implements he prophetically acted out the fall of Jerusalem, which was to occur in 586 B.C.

4:9 Ezekiel was told to mix six grains to make bread. This was unusual but did not violate any dietary laws. The resulting flour would be inferior to pure wheat or barley flour; it signaled a desperate circumstance that called for austere measures. Under conditions of siege, the people would be forced to mix anything edible due to the scarcity of food.

4:12-17 Ezekiel, a priest, was scrupulous about conforming to the dietary laws such as those in Lv 11:1-47. Preparation of food using animal manure was not uncommon or prohibited, and is still practiced in the Middle East among nomadic tribesmen since wood for fire is a scarce commodity in the region. However, to use human waste for fuel was considered defilement, especially for a priest (see Dt 23:9-14). The horror of violating biblical dietary law prompted the prophet's appeal in Ezk 4:14 not to be forced to defile himself in this manner. The Lord granted this request, but the incident was recorded to underscore the depth of defilement that characterized those to whom the prophet was called to deliver his messages. The use of human excrement in food preparation would further emphasize the crisis conditions to come at the time of the fall of Jerusalem.

5:1,12 Shaving one's head and beard was a serious matter for a priest or a Nazirite because one's hair was a sign of consecration to God (Lv 19:27; 21:5; Nm 6:5). Samson, a Nazirite from birth, allowed his head to be shorn by a harlot; his disregard for his vow resulted in the loss of his physical strength and spiritual power (Jdg 16:17). Shaving one's head was a sign of humiliation(Is 3:17) or mourning (Is 15:2; Jr 41:5-6; 48:37). Ezk 5:12 gives the interpretation of this dramatic message; it emphasizes the severity of judgment and shows how Israel had frustrated its missionary purpose as a witness to the nations.

5:10 This was unthinkable for any Israelite to practice cannibalism; that this should occur would be the enactment of the curses that sanctioned the Lord's covenant (Lv 26:29; Dt 28:53-55; see Jr 19:8-9). Priests and Nazirites were not even allowed to touch a corpse (Lv 21:1-2; Nm 6:7). Ezekiel's prophecy underscores the severity of the crisis conditions predicted for the fall of Jerusalem. These same conditions were encountered at the siege of Samaria (2 Kg 6:24-33, especially v. 29).

5:12,17 Ezekiel's three-part judgment formula ("famine," "plague," and "sword") appears here for the first time, and recurs in 6:11,12; 7:15; 12:16; 14:21. Jeremiah frequently used the same formula (Jr 14:12; 21:7,9; 24:10; 27:8,13; 29:17-18; 32:24,36; 34:17; 38:2; 42:17,22; 44:13). Both prophets used the formula to indicate that judgment would be severe and extensive; the conditions were based on the curses of the Mosaic covenant (Lv 26:29; Dt 28:53-55).

6:1-3 At God's command, the prophet turned his face against the mountains and preached a sermon against them. These mountains were centers for idolatrous worship in shrines and groves of trees in the high places. Such shrines were dedicated to Canaanite gods. Elijah (1 Kg 18:1-40), Hosea (Hs 4:12-13) and Amos (Am 7:9) all condemned them. These high places, called bamot, consisted of an altar for offering sacrifices, a wooden pole to represent the female goddess Asherah, a stone pillar called a masseba to represent the male deity, a small incense altar and tent for use in eating sacral meals and practicing sacred prostitution (1 Kg 14:24; 2 Kg 21:3; Is 57:3-12). They were popular places of worship in the last days of both Israel and Judah.

6:4 Josiah, the last good king of Judah (640–609 B.C.), led a revival of Israelite faith that was a valiant attempt to eradicate idolatry and restore true worship (2 Kg 23:4-23; 2 Ch 34:3-34). The revival began when Hilkiah, the high priest, found the Book of the Law in the temple where they had been forgotten and neglected. Because neither the priests nor people cooperated, Josiah's reforms were largely superficial. Pharaoh Neco killed him in 609 B.C. on his way to confront the Babylonians. After Josiah died, the people openly returned to idolatry.

Ezekiel's favorite word for idols is gillulim, which means "dung pellets." The term is first used in chap-ter 6 where it appears five times (vv. 4,5,6,9,13), andit recurs 39 times in the rest of the prophecy (8:10; 14:3-7; 16:36; 18:6,12,15; 20:7-8,16,18,24,31,39; 22:3-4;23:7,30,37,39,49; 30:13; 33:25; 36:18,25; 37:23; 44:10,12). The extensive evidence of idolatry was a somber testimony of how firmly it was entrenched, despite Josiah's best efforts.

6:11-14 No conclusive identification has been made of Diblah in verse 14. The close similarity between the Hebrew letters daleth and resh suggests that the name Riblah may have been intended. Ezekiel did not mention Riblah elsewhere, but it was a border city during this time and the place where Zedekiah, Judah's last king, was sentenced, blinded, and bound over to be taken to Babylon (2 Kg 25:66-67). The purpose of this judgment was that they/you "will know that I am the LORD," a phrase that recurs in Ezk 6:7,10,13-14 (5:13,17).

7:1-4 Using emphatic language, Ezekiel announced the impending "day" of Yahweh's judgment (vv. 1-2,7-10,19; cp. Am 5:18; 8:3). He also used a grammatical device called the "prophetic perfect" (of the verb bo'), speaking of a future event as though it had already occurred. In this way he declared the absolute certainty of his prophecy against the "four corners of the land," which included the entire nation (Ezk 7:2).

7:5-7,10 Repetition of the phrase "the end has come" (vv. 5-6; cp. "the time has come," v. 7; "the day is coming," v. 10) emphatically underscored certain judgment and indicated the prophet's highly agitated state of mind in making this announcement. His sad duty was to inform them when judgment came; they would know it was the Lord "who strikes" (v. 9).

7:15 For the judgment formula of famine, plague, and sword, see note on 5:12,17.

7:18-22 Shaved heads and sackcloth were ordinarily signs of mourning (as in 5:1,12). In this passage they were not signs of repentance but of sorrow for the discomfort of judgment and invasion by a foreign enemy. Silver, gold, jewelry, and other physical resources were objects of plunder for invading armies.

7:23-27 How did the Judeans regard the news of the fall of Jerusalem? It was not a welcome thought. The Judeans considered Jerusalem to be inviolable, for theological reasons. It was beyond belief to think that the city and temple could be destroyed, and the temple treasures displayed in a pagan temple in Babylon.

8:1 When Ezekiel said, "The hand of the Lord GOD came down on me," this was a visionary experience. Physically Ezekiel was in Babylon, but in "visions of God" he was transported to Jerusalem to see the abominations in the temple (v. 3). This vision occurred 14 months after his first two visions of recorded at 1:1 and 3:16.

8:5-6 This passage provides no description of "the offensive statue" (semel, v. 3) in the temple courtyard. The word was also used to describe the image set up by Manasseh (2 Kg 21:7; 2 Ch 33:7,15). The people violated the commandments (Ex 20:4) by bringing an idol into the temple area. All Ezekiel saw was great, or terrible, "abominations" (Ezk 8:6,9,13,15,17), detestable especially to a priest.

8:7-13 The 70 men behind the wall at the entrance to the temple court were leaders in Jerusalem who were worshiping the animal gods of Egypt. Each man had a shrine for his idol in the shadow of the temple.

8:14-15 This is the only biblical reference to this Babylonian cult. The women "weeping for Tammuz" were mourning the Babylonian equivalent of the Assyrian god of vegetation known as Demuzi. They believed the cycle of seasons represented the dying and rising of Tammuz. In Babylonian mythology, Tammuz was the son of Nimrod (Gn 10:8-14) and his wife Semiramus. He was killed on a wild boar hunt and immortalized by his mother as a nature god and an embodiment of the hope of resurrection depicted in the cycles of the seasons. Women wept each year in the fourth month, at the onset of spring, to induce Tammuz to rise again. Today the fourth month of the Jewish calendar is still called Tammuz. It is not clear why these women were worshiping in the sixth month instead of the fourth, but it may indicate that Tammuz worship had become institutionalized year round.

8:16-18 The 25 men facing east, worshiping the sun, were in the inner court of the temple where only priests were permitted to be. If they were not priests, not only were they practicing idolatry but they had also violated the sanctity of the inner court. If they were priests, their sin was all the more severe. Manasseh, Josiah's grandfather, introduced this kind of idolatry(2 Kg 21:5,18,25-26). Such abhorrent behavior would not go unpunished. God would "respond with wrath." The Lord would spare no one, and neither would He hear their cries for help.

